A Statement of Royal Privilege

THE ROYAL PRIVILEGE OF FREDERICK I, KING IN PRUSSIA Issued at Cölln on the Spree, March 6, 1711

What follows is the original legal instrument by which Frederick I, King in Prussia, granted Johann Andreas Eisenmenger the royal privilege to publish this work. It is reproduced here as a historical document. Readers unfamiliar with the conventions of 18th-century royal publishing privileges should understand that such instruments were required for any major publication in the German lands of the period. Without this document, the book could not have appeared at all.

We Frederick, by the Grace of God King in Prussia, Margrave of Brandenburg, Arch-Chamberlain and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, Sovereign Prince of Orange, Neuchâtel, and Valengin, Duke of Magdeburg, Cleve, Jülich, Berg, Stettin, Pomerania, the Cassubians and Wends, Mecklenburg, and in Silesia of Crossen, Burgrave of Nuremberg, Prince of Halberstadt, Minden, Cammin, Wenden, Schwerin, Ratzeburg, and Moers, Count of Hohenzollern, Ruppin, der Mark, Ravensberg, Hohenstein, Tecklenburg, Lingen, Schwerin, Bühren, and Leerdam, Marquis of Veere and Flushing, Lord of Ravenstein, and of the Lands of Rostock, Stargard, Lauenburg, Bütow, Arlay, and Breda, etc.

Make it known and hereby give notice: Whereas We, for compelling reasons, have most graciously seen fit to have the book on Entdecktes Judenthum by the former Professor Lingu. Orient. at Heidelberg, Johann Andreas Eisenmenger, printed at Königsberg in Our Kingdom of Prussia, and to furnish it with a Privilegium; We have accordingly hereby and by virtue of this instrument granted said work a Privilege to the effect that, for a period of twenty years, it shall neither in Our Kingdom of Prussia, nor in the Electorate of Brandenburg, nor in Our remaining provinces and territories be reprinted by any printer, nor, should it already have been printed elsewhere or should it hereafter be printed elsewhere, shall any Exemplaria be imported into Our lands, under penalty of confiscation of the copies and a fine of one hundred Ducats to be paid to Our Fiscus; and We do hereby most graciously command each and every one of Our governors, governments, court and chamber tribunals, and in general each and every one of Our high and low officials, but most particularly the Officia Fisci in every locality, to observe this most obediently, to uphold this Our Privilegium with due force, and to proceed against Contravenientes with the penalty contained therein. In witness whereof, under Our own hand and appended Royal Feudal Seal; Given at Cölln on the Spree, the sixth of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eleven after the birth of Christ.

Editorial Introduction	xiii
The First Part of the Discovered Judaism.	37
Chapter I.	38
In which is shown what unseemly and in part very blasphemous things the hardened Jews teach and write concerning God the Father.
Chapter II.	90
In which it is demonstrated how the godless, hardened Jews revile, blaspheme, and curse the Son of God, our only Savior and Redeemer, JESUS Christ, in many ways, and what shameful and contemptuous names they give him.
Chapter III.	166
Herein is shown what our most precious and most holy Savior JESUS is alleged, according to the blasphemous pretenses of the godless Jews, to have committed and contrived, by means of which he performed his miracles, how he fell into the hands of his enemies, and why he is said to have been condemned to death.
Chapter IV.	195
Therein is shown what, according to the accursed teaching of the godless Jews, is supposed to have happened to Christ after His suffering and death; and it is demonstrated that He is the true Messiah, and not merely a plain man, but also GOD; with an additional account of what the Turks' Quran says concerning Christ.
Chapter V.	227
In which the question is examined whether, by that Jesus of whom mention is made in the Talmud in certain places, our Savior Jesus Christ is understood by the Jews, or whether he was a different person who also bore the name Jesus.
Chapter VI.	258
In which it is shown in what manner GOD the Holy Spirit is blasphemed by the godless Jews, and against them it is proven that He is GOD.

Chapter VII.....	264
In which it is shown how the Jews wickedly despise and revile the Holy Scripture of the New Testament, as well as the holy Evangelists and Apostles.
Chapter VIII.	284
What the Jews teach concerning their Talmud, and what is to be made of it.
Chapter IX.	422
In which it is shown in how many different ways the Law is expounded according to the teaching of the Jews, and how unreasonably they interpret it in many places, and also what the cause of their lack of understanding in the interpretation of Scripture is.
Chapter X.	457
In which it is shown what the Jews call the Christian religion and the Christian faith, and what they write about it, and also what they call the Christian clergy.
Chapter XI.	469
In which it is shown how the Jews name the churches of the Christians, and what they otherwise write concerning them and the things found within them.
Chapter XII.....	493
In which it is demonstrated in what manner the two holy Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper are despised and mocked by the Jews.
Chapter XIII.	514
In which it is demonstrated how the Jews name the Christian holidays and feast days, and what they write concerning them.
Chapter XIV.	525
In which it is shown how greatly the Jews boast of themselves and exalt themselves above all the peoples of the world.
Chapter XV.....	544
In which it is shown how the Jews hate and despise all peoples of the world, but especially the Christians, and what hypocrites they are. .544

Chapter XVI.	583
In which it is shown how the Jews customarily refer to Christians, and what mostly derisive names they give them.
Chapter XVII.	670
In which it is shown how the Jews are accustomed to designating the whole of Christendom.
Chapter XVIII.	735
In which it is reported how many peoples, according to the teaching of the Jews, exist in the world alongside them, and who governs those peoples; and in which particular treatment is given to the chief devil Sammaël, who is said to rule over Christendom and to be its prince.
Chapter XIX.	780
In this chapter, Sammaël is described as the Angel of Death, and it is shown therewith what the foolish Jews teach concerning the dead.
The Second Part of Discovered Judaism.	913
Chapter I.	914
In which it is shown what the Rabbis write concerning the souls of Christians and of other peoples found outside of Judaism, and what they teach on the other hand concerning the souls of the Jews and their passage, or transmigration, from one body or place into another.
Chapter II.	991
In which it is shown in what manner the Jews are accustomed to curse us Christians and to wish all manner of evil upon us.
Chapter III.	1078
In which three questions are examined: first, whether Jews are permitted to rescue a Christian who is in mortal danger from death; second, whether Rabbinic laws allow bringing a Christian's life to an end; and likewise third, whether one can safely entrust oneself to Jewish physicians or doctors, and use their medicines without concern.
Chapter IV.	1118
In Which It Is Shown That Christians, According to the Teaching of the Jews, Are All Damned and None Can Be Saved, Whereas All Jews Are to Partake of Eternal Salvation.

Chapter V.	1171
In Which Is Shown What the Jews Write and Teach Concerning Paradise
Chapter VI.	1196
In which is set forth what the Jews teach concerning Hell.
Chapter VII.	1236
This chapter shows what the Jews teach concerning the good angels.
Chapter VIII.	1269
In this chapter an account is given of what the Jews teach concerning the evil angels, or devils.
Chapter IX.	1321
In which it is shown how greatly the Christian authorities are despised by the Jews, and in what manner it is forbidden to them to bring charges against one another before those same authorities; as well as what is to be made of an oath which a Jew swears before a Christian authority.
Chapter X.	1361
In which is reported what the Jews, according to the vain claims of the Rabbis, possess for lands in the world, in which they are said to have their own government and to be ruled by their own princes and kings.
Chapter XI.	1406
In which four questions are examined: first, whether it is permitted to the Jews, according to the teaching of the Rabbis, to deceive a Christian? Second, whether it is allowed to them to steal from or rob him? Third, whether they may keep something that a Christian loses and they find? And finally, fourth, whether they may practice usury against Christians?
Chapter XII.	1442
This chapter reports: first, what the Jews think of Christians' food and drink, and whether they are permitted to eat with a Christian; second, whether it is right that one buys meat from Jewish butchers; third, whether Jews may invite a Christian as a guest.
Chapter XIII.	1471
In which it is shown: 1. That the time in which the Messiah, according to the prophecies of the Old Testament, must have come, has long since passed. 2. When he, according to the teaching of certain rabbis, was born. 3. Where he has resided since he was born. 4. Why he has not yet come until now. 5. When, how, and from where he will come. 6. What signs of his coming there will be. And finally 7. how many Messiahs, in the opinion of the Jews, there are supposed to be.

Chapter XIV. 1542

In which it is shown in what manner, according to the teaching of the Jews, the Christians will wage a great war with the Turks shortly before the coming of the Messiah; and how, during that war, the Messiah the son of Joseph will fight valiantly alongside the Christians and be slain; and how after that the Messiah the son of David will come and bring the entire world under his dominion; in which time all Christians together with their supposed prince and ruler, Sammael, are to be exterminated; as well as what else will further come to pass at that time.

Chapter XV..... 1606

In which it is shown how long the Messiah will reign after the defeat of his enemies and the subjugation of the entire world, and what further events will occur during his reign.

Chapter XVI. 1675

In Which Is Set Forth What the Jews Teach Concerning the Resurrection of the Dead.

Chapter XVII. 1726

In Which Is Shown What the Jews Teach and Believe Concerning the Last Judgment.

Chapter XVIII..... 1750

In which the reason is reported why the Jews show themselves so steadfast in their religion and accept the Christian faith so little, and how one ought to proceed with them so that they may be converted in greater numbers than has hitherto occurred.

Foreword

Something has gone badly wrong in the American church's understanding of Judaism, and the confusion is not accidental.

For the better part of a century, evangelical Christianity in the West has operated under a theological framework that treats modern Rabbinic Judaism as the direct and living heir of Old Testament faith, as though the Judaism of the synagogue today and the religion of Moses and the prophets are essentially the same thing, separated only by the rejection of Jesus. This assumption underlies the entire architecture of Christian Zionism, fuels the political loyalties of tens of millions of American believers, and has made the evangelical church one of the most reliable political assets of the modern Israeli state.

The assumption is wrong. It is not a minor doctrinal quibble. It is a foundational category error, and it matters enormously, because once you understand that Rabbinic Judaism and Biblical Judaism are not the same religion, a very large number of conclusions that American evangelicals have treated as settled begin to come apart.

Biblical Judaism is the faith of the Old Testament. It is covenantal, sacrificial, and Messianic. Its ultimate trajectory, Christians confess, points to and is fulfilled in Jesus Christ. Rabbinic Judaism, by contrast, is the religion that emerged from the destruction of the Temple in 70 A.D. and was codified over the following centuries in the Talmud and the rabbinic legal tradition. It is not a continuation of Old Testament religion. It is a replacement of it, built around the synagogue rather than the Temple, around rabbinic authority rather than the Levitical priesthood, around the Oral Torah rather than the sacrificial system. The two faiths share a set of scriptures and a historical memory. They do not share a religion.

This distinction matters for how Christians read their own Bibles. It matters for how they understand the covenant promises. And it matters, urgently, for how they engage the political and cultural moment they are living in. American Christians are being asked, constantly and aggressively, to subordinate their theological convictions, their foreign policy preferences, and their cultural loyalties to the interests of a modern state and a religious tradition that they have never seriously examined. The machinery for producing that subordination is sophisticated, well-funded, and deeply embedded in evangelical institutions.

Johann Andreas Eisenmenger did not know any of that. He was a 17th-century German scholar of Oriental languages who spent nearly twenty years reading rabbinic literature with the stated aim of understanding what Judaism actually taught. What he found, and what he documented with painstaking citation, is what you are holding. His work was suppressed almost immediately after it was completed, first by the Holy Roman Emperor at the insistence of the Frankfurt Jewish community, then published posthumously in 1711 under Prussian royal protection, then suppressed again, then cited, plagiarized, attacked, and buried by turns for the next three centuries.

It has never been more relevant. And it has never been more necessary for ordinary Christians to be able to read it for themselves. That is why it is in your hands now.

Editorial Introduction:

Who Eisenmenger Was, What He Did, And How To Read This Book

EISENMENGER THE SCHOLAR

Johann Andreas Eisenmenger was born in 1654 and spent the bulk of his scholarly career as Professor of Oriental Languages at the University of Heidelberg. He was not a polemicist by trade. He was a philologist — a man who spent his professional life learning and teaching the ancient languages of the Near East, which in the 17th century meant Hebrew, Aramaic, and the cognate tongues necessary for serious engagement with Jewish sacred literature.

He began the research that would become this book in the 1680s, and he did not finish it for nearly twenty years. During that time he read, by his own account, nearly two hundred individual rabbinic works — the Babylonian and Jerusalem Talmuds, the major midrashim, the legal codes, the kabbalistic literature, the liturgical texts, and the polemical writings composed by Jewish scholars against Christianity. The bibliography in the front of this volume is not decorative. It is a working record of sources, and it reflects a depth of engagement with primary Hebrew and Aramaic materials that very few Christian scholars of any era have matched.

His method was straightforward: find what the texts say, quote them in the original Hebrew or Aramaic, translate them faithfully into German, and let the reader see the evidence. He was not working from hearsay or from hostile secondary sources. He was working from the books themselves. The citations throughout this work are specific and verifiable — tractate, folio, column. Readers who wish to check them against the original sources are free to do so.

THE CENSORSHIP HISTORY

Eisenmenger completed his manuscript around 1700 and arranged for its publication in Frankfurt. Before the books could be distributed, the Frankfurt Jewish community obtained an imperial injunction from Emperor Leopold I blocking the publication. The grounds were that the work was inflammatory and dangerous to public order. The books sat in storage while Eisenmenger appealed, unsuccessfully, for years. He died in 1704 without seeing his life's work published.

After his death, his heirs brought the manuscript to Prussia, where Frederick I - whose royal privilege appears at the front of this volume - granted permission for publication in 1711. The work appeared that year in two volumes at Königsberg. It was subsequently suppressed, attacked, partially translated, selectively quoted, and largely kept out of the hands of ordinary readers for three hundred years.

The pattern is worth noting. The standard method for neutralizing a work like this one is not to refute it on the evidence. It is to ensure that as few people as possible can read it. That strategy has been largely successful until now.

THE TWO-PART STRUCTURE

This book was originally published as two physically separate volumes, and that structure is preserved here, but both parts appear in a single continuous volume, as they belong. The division is not arbitrary. Eisenmenger organized his material along two distinct lines of inquiry, and a reader moving from Part One to Part Two should understand what changes.

Part One deals with Jewish theological views of Christianity. It documents what rabbinic sources say about the Trinity, about Christ, about the Holy Spirit, about the New Testament and its authors, about the sacraments, the church, Christian clergy, and Christian feast days. It is, in essence, the Jewish critique of Christian faith as recorded in the authoritative texts of Rabbinic Judaism.

Part Two shifts to Jewish law and eschatology as they pertain to Gentiles. It covers the rabbinic doctrine of the soul, the traditional liturgical curses directed at non-Jews, the legal questions governing Jewish conduct toward Christians in matters of life, death, commerce, and testimony, the rabbinic teachings on salvation and damnation, and the elaborate Messianic expectations of traditional Jewish theology. Where Part One asks what Jews believe about Christianity, Part Two asks how Jewish law governs Jewish behavior toward the non-Jewish world.

A PRIMER ON TALMUDIC CITATIONS

Eisenmenger cites his sources throughout this work in the manner standard to rabbinic scholarship. For readers encountering these citations for the first time, a brief orientation is useful.

The Talmud is not a single book. It is a vast collection of rabbinic legal discussion, debate, narrative, and commentary compiled over several centuries. There are two versions, the Babylonian Talmud (Talmud Bavli) and the Jerusalem Talmud (Talmud Yerushalmi). When Eisenmenger or any other scholar cites the Talmud, he will typically name the tractate and the folio number. The tractate is the named subsection of the Talmud; Sanhedrin, Bava Metzia, Ketubot, and so on, each dealing with a general subject area. The folio number refers to the page of the standard printed edition, and because each folio has two sides, citations typically include the letters "a" or "b" to indicate which side is meant. So "Sanhedrin 57a" means the front side of folio 57 of the tractate Sanhedrin in the Babylonian Talmud.

Beyond the Talmud proper, Eisenmenger also cites the Midrash (a body of narrative and homiletical commentary on the biblical text), the legal codes (principally Maimonides' Mishneh Torah and the Shulchan Aruch of Joseph Karo), the Kabbalah (the mystical tradition, centered on the Zohar), and various individual rabbinic authorities. All of these are identified in the bibliography at the front of this volume.

Readers wishing to verify Eisenmenger's citations have several options. The William Davidson Talmud, available free online at Sefaria.org, provides the complete Babylonian Talmud in Hebrew, Aramaic, and English on the same page, with the traditional folio numbering. It is the most accessible tool currently available for cross-referencing the Talmudic passages cited in this work.

Entdecktes Judenthum was originally published in two volumes at Königsberg in Prussia in 1711. This edition presents both parts in a single continuous volume. The translation was produced by @updatedworks and @DEI4WhiteGuys from the 1711 German text. Editorial compilation by JD Hall, Insight to Incite.

The First Part of the Discovered Judaism.

Chapter I.

In which is shown what unseemly and in part very blasphemous things the hardened Jews teach and write concerning God the Father.

One reads in the fifth book of Moses, in the 28th chapter, that when Moses, the pious and faithful servant of God, earnestly and solemnly enjoined upon the children of Israel the keeping and observance of God's commandments, he gave them to understand that if they would diligently heed them and duly obey the most holy will of the Most High, they should be blessed in all places and in all things; but on the other hand, if they would not live according to the voice of the Almighty and would not submit themselves to His laws, they should be cursed in every manner and should be struck with madness, blindness, and hardness of heart. The wicked Jews, however, paid no heed to such sharp threats, but contemptuously rejected the word of God in their stubbornness; and from this it has come to pass that they have been visited with all manner of well-deserved punishments, of which blindness and the hardening of their hearts is the greatest. Concerning this their hardening and spiritual blindness, God speaks to the prophet Isaiah in Isa 6:9-10 as follows: "Go and say to this people: Hear and understand not, see and perceive not. Harden the heart of this people, and make their ears dull, and blind their eyes, that they may not see with their eyes, nor hear with their ears." And in the 29th chapter of the said prophet, Isa 29:10, it is said to the Jews: "The Lord has poured out upon you a spirit of deep sleep, and has closed your eyes; your prophets together with your rulers He has blinded." So also in the 42nd chapter of the aforementioned Isaiah, Isa 42:18-19, they are addressed thus: "Hear, you deaf, and look, you blind, that you may see. Who is so blind as my servant? And who is so deaf as my messenger?" For this reason Christ the Lord also calls the scribes and Pharisees blind, and leaders of the blind, in Matt 15:14.

This great spiritual blindness of the wicked Jews, which derives from God's curse, is still clearly evident to this day in many respects, and particularly in this: that they write and teach concerning God the Father, who is nonetheless the most perfectly complete and most holy Being, things so unseemly, mocking, irrational, and blasphemous, things that run directly contrary to the Divine Majesty and His attributes, things that could never have entered the mind of any reasonable person.

First, in their books, a certain measure and length is attributed to God which, although incomprehensibly great, is nonetheless highly demeaning to the Divine Being, since that Being is infinite and consequently cannot be measured. Concerning this, the following is read in the written and never-yet-printed book Rasiel, which is said to have been given by the angel Rasiel to the first man Adam: אמר רבי ישמעאל אמר לי מטטרן שריא רבא ושהדותא מעיד אני עדות זו ביהוה אלהי ישראל אלהא חייא וקיימא מרנא ורבוננא מבית מותב יקירה ולעילא ק"י רבבות פרסאות ומבית מותב יקירה ולמטה ק"י רבבות פרסאות רום גובהו של ימין ועד זרועו שלו של שמאל ע"ו רבבות. מן גלגל עין של עין ימין עד גלגל עין של שמאל ל' רבבות גלגלתיה ובראשיה שלש רבבות. עטרות שבראשו ששים דבנור כנגד ששים רבבות של אלהי. ישראל לפיכך נקרא האל הגדול הגבור והנורא. That is: Rabbi Ishmael has reported that Metatron, the great Prince of Testimony, said to him: I bear this testimony by Jehovah, the GOD of Israel, the living and everlasting GOD, our Lord and Ruler, that from the house (or place of the seat of His glory) upward there are one hundred and eighteen times ten thousand (or eleven hundred and eighty thousand) miles, and from the house (or place) of the seat of His glory downward there are one hundred and eighteen times ten thousand (or eleven hundred and eighty thousand) miles. His height is two hundred and thirty-six times ten thousand miles. From His right arm to His left arm there are seventy-seven times ten thousand (or seven hundred and seventy thousand miles). From the right eyeball to the left there are thirty times ten thousand (or three hundred thousand miles). The skull in His head is three times ten thousand (or thirty thousand miles) in length and breadth. The crowns which stand upon His head are sixty times ten thousand (or six hundred thousand miles long), in consideration of the sixty times ten thousand (Israelite souls) of the GOD of Israel; and for this reason He is called the great, mighty, and terrible GOD.

One page after this, the following continues there: אמר רבי ישמעאל אני ראיתי את מלך מלכי המלכים יושב על כסא רם ונשא וחיילותיו עומדים לפניו מימינו ומשמאלו. אמר לי מלאך שר הפנים ששמו מטטרון רבי ישמעאל אומר לך פמה שיעור של הק"ב שהוא מכוסה מכל הבריות. פרסות רגליו כל העולמים כולן שנאמר השמים כסאי והארץ הדום רגלי גובה פרסותיו שלש רבבות אלפים פרסאות וגו'. מכף רגליו ועד קרסוליו אלף רבבות ות"ק פרסאות גובהו וגו'. מקרסוליו עד ארכובותיו תשעה עשר רבבות אלפים וארבע פרסאות גובהו וגו'. מארכובותיו עד ירכתיו שנים עשר רבבות פרסאות ואלף וארבע פרסאות גבהו וגו' מירכתיו ועד צוארו עשרים וארבע אלפים רבבות פרסאות וגו'. צוארו שלשה עשר אלפים רבבות ות"ח פרסאות גובה צוארו וגו'. לקמ רבוא ואלק ות"ק פרסאות וגו'. שחור שבעין ימינו רבוא ואלף ות"ק פרסאות וכן של שמאל וגו'. מינו שנים עשרים רבבות ושנים פרסאות וכן של שמאל וגו'. משכם מינו ועד שכם שמאלו ששה עשר אלפים רבבות פרסאות וגו' ממרפקו that is: Rabbi Ismael has said: I have seen the King of kings of all kings, sitting upon a high and exalted throne, and His armies stood before Him, at His right and left sides. Then the angel, the Prince of the Countenance, who is called Metatron, spoke to me: Rabbi Ismael, I will tell you the measure of the Holy and Blessed God, which is hidden from all creatures. His soles of the feet are all the world, as it is said (Isa 66:1): Heaven is my throne, and the earth my footstool. The height of His soles is three times ten thousand (or thirty thousand) miles, ע"ל. From His sole up to His heel is one thousand times ten thousand and five hundred miles, ע"ל. From His heels to His kneecaps is nineteen times ten thousand and four miles in height, ע"ל. From His kneecaps to His hips is twelve times ten thousand and four miles in height, ע"ל. From His hips to His neck is twenty-four thousand times ten thousand miles, ע"ל. The height of His neck is thirteen thousand times ten thousand and eight hundred miles, ע"ל. His beard is eleven thousand and five hundred miles (long), ע"ל. The black of His right eye is eleven thousand and five hundred miles (long), ע"ל. and likewise that of the left (eye), ע"ל. His right hand is twenty-two times ten thousand and two miles (long), as is likewise His left, ע"ל. From His right shoulder to His left shoulder is sixteen thousand times ten thousand (or one hundred and sixty thousand times a thousand) miles, ע"ל. From His right arm to His left arm is twelve thousand times ten thousand (or one hundred and twenty thousand times a thousand) miles, ע"ל. As for the fingers of His hands, they are all together twelve thousand times ten thousand miles long, ע"ל. After this, the following continues there: ערבים בדבר זה שכל מי שהוא יודע שיעור זה של יוצרנו ושבחו של הק"ב מובטח לו שהוא אמר לי רבי ישמעאל לפני הלמידיו אני ורבי עקיבא: (that is: Rabbi Ismael has said to me, before his disciples: I and Rabbi Akkiva are guarantors in this matter, that whoever knows this measure of our Creator and the praise of the Holy Blessed God may be assured that he will be a child of the world to come, that is, of eternal life).

Concerning the aforementioned length or measure of God, the following is also written in the little book Othioth (or Otios, as the German and Polish Jews pronounce it), Rabbi Akkiva, fol. 16, col. 3: קרוב ה' לנשברי לב שכל שבורי לב חביבין לפני הקב"ה יותר ממלאכי השרת שמלאכי השרת מרוחקים מן השכינה שלשים ושהא אלפים רבבות פרסאות שנאמר שרפים עומדים ממעל לו "בגימטריא שלשים ושהא אלפים הן מלמד שגופו של שכינה מאתים ושלשים ושהא רבבות פרסאות ק' ושמנה עשר ממדני ולמעלה ומאה ושמנה עשר ממדני ולמטה ופרסאות הללו אינן כפרסאות שלנו אלא כפרכה שלו שהפרסה שלו אלף אלפים אמה ואמה שלו ד' וזרות וטפה וזרת שלו מסוף העולם עד סופו שנאמר מי מדד בשעלו מים ושמים בזרת תכן ד' אישטים בזרת תכן מלמד שהשמים ושמי השמים זרת אחד ארכן וזרת אחד רחבן וזרת אחד קומתן וארץ וכל התהומות פרסת רגל אחד ארכה ופרסת רגל אחד רחבה ופרסת רגל אחד קומתה עד הרקיע הראשון. That is to say: (It is written in Ps 34:19:) The Lord is near to those who are of a broken heart; for all who have broken hearts are more pleasing before God than the ministering angels, since the ministering angels are removed from the Divine Majesty by thirty-six thousand times ten thousand (or three hundred and sixty thousand times a thousand) miles, as it is said (Isa 6:2): The seraphim stood לְמַמְעַל לוֹ mimmaäl lo, that is, above Him, where the little word לוֹ lo, through the Gematria (which is a part of the Cabbala, by means of which the letters of one or more words are reckoned as numbers) yields thirty-six thousand. Behold, this teaches us that the body of the Divine Majesty is two hundred and thirty-six times ten thousand (or two thousand times a thousand, and three hundred and sixty thousand) miles in length. From His loins upward there are one hundred and eighteen times ten thousand (or a thousand times a thousand, and one hundred and eighty thousand miles), and from His loins downward there are one hundred and eighteen times ten thousand (miles). These miles, however, are not like our miles, but like His (namely, God's) miles; for His mile is a thousand times a thousand ells in length, but His ell measures four spans and one hand's breadth, and His span extends from one end of the world to the other, as it is said (Isa 40:12): Who has measured the waters in the hollow of His hand, and meted out the heavens with a span? In another sense, the words "and meted out the heavens with a span" teach that the heavens and all the heavens are only one span in length, and equally as wide and as high, and that the earth, together with all the abysses, is one foot-sole in length and one foot-sole in breadth, and likewise one foot-sole in height up to the first firmament. Something on this subject may also be read in the book Schend luchôth haberrith (or lúchos hábberis), fol. 262, col. 1. Rabbi Akkiva, however, who was one of the Talmudic teachers, has greatly erred in the numerical value of the little word לוֹ lo, for it yields only thirty-six, and not thirty-six thousand in number; yet the supremely wise rabbis may interpret Scripture however they please.

Second, they teach concerning God that He studies, even though no knowledge is hidden from Him and He is wisdom itself. On this subject, the following is written in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 3, col. 2: אמר רבי יהודה אמר רב שנים עשרה שעות היו היום שלש הראשונות הק"ה יושב ועוסק בתורה. שניות יושב ודן את כל העולם וגו'. שלישיות יושב ודן את כל העולם וגו'. רביעיות יושב ומשחק עם לויתן that is: Rabbi Jehuda says that Rav said: the day has twelve hours; in the first three, God sits and studies the Law. In the next three hours He sits and judges the entire world, etc. In the third set of three hours He sits and sustains the entire world, etc. But in the last three hours He sits and plays with the Leviathan. The very same is also to be found in the Jalkut Schimóni on Isaiah, fol. 50, col. 4, num. 316. But in the Jerusalem Targum, or the Jerusalem Chaldean translation of the Five Books of Moses, it is read with a slight alteration in the Parasha or section Haasinu as follows: אמר משה נביא כד

 that is: Moses the Prophet has said: when I had ascended on high, I saw there the Lord of all the world, who divided the day into four parts; three hours He studied the Law, and three hours He was occupied with judgment, and three hours He was busy sustaining the world, but in the three (remaining) hours He joined men together with women. And in the book Rabboth or Rabbos, it is read in Bammidbar rabba, fol. 224, col. 1, in the 19th Parascha: רבי אהא בשם רבי חנינא אמר בשעה שעלה משה למרום שמע that is: Rabbi Acha says in the name of Rabbi Channina that Moses, at the time when he ascended on high (namely, into heaven), heard the voice of God, who was sitting and studying in the Parascha concerning the red heifer (that is, in the 19th chapter of the fourth book of Moses, where the red heifer is treated), and was delivering a ruling in the name of the one who had stated it. The very same is also found in the book Ir gibborim, fol. 70, col. 1, numero 212; and likewise in the Targum, or the Chaldean translation of Song 5:10, in the Venice edition, and in Rabbi Menachem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parascha Vajischma Jethro, fol. 97, col. 3, it is written as follows: בכך שריאת כנשתא דישראל למשתעי בשבחה דמרי עלמא וכן אמרת להווא אלהא רעותי למפלח דעטיף ביממא באצטלא חור כתלגא ועסיק בעשרין וארבע ספרין דאורייתא ופתגמי נבואה that is: Thus the Israelite congregation began to recount the praise of the Lord of the world, and said: I will serve that God who by day clothes Himself in a robe as white as snow, and studies in the twenty-four books of the Law, the Prophets, and the sacred Writings (that is, in the Bible of the Old Testament, which is divided into twenty-four books), but by night studies in the six orders (and parts) of the Mishna (that is, in the Talmud).

They also make God into a schoolmaster, and it is reported of Him in the Jalkut Schimoni on Isaiah, fol. 59, col. 4, numero 316, that since the Temple was destroyed He no longer plays; and it follows thereupon: רבביעית מאי קא עביד יושב ומלמד תינוקות של בית רבן מורה שנאמר את מי יורה דעה ואת מי יבין שמועה לגמולי מחלב ולעתיקי משדים: that is, What then does He do in the fourth part (of the day, namely in the last three hours thereof?) He sits and teaches the schoolchildren the Law, as it is said (Isa 28:9): Whom shall He (namely the Lord) teach knowledge? Or to whom shall He give understanding of what has been heard? To those who are weaned from milk and taken away from the breasts.

Third, they teach that in the firmament of heaven there are high schools in which deceased rabbis and others, and even the devils themselves, diligently study; and that in those same schools a sharp disputation was once held against

GOD, and that He was overcome in the disputation. Concerning these high schools, the following is written in the book Jalkut Rubéni gadól, fol. 159. col. 3. from the book Peliab: ואם אלף ישיבת למטה כנגדן אלף למעלה : that is: Know that there is no high school down here (on earth) that does not have one up there (in heaven) set over against it. Likewise, every one who is in the high school down here has up there (in heaven) a power and a shadow (by which an angel is understood) set over against him; and when there are a thousand high schools down here, there are also a thousand up there set over against them. So too, in the book Emek hamméleah, under the title Hakdamáth hammechabbér, in the 2nd chapter, in the third preface, fol. 10. colum. 2., the following is written concerning Rabbi Isaac Lurja: ז"ל: ומלמדו סתרי תורה: וזכה שבכל לילה עלתה נשמתו בישיבה של מעלה ובאו גדודים של מלאכי השרת לשמרו בדרך עד שהכניסוהו במתיבתא דרקיעא והיו שואלין אותו באיזה ישיבה הוא בוחר לשבת ההוא בחר לו לפעמים בישיבת הרשב"י ולפעמים בישיבת רבי עקיבא ולפעמים בישיבת הנביאים : that is: At times Elijah (of blessed memory) revealed himself to him and taught him the secrets of the Law. He was also so worthy that his soul (that is, he himself) ascended every night into the high school above, whereupon hosts of ministering angels came to guard him on the way, until they had brought him into the Academy of the Firmament. They then asked him which high school he chose to sit in; and he sometimes chose for himself the high school of Rabbi Simeon ben Jochai, sometimes the high school of Rabbi Akkiva, sometimes the high school of the great Rabbi Eliezer, and sometimes also the high school of the Prophets.

So also in the book Médrasch Kohéleth (or Kohéles) fol. 32. col. 2. the following is read: אמר רבי יוחנן כל מי שהוא יגע בתורה בעולם הזה לעולם הבא אין מניחין אותו : לישון אלא מוליכין אותו לבית מדרשו של שם ושל עבר ושל אברהם יצחק ויעקב ומשה ואהרן : that is: Rabbi Jochanan has said, everyone who labors in the Law in this world will not be permitted to sleep in the world to come, but rather will be led into the school of Sem, Heber, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and Aaron. In the Jalkut chádassch, however, at fol. 115. col. 4. under the title Maláchim, numero 24, the following is taught from the Sohar: שתי ישיבות יש למעלה זו מזו : חדא מתיבתא דרקיעא וחדא מתיבתא למעלה ממנה. בישיבה העליונה אין שם שום קשיא ופרכא אבל מתיבתא דרקיעא יש שם קושיא ופרכא. וכל מה שמקשים שם מתרצים בישיבה העליונה ולעתיד לבוא יסתלקו גם משיבת הרקיע קושיות ועל זה נאמר יהי שלום בחילך : that is: There are above two lofty academies, one above the other. The first is the lofty academy of the firmament, but the other is the one that is above it. In the uppermost, no objectiones or objections and contrary questions arise, but in the lofty academy of the firmament such things do occur; and all the objections that arise there are resolved in the uppermost lofty academy. In the future, however, there will also be no more objections in the lofty academy of the firmament, and for this reason it is said (Ps 122:7): "May there be peace within your walls, and rest within your palaces."

Regarding the Doctores and teachers who are to teach in the aforementioned schools, these are to consist not only of deceased rabbis but also of angels. As concerns the deceased rabbis, it is written thus in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 92. col. 1: כל הלומד תורה בעולם הזה וזכה ומלמדה לעולם הבא שנאמר : ומרוה גם הוא יורה : that is, everyone who teaches the Law in this world is made worthy to teach also in the world to come, as it is said (Prov 11:25): he who teaches shall also teach, as the Jews erroneously interpret it. For this reason Rabbi Akiva, as well as Rabbi Elieser and others, are also to teach there, as has been noted in the preceding section. As regards the angels, however, it is read thus in the book Jalkut chadash fol. 170. col. 2. numero 43, from the book Tikkune Sohar chadash, under the title Torah: בית הלל ובית שמאי כנגד תרי אמוראי : ברקיע דהיינו : that is, to the house of Shammai and the house of Hillel there are set opposite two teachers of the Gemara in the firmament, namely Michael and Gabriel, while Uriel pronounces the verdict between them.

What goes on in such schools of the firmament is something the Rabbis have much to write about. In the commentary of Rabbi Menáchem of Rekanat on the five books of Moses, it is written at fol. 97. col. 2, in the Parascha Vajischma Jethro, as follows: כשם שהוא שואל למטה כך למעלה : שנאמר שנאמר כשם שדנין למטה : שנאמר למטה כך דנין למעלה במתניתא בחילא דמלכא : that is, just as questions are brought forward here below (in the schools), so it also happens up above, as it is said (Dan 4:14): "This matter is decreed by the council of the watchers." Just as judgment is rendered here below, so also is judgment rendered up above. It is likewise written in the book Jalkut Rubeni gadol, fol. 159. col. 3, in the Parascha Pinchas, from the book Peliab, immediately following that which was already cited from it above: פה שלומדים למטה הוא שלומדים למעלה פי 'הגורין אחורי : להם וכו' 'אלו התנאים ואמוראים המה ותלמידיהם ותלמידי תלמידיהם כולם היו בהר סיני במעמד כל ישראל וקודם מתן תורה כולם היו למעלה. והרבה פעמים עברה כל התורה כולה על פיהם וראה באמת כשיעלה משה למרום מצאו לרבי עקיבא ותלמידו עמו וזה הי' קודם מתן תורה. ואמר לך דבר גדול כמעלה משה למרום באו שלש ומאתים של בנות צלפחד ובקשו נחלת אביהן בארץ ישראל בעד הכנת נעשה ונחנו שם ואמר להם הקב"ה הדין וכאשר היה הדבר למעלה כך היה הדבר למטה לא שמשנה היה שואל אלא היה מלמד מה שהיה למעלה כי כולה היה כתוב. וכן המגדף והמקושש וטמאים כיוצא בהם. דע כי בזמן דקא עסקי 'למטה קא עסקי כחות שכנגדם למעלה ועל אותו ענין ממש. ולפעמים הנפש וציורויה למעלה : that is, what is learned here below is also learned up above, for they have the very same Law. Moreover, all the Doctors of the Mishna and Gemara (in which two parts the entire Talmud consists), together with their disciples and the disciples of their disciples, were all present together at Mount Sinai when all Israel stood there, and they were all up above (in heaven) before the Law was given; the entire Law also passed through their mouths many times. The truth of this may be seen from the fact that when Moses ascended on high (namely, into heaven to receive the Law, as is reported below in the 8th chapter of this first part), he found Rabbi Akkiva and his disciple there with him, which occurred before the Law was given. I will also tell you a great thing: when Moses ascended on high, the shadows and powers of the daughters of Zelaphead (who are mentioned in Num 27) came and sought their father's inheritance in the land of Israel; this matter was also dealt with and deliberated upon there, and God pronounced judgment for them. Just as the matter proceeded up above, so also did it come to pass here below: not that Moses had to ask, but rather he instructed them in what had taken place up above, for it was all written down. So it is likewise with the blasphemer (of whom Lev 24:11, 14 is to be read) and him who gathered wood on the Sabbath (mentioned in Num 15:32), as well as the unclean, and so forth. Know also that when people here below engage in study, their powers (that is, their angels or spirits) above are certainly studying in that very same matter as well. Sometimes the soul and its shadow and power are above, but sometimes the soul is here below in the garment of the body, and the power is above.

Furthermore, in the little book Othióth (or Osios) Rabbi Akkiva, fol. 22, col. 3, the following is read: דאמר משה מזלו של רבי עקיבא בפרגוד של מקום שחזה יושב ודורש אותיות של תורה על כל תני כל אות ואות אומר עליו ג' מאות וששים וק' טעמי תורה מיד היה מסתיו ומתזעזע ואמר אין לי עסק בדברי תורה שנאמר ויאמר בי אדוני שלח נא ביד תשלח גלוי היה לפני הק"ה מה בלבו של משה מה עשה הק"ה שמין לסגנואל שר של כל החכמה והתבונה מה עשה תפשו למשה והוליכו למקום אחר והראהו בפרגוד של מקום דוכר דמכת של מזלות של חכמים ושל נבונים ושל סנהדרין ושל סופרים שיושבין ודורשין טעמי תורה ומקרא ומשנה ומדרש הלכות ואגדות ושמיעות ותוספות הלכה למשה מסיני מיד נתקרה that is, when Moses saw the Massal or spirit of Rabbi Akkiva behind the curtain of God, sitting and expounding the letters of the Law together with all the little strokes of each individual letter, and bringing forth three hundred and sixty-five meanings (or interpretations) of the Law, he trembled and shook, and said: I want nothing to do with the Law, as it is written (Exod 4:13): "Send whomever you wish to send." Now it was not hidden from God what Moses had in his mind; but what did God do? He sent Sangafel, the prince of all wisdom and understanding, to him. What did this one do? He took hold of Moses and led him to another place, and showed him behind the curtain of God many tens of thousands of spirits of the wise and the discerning of the Synedrion or high council, and of the scribes, who sat and expounded the meanings of the Law, of Scripture, of the Mischna, of the Medrasch (that is, of the allegorical explanations), of the Halachóth (or Halóchos, that is, of the legal decisions), of the Haggadóth (or Haggadós, that is, of the entertaining narratives), of the Schemuóth (or Schemuos, that is, of the traditions which are heard), and of the Tosephóth (or Tósephos, that is, of the additions to the Talmud), and declared that it was a legal decision of Moses from Mount Sinai; whereupon he immediately set his mind at rest, etc.

God the Lord is also said to bring forth a new Halacha (or Halócho, that is, a ruling) every day in the upper heavenly academy, concerning which it is written in the book Bereschith (or Beräschis) rábba, fól. 44, col. 3, in the 49th Parascha, and fól. 57, col. 4, in the 64th Parascha, as follows: אינין יום שאין הקב"ה מחדש הלכה בבית דין של מעלה; מאי טעמיה שמעו שמוע ברוגז קולו והגה מפיו יצא. חוק הנה אלא חוק הנה ולילה that is: There passes no day in which God does not bring forth a new ruling in the upper court of justice. From where is this proven: (because it is written in Job 37:2:) Hear attentively the stirring of His voice, and a hegeh, that is, a discourse, shall go forth from His mouth. The word hegeh, however, signifies nothing other than the Law, as it is said (Josh 1:8): vebagitha bo jomám valájela, that is, You shall meditate on it day and night. And in the Talmudic tractate Chagiga it is read at fól. 15, col. 2: אשכחיה רבה בר שילה לאליהו אמר ליה מאי קא עביד הקב"ה אמר ליה קאמר שמעתא מפומיהו דכלהו רבנן ומפומיה דרבי מאיר לא קאמר אמר ליה אמאי אמר ליה משום דקא גמר שמעתא מפומיה דאחר: that is: Rabba, the son of Shela, found Elijah and asked him what God was doing; whereupon he told him that He had brought forth a lesson from the mouths of all the rabbis, but from the mouth of Rabbi Meir He had said nothing. Rabba asked why. Elijah answered: because he had learned a lesson from the mouth of the other one (that is, of Elisha, the son of Abuja).

When a difficult question is sometimes brought before the upper academy, the rabbis on earth are also to be consulted about it, in order to give their opinion on the matter. Concerning this, the following is found in the aforementioned Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fól. 129, col. 3, in the Parascha Vajikra: רבי שמעון היה אול לטבריא פגע ביה אליהו אמר ליה שלם למך במאי קא עסיק קדוש ברוך הוא. ברקיעא אמר ליה בקרבנות קא עסיק ואמר מלין דדתין משמך זכאה אנת ואתינא למנקום לך שלם וכלה חד בעינא למשאל מינך לאסכמא במתיבתא דרקיעא. שאלתא שאלו עלמא דאתי לית ביה אכילה ושתייה והא כתיב באתי לגני אחותי כלה אכלתי יערי עם דבשתי אמר ליה אכלתי יערי אמר אכלתי יערי שעיתי יני. אמר רבי שמעון וק"ב מה אותב לון. אמר ליה אמר הקב"ה הא בר יוחאי לימא אחונא למשאל סני: that is, Rabbi Schimon once went to Tiberias, and when Elijah met him, he greeted him and asked him in what subject God was studying in the firmament of heaven. He told him that He was studying the subject of the sacrifices and had, on your account, brought forward new matters. You are righteous, and I have come to greet you beforehand, and I desire to ask you one thing, so that the high academy of the firmament may come to agreement. A question has been posed as to whether one also eats and drinks in the life to come. (In response to this it was answered:) Is it not written (Song 5:1): I come into my garden, my sister, my dear bride; I have eaten of my honeycomb. Should one who neither eats nor drinks say, I have eaten of my honeycomb, I have drunk of my wine? Thereupon Rabbi Schimon asked what God had then answered them in reply; and he said, God declared that Ben Jochai should give the answer to this: and that is why I have come to ask you.

What concerns those who during their lifetime did not study, but who did good to those who studied the Law: these shall be taught after their death, as is taught in the little book Schebechath leket, under the title Gemiluth chasodim uzedaka (or gomilus chasodim uzedoko), numero 4, from the book סוד ה' ליראיו, where it is written as follows: מי שנתן בחייו ללומדי תורה וגמל חסד עמהם אע"פ שהוא עם הארץ לאחר מותו מלמדין אותו: that is, Whoever gives something to those who learn the Law, and shows them mercy, even if he is an idiot or unlearned man, shall nonetheless be taught after his death.

But since books are required for studying, such deceased persons shall also have books in which they study, and this is read in the Sepher Chasidim, numero 455, as follows: נשמות יש להם ספרים ערוכים על השולחן כמו שהיו רגילים בחייהם: that is, The souls have their books laid out ready on the table: just as they were accustomed to learning during their lifetime, so they learn also in their death. And immediately following, at numero 458: מעשה: שצעברו נכרים דרך בית הקברות בליל שבת וראו יהודי אחד וספרו על שלחנו וקרא בו: that is, A story occurred in which strangers passed by a place of burial and saw a Jew who had his book on the table and was reading in it.

That devils also come to the upper academy and are supposed to study there can be demonstrated from the Talmudic tractate Gittin, where at fol. 68, col. 1 it is reported that when someone once inquired after a certain worm called Schamir (which shall be discussed below in Chapter 8), asking where it had gone, the answer was given that Aschmedai, the king of the devils, would surely know. But when asked where he himself was to be found and located, the following answer was given: כריא ליה כירא ומליא ליה מיא ומכסיא בטינרא וחחמא בגושפנקא דכל יומא סליק לרקיעא ותמר מתיבתא דרקיעא ונחית לארעא ותמר כריא ליה כירא ומליא ליה מיא ומכסיא בטינרא: that is, on Mount N. he has dug himself a pit and filled it with water, covered it with a stone, and sealed it with his signet ring, and he ascends every day into the firmament and studies in the academy there, after which he comes back down to the earth and studies in the academy of the earth.

How it once came to pass that there was sharp disputation against GOD in the heavenly academy of the firmament, and that He was contradicted by all the heavenly academies, is taught to us by Rabbi Bechai in his book Cad hakkemach fol. 78. col. 1., drawn from the Talmudic tractate Báva mézia, fol. 86. col. 1., under the title Och Tov, in the following words: רבה בר נחמני הוה וריש שמע דקא מיפלגי במתיבתא דרקינא אם בהרת קדמה לשער לכן טמא אם שער לכן קדם לבהרת טהור ספק הקב"ה אומר טהור וכולהו מתיבתא דרקינא אמרי טמא. אמרי מאן נוכח דמה בר נחמני דאמר דמה בר נחמני אני יחיד בנגעים ואני יחיד באהלות שדר שליחא בתריה ולא הוה מצי מלאך דמותא למקרב לגביה דלא הוה פסיק פומיה מגירסא אדהכי נשב זיקא ואוש ברי קני סבר גונדא דפרשי דזון אמר תינח נפשיה דההוא גברא ולא ניםר בידא דמלכותא כי הוה ינחא נפשיה אמר טהור טהור יצתה בת קול ואמרה אשריך בר נחמני שגופך טהור that is: Rabba bar Nachmáni was reading and heard that those in the academy of the firmament were disputing with one another as to whether it is unclean when a blister comes before the white hair, or whether it is clean when the hair comes before the blister. This was uncertain. GOD said it was clean; but all the heavenly academies of the firmament said it was unclean. Thereupon the question was raised as to who should prove the matter and settle the dispute, and Rabba bar Nachmáni was proposed, for Rabba bar Nachmáni had said: I alone am the one who understands the plagues (of leprosy in men); I alone know the leprosy of dwellings. Thereupon a messenger was sent to him; but the Angel of Death could not draw near to him, because his mouth did not cease from reading. Meanwhile a wind began to blow and made a noise among the reeds (in which he was standing in the marsh), so that he thought it was a troop of horsemen (who wished to take him captive), whereupon bar Nachmáni said: I must die and will not be delivered into the hands of the king (who pursues me). When he then died, he said: it is clean, thus siding with GOD and holding His opinion against all the heavenly academies of the firmament, whereupon a voice came from heaven and spoke: you, bar Nachmáni, are blessed, for your body is clean, and your soul has departed in purity. From this tasteless and godless fable of the Talmud it is evident that GOD, according to the opinion of all the heavenly academies, had erred and judged wrongly, and that He is not to be believed in all matters. And this accords with what is written in the book Zéda laderéché, in the Parascha Kí tiffa, fol. 85. col. 2., concerning Moses, namely that he too did not believe GOD, where the words read as follows: בשעה שאמר לו הקב"ה לך רד כי שחת עמך היה תופס בלוחות ולא היה מאמין שחטאו ישראל אמר אם איני רואה אין מאמין שנ' ויהי כאשר קרב סעה אל המחנה שלא שבת עד שראה בעיני : that is: When GOD had said to him (namely to Moses) (Exod 32:7): Go down, for your people have corrupted themselves, he held onto the tablets and did not believe that Israel had sinned, but said: if I do not see it, I will not believe it, as it is said (Exod 32:19): But when Moses drew near to the camp. He therefore did not break them (the tablets) until he had seen it with his own eyes. As for the matter of GOD having been overcome in disputation, it is written thus in the Talmudic tractate Báva mezía fol. 59. col. 1. 2.: תנן התם חתכו חוליות ונתן חול בין חוליא לחוליא רבי אליעזר מטהר וחכמים מטמאים וזהו תנור של עכנאי מאי עכנאי אמר רב יהודה אמר שמואל שהקיפו דברים כעכנא זו וטמאוהו. תנא באותו היום השיב רבי אליעזר כל תשובות שבעולם ולא קבלו הימנו אמר להם אם הלכה כמותי חרוב זה יוכיח נעקר חרוב ממקומו מאה אמה ואמרי לה ד' מאות אמרו לו אין מביאין ראיה מן החרוב. חזר ואמר להם אם הלכה כמותי אמת המים יוכיחו חזרו אמת המים לאחוריהם אמרו לו אין מביאים ראיה מאמת המים. חזר ואמר להם אם הלכה כמותי כותלי בית המדרש יוכיחו. הטו כותלי בית המדרש ליפול גער בהן רבי יהושע אמר להם אם תלמידי חכמים מנצחים זה את זה בהלכה אתם מה טיבכם. לא. נפלו מפני כבודו של רבי יהושע ולא זקפו מפני כבודו של רבי אליעזר ועדיין מטין ועומדין חזר ואמר להם אם הלכה כמותי. מן השמים יוכיחו. יצתה בת קול ואמרה מה לכם אצל רבי אליעזר שהלכה כמותו בכל מקום. עמד רבי יהושע על רגליו ואמר לא בשמים היא. מאי לא בשמים היא. אמר רבי ירמיה שכבר ניתנה תורה מהר סיני אין אנו משגיחין בכח קול שכבר כתבת בהר סיני בתורה אחרי רבים להטות. אשכחיה רבי נתן לאליהו אמר ליה מאי עביד that is: It is taught there that they cut pieces of stone (when they made an oven and laid them in order) and placed sand between each piece. Rabbi Eliezer says that such an oven is clean; but the Sages say it is unclean; and this is an oven that is made in the manner of a serpent (just as a serpent when it coils itself in a circle and puts its tail into its mouth). What does "in the manner of a serpent" mean? Rabbi Jehuda reports that Rabbi Samuel said: they (namely the Sages) surrounded their words like a serpent (that is, they demonstrated by means of many proofs, which circle back upon themselves like a serpent, that such an oven is unclean). We learn that Rabbi Eliezer on that day brought forward all the arguments in the world (to uphold his opinion and assertion), but they were unwilling to accept them. He said to them: if the ruling is according to me (and I am right), then let this carob tree prove it; whereupon the carob tree was uprooted and moved one hundred cubits, and some say four hundred cubits, from its place. But they (namely the Sages) said to him: one does not bring proof from a carob tree. Thereupon he said again: if the ruling is according to me, then let this stream prove it; whereupon the stream flowed backwards. But they said to him: one does not bring proof from a stream. After that he said to them again: if the ruling is according to me, then let the walls of this academy prove it. Whereupon the walls of the academy bent as though they were about to fall; but Rabbi Jehoscha (or Joshua) rebuked them and said to them: when the disciples of the Sages (that is, the learned and wise rabbis, who out of humility call themselves disciples of the Sages) overcome one another in a ruling, what concern is that of yours? They did not fall out of respect for Rabbi Jehoscha, nor did they right themselves again out of respect for Rabbi Elieser, and they still stand bent to this day. Thereupon he said to them again: if the ruling is according to me (and my assertion is true), then let this be proven from heaven; whereupon a voice went forth from heaven and spoke: what have you to do with Rabbi Elieser? The ruling follows him in all places. But Rabbi Jehoscha stood up on his feet and spoke (from Deut 30:12): לא בשמים היא (It is not in heaven.) What is this, לא בשמים היא (It is not in heaven?) Rabbi Jeremias says: the Law has been given to us from Mount Sinai; we pay no heed to the voice from heaven, for You (O GOD) have already written on Mount Sinai in the Law (Exod 23:2): one must follow the majority (and yield to it). When Rabbi Nathan then encountered Elijah, he asked him: what did GOD do in that very hour (when this came to pass)? Elijah said to him: I swear to you by your life that He said: my children have overcome me, my children have overcome me. From this Talmudic madness we see that GOD, although He is supposed to have confirmed Rabbi Elieser's opinion through such great miracles, was nevertheless ultimately compelled to confess that He had been in the wrong and had been overcome in disputation by the wise rabbis. And the Talmud reports, in what follows upon the above, that Rabbi Elieser was placed under the ban on account of his contumacy; concerning which one may also read chapter 135 in the Maase-Book.

Fourth, they teach concerning God that He has wept, and still weeps daily, and that this has occurred, and in part still occurs: first, on account of the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem; second, on account of the exilii, or misery, of the Jews, in that they have been driven out of their land; third, on account of those who are able to study the Law and do not do so, and on account of those who are not capable of such study and yet do so anyway; fourth, on account of an arrogant leader of the congregation; and finally, fifth, on account of the death of Mosis.

Regarding the first cause of God's weeping, namely the destruction of the Temple, the following is written in the Talmudic tractate Chagiga fol. 5. col. 2. on the words of Jer 13:17: וואס לא תשמעוה במסתרים תבכה נפשי מפני גוה Veim lo tischma'uha bemistarim tifkeb nafschí mippené géva, that is, "But if you will not hear it, my soul must weep in secret over such pride"; the passage reads as follows: מקום יש לו להק"ב (שהוא) שבונה בו (ומסתירים) שמו מאי מפני גוה אמר רב שמואל בר יצחק מפני גאותן של ישראל שנטלה מהם ונתנה לאומות העולם. רבי שמואל בר נחמני אמר מפני גאותה של מלכות שמים. ומי איכא בעיה קמיה דק"ב? והאמר רב פפא אין עציבות לפני הק"ב. שהאמר הוד והדר לפניו עוז וחדוה במקומו. לא קשיא הא בבתי גויא הא בבתי בראי לא והא כתיב ויקרא אדני ה' צבאות ביום ההוא לבכי ולמספד ולקרחה ולחגור שק שאני חרבן בית המקדש דאפילו מלאכי שלום בכו שנאמר הן אראלם צעקו חוצה ומלאכי שלום מר יבכיון: that is, the Holy and Blessed God has a place in which He weeps (as is further noted in the book Nézach Israël fol. 16. col. 4. in the 9th chapter, and in the book En Israël fol. 154. col. 1.), which is called Mistarim (or Mistórim), that is, a hidden place. But what do the words מפני גוה mippené géva mean, that is, "on account of the pride" (or the glory)? Rabbi Samuel, the son of Isaac, says: on account of the glory of Israel, which has been taken from them and given to the nations of the world (does God weep). Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachman, says: on account of the glory of God (which is despised on account of the captivity and misery of the Jews). What! Does the Holy and Blessed God weep then? For Raf Papa says that there is no sorrow before God, as it is said (1 Chr 16:27): "Splendor and majesty are before Him, and strength and joy are in His place." (In response to this objection it is answered:) This objection is not valid, for the former (namely, that God weeps) is to be understood of the inner chambers, while the latter (that He does not weep) is to be understood of the outer dwellings (of heaven). What! Does God then not weep in the outer dwellings either? For it is written (Isa 22:12): "Therefore the Lord of Hosts shall call in that day for weeping and mourning, and for baldness and for girding with sackcloth." (To this the following answer is given:) The matter of the destruction of the Temple is a different case altogether, for even the angels of peace wept over it, as it is written (Isa 33:7): "Behold, their messengers (or mighty ones) cry out in the streets, and the angels of peace weep bitterly."

In the book Rabboth (or Rabbos), in Peticháth écha rúbbathi (or Pesichas écha rabbati), the following is also read at fol. 289, col. 4: להחריב"ה שבקש הקב"ה את בית המקדש אמר כל זמן שאני בתוכו אין אומות העולם נוגעים בו אלא אכבש את עיני ממנו ואשבע שלא אזקק לו עד עת קץ ויבאו האויבים ויחריבו אותו. מיד נשבע הקב"ה בימינו והחזיר אחוריו הדא הוא דכתיב השיב אחור ימינו מפני אויב. באותה שעה נכנסו אויבים להיכל ושרפוהו וכיון שנשרף אמר הקב"ה שוב אין לי מושב בארץ אסלק שכינתי ממנה ואעלה למכוני הראשון הה"ד אלהי ואשובה אל מקומי עד אשר יאשמו ובקשו פני. באותה שעה היה הקב"ה בוכה ואומר אוי לי מה עשיתי השריתי שכינתי למטה בשביל ישראל ועכשיו שחטאו חזרתי למקומי הראשון. חס ושלום שהייתי שחוק לגוים ולעג לבריות. באותה שעה בא מטטרון ונפל על פניו ואמר לפניו רבש"ע אני אבכה ואתה לא תבכה אמר לו אם אין אתה מניח לי לבכות עכשיו אכנס למקום שאין לך רשות ליכנס ואבכה שנאמר ואם לא תשמעוהו במסתרים תבכה נפשי מפני גוה וגו' אמר להן הקב"ה למלאכי השרת בואו ונלך אני ואתם ונראה בביתי מה עשו אויבים בו. מיד הלך הקב"ה ומלאכי השרת וירמיה לפניו וכיון שראה הקב"ה את בית המקדש אמר בודאי זה ביתי וזהו מנוחתי שבאו אויבים ועשו בו כרצונם באותה שעה היה קב"ה בוכה ואומר אוי לי על ביתי בני היכן אתם, כהני היכן אתם, אוהבי היכן אתם, מה אעשה לכם, הזהרתי בכם ולא חזרתם בתשובה. אמר הקב"ה לירמיה אני דומה היום לאדם שהיה לו בן יחיד ועשה לו חופה ומת בתוך חופתו. ואין לך כאב לא עלי ולא על בני. לך וקרא לאברהם ליצחק וליעקב ומשה מקבריהם שהם יודעים לבכות. אמר לפניו רבונו של עולם איני יודע היכן משה קבור אמר לו הקב"ה עמוד על שפת הירדן והרם קולך וקרא בן עמרם בן עמרם עמוד וראה צאנך שבלעום אויבים. מיד הלך ירמיה למערת המכפלה ואמר לאבות העולם

At the time when God wished to destroy the Temple, He said: as long as I am within it, the nations of the world will not touch it; but I will hide My eyes from it and swear that I will not concern Myself with it until the time of the end, and the enemies shall come and lay it waste. Thereupon God immediately swore by His right hand and turned it behind Him; this is what is written (Lam 2:3): He has drawn back His right hand before the enemy. At that same time the enemies entered the Temple and burned it; and when it was burned, God said: I have no dwelling on earth any longer; I will withdraw My divine presence (or Majesty) from it and betake Myself up to My first place; this is what is written (Hos 5:15): I will go and return to My place, until they acknowledge their guilt and seek My face. At that same time God wept and said: Woe is Me! What have I done? I had caused My Majesty to dwell below for the sake of Israel; but now that they have sinned, I have returned to My first place, and have become (which God forbid) a laughingstock to the heathen and a mockery to the creatures. At that same time Metatron came, fell upon his face, and spoke before Him: O Lord of the world! I will weep, but You shall not weep. Thereupon God said to him: If you will not let Me weep, I will immediately betake Myself to a place where you have no power to go, and will weep there, as it is said (Jer 13:17): But if you will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret. Then God said to the ministering angels: Come, let us go together, you and I, and see in My house what the enemies have done therein; and straightway God went forth, and the ministering angels, as well as Jeremiah, went before Him. And when God had seen the Temple, He said: Surely this is My house and this is My resting place, into which the enemies have entered and dealt according to their pleasure. At that time God wept and said: Woe is Me because of My house! Where are you, My children; where are you, My priests; where are you, My friends; what shall I do for you? I warned you, but you did not repent. Thereafter God said to Jeremiah: I am today like a man who had an only son, for whom he held a wedding, but who died in the midst of the wedding; and you concern yourself neither on My account nor on account of My children. Go and call Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and Moses from their graves, since they know how to weep. He, however, said to Him: Lord of the world, I do not know where Moses is buried. Then God said to him: Go and stand on the bank of the Jordan and raise your voice and call: O son of Amram! son of Amram! arise and see your flock, which the enemies have swallowed up! Straightway thereafter Jeremiah went to the double cave (which is mentioned in Gen 23:17) and said to the fathers of the world: Arise, for the time has come that you are summoned before God. They asked him: Why? But he answered: I do not know, since he was afraid they might say to him: This has befallen our children in your days. Jeremiah departed from them, and when he stood on the bank of the Jordan, he called: O son of Amram! son of Amram! arise, the time has come that you are summoned before God. But he asked: What has now occurred more than at other times, that I am called before God? Jeremiah said to him: I do not know. Then Moses left him and betook himself to the ministering angels, whom he had known from the time when the Law was given, and said to them: You servants of the Most High, do you not know why I am summoned before God? They answered him: Son of Amram, do you not know that the Temple is destroyed and the children of Israel have been led away into captivity? Thereupon he cried out and wept until he came to the fathers of the world, who also immediately tore their garments, laid their hands upon their heads, and cried and wept all the way to the gates of the Temple. And when God saw them, (there came to pass what is written in Isa 22:12:) Therefore the Lord GOD of hosts called in that day to weeping and mourning, to baldness and to girding with sackcloth. And if this verse were not written, one would not be permitted to say it. They wept and went from one gate to another, like a man whose dead lies before him; and God lamented and said: Woe to the king who was prosperous in his youth but unfortunate in his old age. This same fable is also found in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, fol. 165, col. 2, 3, 4, and in the book Ze'ena ure'ena, fol. 108, col. 4, under the title Chorban, where yet more fables are added to it.

On fol. 290, col. 3 of the aforementioned book Pethicháth echa rábbathi (or Pestchas écha rábbati), the following is further written on this matter: עשר מסעות נסעה השכינה, מכרוב לכרוב, ומכרוב למפתן הבית, מן מפתן הבית לכרובים, מן הכרובים לשער הקדמוני, משער הקדמוני לחצר, מן החצר לגג, מן הגג למזבח, מן המזבח לחומה, מן החומה לעיר, מן העיר להר הזיתים וגו'. 'משהיתה שכינה יוצאת מבית המקדש חוזרת ומנשקת' ומחבקת בכותלי בית המקדש ובעמודי בית המקדש ובוכה ואמרת ה' 'שלום בית מקדשי, ה' 'שלום בית מלכותי, ה' 'שלום בית יקרי, ה' 'שלום מן כדון, ה' 'שלום וגו' that is, the Divine Majesty made ten journeys back and forth: from one Cherubb to the other, and from the Cherubb to the threshold of the House; from the threshold of the House to the Cherubim, from the Cherubim to the gate facing east, from the gate facing east into the outer court, from the outer court onto the roof, from the roof to the altar, from the altar onto the wall, from the wall into the city, from the city onto the Mount of Olives, &c. But when God departed from the Temple, He turned back, embraced and kissed its walls and pillars, wept, and said: Alas for the peace of the house of my sanctuary! Alas for the peace of my kingdom! Alas for the peace of the house of my glory! Alas for the peace from this time forth! Alas for the peace! &c.

Furthermore, it is reported in the aforementioned Jalkut Schimoni on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, fol. 166, col. 4, num. 1000, that when God the Lord wept over Israel on account of the destroyed Temple, the angels came to Him and wished to comfort Him, but He would not allow Himself to be comforted; and the words read as follows: באותה שעה נכנסו מלאכי השרת לנחמו ולא רצה לקבל, תנחומין על כן אמרתי (to God) to comfort Him, but He would not receive any comfort; (and of this it is written in Isa 22:4:) "Therefore I say: Depart from me, let me weep bitterly; do not press upon me to comfort me concerning the destruction of the daughter of my people." Furthermore, it stands in the aforementioned Jalkut Schimoni on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, fol. 168, col. 27, numero 1026, that when the Temple was set on fire, God was urged to go out, with these words: בשעה שנכנסו גוים והציתו את האור בבית המקדש והיה הק"ב יושב ובוכה 'אמר מה אעשה נכנס אסף אצלו וא"ל רב"ש האור דולק ואתה יושב קום צאו מביתך שנה הרימה פעמך למשאות נצח כל הרע אויב בקדש באותה שעה חוזרים ומתכנשים כל הנביאים והולכים אצל ירושלים לנחמה, that is: In the hour when the heathens entered and kindled the fire in the Temple, God sat and wept, and said: What shall I do? Then Asaph stepped in to Him and said to Him: O Lord of the world, the fire is burning in Your house and You sit still! Rise up and go out of Your house, as it is said (Ps 74:3): "Lift up Your feet (or steps) to the eternal desolations: the enemy has done all manner of evil in the sanctuary (or Temple)." At that same hour all the prophets gathered together again and went to the city of Jerusalem to comfort her. Concerning this weeping of God over the destroyed Temple, more is also to be read in the preface of the book Kol bochim, drawn from the Sohar, in Megillath Echa, numer. 11.

As for the claim that God is supposed to have cried out, "Woe is me!" the following is read in the Talmudic tractate Bava bathra (or Bafra) fol. 74. col. 1. and in the book En Ifrael fol. 96. column. 2.: אמר רבה בר בר חנה זימנא חדא הוה: אזילנא באורחא אמר לי ההוא טייעא תא אחוי לך טורא דסיני אזלי וחזיתי ליה דהדרן ליה עקרבי וקימן כחמרי חורין שמעתי בת קול שאומרת אוי לי שנשבעת עמי ועכשו שנשבעת עמי: that is, Rabba, the grandson of Channa, relates: once an Arab merchant said to me, come here, I will show you Mount Sinai. When I went there, I saw the mountain surrounded on all sides by scorpions, which stood there like white donkeys; but I heard a voice from heaven, which said, woe is me that I have sworn! but now that I have sworn, who will release me from my oath. In the Talmud, however, it is reported in what follows at the aforementioned place that when Rabba came to others and told them this, they called him a donkey and a fool, because he had not released God from His oath and vow, which He had made on account of the destruction of the Temple (of which mention was made above).

do for me what he did in the former months, when he released the holy and blessed GOD from His oath. May he also now release the holy and blessed GOD from His oath, by which He swore that I should not enter the land of Israel. One must also say that this passage (from the cited place in Job) likewise bears a meaning with respect to those aforementioned words that were spoken by a heavenly voice, which said: Woe to me that I have sworn! but now that I have sworn, Mi méfer li, that is, who releases me from my oath: consider the word Mi; and this signifies as much as: the angel who is called Mi will annul my oath. These are the words of the book Ammudéba Schifa. Now, if the angel Mi is appointed to release God from His oath and sworn word, then those who scolded Rabba as an ass and a fool because he had not released God from His oath and freed Him from it had no cause to do so. But all of this is Jewish madness; and these fools wish to make an angel out of the word Mi, which is a pronomen interrogativum personæ and means "who."

Regarding the words "woe is me, but to return again," which God is said to have spoken, the following is also written in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos fol. 3. col. 1.): אמר רב יצחק בר שמואל משמיה דרב שלש משמרות הוי (the הלילה ועל כל משמר ומשמר יושב הק"בה ושואר כארי ואומר אי שהרחבתי את ביתי ושרפתי that is: Rabbi Yitzhak, the son of Samuel, says in the name of Rav: the night has three watches, and at each and every watch God sits and roars like a lion, and says: O woe, that I have allowed my house to be laid waste, my temple to be burned, and my children to be led away captive among the nations of the world! In Bab. Berachot it is reported that Elijah once encountered Rabbi Jose in the wilderness and, among other things, asked him what kind of voice he had heard in the wilderness. He answered: שמעתי בת קול שמנהמת כיונה ואומרת אי that is: I heard a voice that cooed like a dove and said: O woe, that I have allowed my house to be destroyed, my temple to be burned, and my children to be driven into misery among the nations! Thereupon Elijah said to him: חייך ראשך לא שעה זו בלבד אומרת כך אלא בכל יום ויום שלש פעמים אומרת כך ולא זו בלבד אלא בשעה שישראל נכנסין לבתי כנסיות ולבתי מדרשות ועונין אמן יהא שמיה רבה מברך הקדוש מנענע ראשו ואומר אשרי המלך שמקלסין אותו בביתו כך מה לו לאב שהגלה את בניו ואוי להם לבנים that is: I swear by your life and by the life of your head, that it speaks thus not only in this hour alone, but every single day three times. And not only that, but also when the Israelites go into their synagogues (or schools) and say: Amen, may His glorious name be blessed, God shakes His head and says: Blessed is the king who is praised in his house in such a manner; but what does a father have who lets his children go into misery? Woe also to the children who have been driven from their father's table!

Since the preceding discussion has shown what great unrest and grief the destruction of the Temple and the expulsion of the Jews from their land has caused God, and continues to cause daily, according to the foolish and blasphemous Jewish fables, we wish to examine further what is to be found on this subject in their books. In the Jalkut Chadäsch, at fol. 74, col. 4, numero 15, under the title Chórbán, the following is read: כשהמלאכים מזכירים להקב"ה חרבן בית המקדש אין לו להקב"ה כביכול מנוחה עד שנכנס לגן עדן לשעשע עם הצדיקים, that is: When the angels remind God of the destruction of the Temple, He has, so to speak, no rest until He goes into Paradise and takes delight with the righteous. It is likewise written in the aforementioned Jalkut Chadäsch, fol. 75, col. 1, under the said title Chórbán, numer. 25, from the Talmudic tractate Avoda Sára, fol. 3, col. 2, as follows: קודם החרבן היה לו להקב"ה שחוק עם לויתן ומשחרב אין שחוק לפניו, that is: Before the devastation (of the Temple), God played with the Leviathan (that is, with the great whale), but from the time that the devastation took place, He plays no more. And in the Jalkut Schimóni, on the prophet Isaiah, at fol. 50, col. 4, numero 316, the following is read on this subject: מכי תריב מקדשא אין שחוק לפני הקב"ה שנאמר הזשיתי מעולם, that is: Since the sanctuary was laid waste, God plays no more (with the Leviathan, as stated just before), as it is said (Isa 42:14): I have been silent for a long time. Indeed, in the book Pesikta rabbetha (or rabbesa), at fol. 52, col. 2, 3, it is reported that God, since the destruction of the Temple, has no longer come to His throne, and has spoken thus to the Messiah, the son of Ephraim: הרשע והחריב את ביתי ושרף את היכלי והגלה את בני לבין האומות העולם חייך ראשי שלא נכנסתי לכסא שלי ואם אין אתה מאמין ראה טל שעלה על ראשי שנאמר שראשי נמלא טל קוצותי רסיסי לילה, that is: From the day that the wicked Nebuchadnezzar went up and destroyed my house and burned my Temple and led my children into misery among the nations of the world, I swear by your life and by the life of my head that I have not entered my throne; and if you will not believe it, look at the dew that has fallen upon my head, as it is said (Song 5:3): For my head is full of dew, and my locks are full of drops of the night. It is likewise read in the Sohar Vajikra, in the Parascha Vajikra, in the 24th column: אמר רבי יהודה תנינן מן יומא דאתחרב בית מקדשא לית יומא דלא אשתכח ביה רתחא בישא מאי טעמא משום דתנינן א"ר יודאי א"ר יסא נשבע הקב"ה שלא יכנס בירושלים של מעלה עד שיכנסו ישראל בירושלים של מטה ובין כך רתחא אשתכח בעלמא, that is: Rabbi Jehuda says: we learn that from the day on which the Temple was destroyed, not a single day passes in which a wicked wrath is not found (that is, in which God is not wrathful). What is the reason for this? Because we learn that Rabbi Jodai said that Rabbi Jesu reported that God swore He would not enter the upper Jerusalem until the Israelites return to the lower Jerusalem, and therefore a wrath is found in the world.

Since the destruction of the Temple, GOD is also said to have very little room in the world, concerning which the Talmud in Tractate Berachoth (or Beróchos) fol. 11. col. 1. teaches as follows: מיום שחרב בית המקדש אין לו להק"ה בה: that is, since the Temple was laid waste, GOD has no more than four cubits of space in which to move about in His world.

The Jews are also of the opinion that the destruction of the Temple and their misery is a cause of earthquakes, concerning which it is reported in Schemóth (or Schemós) rábba in the 29th Parascha, fol. 118. col. 3. and in the book Méor Enáim fol. 6. col. 1. as follows: שאל פליצא את ר' עקיבא א"ל מהיכן הרעש נעשה אמר: לו בשעה בשעה שהק"ה מסתכל בבתי עכ"ו ובע"כום היאך נתונים בשקט ובשלוה בעולם ורואה ביתו חרב ונתון בידם של ע"כום כביכול הוא מקנא ושואג ומיד השמים והארץ רועשים: that is, Belza asked Rabbi Akkiva from where earthquakes arise. To this he answered: when GOD sees the houses of the idolaters and the idolaters themselves, how they sit quietly and in peace in the world, and sees on the other hand that His house is laid waste and given into the hands of the idolaters, He grows jealous, so to speak, and roars; whereupon heaven and earth immediately tremble, as it is said in Joel 4:16: "From Zion He roars, and from Jerusalem He lets His voice be heard."

Regarding the second cause of God's weeping, namely the misery of the Jews, because they were driven out of their land and led away into captivity, the following is read in the Talmudic tractate Berachoth (or Beróchos) fol. 59. col. 1.: בשעה שהק"ה זוכר את בניו ששרויים בצער בין אומות העולם מוריד שתי דמעות לים הגדול: That is: In the hour in which God remembers His children, that they dwell in pain among the nations, He lets two tears fall into the great sea, the sound of which is heard from one end of the world to the other, and this is the earthquake. Furthermore, it stands in the Talmud in the tractate Chagiga fol. 5. col. 2., as also in the Jalkut Schimóni on Isaiah, fol. 63. col. 4. numero 299., on the words of Jer 13:17, "My eyes must flow with tears, for the LORD's flock is taken captive" (in which, in the Hebrew text, the word for weeping is found three times, namely דמוע damóa, דמע tidma, and דמעה dimab), written thus: אמר רבי אליעזר שלשה דמעות הללו: that is, Rabbi Elieser says: why is a threefold weeping (or crying) mentioned here? (And he gives as his answer:) the first tear is on account of the first Temple, the second on account of the second Temple, and the third on account of the Israelites who have been driven out of their place and land.

Regarding the third cause of God's weeping, it is written in the Talmud, in the aforementioned tractate Chagiga fol. 5. col. 2., as well as in the Jalkut

Shimoni on Isaiah, fol. 63. col. 4. numero 292., in the following manner: רבנו שאי שלשה הק"בה בוכה עליהן בכל יום על שאפשר לעסוק בתורה ואינו עוסק ועל שאי רבנו שלשה הק"בה בוכה עליהן בכל יום על שאפשר לעסוק בתורה ועוסק ועל פרנס המתנאה על הצבור That is: Our rabbis teach that God weeps daily over three kinds of people: over one who is able to study the Law and yet does not study it; over one who is not able to study it and yet studies it (that is, one who gladly wishes to study but is not capable of it); and over a leader who exalts himself above the congregation (which last is the fourth cause of God's weeping). Concerning the fifth cause of God's weeping, it is read in the book Rabboth (or Rabbos) fol. 247. col. 4. in the Parascha Vesoth habberacha (or vesós habberócho) that when Moses refused to die through the angel of death, Sammael, God Himself came down from heaven and, after speaking kindly to him, took his soul from him; and thereafter it follows: באותה שעה נשקו הק"בה ונטל נשמתו בנשיקת פה והיה הק"בה בוכה מי יקום לי עם מרעים that is, in that same hour God kissed him and took away his soul through the kiss of the mouth, and God wept and spoke (from Ps 94:16): "Who will stand up for me against the wicked? Who will take a stand for me against the evildoers?" But the Holy Spirit spoke (from Deut 34:10): "And there arose no prophet since in Israel like Moses." Let this suffice concerning God's weeping.

Fifth, the Jews teach concerning God that, because they have been driven from their land and banished into misery, God is also in exilio, or in misery. For this reason, Rabbi Menachem of Recanati writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 26, col. 1, in the Parascha Bereschith, as follows: גלות שכינה עם גלותנו, that is, the exile or misery of the Divine Majesty is at the same time present in our misery. That God finds Himself together with the Jews in exilio or in misery is what the book Maór hakkáton, fol. 6, col. 2, in the Parascha lech lechá, seeks to prove from the words of 2 Sam 7:23: אשר פדית לך ממצרים: Asché paditha lechá mimmizrájim, that is, "which Thou hast redeemed for Thyself out of Egypt," where it is written: אתה מוצא כל זמן שישאל משועבדים: שכינה משועבדת עמהם שנאמר ויראו את אלהי ישראל ותחת רגליו כמעשה לבנת הספיר וכשנגאלו מהו אומר בעצם השמים אמר רבי עקיבא אלולא הדבר פתוב אי אפשר לאומרו

אָמְרוּ יִשְׂרָאֵל לִפְנֵי הַקְדוֹשׁ בְּרוּךְ הוּא עֲצָמָה פְּדִיתָ, that is: You find that at all times in which the Israelites were placed in bondage, the Divine Majesty was likewise subjected to bondage together with them, as it is said (Exod 24:10): "And they saw the God of Israel, and under His feet there was as it were a pavement of sapphire stone." But after they were redeemed, what does Scripture say of this? (It says, immediately following the preceding words:) "And like the very heaven when it is clear." Rabbi Akiva said: if the matter were not written in Holy Scripture, one would not be permitted to say it. The Israelites said to the holy and blessed God: "Thou hast redeemed Thyself." The aforementioned words, aschéř paditha lechá mimmisráím, must therefore, according to this foolish opinion, be interpreted as follows: "Thou who hast redeemed Thyself out of Egypt," just as if the little word lechá signified the accusative "Thee" and not the dative "for Thee." And in the Jalkut Schimóni on the Fourth Book of Moses, one reads at fol. 257, col. 4, num. 788: חֲבִיבֵינוּ יִשְׂרָאֵל שְׂכָל מְקוֹם שָׁגָלוּ: שְׂכִינָה עִמָּהֶם. גָּלוּ לַמִּצְרַיִם שְׂכִינָה עִמָּהֶם שְׁנֵאמַר הִגְלָהּ נִגְלִיתִי לְבֵית אֲבִיךָ. גָּלוּ לְכָל שְׂכִינָה עִמָּהֶם שְׂנֵאמַר שׁוֹלַחְתִּי בָבֶלָה. גָּלוּ לְעֵילָם שְׂכִינָה עִמָּהֶם שְׂנֵאמַר וְשִׁמְתִּי כְסָאִי בְּעֵילָם. גָּלוּ לְאֲדוֹם שְׂכִינָה עִמָּהֶם שְׂנֵאמַר מִי זֶה בָּא מֵאֲדוֹם. וְכִשְׁהוּ חוֹזְרִין שְׂכִינָה חוֹזֶרֶת עִמָּהֶם שְׂנֵאמַר וְשָׁב יְיָ לְאֲדוֹם שְׂכִינָה עִמָּהֶם שְׂנֵאמַר אֱלֹהֵיךָ יְגוֹ' הַשִּׁיב לֹא נֶאמַר אֱלֹא וְשָׁב, that is: The Israelites are beloved, for wherever they are banished into misery, God is with them. When they were in misery in Egypt, God was with them, as it is said (1 Sam 2:27): "I revealed myself to your father's house when they were still in Egypt." When they were in misery in Babylon, God was with them, as it is said (Isa 43:14): "For your sake I was sent to Babylon." (In the Hebrew text, however, it reads: "For your sake I have sent to Babylon," and not "I was sent," as the Jews interpret it.) When they were in misery in Elam, God was with them, as it is said (Isa 49:38): "I have set my throne in Elam." Now, since they are in misery in Edom (that is, in Christendom), God is also with them, as it is said (Isa 63:1): "Who is this that comes from Edom?" And when they shall return (back to the Promised Land), God will also return with them, as it is said (Deut 30:3): "Then the Lord your God will return," etc. It does not say וְהָשִׁיב vebeschif, that is, "He will cause to return," but rather וְשָׁב veschaf, that is, "He will return." This is also found in the book Menoráth (or Menóras) hammâór, in the 1st chapter, under the title Ner schelischi kelál revúj chélek revúj, fol. 37, col. 1, though in place of the final words, the following is read there: וְאִף כִּשְׁהֵם עֹתִידִים לִיגָל שְׂכִינָה נִגְלָתָה עִמָּהֶם: שְׁנֵאמַר וְשָׁב יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ אֶת שְׁבוּתְךָ וְגוֹמֵר לֹא נֶאמַר אֱלֹא וְשָׁב וְגוֹ, that is: Yes, even when they shall be redeemed, the Divine Majesty will likewise be redeemed together with them, as it is said (Deut 30:3): "Then the Lord your God will return with your captivity." It does not say "He will cause to return," but rather "He will return."

So it is also written in the Sepher haccavanóth (or baccavónos), which Rabbi Isaac Lurja composed, fol. 28, col. 2, as follows: מכל דע כי מצרים היא ארץ טמאה מכל הארצות והשכינה היתה בגלות עם ישראל ואותו הגלות היה על ידי חכמה נפלאה של כשפים That is: Know that the land of Egypt is the most unclean of all lands, and that the Divine Majesty was in captivity together with Israel; but that same captivity had come about through a wondrous wisdom of sorcery which the Egyptians had employed, so that the Israelites could not go out from there, as is reported in the Sôbar. Rabbi Abraham also writes in his book Zerôr hammôr, in the Paráscha ki téze, fol. 144, col. 3, concerning the captivity of God, as follows: אין חבוס מתיר עצמו מבית האסורים שהוא הקב"ה שהוא חבוס וקשור ואסור בשבילנו כאסור מלך אסור ברה"טם בשביל התפילין שהם בריטי דמוחא וזהו פאריך חבוס עליך כי תפארת ישראל חבוס בבית האסורים. עליך בשבילך לפי שאין אנו עושים תשובה ואם היינו עושים תשובה היינו מתירים להק"ב. that is: A prisoner does not free himself from prison. This prisoner is God, who is bound and fastened on our account, as it is said (Song 7:6): The king is bound to the galleries (or passageways); on account of the Tephillin, or prayer-straps, which are at the channels of the brain (that is, at the skull on the forehead). And this is the meaning of the words (Ezek 24:17): Your ornament is bound on your account; for the glory of Israel is bound in prison, because we do not repent. But if we were to repent, we would set God and His Majesty free from prison.

Concerning this liberation of God from captivity through the repentance of the Jews, Rabbi Meir also writes in his book Avodáth (or Avódas) bakkódesch, in the 2nd part, which is called Chélek haavóda, in the 43rd chapter, fol. 56. col. 2., as follows: אין הק"ב בא בירושלים של מעלה עד שיבאו בירושלים של מטה וגאולה זו שתמצא בשמות ישראל כי השכינה עמהם בגלות כי אין האב עוזב את בניו ובכל מקום שגלו היא עמהם וכמו שהם גרמו להוציא אותה ואותם בין האומות בגלות שהוא בית האסורים כן צריכים לגהנם לגרום שובה ושובם סמנו המור אמרם ז"ל אין חבוס מתיר עצמו מבית האסורים that is, the holy and blessed GOD does not come into the upper Jerusalem until He first comes into the lower Jerusalem (which words also appear, though somewhat altered, in the little book Tuf baäretz fol. 38. col. 4.); the redemption, however, is delayed (and deferred) on account of the sins of Israel, since the Divine Majesty is with them in captivity, for the mother does not forsake her children: she is also with them in all the places to which they are led away as captives. Now just as they themselves were the cause that both she (namely, the Divine Majesty) and they themselves were driven out among the nations into misery, which is a prison, so too must they be the cause that she, and they, return from it again; and this is the mystery of that which our Rabbis, of blessed memory, say: a prisoner does not free himself from prison; but the redemption of her (understand: of the Divine Majesty) lies in the hand of Israel, namely in repentance and conversion.

It should also be mentioned here that the deranged Jews hold the opinion that when they were driven out of the Promised Land and led away into captivity, the animals, birds, and fish of that land were likewise driven out and sent into exile. Concerning this, the book Rabbath (or Rabbos) writes as follows, at the end of Pethichath (or Pesichas) écha rabbathi (or rabbasi), fol. 292, col. 1: אמר רבי יוסי בר חלפתא חמשים ושתיים שנה לא נראה עוף מש בש בארץ ישראל מה טעם: מעוף השמים עד בהמה נדדו הלכו בהמה בגימטריא חמשים ושתיים: that is, Rabbi Jose, the son of Chalifta, says that for fifty-two years no bird was seen flying in the land of Israel. What is the reason? The birds of the heaven, together with the animals, took to flight and went away; and the word בהמה behéma (which means "an animal") yields, by Gematria (when it is reckoned as a number), fifty-two, which number is supposed to signify the aforementioned fifty-two years. After this, the following passage continues in the same place: א"ר חנינא ברבי אבהו: שבע מאות מיני דגים טהורים ושמונה מאות מיני חגבים טהורים ועופות לאין מספר דכולן גלו עם ישראל לבבל וכשמחזרו חזרו עמהם חוץ מדג אחד ששמו שיבוטא והנים איך גלו ר' הונא: that is, Rabbi Chanina, the son of Rabbi Abhu, says there were seven hundred kinds of clean fish and eight hundred kinds of clean locusts, and birds without number, all of which went into exile together with the Israelites to Babel. But when the latter returned, these creatures returned with them as well, with the exception of one fish called Schibbúta. How, however, did the fish go into exile? Rabbi Hona says, in the name of Rabbi Jose, that they went into exile by way of the abyss, and returned again by way of the abyss.

Sixth, they teach concerning God that He can be compelled to do something, or alternatively prevented from doing something. Regarding the compulsion to do something, an example is described in the Talmud, in the tractate Taanith (or Taanis), fol. 19. col. 1. as follows: אמרו לו לחוני המעגל התפלל שירדו גשמים אמר להם צאו והכניסו תנורי פסחים בשביל שלא ימוקו התפלל ולא ירדו גשמים מה עשה עג עוגה ועמד בתוכה ואמר לפניו רבונו של עולם בניך שמו פניהם עלי שאני כבן בית לפניך נשבע אני בשמך הגדול שאני זו מכאן עד שתרחם על בניך התחילו גשמים מטפים אמר לא כך שאלתי אלא גשמי שיהיו ומעורות התחילו לירד בזעף אמר לא כך שאלתי אלא גשמי רצון ברכה ונדבה. ירדו כתיקן עד שיצאו ישראל מירושלים להר הבית מפני הגשמים. באו ואמרו לו כשם שהתפללת עליהם שירדו כך התפלל שילכו להן אמר להם צאו וראו אם נמחית אבן הטועים. שלח לו שמעון בן שטח אלמלא חוני אתה גורני עליך נידוי אבל מה אעשה לך שאתה מתחטא לפני המקום ועושה לך רצונך כבן שמתחטא על אביו ועושה לו רצונו ועליך הכתוב That is: They (the inhabitants of Jerusalem) once said to Chonai the circle-drawer: pray that rain may come down. He said to them: go out and bring in the Passover ovens, so that they do not fall apart

(when it rains). But when he had prayed accordingly and no rain had come down, he drew a round circle, stood in the middle of it, and said to Him: Thou Lord of the world, Thy children have turned their faces toward me, since I am like a son of the house before Thee; I swear by Thy great name (in the Maase-Book, in the 52nd chapter, where the matter also appears, it is rendered in German as: I now adjure Thee by Thy holy and honored name) that I will not move from here until Thou hast mercy upon Thy children. When the rain then began to drip, he said: I did not request it thus, but rather desired such a rain as would fill the cisterns, pits, and caves with water. Thereupon a heavy downpour came with a storm, but he said: I did not desire it thus either, but rather wished to have a pleasant, blessed, and generous rain. Then it rained as was proper, until the Israelites went out from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount on account of the rain. When they then came to him, they said: just as you prayed that it should rain, so pray now also that it may cease again. But he said to them: go out and see whether the Stone of the Lost (which was a large upright stone in Jerusalem, to which those who had lost something or found something would go, where the one who had found something would announce it, and the one who had lost something would describe the lost item with certain identifying marks so that he might recover it, as may be seen in the Talmudic tractate Bava Mezia fol. 28. col. 2.) is covered by water. In the meantime, Rabbi Shimon ben Shetach sent word to him and had him told: if you were not Chonai, I would place you under the ban; but what am I to do with you, since you take your pleasure before God and He does your will: of you also does Scripture (Prov 23:25) say: Let your father and your mother rejoice, and let her who bore you be glad. This story, or rather fable, also appears at fol. 23. col. 1. of the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Taanith, but at greater length and with the addition of a great lie, namely that when it rained so heavily, the drops were as large as a Log (which is a measure equal in size to six hen's eggs). Thus God was compelled to send rain on account of the oath sworn by Chonai.

That God can also be prevented from doing something is written in the Jalkut Chadäsch fol. 36. col. 3. numero 46. under the title Beriäth baolam vebaadam as follows: אמר רבי חנינא כשברא הק"ב את האדם נמלך במלאכי השרת גילה להם שצדיקים עומדו ממנו ולא גילה להם שיעמדו ממנו רשעים שלא ימנעוהו כל"כ that is, Rabbi Chanina said: when God wanted to create Adam, He took counsel with the ministering angels and revealed to them that righteous men would descend from him; but He did not reveal to them that wicked men would also descend from him, so that they might not, so to speak, prevent Him from creating him. And that is what is written (Ps 1:6): For the Lord knows the way of the righteous, but the way of the wicked shall perish. In the book Rabboth (or Rabbos), in Bereschith (or Bereschis) rabba fol. 7. col. 3. 4., in the eighth Parascha, more is written concerning this counsel of God regarding the creation of man, and the words there read as follows: בשעה שבה לבראת את האדם הראשון נמלך במלאכי השרת אמר להן נעשה אדם בצלמנו כדמותנו אמרו לו אדם זה מה טיבו אמר להם צדיקים עומדים ממס ההד' כ' יודע יי' דרך צדיקים כי הודיע יי' דרך הצדיקים למלאכי השרת ודרך רשעים תאבד אבדה מהם גלה להם שהצדיקים עובדים ממנו ולא גילה להם שהרשעים עומדים ממנו שאילו גילה שהרשעים עומדים הימנו לא היתה מדת הדין נותנת שיברא א"ר סימון בשעה שבה הק"ה לבראת אדם הראשון נעשו מלאכי השרת כיתים כיתים וחבורות חבורות מהם אומרים אל יברא ומה' חסר ואמת נפגשו צדק ושלום נשקו חסר ואומר יברא שהוא גומל חסרים ואמת אמר אל יברא שכולו שקרים צדק אמר יברא שהוא עושה צדקות שלום ואומר אל יברא כדלילה קטטה. מה עשה הק"ה נטל אמת והשליכו לארץ אָמְרו מְלָאכֵי הַשָּׁרָת לִפְנֵי הַקֹּדֶם ה' רבוֹן הָעוֹלָמִים מָה אַתָּה מַמְסֵךְ חֲכָמִים אֱלֹשִׁכוֹפִיּוֹת שֶׁלֶךְ תַּעֲלֶה אֶמֶת מִן הַשָּׁרָת הַקֹּדֶם ה' הָאֶרֶץ הַזֶּה הוּא דִּקְתִּיב אֶמֶת מֵאֶרֶץ תִּצְמַח that is: at the time when He came to create the first man, He took counsel with the ministering angels and said to them, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." They asked Him, "What is the nature of this man?" He answered them that righteous men would arise from him. That is what is written (Ps 1:6): For the Lord יֹדֵעַ Jodéa, that is, knows the way of the righteous (which is as much as to say) for the Lord הוֹדִיעַ hodia, that is, has made known the way of the righteous to the ministering angels; (and it continues in the said v. 6) but the way of the wicked shall perish, (which means) it has perished before them (that is, this way He did not reveal to them). He revealed to them that righteous men would descend from him, but He did not make known to them that wicked men would also be begotten from him, for if He had revealed to them that wicked men would also descend from him, the attribute of justice would not have permitted him to be created. Rabbi Schimon says that at the time when God was about to create the first man, the ministering angels divided themselves into factions and parties: some of them said he should not be created, and that is what is written (Ps 85:11): Lovingkindness and truth have met each other, righteousness and peace have kissed. Lovingkindness said he should be created, because he will show acts of kindness; but truth said he should not be created, because he will be full of lies. Righteousness said he should be created, because he will practice righteousness; but peace said he should not be created, because he will be full of strife. What did God do in response to this? He took truth and cast it to the ground, and that is what is written (Dan 8:12): And it cast truth to the ground. But the ministering angels said to God: O Lord of the world, why do You thus despise the ornament of Your seal (that is, truth, which according to the teaching of the rabbis is called the seal of God, as may be seen in the Talmudic tractate Sanbédrin fol. 55. col. 1. and Schábbath, or Schábbas fol. 55 col. 1.); let truth rise up again from the earth, and that is what is written (Ps 58:12):

Truth shall spring up from the earth. The same may also be read in the Jalkut Schimóni on the Psalms, fol. 90, col. 1. num. 519. It is thus supposed that God was unwilling to reveal to the angels that wicked men would also descend from Adam, so that they would not be an impediment to his creation.

In this manner, the ministering angels sought to prevent God from receiving and accepting King Manasseh in grace, who was bearing repentance and penitence on account of the sins he had committed. Concerning this, the following is written in the book Schené luchóth habberith (or Schené lúchos hábberis) fol. 180. col. 2.: ר' יהושע אומר תדע לך כח התשובה, בא וראה במנשה בן 'ה להכעיסו וכו' עד ובאו חזקיה שיעשה כל תועבות רעות שבעולם והרבה לעשות הרע בעיני ה' ויעתר לו ויפתלל אליו ויעתר לו וכו' באותה שעה עמדו מלאכי השרת וסתמו כל החלונות של מעלה ואמרו לפניו רבונו של עולם אדם שהעמיד צלם בהיכל אתה מקבל בתשובה וכו' אמר להם אם איני מקבלו בתשובה הריני נועל דלת בפני כל בעל תשובה מה עשה הק"ב חתר לו חתירה מתחת כסא כבודו That is: Rabbi Jehóschua (or Josua) says: Know the power of repentance, and consider it in the case of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah, who committed all the evil abominations that exist in the world, and (as may be seen in 2 Chr 33:6) did much evil in the eyes of God to provoke Him to anger, etc., until (the words of v. 11) the commanders of the army of Assyria came and brought him to Babylon, etc. There he called upon all the foreign gods to whom he had sacrificed, but not one of them called out to him, or heard him, or delivered him. Then he said: I will call upon the God of my fathers with my whole heart; perhaps the Lord will deal with me according to all His wonders. When he called upon the God of his fathers, He allowed Himself to be entreated and heard him (as may be read in v. 13). At that same hour the ministering angels arose and stopped up all the windows above, and spoke before Him (namely, God): O Lord of the world, will You receive a man who does penance, who has placed an image in the Temple, etc.? Then He answered them: If I do not receive him with his repentance, behold, I am shutting the door before all the penitent. What did God do? He dug a hole beneath the throne of His glory, in a place where no angel can have power. This is what is written in v. 13: And he prayed to Him, and He was entreated of him, and heard his prayer and his supplication. This is taken from the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 103. col. 1., where the words read as follows: אמר ר' יוחנן משום ר' שמעון בן יוחי מאי דכתיב וישמע אליו ויחתר לו ויעתר לו מיבעי ליה that is: ליה למלמד שעשה לו הק"ב כמין מחתרת ברכיע כדי לקבלו בתשובה מפני מדת הדין : ליה למלמד שעשה לו הק"ב כמין מחתרת ברכיע כדי לקבלו בתשובה מפני מדת הדין : that is, Rabbi Jochanan has said in the name of Rabbi Schimon ben Jóchai: What is that which is written (2 Chr 33:15), vajechatër lo? It ought to read vajeutér lo

(for vajechatër means "and it was dug for him," or "a hole was made," and vajeatër means "and He allowed Himself to be entreated"). This teaches us that God made a hole in the firmament for him, on account of the attribute of justice, in order to receive him with his repentance. Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes upon these words of the Talmud in his commentary thereon as follows: מדהדין היתה מעכבת שלא להקביל פני מנשה בתשובה ועשה הק"ה מחתרת ברקיע ופשט ידו וקבלו בלא ידיעה מדהדין : that is, the attribute of justice had held it back, so that the face of Manasseh was not to be received with his repentance; therefore God made a hole in the firmament, stretched out His hand, and received him, without the attribute of justice knowing of it.

Therefore, the Jews also have in their large daily prayer book, which they call the thick Tephilla, a prayer at fol. 37. col. 2. 3. under the title Schacharith (or Schácharis), which reads as follows: אנא יי' אלהי שמע אל תפלת עבדך ואל תחנוני: וקבל את תשובתי ובקשתי ויהיו לפני כסא כבודך מליצי יושר להליץ בעדי לפניך ולהכניס תפלתי באזניך. ואם בעוונותי הרבים אין מליץ בעדי ואין מלמד עלי זכות חתר נא לי מתחת תפלה כבודך ולא אשוב רקם מלפניך כי אתה שומע תפלה : that is: I beseech You, LORD my GOD, hear the prayer of Your servant and his supplication, and accept my repentance, my prayer, and my petition, and let them be righteous advocates before the throne of Your glory, to speak before You on my behalf, and to cause my prayer to come into Your ears. But if, on account of my manifold sins, there is no advocate for me, and no one to justify me, then dig a hole for me beneath the throne of Your glory, and do not let me return from before You empty-handed, for You hear prayer.

Seventh, it is taught in an impious manner concerning GOD that He created the evil inclination, יצר הרע Jézer hará, that is, the evil inclination, by which is understood not only the corrupt nature of man that clings to him by nature, but also the unclean spirits and devils, as being just as evil and perverse from the very beginning as they are now; whereas in Gen 1:31 it is said: "And GOD saw everything that He had made, and behold, it was very good." It is likewise reported that He is a cause of sins.

That He created the evil nature in man, יצר הרע Jézer hará, that is, the evil nature in man, is taught in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos) fol. 61. col. 1. as follows: ויי' אלהים את האדם בשני יוד"ן שני יצרים ברא הק"ה אחד יצר טוב ויצר הרע Vajizer Jehova, that is, "And the LORD formed (or made) man" (as is read in Gen 2:7), and the word vajizer has two Jod, signifying thereby that He created two kinds (or natures), one good kind and one evil kind. The same is also to be found in the book Ammúde baggóla numero 53.

That the unclean spirits are also called Jézer bará, and that they were created with an evil nature, can be gathered from what stands in the book Schéva tal fol. 41. col. 3. in these words: ידוע כי הקב"ה ברא יצר טוב ויצר הרע כדא צד טהרה: ברא צד הטומאה כי זה לעומת זה עשה אלהים צד הטהרה הם הספורות הקדושות שמתפשט ברא צד הטומאה כי זה לעומת זה עשה אלהים צד הטהרה הם הספורות הקדושות שמתפשט that is: It is known that God created the good inclination and the evil inclination; He created the side of purity, and He created the side of impurity, for He made one against the other. The holy Sephiróth (or Sephiros), whose holiness extends from the uppermost points down to the lowest, are the side of purity; the side of impurity, however, are the Keliphóth (or Kelifos, that is, the husks, by which the unclean spirits are understood). For this reason the supreme devil Sammaël is also called יצר הרע Jézer bará, as will be sufficiently demonstrated below in the 18th chapter of this first part. When, however, Satan was created is to be seen in the 8th chapter of the second part, where it is indicated that he is said to have been created together with Eve. Moreover, God is said to greatly repent that He created the Jézer bará, that is, the evil inclination, and this is indicated in the Jalkut Schimóni on Job, fol. 149. col. 2. num. 906., in the following words: ארבעה מתחרט עליהם הקב"ה בכל יום שבראן ואלו הן כשדים וישמעאלים גלות: that is: There are four things of which God repents every day that He created them: the Chaldeans, the Ishmaelites, the Exilium or exile, and the Jézer bará, that is, the evil inclination.

That it is taught blasphemously that God is the cause of sin is written in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth (or Berúchos) fol. 32. col. 1. as follows: אמר ר' חמא ברבי חנינא אלמלא שלש מקראות הללו נתמוטטו רגליהם של שונאי ישראל חד דכתיב אשר הרעותי וחד דכתיב הנה כחומר ביד היוצר כן אתם בידי בית ישראל וחד דכתיב והסירותי לב האבן מבשרכם, that is: Rabbi Cháma, the son of Rabbi Channína, has said: were it not for these three passages, the feet of the Israelites would waver. The first is written (Mic 4:6) (and reads as follows: "And those whom I have made evil" (as it is wrongly understood in the Talmud, whereas it actually means: those whom I have held harshly, or afflicted, namely on account of their sins). The second is written (Jer 18:6) (and reads: "Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so also are you, O house of Israel, in my hand." The third is written (Ezek 11:19) (with these words: "And I will take away the heart of stone from your flesh." Concerning the words of Mic 4:6, Rabbi Salomon writes there in the Talmud, in his commentary, that God thereby means to say: אני גרמתי להם Jézer bará, that is: I am the cause of it, since I have created the Jézer bará, or the evil inclination; and he further states there: אלמלא שלש מקראות הללו שמעדין שיש ביד הקב"ה לתקן יצרנו ולהסיר יצר הרע ממנו נתמוטטו רגלינו במשפט אבל עכשיו יש לנו פתחון פה שהוא גרם שברא יצר הרע, that is: were it not for these three passages, which testify that it lies within God's power to improve our inclination and to remove the evil nature from us, our feet would waver in judgment (that is, we would not be able to stand before God's judgment). But now we have an excuse, namely that He is the cause of it, since He has created the Jézer hará, or the evil inclination. This is likewise found in the book Zerór hammor fol. 151. col. 2. in the Parascha Nizzafim, where the following is also read: האדם כמעט שחוייב לחטוא לפי שייצר הרע גובר עליו ובורח האדם נותן התנצלות על: 'חטאו באמרו כי יצר לב האדם דע מנעוריו מורכב מדברים הפכים בשעת יצירתו וגו' that is: man is almost compelled to sin, since the evil inclination has the upper hand over him (and rules over him). With this, however, man excuses himself on account of his sin, for (Gen 8:21 states:) the inclination and the imagination of the human heart is evil from his youth, and at the time of his creation it was composed of contrary things.

Elsewhere, yet another excuse for sins is found in the Talmud, where in the tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas) fol. 88, col. 1, concerning the words of Exod 19:17, "And they (the children of Israel) stood at the foot of the mountain," it is written as follows: אמר ר' אבדימי בר חמא בר חסא מלמד שכפה הק"ב עליהם את ההר כגיגית ואמר להם אם אתם מקבלים את התורה מוטב ואם לאו שם תהא קבורתכם. אמר רב אחא בר יעקב מכאן מודעא רבא לאורייתא, that is: Rav Abdimi, the son of Chama, the son of Chasa, has said: this teaches us that God covered the mountain over them like a tub (so that they were covered by it, just as one is accustomed to cover something with a tub or other vessel), and said to them: if you accept the Law, it is well; but if not, your grave shall be there beneath the mountain, which God is said to have torn out and lifted into the air above them, as may be read in Exod 19:17 in Jonathan's Chaldean translation, and I will let it fall upon you. Rav Acha, the son of Jacob, has said: hence there is a great acknowledgment of guilt regarding the Law (or, as I have heard Jews interpret it, a great compulsion toward the Law.) Concerning these words of the Talmud, Rabbi Solomon Jarchi writes in his commentary as follows: מודעא רבא, שאם יזמינם לדין למה לא קיימתם מה שקבלתם עליכם יש להם תשובה שקבלוה באונס, that is: it is a great acknowledgment of guilt (or, as others interpret it, a great compulsion): for when He summons them before a court of judgment and asks why they did not do that which they had taken upon themselves, they can give as their answer that they were compelled to take it upon themselves by force. That the mountain was held over the Israelites is also read in the Talmudic tractate Avoda Zara fol. 2, col. 2.

Against this, however, Rabbi Levi ben Gerson expresses himself in his commentary on 1 Kgs 17:1 as follows: השם יתברך לא יכריח האדם שיחטא ושמחו בעל בחירה כדי שימלט מהרעות הנפשיות והגופיות כמו שבארנו בשלישי מספר מלחמת יי הנה אם לא היה להמלט מזה לא היה ראוי שיענש עליו כי הוא אנוס בעשיית החטא ההוא that is, the blessed GOD does not compel man to sin, but has given him free will so that he may deliver (and preserve) himself from spiritual and bodily evil, as we have explained in the third part of the book Milchamóth Adonái. For behold, if he could not deliver himself from it, he would not be worthy of punishment, since he would have been compelled to commit the sin.

Eighth, it is taught in a senseless manner concerning GOD that He Himself is supposed to have sinned. Concerning this, it is written in the Jalkut Shimoni on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, fol. 168. col. 3. numero 1025. 1026. and 1027., that when the Temple in Jerusalem was destroyed and all the prophets had assembled and gone to Jerusalem to comfort that city, GOD addressed the prophets thus: שמו אליכם לבא לנחם תחלה לי או לירושלם מי שמת לו בן למי מנחמין מי שמו אליכם לבא לנחם ביתו למי שגשרף ביתו למי מנחמין לבעליו לא כל שכן שאני צריך לתנחומין תחלה אע"פ לכו ופייסוהו. מתכנסין כולם והולכים אצלה וכיון שהיא רואה אותם אומרה להם לכו לכם אני צריך לתנחומין של בני מיד הולכים לפני הק"ב והומרים לפניו רב"שע אינה מקבלת פיוסין שלנו אמר להם אין ראוי לילך אלא אני בעצמי ואפייסנה מפני שעברתי על הדין. כתבתי בתורתי אל תעבור בכבוד שותף ולישראל קרבתי להם בני בכורי ישראל ואמרתי להם הכיאו עטריכם בעול מלך בבל כתבתי בתורתי לא תשנא את אחיך בלבבך ואני שנאתיה לפיכך אני ראוי לפייס/ה מיד הולך הק"ב אצלה ואומר לה כעס זה למה אמרה לפניו רב"שע ולא אכעס : that is, 'שהגלתני לבין אומות העולם וקללתני קללות רעות ונעשו פני כשולי קדרה וגו' Whom do you need to comfort first: me or Jerusalem? When someone's son dies, whom does one comfort: is it not the father? When someone's house is burned down, who is comforted: is it not the lord of that house? Do I not have far greater need to be comforted first? Yet be that as it may, go, speak to her, and appease her. Then they all assembled and went to her; but when she saw them, she said to them: go away, I have no need of my children's comfort. Thereupon they immediately went before GOD and said to Him: O thou Lord of the world, she will not accept our consolation. Then He said to them: it is not fitting that anyone go to her but I myself; I will speak to her and set her at peace, since I have transgressed the law. I have written in my Law (Deut 15:19): You shall not work with the firstborn of your oxen, and I have called Israel (Exod 4:22) my firstborn son, and yet (Jer 27:12) said to them: Submit your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon. I have written in my Law (Lev 19:17): You shall not hate your brother in your heart, and yet I have hated her; therefore it is fitting that I appease her. Thereupon GOD immediately went to her and said to her: why are you so grieved and vexed? Then she said: O thou Lord of the world, should I not be grieved that you have driven me into exile among the nations of the world and cursed me with evil curses, so that my face has become (as black) as the rim of a pot, etc. Thus GOD has, as shown by the above, Himself confessed that He transgressed the law and acted contrary to His own commandment. This foolish fable also appears in the book Pesikta Rabbati fol. 53. col. 2., and still more extensively in the aforementioned Jalkut Shimoni on the prophet Isaiah, fol. 48. col. 4. numero 307., where it is reported that GOD, on account of the law transgressed by Him, further said: כתבתי בתורתי לא תסגיר עבד אל אדוניו ואני מסרתים לאומות העולם שנאמר אם לא כי צורם מכרם וי' הסגירם. כתבתי בתורתי לא תכלה פאת שדך ואני כליתי חמתי שנאמר כלה יי' את חמתי כתבתי בתורתי שלום ישלם. המבעיר את הבערה ואני הצתי באש שנאמר ממרום ו'ש'לה אש וגו'. that is, I have written in my Law (Deut 23:15): You shall not deliver the servant back to his master, but I have given them into the hands of the nations of the world, as it is said (Deut 32:30): that their Rock sold them, and the LORD delivered them up. I have written in my Law (Lev 19:9): You shall not wholly remove the corner of your field, but I have wholly accomplished my wrath (that is, done everything that served to extend my wrath), as it is said (Lam 4:11): The LORD has fully accomplished His fury. I have written in my Law (Exod 22:6): He who kindled the fire shall make full restitution; but I have kindled the fire, as it is said (Lam 1:13): He has sent a fire from on high.

So God, too, is said to have sinned, in that He made the moon, which is supposed to have been created initially just as large as the sun, smaller afterward, because the moon had said to God that two kings cannot reign under one crown; but after the moon complained bitterly about this, God repented of having made it smaller, and commanded that a sin offering should be sacrificed before Him at every new moon. That the sun and the moon were created of equal size at the beginning is indicated in the Chaldean translation of Jonathan, the son of Usiel, at Gen 1:16, with these words: וַעֲבַד יְיָ תְּרִין נְהוּרֵאִי רַבְּרִבְיָא וְהוּוּ שְׁוִוין בְּאַיקְרֶהוּן עֶשְׂרִין וְחֹד שָׁנִין בְּצִיר מְהוּן שִׁית מָאָה וּתְרִין וְשׁוּבְעִין חוּלְק רַבְּרִבְיָא וְהוּוּ שְׁוִוין בְּאַיקְרֶהוּן עֶשְׂרִין וְחֹד שָׁנִין בְּצִיר מְהוּן שִׁית מָאָה וּתְרִין וְשׁוּבְעִין חוּלְק רַבְּרִבְיָא וְהוּוּ שְׁוִוין בְּאַיקְרֶהוּן עֶשְׂרִין וְחֹד שָׁנִין בְּצִיר מְהוּן שִׁית מָאָה וּתְרִין וְשׁוּבְעִין חוּלְק רַבְּרִבְיָא וְהוּוּ שְׁוִוין בְּאַיקְרֶהוּן עֶשְׂרִין וְחֹד שָׁנִין בְּצִיר מְהוּן שִׁית מָאָה וּתְרִין וְשׁוּבְעִין חוּלְק RSV: And God made the two great lights, and they were equal to one another in their glory for twenty-one years, less 672 parts of an hour; but after this time the moon spoke disparagingly against the sun, and was therefore made smaller.

That GOD commanded a sin-offering to be sacrificed on His behalf is written in the Jalkut Shimoni on the first book of Moses, fol. 4. col. 1. numero 8. as follows: רבי שמעון בן עזאי רמי כתיב ויעש אלהים את שני המאורות הגדולים וכתב זאת: המאור השטן. אמר ירח לפני השק"ה רבנו של עולם אי אפשר לשני מלכים שישמשו בכתר אחד אמר לו השק"ה לכי ומעטי את עצמך אמרה לפניו רבנו של עולם הואיל ואמרת לפניך דבר הגון אלך ואמנע את עצמי אמר לה לכי ומשול ביום ובלילה אמרה לפניו דבבו של עולם שרצו בטיהר מאי מהני אמר לה לכי וימנו בך ישראל קמים ושנים דידה נמי לא סגי דלא אימי ביה דכתיב והיו לאותות ולמועדים אמר לה לכי ויקראו צדיקים על שמך יעקב השטן שמואל השטן דוד השטן לא הנה מיתבך דעתה אמר השק"ה הביאו כפרה עלי שמעטתי את היום והיגדו דאמר ריש לקיש מה נשתנה שעיר של ראש חדש שנאמר בו לזי אמר השק"ה היום: That is: Rabbi Simeon, the son of Asai, raises an objection and says: it is written (Gen 1:16), "And GOD made two great lights," and it is also written there, "and a lesser light." The moon spoke to GOD: "O Lord of the world, it is not possible for two kings to share one crown." Then GOD said to it, "Go and make yourself smaller." But it spoke: "O Lord of the world, since I have spoken a just matter before You, should I therefore go and become smaller?" Then GOD said to it, "Go and rule by day and by night." But it answered, "O Lord of the world, what use is a lamp at noon?" GOD said to it, "Go; Israel shall count its days and years by you." The moon thereupon said, "It is also not enough, for I am not counted therein, since it is written (Gen 1:14), 'And they shall be for signs and for seasons.'" GOD said further to it, "Go; the righteous shall be named after your name: Jacob the small, Samuel the small, David the small." But when the moon would not be satisfied, GOD said: "Bring an atonement-offering" (namely עלי alai, that is, for me, which little word stands in the Talmud printed at Venice, in the tractate Chullin, fol. 60. col. 2, and in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 184. col. 2, in the Parashah Pinchas, as also in the book Menorat hammaor fol. 35. col. 1, under the title Ner shelishi, kelal revii, chelek rishon, in the first chapter, in which latter two books this foolish fable is described in greater detail) "because I have made the moon smaller." And that is what Resh Lakish said: "How distinguished is the goat that is sacrificed at the new moon, of which it is said (Num 28:15), 'to the LORD.'" GOD said, "This goat shall be an atonement-offering" (for me, as is clearly stated in Rabbi Bechai's commentary and the book Menorath hammaor, mentioned above) "because I have made the moon smaller." In the book Rabboth (or Rabbos), in Bereshit (or Beresbis) Rabbah, in the fifth Parashah, fol. 5. col. 4, the following is also read: אמר רבי פנחס בכל הקרבנות כתיב שעיר עזים אחד חטאת ובראש חדש כתיב שעיר עזים אחד חטאת ל"י אמר הק"ב הביאו כפרה עלי שמעטתי את הירח שאני הוא שגרמתי לו להכנס בתחומי של חבירו That is: Rabbi Pinchas said, "In all the offerings it is written, 'one male goat as a sin-offering'" (as may be seen in Lev 23:19, Num 7:16, and elsewhere); "but at the new moon it is written (Num 28:15), 'one male goat as a sin-offering to the LORD.'" GOD said, "Bring an atonement-offering for me, because I have made the moon smaller, for I am the one who caused it to enter into the boundaries of its companion" (the sun). This godless fable also appears in the Talmudic tractate Shevuot (or Shevuos) fol. 9. col. 1, as well as in the 51st chapter of the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, and some Jews take great pains to explain how the aforementioned little word עלי alai, that is, "for me," is to be interpreted, so that no sin might be attributed to GOD in this matter, as may be seen at length in the above-cited passage of Rabbi Bechai fol. 184. col. 2, as well as in the book Maarechet haelabuth (or Maarechet Elobut) fol. 130, 131, 132, and 133. Indeed, much has been altered in the Talmud printed at Basel and Amsterdam, in the aforementioned tractate Chullin, fol. 60. col. 2. But however they may choose to interpret and seek to twist the matter, Rabbi Bechai nonetheless writes in his said commentary fol. 134. col. 4: אַין לשון כפרה אלא על החטא, that is, "The word Kapparah (or Kappore), that is, atonement, is used of nothing other than sin." Since they now attribute this to GOD, it follows from this, in a blasphemous manner, that GOD is supposed to have sinned, which is, however, directly contrary to His most holy being.

Beyond the above, GOD is also accused of injustice, namely that He does not judge rightly; concerning which, in Rabbi Moshe de Mircado's commentary on the words of Ps 9:2, fol. 18, col. 4, the following is read: פעם אמרת אין הכסא שלם כי בגלות נראה שאין הק"ה כביכול דן דין אמת שהרשעים שהם האומות מוצלחים ונדים וישראל הצדיקים בערכם שפלים ונדים that is: the reason that they (our sages) say that the throne (of God) is not complete is because in the exilio, or exile, it has the appearance that GOD, so to speak, does not judge rightly, in that the wicked, who are the nations, prosper, while the Israelites, who in comparison to them are righteous, are lowly and despised.

Furthermore, in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 110. col. 2., a false oath is attributed to GOD by Rabbi Eliezer, where the words read as follows: המדבר אין להם חלק לעולם הבא שנאמר במדבר הזה ימותו ושם ימותו וזהו בעולם הזה וימותו בעולם הבא ואמר אשתי נשבעתי באפי אם יבאון אל מנוחתי דברי ר"ע רבי אליעזר אומר הן באין לעולם הבא שנאמר אספו לי חסידי כורתי בריתי עלי זבח אלא מה אני מקיים אשר נשבעתי באפי באפי נשבעתי that is: Our Rabbis teach that the generation of the wilderness (meaning those who went out of Egypt into the wilderness) has no share in the world to come (that is, in eternal life), as it is said (Num 14:35): In this wilderness they shall perish (and come to nothing) and there they shall die; they shall perish in this world, and there they shall die in the world to come (or in the life to come). And (GOD) says (Ps 95:11): I have sworn in my wrath, they shall not enter into my rest; these are the words of Rabbi Akiva. But Rabbi Eliezer says: they do come into the world to come (or the future eternal life), as it is said (Ps 50:5): Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. But how then is that fulfilled (which GOD has said): I have sworn in my wrath? I have sworn in my wrath, but I retract (my oath) and repent of it. According to Rabbi Eliezer's opinion, then, GOD is supposed to have sworn that the Israelites who wandered in the wilderness should have no share in the life to come, but that He afterward repented of this oath, such that He had no desire to keep it.

Ninth, they teach that God also concealed the truth and told a lie, in order to preserve peace and harmony between Abraham and Sarah, even though, as can be read in Num 23:19 and 1 Sam 15:29, He cannot lie. Concerning this, in the book Zeéna ureéna, in the Parascha Vajéra, fol. 12, col. 2-3, in the Judeo-German, on the words of Gen 18:12, and my lord is also old, it is written as follows: האבן. דא זאגט ער צו אברהם ווארום האט שרה גישפֿיטת דאש זיא זאגט מיר וואו וואו קינדער האבן ווען זיא איז אלט אונ' הקדוש ברוך הוא האט אנדרשט גיזאגט וור אברהם וויא שרה 'גיזאגט האט דען שרה האט גיזאגט וויא זאל איך קינדער האבן ווען איין מיין מאן אלט אונ' הקדוש ברוך הוא האט גיזאגט הער אברהם וויא שרה האט גיזאגט זיא ווער אלט צו קינדער צו האבן. דר תרוץ) הא (רר וואלט קיין שנאה זכין צווישן אברהם אונ' שרה דען אברהם העט פר איבל גיזאגט וואלט שרה גיזאגט האבן וואל אברהם ער וואר זוא אלט צו האבן דען איטליכר איין מאן ווען ער אלט אונט ער זיך יונג גגן זיין וייב שלופ' דאז ואיז מויך. דארום וואלט הקדוש ברוך הוא מיט זאגן צו אברהם דס שרה זאלט האבן גירעט מו' אברהם ווען ער אלט that is: צו קינדער צו האבן. פון היין לערנן חכמים פון סלום וועגן מאג אן וואל שקר זאגן: She (Sarah) said, my lord Abraham is old, and how should I have children with an old man. Then He (namely God) said to Abraham, why has Sarah mocked, saying, how shall she have children when she is old? And God said something different before Abraham than what Sarah had actually spoken, for Sarah had said, how shall I have children when my husband is old; but God said, hear, Abraham, how Sarah has spoken, that she would be too old to have children. The resolution (and explanation of this matter) is: God did not want to create hatred between Abraham and Sarah, for Abraham would have taken it ill if Sarah had said of him that he was too old to have children, since every man, even when he is already old, still presents himself as young toward his wife, and the wife likewise. Therefore God did not want to tell Abraham that Sarah had spoken of him as being too old to have children. From this our sages learn that one may well lie for the sake of peace. This is taken from the Talmudic tractate Báva meziá, fol. 87, col. 1, as can be seen in the text and in Rabbi Solomon's commentary.

Tenth, they teach that God was once enclosed in a ban, and this is said to have been done by the nine brothers of Joseph, when they sold him to the Ishmaelites in the absence of Reuben, for the purpose of preventing God from revealing to their father Jacob how they had dealt with Joseph. Concerning this, it is written in the little book Pirke Rabbi Eliezer, in the 38th chapter, as follows: אמרו נחרים בינינו שאין אחד ממנו מגיד הדבר ליעקב אבינו עד שיהיה ברשות כולנו אמר להם יהודה ראובן אינו כאן ואין החרם מתקיים אלא בעשרה מה עשו שיתפו למקום עמהם והחרימו. וירד ראובן בלילה להעלות את יוסף מן הבור ולא מצא אותו שם אמר להם הרגתם את יוסף ואני אנה בא אני הגידו לו את הדבר שעשו החרם שהחרימו, ושמע that is, They (the brothers of Joseph) said, let us establish a ban among ourselves, so that none of us shall disclose the matter to our father Jacob until it is permitted to us all (to reveal the deed). Then Judah said to them, Reuben is not here, and the ban cannot hold except with ten persons. What then did they do: they included God in the fellowship of the ban. When Reuben went down by night and wished to draw Joseph out of the pit, but did not find him there, he said to them, you have killed Joseph, where shall I now go: then they told him the matter, that they had made a ban. When Reuben heard of this ban, he was silent, and God was also silent, and did not reveal the matter to Jacob on account of the ban. This ban is treated at length in the book Zeda laderech, fol. 23, col. 3, 4, and fol. 24, col. 1, in the Parascha Vajeschef, and it is mentioned among other things that God had consented to it, concerning which the words read as follows: ידוע הוֹדֵא מִתְחִלָּה הַסִּכִּים הֵק"בָּה עִמָּהֶם שֶׁכֵּן עָלְתָה לִפְנֵי יִתְבָּרֵךְ שְׁמוֹ: that is, It is known that God most certainly agreed with them from the very beginning (and entered into the ban), since it was His will that Jacob should be tormented and afflicted for twenty-two years, because during those twenty-two years (which he had spent with Laban) he had not honored his father and his mother. After this, the following is further stated in the same place: וְלֹמָה לֹא גִילָה לוֹ הֵק"בָּה לִפִּי: שהחרימו וקללו כל מי שיגלה ושיהפוך לה"קנה עמתם באותו החרם פירושו לפי שנשתהתף הֵק"בָּה באותו החרם שהחרימו את כל מי שיגלה הרי הוא כמישבע שלא יגלה: that is, Why then did God not reveal it to him (to Jacob)? Because they had placed under the ban and cursed everyone who would reveal it, and God was also included in the fellowship of this ban: which is to be understood as follows, since God had entered into the fellowship of this ban, and everyone who would disclose the matter was to be accursed, He was therefore like one who had been bound by an oath not to reveal it. Whoever desires to read more on this subject may consult the book Tanchuma, fol. 15, col. 4, and the commentary of Bechai on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 47, col. 4, in the Parascha Vajeschef, as well as the commentary of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi on Gen 37:34, together with the book Ze'ena ure'ena, fol. 27, col. 1, in the aforementioned Parascha.

Eleventh, they teach that God was defiled when He buried Moses, and that He washed off such defilement in fire. Concerning this, the following is written in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 39. col. 1.: אמר ליה ההוא מינא לרבי אבהו: אלהיכם כהן הוא דכתיב ויקחו לי תרומה כי קבריה למשה במאי טביל וכי תימא במאי והכתיב מי מדד בשעלו מים אמר ליה בנורא טביל דכתיב כי הנה ה' באש יבא וכי סלקא טבילותא בנורא אגד ליה אחמרה עיקר טבילותא בנורא הוא דכתיב כל אשר לא יבא באש תעבירו במים: that is, that heretic said to Rabbi Abbu: your God is a priest, as it is written (Exod 25:2): "That they bring me a heave offering." Now when He buried Moses (and, by touching his corpse, defiled Himself according to Num 19:11, 13), with what did He wash Himself? If you wish to say with water, then it is written (Isa 40:12): "Who has measured the waters in the hollow of his hand?" (so that He could not wash Himself entirely therein, because the water is too small.) To this he gave him the answer: He washed Himself in fire, as it is written (Isa 66:15): "For behold, the Lord will come with fire." What! (said the heretic,) is a washing then also performed in fire? Whereupon Rabbi Abbu said: on the contrary, the washing takes place chiefly in fire, as it is written (Num 31:24): "Everything that cannot pass through fire" (that is, what cannot endure it but would be burned) "you shall pass through water."

Twelfth, they teach that GOD shaved the beard and shaved the head of Sennacherib, the Assyrian king. Concerning this, the following is written in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 95. col. 2. and fol. 96. col. 1.: א"ר אבהו אלמלא מקרא כתוב אי אפשר לאמרו דכתיב ביום ההוא יגלה ה' בהער השכירה : בעברי נהר המלך אשור את הראש ואת שער הרגלים וגם את הזקן תספה אתא קודשא בריך הוא ואדמי ליה כגברא סבא א"ל כי אזלת לגבי מלכי מזרח ומערב דאייתינינו לבנייהו מאי אמרת להו א"ל ההוא גברא בההוא פחדא נמי יתיב א"ל היכי נעביד א"ל זיל ושני נפשך במאי אישני א"ל זיל אייתי לי מספרא ואיגזיך מהיכא אייתי אמר ליה על לההוא ביתא אייתי אזל אשכחינהו אתו מלאכי השרת ואידמו ליה כגברי והוו קא טחני קשייטא א"ל הבו לי מספרא טחון חד גרויא דקשייטא ונתן לך טחון חד גרויא דקשייטא ויהבו ליה מספרתא עד דאתא איחשך א"ל זיל אייתי נורא אזל ואייתי נורא בהדי דקא נפח ליה איתלי ביה נורא בדיקניה אזל גזייה לרישיה ודיקניה אמר היינו דכתיב וגם את הזקן תספה אמר רב פפא היינו דאמרי אינשי גירדתיה לארמאה באפיה שפיר ליה אחלי ליה נורא בדיקניה ולא שבעת חוכא מניה : that is, Rabbi Abbu said: if this passage (Isa 7:20), "In that day the Lord shall shave with a hired razor beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head and the hair of the feet, and shall also take away the beard," were not written, one would not be permitted to say it. The Holy and blessed GOD came (to King Sennacherib) and disguised Himself as an old man, and said to him: when you go to the kings of the east and west, to lead their sons away (into your service), what do you say to them? He answered Him: I too stand in fear and anxiety on that account, and said: how shall I manage it? Thereupon GOD said to him: go, and disguise yourself, so that no one may recognize you. But he asked: with what shall I disguise myself? Then He (namely GOD) said to him: go and bring me a razor, and I will shave you. Sennacherib asked: where shall I fetch one? But GOD said to him: go into that house and bring one. When he had gone there, he found one. Then ministering angels came in the form of strong men and were grinding date-pits. He said to them: give me your razor. (They said to him:) first grind a measure of date-pits, and then we will give it to you. And he ground a measure of date-pits, and they gave him the razor. But by the time he came (back to GOD), it had grown dark. Then GOD said to him: go and bring fire. He went and brought fire. But as he blew on it, the fire caught hold of his beard (having leapt into it), whereupon (GOD) proceeded to shave his head and his beard, and said: this is what is written (Isa 7:20): "the beard also shall be taken away." Rab Papa said: this is what people are accustomed to say:

if you singe a Syrian's face and he finds it pleasing, then throw fire into his beard as well, and you will not be able to get your fill of laughing at him.

Thirteenth, they teach that God created other worlds before this world, but because they did not please Him, He destroyed them again; as if they had been made incorrectly, even though God is wisdom itself and does nothing without deliberation. Concerning this, the following is written in the book Rabbōth (or Rabbos) in Bereschith (or Bereschis) rabba, in the third Parascha fol. 4. col. 1.: א"ר: יהודה בר סימון יהי ערב אין כתיב כאן אלא ויהי יהי ערב מכאן שהיה סדר זמנים קודם לכן אמר רבי אבהו מלמד שהיה בורא עולמות ומחריבן עד שברא את אלו דין הניין לי יתהון : That is: Rabbi Jebuda, the son of Simon, has said, it is not written (Gen 1:5) "let there be evening," but rather "and there was evening"; from which it is to be concluded that the order of times had already existed before. Rabbi Abhu has said: this teaches us that he (namely God) created worlds and destroyed them again, until He created these and said: these are useful to me and please me, but those did not please me. And in the book Medrasch Tillum, it is written concerning this at fol. 26. col. 2. on the 34th Psalm as follows: א"ר תנחומא בעונתו ברא הק"ב את העולם מלמד שהיה הק"ב בורא עולמות ומחריבן שלא that is: Rabbi Tanchúma has said, the holy blessed God created the world at the right time. This teaches us that God created worlds and destroyed them again, because they were not worthy of being created; therefore He said, those do not please me and are not useful to me, but these are useful to me.

Fourteenth, they teach that God braided Eve's hair, adorned her, led her to Adam, and danced with her, and that in the time to come He will also dance with the Jews. That God braided Eve's hair and adorned her is read in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos) fol. 61, col. 1, where the words read as follows: מאי דכתיב ויבן יי 'את הצלע מלמד שקלעה הק"ב לחוה הביאה לאדם הראשון שכן בכרכי הים קורין לקלעיותא בנייתא וגו' אמר רבי ירמיה בן אלעזר מלמד שנעשה הק"ב : that is, What is it that is written (Gen 2:22): "And He built the rib"? It teaches us that God braided Eve's hair and led her to the first man, for in the coastal cities the act of braiding is called binjetha, that is, building, etc. But Rabbi Jeremias, the son of Eliezer, says it teaches us that God was the first man's groomsman. The same is also found in the Talmudic tractate Schabbáth (or Schábbas) fol. 95, col. 1, and in the tractate Erúvin, fol. 18, col. 1-2, and in the tractate Nidda, fol. 45, col. 2. In the little book Othioth (or Osios) of Rabbi Akkiva, however, it is written concerning this at fol. 6, col. 2, as follows: צדיק זו צלע אחד שלקח הימנו מצלעותיו ובנאה לאשה וההיצה וסיכה ופרקסה : that is, The letter Zaddik (or Zade) signifies the rib which He (namely God) took from his (Adam's) ribs and built into a woman, washed her, anointed her, put a garment on her, braided her hair, and joined her in marriage to Adam, as it is said (Gen 2:22): "And God the Lord built the rib," etc.

That he also danced with her is to be seen in the German-Hebrew book Brandspiegel, in the 34th chapter, fol. 122, col. 2, where it is taught how one is to conduct oneself with a bride, and where the following is written:

חזן אן מר ביר זינגן ורש ה"ה האט חוה זעלברש געפֿלֹוכטן און 'געטאנצט מיט איר הק גן
זנד דוו רסן דיא חכמים בוס פסוק ויביאה ה' האדם דאו וואו טייטש און 'ער בראכט זיא צו
אדם דא געבן זיא צו ורשטין ער בראכט זיא וויא אן שוו און 'כלה פֿלעגט צו ברנגן הייסט חן
געמאכט און 'געפֿלֹוכטן אין טעצן און 'שפֿרינגן. אין פרקי רבי אליעזר סטיט דאסט הקב"ה האט

כלה און 'טאנצן און 'שפֿרינגן בדור המצוה כלה פֿונ 'אנוה וועגן מיט בק צייחה וואולוסט זאגן

that is: One should also sing to her of how God Himself braided Eve and danced with her in Paradise. The sages expound this from the verse (Gen 2:22), "And He brought her to Adam," understanding it thus: He brought her as one customarily brings a bride, beautifully adorned and braided, with dancing and leaping. In the chapters of Rabbi Eliezer it is stated that God Himself served the bridegroom and the bride, and that He Himself made the wedding canopy, or the covering which is carried on poles and is called Chuppa (beneath which the bridegroom is customarily joined together with the bride), while the angels danced; and that God spoke the blessing, as it is written (Gen 5:2): "And God blessed them." Therefore no one should consider himself too distinguished, but rather should attend upon the bridegroom and the bride and dance and leap before them, for the sake of the commandment, and not for the sake of pleasure. For this reason the dance that takes place with the bride is called the Mizva dance, that is, the commanded dance.

of them held in their hands fiddles, cymbals, and harps, and played before him (Adam) like maidens; and the sun, as well as the moon and the stars, danced before him like young girls. And in the little book Pirke Rabbi Elieser, in the 12th chapter, it is written on this matter as follows: עשר חופות עשה הק"ב לאדם הראשון בגן עדן וכולן של אבנים טובות ומרגליות ושל זהב. והלא לכל חתן אין עושים לו אלא חופה אחת ולמלך אין עושים אלא ג' חופות ולחלוק כבוד לאדם הראשון עשה הק"ב עשר חופות בגן עדן שנאמר בגן עדן אלהים היית כל אבן יקרה וגו' והי' אלו י' חופות היו המלאכים that is, מתוופים בתופים ומרקדים כנקבות שנ' מ'לאכת תפיך ונקבדך כך ביום הבראך כוננו the Holy and Blessed GOD made ten wedding canopies (or coverings) for the first man in Paradise, all of which were fashioned from precious stones, pearls, and gold. Is not only one wedding canopy made for every bridegroom, and are not only three made for a king? How is it then that so many were prepared for him? This was done in order to honor the first man; therefore GOD arranged ten for him in Paradise, as it is said (Ezek 28:13): You were in the garden of pleasure (or Paradise) of GOD, adorned with all manner of precious stones. See, that signifies the ten wedding canopies. The angels beat the drums (or kettledrums) and danced just as women do, as it is said (in the aforementioned passage, Ezek 28:13): On the day that you were created, your timbrel-work and your pipes had to be ready with you.

That He will also dance with the Jews in the future is written in the book Médrasch Tillim, fol. 29. col. 2., on the 48th Psalm, as follows: עתיד הק"ב לעשות חולה לצדיקים לעתיד לבא והק"ב חל עמהן והן מראין לו באצבע שנאמר הנה אלהינו זה קיינו לו: that is, GOD will in the future arrange a dance for the righteous, and will dance with them, and they will point to Him with the finger, as it is said (Isa 25:9): Behold, this is our God, upon whom we have waited. This is also found, though with somewhat altered words, in the Talmudic tractate Táanith (or Táanis) fol. 31. col. 1. So also in the book Rabbóth (or Rábbos), in Vajikra rábba, in the eleventh Parascha, fol. 145. col. 2., it is read as follows: עתיד הק"ב להיות ראש חולה לצדיקים: that is, The holy and blessed God will in the future be the head of the dance of the righteous, and that is what is written (Ps 48:14): Set your heart to lachéla, that is, to their outer wall (or to their fortress); but it is written lochóla, that is, to the dance. In the Commentario, or the exposition thereon, which is called Mattenóth (or Máttenos) kehúnna, this is explained as follows: הוא ילך ויחל בראשם וינהגם: that is, he (namely GOD) will go, and dance at their head, and lead them. This same thing is also found in Schir baschirim rábba fol. 172. col. 4. and in Médrasch kohéleth (or kohéles) fol. 13. col. 3.

Where, however, this dance will be held is indicated in the book Avodáh (or Avodás) bakkódesh, in the 43rd chapter, under the title Chélek battáchlith, fol. 31. col. 4., with these words: אִמְרָתִי וְהָאָה מְהוּל הַמִּזְכָּר שֶׁעֲתִיד הַקָּב"ה לַעֲשׂוֹת לְצִדִּיקִים

 That is: in the little book Othioth (or Othios) Rabbi Akkiva, we are taught that Isaiah, at the banquet of the righteous in Paradise before God, at the time when He (namely God) will dance before them, will say: "Thou Lord of the world, Thy hand is lifted up; the wicked shall not see the prosperity of the righteous," etc. From this it is evident that this dance is to take place in Paradise at that time when the great and glorious banquet, of which mention is made below in the 15th chapter of this second part, will be held. Concerning this, it is also read in the aforementioned little book Othioth Rabbi Akkiva fol. 18. col. 3., where the joy that will be in Paradise is described, as follows: וְכָמָה אֲלֵפִים מֵאַבְרָהָם הָשָׂרָה עוֹמְדִים לְפָנֵיהֶם וּבִידֵיהֶם נְבָלִים וּמַצְלֵתִים וְכָל שִׁיר וּמִנְגִּנִים לְפָנֵיהֶם בְּסֻעוֹת הַקֶּבֶ"ה עֲצָמוֹ בְּעֲצָמוֹ
 וְהַקֶּבֶ"ה בְּכַבֻּדוֹ יַעֲמֹד לְפָנֵיהֶם בְּסֻעוֹדָה וְהַחֲמָה וְהַלְכָּנָה וְהַמְזֻלּוֹת פְּלוּטִין וּמִרְפָּדִין לְפָנֵיהֶם that is, thousands upon thousands of ministering angels will stand before them (namely the pious in Paradise), holding pipes, fiddles, cymbals, and all manner of musical instruments in their hands, and will play music before them at the banquet; and the holy blessed God will rise of His own accord at the banquet and dance; but the sun and the moon, as well as the stars and planets, will be at His right and left sides, and will leap before them (namely the righteous) together with Him.

Yes, at that time Hell shall also be cleansed and sanctified, and because it borders directly on Paradise, it shall be united with it; moreover, the partition wall that stands between them shall be broken down, so that the dance may also be held therein, as is reported in the book Jalkut chadasch fol. 55. col. 4.
num. 24. under the title Gan éden vegebinnom, from the book Asarah maamaroth
 (or Asóro maamóros) fol. 85. col. 1., where the words read as follows: אָמְרוּ חֲזוּ לֵ
 אֵין גִּיהֵנָם לְעֵתִיד לְבֹא פִירֵשׁ אֹרֶךְ שָׁל גִּיהֵנָם שְׁנֵבֶרֶא בְּשֵׁנִי אֲכַל חֵלֶל שְׁנֵבֶרֶא קוֹדֶם הָעוֹלָם עֵתִיד
 לְהִתְקַדֵּשׁ כְּקֹדֶשֶׁת הַגֶּן וְשֵׁם יִהְיֶה מַחֹל לְצַדִּיקִים הַקֶּבֶ"ה רֹאשׁ חוֹלָה וְעַל כֵּן כְּתִיב תָּם הוּא לְמַלְךְ הַכִּין. That is: Our sages, of blessed memory, say that in the future there will no longer be any Hell, that is, no fire of Hell, which was created on the second day; but the hollow space thereof, which was created before the world, will be sanctified just as Paradise is holy, and there the righteous will dance, and God will be the head of the dancers (that is, He will dance at the fore); for this reason it is written ("Yea, he also is prepared for the king," Isa 30:33): that is, that very place (namely the place called Tophet, which signifies Hell) is also prepared for the King. That Hell shall in the future be cleansed and joined to Paradise will be demonstrated more fully below in the 8th chapter of the second part.

Regarding the holy angels: they are said to have danced before Jacob as well, of which mention is made in the book Rabboth (or Rabbos) in Schir haschirim rabba fol. 272. col. 4. as follows: ר' ברכיה בשם ר' לוי אמר ששים רבוא מלאכים היו ועשרים ריבוא דא"ל ויאמר מרקדים לפני אבינו יעקב בצאתו מבית לבן ורבנן אמרי מאה ועשרים ריבוא דא"ל ויאמר יעקב כאשר ראם מחנה אלהים זה הרי ששים רבוא ותקרא שם המקום ההוא מחנים הרי מאה ועשרים רבוא that is: Rabbi Berachja said in the name of Rabbi Levi that sixty times ten thousand (that is, six hundred thousand) angels danced and leaped before our father Jacob as he departed from the house of Laban; but our Rabbis say there were one hundred and twenty times ten thousand (that is, a thousand times a thousand and two hundred thousand); this is what is written (Gen 32:1-2): "And when Jacob saw them, he said, this is God's host"; behold, that signifies sixty times ten thousand (that is, six hundred thousand), and he called that place Machanaim (which word means "two hosts" and thus indicates twice as many). Behold, that makes one hundred and twenty times ten thousand (that is, a thousand times a thousand and two hundred thousand). Likewise, in the book Avodath (or Avodas) bakkodesch, in the fourth part, which is called Chelek Sithre hattora, in the first chapter, fol. 110. col. 3., it is recorded that they leaped before Rabbi Elieser and Rabban Jochanan, the son of Saccai, where the words read as follows: בירושלמי אמרו כיון שפתח רבי אלעזר במעשה מרכבה ירד לו ר"מ בן זכאי מן החמור אמר אינו כדן שאהא שומע כבוד קוני ואני רוכב על החמור יהלכו ושבו להם תחת אילן וירדה אש מן השמים והקיפה אותם היו מלאכי השרת מקפצין לפניהם כבני חומה שמחין לפני חתן וענה מלאך אחר מתוך האש ואמר לדברידך אלעזר בן ערך כן היא מעשה מרכבה That is: in the Jerusalem Talmud it is reported that when Rabbi Elieser had begun to speak of the Work of the Chariot (which is treated in the first chapter of the prophet Ezekiel), Rabbi Jochanan, the son of Saccai, dismounted from his donkey and said: it is not fitting that I should hear the honor of my Creator while riding upon a donkey. When they had then walked on and seated themselves beneath a tree, fire came down from heaven and surrounded them; and the ministering angels leaped before them as wedding guests make merry before the bridegroom; and an angel spoke from the midst of the fire and said: the Work of the Chariot is exactly as you, Elieser, son of Erech, have said.

Fifteenth, they teach that GOD prays, concerning which the following is written in the Talmudic Tractate Berachoth (or Berachos) fol. 7, col. 1: אמר ר' יוחנן משום ר' יוסי מנין שהקב"ה מתפלל שנ' והביאותים אל הר קדשי ושמחתים בבית תפילתי תפלתם לא נאמר אלא תפילתי מכאן שהקב"ה מתפלל . . . מאי מצלי אמר רב זוטרא בר טוביתא אמר רב יהי רצון מלפני שיכבשו רחמי את כעסי ויגולו רחמי על מדותי ואתנהג עם בני במהת הרחמים ואכנס להם לפני משורת הדין That is: Rabbi Jochanan says in the name of Rabbi Jose: From where is it proven that GOD prays? From the fact that it is written (Isa 56:7): "Them will I bring to my holy mountain, and will make them joyful in the house of my prayer" (that is, in my house of prayer); it does not say "of their prayer" (that is, in their house of prayer), but rather "of my prayer" (that is, in my house of prayer); from this it is proven that GOD prays. What then does He pray? Raf Sutra, the son of Tobid, says that Raf said that He prays thus: "May it be the will (before me) that my mercy overcome my wrath, and that my mercy unfold all my attributes, and that I deal with my children according to the attribute of my mercy, and that I not execute my judgment upon them according to the full rigor of the law." The very same thing is also found in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Prophet Isaiah, fol. 54, col. 4, numero 146.

It is also written in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 5, col. 3, no. 32, from the aforementioned Jalkut Schimoni on the Psalms, no. 25, fol. 113, col. 3, under the title Chorban, the following: אמר רבי ברכיה מתחלת בריאתו של עולם עשה לו הקב"ה סוכה בירושלים כביכול היה מתפלל בתוכה ואומר יהי רצון שיעשו בני רצוני כדי שלא אחריב ביתי ומקדשי וכיון שחרב הוא מתפלל ואומר יהי רצון שיעשו בני תשובה שאקרב בנין ביתי תדע לך שכן דכתיב ושמהתים בבית תפלתי תפלתם לא נאמר אלא תפלתי מלמד מתפלל that is, Rabbi Berachja says: God made for Himself, from the beginning of the creation of the world, His tabernacle (or booth) in Jerusalem, in which He, so to speak, prayed and said: May it be My will that My children do My will, so that I need not allow My house and My sanctuary to be destroyed. But after the Temple was destroyed, He prayed thus: May it be My will that My children repent, so that I may cause My house to be rebuilt soon. Know, however, that it is thus written (Isa 56:7): I will make them joyful in My house of prayer; it does not say "in their house of prayer," which teaches us that God prays. According to the words cited from the Jalkut, God is said to have prayed in Jerusalem. But in the book Chiddusche baggaduth, fol. 3, col. 1, on the above-mentioned words of the Talmudic tractate Berachoth, from fol. 7, col. 1, it is written as follows: עלינו בית תפלתו הוא המקדש שלמעלה המכוון נגד מקדש שלמטה כדאמרן פרק אין דורשין וכל שבו ז' רקיעים וכו' וזבול הוא שבו י"ה ומזבח וכו' that is, by His house of prayer is understood the upper Temple (which is in heaven), which stands directly opposite the lower Temple (which was in Jerusalem); as we say in the chapter En dorschin (that is, in the second chapter of the Talmudic tractate Chagiga), that in the heaven which is called Sebbul there is a Temple, in which an altar is built, before which the great prince Michael stands and upon which he offers sacrifice.

Sixteenth, they teach that GOD not only puts on the prayer straps, which are called Tphillin, which they bind around their heads and hands every morning and which are described in detail in Buxtorf's Judenschul in the fourth chapter, but also puts on a Talles (which is that woolen cloth they place over their heads in their synagogues), and has allowed Himself to be seen dressed like a sexton or bell-ringer. Concerning the Tphillin or prayer straps, the following is read in the Talmudic tractate Berachoth (or Beróchos), fol. 6. col. 1.: א"ר אבין בר רבא א"ר יצחק מנין שהקב"ה מניח תפילין שנ' נשבע ה' בימינו ובזרוע עזן בימינו זו תורה שנא' מימינו אש דת למו, ובזרוע עזו אלו תפילין שנ' ה' עזו לעמו יתן. That is: Rabbi Abbin, the son of Raf Ada, reported that Rabbi Isaac said: from where is it proven that GOD puts on the Tphillin or prayer straps? From the fact that it is said (Isa 62:8): "The LORD has sworn by His right hand, and by the arm of His strength." The words "by His right hand" signify the Law, as it is said (Deut 33:2): "At His right hand was a fiery law unto them." The words "by the arm of His strength" signify the Tphillin, as it is said (Ps 29:11): "The LORD will give strength unto His people." The very same is also found in the Jalkut Schimoni on Isaiah, fol. 58. col. 1. numero 366, where, however, the following is additionally included: אמר ליה ר' נחמן בר יצחק לרב חייא בר אבין תפילין דמרי עלמא מה כתיב בהו ס' כעמך ישראל ומי משתבח קב"ה בשבחו דיישיאל אמר ליה אין דכתיב את ה' האמרת היום וה' האמריך היום אמר להם הקב"ה לישראל אתם עשיתוני חטיבה אחת בעולם דכתיב שמע ישראל ה' אלהינו ה' אחד ואני אעשה אתכם חטיבה אחת בעולם שנא' כעמך ישראל גוי אחד בארץ. That is: Raf Nachman, the son of Isaac, said to Rabbi Chija, the son of Abbin: what is written upon the Tphillin of the LORD of the world? Rabbi Chija said: (written upon them are the words of 2 Sam 7:23): "Who is like Your people Israel?" How, said Raf Nachman, is GOD then also praised through the praise of Israel? To this Rabbi Chijah answered: certainly, as it is written (Deut 26:17-18): "You have exalted the LORD today, and the LORD has exalted you today." GOD said to Israel: you have made me into an everlasting praise in the world, as it is written (Deut 6:4): "Hear, O Israel, the LORD our GOD is one GOD"; therefore I will also make you into a singular praise in the world, as it is said (2 Sam 7:23): "And who is like Your people Israel, a singular people upon the earth."

Regarding the Talles: it is reported in the book Rabbóth (or Rabbos) in Schemóth (or Schemós) rabba, in the 22nd Parascha, fol. 128. col. 1, that God makes use of it, and the following is read there: א"ר יצחק בשעה שאמר לו הקב"ה לך רד חשכו פניו של משה ונעשה כסומא מי הצרות ולא היה יודע מאיזה מקום לירד והיו מלאכי השרת מבקשים להרגו אמרו הרי השעה להרגו ידע הקב"ה מה המלאכים מבקשים לעשות לו מה עשה הקב"ה אמר רבי ברכיה בשם רבי חלבו בשם רב חנן בר יוסף בשם ר' אבא בר איבו פתח לו הקב"ה טפשפש מתחת כסא הכבוד ואמר לו לך רד שנא' ויאמר יי' אלי קום רד מהר מזה ר' עזריה בשם ר' יהודה בר סימון בשם ר' יהודה בר אלעאי אמר כיון שבא משה לירד באו המלאכים להרגו מה עשה אחז בכסא של הקב"ה ופרש הקב"ה טליתו עליו שלא יחבלוהו שנ' מאחז פני כסא פרשו עליו עננו מהו פרשו נוטריקון פרש ז'ו ד'חוס ש'רי that is: Rabbi Isaac said: At the time when God spoke to Moses, "go down," his face became darkened and, on account of his anguish, he became as one blind, so that he did not know at which place he should descend; and the ministering angels also sought to kill him and said, "now is the time to slay him"; but God knew well what they desired to do to him. What did God do? Rabbi Berachja says, in the name of Rabbi Chelbo, in the name of Rab Chanan, the son of Joseph, in the name of Rabbi Abba, the son of Ibbo: God opened for him a small door beneath the throne of glory and said to him, "go, descend," as it is said (Deut 9:12): "Arise, go down quickly from here." Rabbi Asaria says in the name of Rabbi Jehuda, the son of Elai: When Moses came to descend, the angels came to kill him. What did he do? He seized the throne of glory, and God spread His Talles over him so that they should do him no harm, as it is said (Job 26:9): "He holds His throne and spreads His clouds over him." What does the word פרשו, Parsches, mean, that is, "he spread out"? By Notaricon (which is a kind of Kabbalistic interpretation, according to which each letter of a word signifies a separate word), it signifies (with its four letters Pe, Resch, Schin, and Sain, these four words, namely Parsches rachum schaddai siv, that is): the merciful, almighty Radiance spread His clouds over him.

That God allowed Himself to be seen dressed like a cantor is evident from the Talmudic tractate Rosch haschana (or haschono) fol. 17. col. 2. and the book Col bo, fol. 77. col. 3. numero 70., as well as from Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 168. col. 2., in the Parascha Schelach lecha, where, concerning the words of Exod 34:6, "And the Lord passed before his face," the following is written: אמר רבי יוחנן אלמלא מקרא כתוב אי אפשר לאומרו: מלמד שנתעטף הק"ב כשליח ציבור והראה לו למשה סדר תפלה אמר לו כל זמן שישראל חוטאים יעשו לפני כסדר הזה ואני מוחל להם: that is, Rabbi Jochanan said: if this passage were not written, one would not be permitted to say it. It teaches, however, that He (namely, God, wrapped in a Talles) was dressed like a cantor, and that He showed Moses the order (or manner) of prayer, and said to him: as often as the children of Israel sin, they shall do before Me according to this manner, and I will forgive them. After this, Rabbi Bechai continues: הכוונה: במאמר זה שבא ללמדנו סדר תפלה ובקשה איך נתחנן לפניו ונתעטף בטלית: that is, the purpose of this account is that He (namely, God) came to teach us the manner of prayer and supplication, how we are to pray before Him.

Seventeenth, they teach that the souls of the Jews are a part of God, even though the Godhead is indivisible and cannot be divided. Concerning this, the following is read in the book Schefa tal, in the preface, on the second folio, in the 1. col. or page: הנשמה היא חלק אלוה ממעל: that is, The soul is a part of God from above. And in the second col. or page it states: ישראל הם חלק אלוה ממעל: that is, The Israelites are a part of God from above, and of His substance, or His essence. Further, the following is read in the same place: כל נפש ונפש בפני עצמה מ ישראל חביבה בעיניו יותר מכל ע' אומות וכענין שנאמר רק

This is supposed to be the reason why the damned are able to endure such terrifyingly great torments, concerning which the book Emek hammélech, fol. 15, col. 3, under the title Scháar tikkúne hateschúva, in the first chapter, reads as follows: אתה בני המעיין בספר זה אל תתמה שיש לרשעים כל כך כח להענשים האלה ולא ימותו לגמרי ויבוטלו כשם שהק"בה נותן כח בצדיקים לקבל טובתם כך נותן כח ברשעים לקבל פורענותם וכל זה מפני שיש בהם ניצוץ קדושה נשמת אלוה ממעל שהוא נצחי שנאמר: ויפח באפיו נשמת רוח חיים ואח"ל כל הנופח מעצמותו הוא נופח ונאמר כי חלק יי עמו ממש that is, You, my son, who are engaged in your reflections in this book, do not marvel that the wicked have such great strength to endure these punishments (mentioned previously). Does it not say in the Medrasch néeelam that, just as God grants the righteous strength to receive their good, so too does He grant the wicked strength to receive and endure their punishment? And all of this comes about because within them there is a spark of glory, the soul of God from on high, which is eternal, as it is said (Gen 2:7): And He breathed into him the breath of life. Our rabbis, of blessed memory, have also said that whoever breathes, breathes from his own substance and his own being. And it is said (Deut 32:9): The LORD's portion is His people, which is to be understood in its literal sense. This matter will be treated further in the first chapter of the second part.

Eighteenth, they teach that God taught the entire Talmud to Moses on Mount Sinai. Concerning this, it is written in the Jalkut Schimoni on the second book of Moses, fol. 111, col. 1, numero 405, and in the Rabboth (or Rabbos) in Schemoth (or Schemas) rabba, fol. 151, col. 2, in the 47th Parascha, as follows: בשעה שבא הקב"ה ליתן את התורה אמרה למשה על סדר המקרא והמשנה That is: When God came to give the Law, He communicated it to Moses according to the order of the Mikra (that is, the Scripture and the books of the Old Testament), the Mishna (that is, the Talmudic text), the Aggada (that is, the narratives, or rather fables and fairy tales, which encompasses everything indicated above from the Talmudic books concerning God's weeping, misery, praying, putting on the Tphillin and the Talies, studying, dancing, etc.), and the Talmud (that is, the Gemara, or Gemoro, which is the commentary on the Mishna, or the Talmudic text), as is stated (Exod 20:1): "And God spoke all these words"; yes, even everything that a devout disciple would ask his teacher. Likewise, in the Medrasch Koheleth (or Kobeles), fol. 313, col. 2-3, on the words of Deut 9:10, "And the Lord gave me the two stone tablets written with the finger of God, and upon them according to all the words, etc.," it is read that the following is written there: ללמדך שמקרא ומשנה הלכות תוספת הגדות ומה שתלמיד ותיק עתיד that is, to teach you that the Mikra or Scripture, the Mishna, the Halachoth (or Halochos, that is, the rulings), the Tosephoth (or Tosephos, that is, the additions which the disciples of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi appended to the Talmud), and the Haggadoth (or Haggados, that is, the fabulous narratives, as mentioned shortly before), yes, even everything that any devout disciple will teach in the future, had already existed and was given to Moses as halacha, or ruling, from Mount Sinai. This is also taught in Bammidbar rabba, in the eighteenth Parascha, fol. 122, col. 3.

The same is also found in the little book Othioth (or Osios) Rabbi Akkiva, where the words at fol. 11. col. 2, where the angel Metatron is treated, read as follows: הלכה נקרא שמו מטטרון מפני שכל גנזי החכמה כולן מסורין בידו וכולן נפתחו למשה מסיני עד שלמדו לו בארבעים ימים כשהיה עומד בהר החורה בשבעים פנים של שבעים לשון. נביאים וכתובים הלכות ואגדות שמועות תוספות וכולם בשבעים פנים של שבעים לשון. נביאים בע' פנים של ע' לשון. כתובים בע' פנים של ע' לשון. הלכות בע' פנים של ע' לשון. וכיון שעלו לו סוף מ' יום נשתכחו לו כולם בשעה אחת עד שקרא שקרא לו הקב"ה לשמיה שד של התורה ונתן לו למשה כמתנה שנ' ויתנם ה' אלי וחזר כן נתקיימו בידו זמין שנתקיימו לו שנ' זכור תורת משה עבדי אשר צויתי אותו בחורב על כל ישראל חוקים ומשפטים. חזת

אלו תורה נביאים וכתובים, חזקים אלו הלכות ושמועות משפטים אלו אגדות ותוספות וכולם נאמרו לו למשה בסיני That is: Why is he (the angel Metatron) also called Segansugel? Because all the treasures of wisdom have been placed into his hand, all of which were opened to Moses from the mountain (Sinai), so that he was instructed therein over 40 days while he stood upon the mountain. The Law was taught to him in seventy manners of the seventy languages (to be understood). The Prophets, the Hagiographa, the Halachoth (or Halochos, that is, Decisions), the Aggadoth (or Aggodos), the Schemuoth (or Schemuos, that is, histories which one hears), as well as the Tosephoth (or Tosephos), he learned all of them in 70 manners of the 70 languages. The Prophets (I say, he learned) in 70 manners of the 70 languages, as also the Hagiographa in 70 manners of the 70 languages, likewise the Halachoth (or Halochos) in 70 manners of the 70 languages. When this was done and had gone well, at the end of the 40 days he forgot everything again in a single hour, until the Holy and Blessed GOD called upon (the angel) Jefifia, the Prince of the Law, and the latter gave it back to Moses as a gift, as it is said (Deut 10:4): "And the LORD gave them to me." After this it remained with him permanently. But from where is it proven that it remained with him permanently? Because it is said (Mal 4:4): "Remember the Torath (or Toras) of the Law of Moses my servant, which I commanded him on Mount Horeb for all Israel, together with the Chykkim," that is, statutes or commandments, "and the Mischpatim," that is, rights. By Torath (or Toras), the Law, is understood the Law (of Moses) together with the Prophets and the Hagiographa. By Chykkim (the statutes or ordinances) are understood the Halachoth (or Halochos), that is, decisions, as well as the Schemuoth (or Schemuos), that is, histories which one hears; but by the Mischpatim, or rights, the Aggadoth (or Aggodos) and the Tosephoth (or Tosephos) are to be understood: and all of this was said to Moses on Mount Sinai.

It therefore follows from this senseless doctrine of the hardened Jews that God taught Moses on Mount Sinai all manner of fairy tales, lies, and even shameful obscenities; for much of this kind is found in the Talmud, as will be demonstrated in detail below in the eighth chapter of this first part, which to say of God is highly blasphemous. Notwithstanding this, however, a Jew is bound and obligated to give credence to such foolish fairy tales and gross lies, however absurd they may be, as can be clearly seen in the book Menórath (or Menóras) hammáor, fol. 12, col. 4, under the title Ner schéni, Kelál ríschon, chélek schéni, in the second chapter, where the following is taught: כל מה שאמרו ז"ל במדרשות ובהגדות חייבין אנו להאמין בו כמו בתורת מרע"ה ואם נמצא בו דבר שהיא דרך צחוק או חוץ מן הטבע יש לנו לתלות החסרון בדעתנו אבל לא במאמרם. והמלעיג על שום דבר מכל מה שאמרו ז"ל נענש כדגרסינן במסכת עירובין פ' עושין פסין דף כ"א אמר רב פפא that is: Everything that our rabbis, of blessed memory, have said in the Medraschóth

(or Medrôschos, that is, allegorical expositions, among which are included those fairy tales that have hitherto been brought forward from the Rabbôth or Rabbos) and in the Haggadôth (or Haggódos), we are obligated to believe just as firmly as the Law of Moses our teacher, upon whom be peace. And when something is found therein that seems strange or unnatural to us, we must attribute this to our own limited understanding, and not to their words. Moreover, whoever mocks any single thing of all that our rabbis, of blessed memory, have said, shall be punished, as we learn in the Talmudic tractate Erúvin, in the second chapter, fol. 21, col. 2, where it is written: Raf Papa says in the name of Rabba, the son of Raf Ula: Everyone who mocks the words of the sages shall be punished in boiling excrement (which is said to be a certain place in hell, as will be indicated below in the eighth chapter of the second part).

Someone might, however, raise an objection to this and say that the above-mentioned Haggadôth (or Haggódos) are not understood by the Jews according to the letter, and literally, as they read according to the words, but are interpreted differently. To this I give the answer that I know very well that various rabbis have labored strenuously to present them as being understood in another way, and one has invented and written this interpretation over them, another that one, as can be seen in the books Cáphthor uphérah, Nézach Jisraél (or Jisroél), Béer haggóla, and others. I am also aware that Rabbi Moses bar Maimon, in his book Môre nevochim, in the first part, in the 70th chapter, fol. 52, col. 2, states that the Haggadôth are not to be understood according to the letter, where he writes about this as follows: והסוכל אין אלו העניינים והמשלים האמיתיים אשר אלהים הגיע עיין המעולים שמחוסרים פקחים במדרשות כשיעין בהם הטפש והחכם שאינו משהו על האמת עתיק יחשוק מהם למה שהוא כפשוטים מההבל.

Consider also how these wonderful and truthful things, upon which the most excellent Philosophi have meditated, are scattered throughout the Medraschôth (or Medrôschos, that is, the allegorical expositions), over which a clever man who does not acknowledge the truth laughs right at the beginning of his examination, because he sees them, taken according to their literal sense, to be separated from the truth; the entire reason for this being that they (our sages) have spoken in riddles about such matters as the common people cannot comprehend. These are the words of Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon. Be that as it may, however, it is entirely godless and blasphemous that such mocking, disparaging, and most offensive things are reported and taught concerning the most perfect and most holy Divine Majesty; and however one may choose to explain and expound them, in whatever way one will, can, or might, God is thereby dishonored in the highest degree, and His holy Word is shamefully twisted and perverted, as the examples adduced confirm this more than sufficiently. Moreover, when one carefully goes through all that is brought forward in the aforementioned books to explain the impious teachings of the ancient rabbis concerning God, one finds that it is nothing but absurd fantasies. Indeed, if one were to teach such improper things about God and then seek to excuse them in this manner, saying they are to be understood metaphoricè, that is, in an allegorical sense, and ἀνθρωποπαθῶς, that is, according to the human manner of speaking, just as in Holy Scripture eyes, hands, and the like are attributed to God the Lord after the human manner of speaking, then there would be nothing so absurd, so shameful, and so terrible to conceive of that could not be written about God and excused in such a fashion.

Although Rabbi Moses bar Maimon himself did not understand these passages literally, and others whom he had made wiser wished to interpret them differently than the words indicate, the majority of Jews nonetheless believe them literally. Indeed, even many among their scholars, who consider themselves very clever and learned, are of the opinion that everything is to be understood according to the plain sense that the words convey. Rabbi Moses bar Maimon also laments this in his book called Bâb Mûse, that is, the Gate of Moses, on pp. 144 and 145, and writes about it mostly in the Arabic language with Hebrew letters as follows: ופמא יגב אן תעלמה אן כלאם החכמים ע"ה: אנקסמו פי פי חל חיל פי 'פיה אלקוף אלאולי והי אכתר מן ראתיה ומן ראית מואלפה ומן סמעת בה תתמלה על פארה ולא תתאולד בונא ותצר ענודא אלממנעאת כלהא ואגבה אלתגד ואנמא פעלהא דלך לתהלהם לנהלהם באלעולום ובעודתם מן אלמעארף וליס הם מן אלכמאל מן חית ותהיו מן חלקא אלפסאד ולא וגדו מנבהא ינבהם פלא ידע אן לא ירודו אלחכמים במיע אקנאלהם אלמחכמה אלא פי קדמא הם מחא ואנהא עלי פנאהרהא ואן באטן שיהאד בעין בלאמהם מן אלשנאעה עי חיי לא ידע עלי אעתקאדהא וקאלו כדא ימן פי אלקינא שפך יחביל והוא ודויהא דאשא עחיחא פארק ען אמותתאמנה נזאת אלשאפה אלמסכינה ידדו לנהלהא לאגה עטפת אלחכמים ביצמהא והי קד אסתהת גאהה פלוחסאת ווי לא משעד זאן באן לעמר אלה הדה אלשאפה תדבה במחאפן אלדין ותטלה בהנתה ותעל רין אלה פי עבס מא אריר בה לאן אלה יקול פי מחכם אלפגזיל אשר ישמעון את כל החקים וכו' והדה אלשאפה תסרוד מן שאהר בלאמ אלחכמים מא אדא סמעתהא אלמלל קאלו רק עם סכל ונבל הגוי הקטן הנה ואכתר מן יפעל הדא אלדדשיו אלדין יפסרון אלנאס מא לא יפקמו הם פי אנפסהם אן לא יפקמו לו שכינא פי זמן ההיש וחדישיו נחות לם לחכמה אן באן יקדוין מא זעלם מא אלט that is: Now, what you need to know is this: that people divide themselves into three sects (or factions) with regard to the words of the Sages, upon whom be peace (in respect of their interpretation). The first sect (to which the majority belong, of those I have seen and whose writings have come before my eyes, or of whom I have heard) consists of those who wish to understand these words externally and literally, and do not interpret them at all, so that all impossible things appear to them as though they were actually present in reality. They have done this because they are entirely without understanding in the sciences and are remote from the disciplines, and they do not possess the perfection to admonish themselves, nor have they found anyone to admonish them. They hold that the Sages in all their wise sayings intended nothing other than what they themselves understand from them, and that these sayings are to be understood according to their outward nature and plain sense, even though the outward appearance of some of their sayings is utterly absurd, so that if one were to examine them closely according to what they seem to indicate, one might say: how can there be anyone in the world who would imagine this and hold it for a true opinion? Far from praising it. The foolishness of this wretched sect is to be lamented, for in supposing that they are exalting the Sages, they cast them down entirely, without knowing it. Indeed, truly, this faction robs religion of its honor and darkens its splendor, and twists the Law of God in a manner wholly contrary to the purpose for which it was given. For when God says in the Law (Deut 4:6): "When they (the nations) shall hear all these statutes, they shall say, surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people," etc., this faction assembles from the outward appearance of the sayings of the Sages such things that the nations who hear them would say: surely this small people is a foolish and unreasonable people. Those who do this most of all are the preachers, who explain to the people such things as they themselves do not understand. And would to God they kept silent, since they do not understand these things (as may be read in Job 13:5): "Would that you kept silent, for that would be wisdom for you"; or that they would at least say, we do not know what the Sages intended by these sayings. The very same thing is also to be found in the aforementioned Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's commentary on the Mishnah of the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 119, col. 2 and 3, in the Talmud printed at Amsterdam, at the back of the tractate Sanhedrin. Such senseless fools are the Jews even to this day, to whom nothing in their rabbis' books appears so absurd that they should not understand and believe it literally, as I myself have heard from them on many occasions. And a Jew in Mannheim once told me that he had learned from an old rabbi that just as the written Law, that is, the Five Books of Moses, is to be understood literally, so too must the oral Law, that is, the Talmud, be understood literally.

Chapter II.

In which it is demonstrated how the godless, hardened Jews revile, blaspheme, and curse the Son of God, our only Savior and Redeemer, JESUS Christ, in many ways, and what shameful and contemptuous names they give him.

The Jews have at all times been a stiff-necked and malicious people, who wickedly and willfully opposed God the Lord and His servants the prophets and teachers whom He sent to them to instruct them in His holy Word and will, and who refused all due obedience, as can be clearly seen in Exod 32:9 and 34:9, Deut 9:6, 7, 13, 24 and 31:27, 2 Kgs 17:14, 15, Jer 7:26 and 19:15, Mal 3:7, Acts 7:51, and also 2 Cor 3:14. When Moses led them out of harsh Egyptian bondage at God's command and sought to bring them into the Promised Land of Canaan, they murmured against him many times along the way, as can be read in Exod 14:11, 16:2, and 17:1, 2. They also quarreled with him so severely that he said to God that it would not be long before they stoned him, Exod 17:2, 4; and they wanted to turn back entirely and return to Egypt, Num 14:2, 3, 4, and even to stone those who advised them against it, Num 14:10. The prophet Jeremiah was beaten and thrown into prison because he made known to them the punishments of God that would come upon them on account of their sins, Jer 19:15 and 20:1, 2. He was also seized outright by the priests and false prophets because he had declared to them what God had commanded him, and they said he must die, Jer 26:7, 8. Afterward he was again beaten by the princes and cast into prison, Jer 37:15, 16, and on account of his prophecy was thrown into a pit of mud, and the princes demanded that he be put to death, Jer 38:2, 3, 4, 6. The prophet Micah was struck on the cheek because he had advised King Ahab against marching to Ramoth in Gilead, 1 Kgs 22:24. Amos was regarded as a rebel when he prophesied against King Jeroboam, Amos 7:10. One of the prophetic disciples who had been sent by the prophet Elisha to Jehu was called a madman, 2 Kgs 9:11. Indeed, they put many of them to death altogether: Uriah was killed because he had prophesied against Jerusalem, Jer 26:20, 23. They stoned Zechariah because he exhorted the people in Jerusalem to turn back to God, 2 Chr 24:19, 20, 21. Likewise, many other prophets were also put to death, 1 Kgs 18:4, 13, Matt 23:34, 37, and Luke 13:24.

In precisely the same manner, and indeed far worse, the hardened, godless Jews dealt with the Son of God, our most precious Savior Jesus Christ, the highest Prophet and Teacher. For when He, in the fullness of time, took on human nature in order to accomplish the work of redemption, and desired to lead them out of the spiritual Egypt and from the power of the hellish Pharaoh, and also to show them the way to the heavenly Canaan through His faithful admonitions and instructions in the divine Word and will, alongside zealous reproof of all the sins that were rampant, they became His bitterest enemies. The Pharisees and scribes murmured against Him because He received sinners (Luke 15:2). Others who followed Him also murmured because He had lodged with a sinner (Luke 19:7). Those of Nazareth thrust Him out of the city and wanted to throw Him down from the brow of a hill (Luke 4:16, 24, 28-29). The inhabitants of Jerusalem took up stones to stone Him, because He said that He and the Father are one (John 10:30). Although He was Wisdom itself, He was nonetheless regarded as a madman (Mark 3:21 and John 10:20). And after the unclean spirits had been compelled to yield to His holy and almighty command, they said of Him in a blasphemous manner that He cast out devils through Beelzebub, the prince of the devils (Matt 12:24 and 9:34 and Luke 11:15), and in a godless fashion alleged that He had Beelzebub (Mark 3:22; John 7:20 and 10:20). Indeed, they did not rest until, out of a savage and bitter hatred, they had accused Him through false witnesses (Matt 27:59 and Mark 14:55-57), laid their violent hands upon Him, falsely charged Him with blasphemy (Matt 27:65 and Mark 14:64), spat upon Him (Matt 27:30), struck Him with their fists (Mark 14:65), and brought Him to the cross with all manner of insults (Mark 15:17 etc. and John 19:15 etc.). Yet with all of this they were still not satisfied that they had treated Him so wickedly; rather, they additionally implanted in all their descendants the abominable and unspeakable hatred which they had conceived against Him without cause, in such a manner that to this very day they despise, insult, blaspheme, and curse Him in the most extreme fashion, as is set before them by the converted Jew Ferdinand Hessen in his little book called the Juden-Geissel (Jews' Scourge), in the first part, in the fourth chapter, after he has adduced much proof that Jesus is the true Messiah, in these words: Take it to heart and take good heed, dear Jews, when you so horribly and blasphemously spit upon, curse, and execrate the Son of God, and cry Him out as the most despised, most godless man upon the earth. This will also be shown fully and clearly from their own books in what follows.

Because such terrifying things will appear here, at which every upright and pious Christian may rightly be horrified, those who read it will thereby have cause to call upon GOD fervently and to pray that He would look upon the blinded Jewish people with the eyes of His mercy, illuminate their perverse and darkened hearts, graciously deliver them from the dreadful error in which they are mired, and bring them to the true, solely saving knowledge of the one

Savior and Redeemer Jesus Christ. The high Christian authorities, moreover, will thereby find occasion to consider means by which the dreadful blasphemies and cursing against Christ that circulate in the midst of Christians may be earnestly and forcefully suppressed.

In this chapter, all the mocking names which the godless Jews give to Christ the LORD shall be set forth, and in doing so a great many dreadful blasphemies against Him shall at the same time be revealed to the worthy Christian world. If they were to call Him merely נצרי Nózeri, or הנצרי haannózeri, that is, the Nazarene, or ישוע הנצרי Jeschúa hannózeri, that is, Jesus the Nazarene, as occurs in some of their books, we would have no cause to complain against them, for He Himself is called Nazarenus at Matt 2:23, and Jesus of Nazareth at Matt 21:11, Mark 1:24, Acts 2:22, and in several other places as well. But they give Him many other names, and indeed shameful ones, and call Him first of all ישו Jéschu, or י"שו Jíschu. In the Hebrew language, Jesus is called ישוע Jeschúa, that is, a Savior and Redeemer; but the godless Jews drop the last letter, the Ajin, and call Him in a malicious manner Jéschu, or rather Jíschu, which is done by them for five different reasons.

The first reason is given by Rabbi Elias in his Tischbi, under the word Jeschu, in these words: לפי שיהודים אינם מודים שהוא היה המושיע לפיכך אים רוצים לקראו ישו; that is, because the Jews do not acknowledge that He was the Savior and Redeemer (namely, the promised Messiah), they do not wish to call Him Jeschúa, but instead discard the letter Ajin and call Him Jeschu.

The second reason is shown by Rabbi Abraham Perizol in his book Mág-gen Abraham, in the 59th chapter, where he writes as follows: היה שמו ישוע כמו שכתב הרמ"ב ז"ל בהלכות תשובה ובהלכות מלכים ואע"פ שבכל התלמוד לא נמצא אלא ישו; that is, His name was Jeschúa, as Rabbi Moses, the son of Majemon, of blessed memory, wrote in his (book Jad Chasaká, or Mischnéh Toráh, in the) Tractate on Repentance, as well as in the Tractate on Kings; although throughout the entire Talmud only Jeschu is found. They have, however, perhaps deliberately omitted the letter Ajin, because He did not redeem Himself (from the hands and power of His enemies).

The third reason: because they are not only permitted to mock false gods, whom they also consider Christ to be, but are also commanded to alter their names and to call them by shameful designations. That they are permitted to mock false gods is taught by the Talmud in Tractate Megilla, fol. 25. col. 2. in these words: כל ליצנותא אסירא ב' מליצנותא דעבודה כל ליצנותא אסירא בר מליצנותא כל ליצנותא דעבודה כוכבים דשריא דכתיב כרע בל וקרא נבו יהיו עצביהן לחיה ולבהמה that is: All mockery is forbidden, except the mockery of an idol, which is permitted, as it is written (Isa 46:1): Bel is bowed down, Nebo has fallen (or has crouched). So also it is written (Isa 46:2): They bow themselves, they crouch, and cannot carry away the burden.

That they are commanded to alter the names of such figures and to mock them through such alteration is clearly shown by Rabbi Bechai in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 198, col. 1, in the Parascha Ekef, on the words (Deut 7:26) "You shall utterly detest it and utterly abhor it," where he writes as follows: למדך הכתוב שחייב האדם לשקץ ע"י להוציאה בלשון גנאי אם היה שמה בית גליא שהוא לשון גובה קורין אותה בית כריא שהוא לשון עומק ושפלות שכן אמרו עוד כל ליצנותא אסירא חוץ מליצנותא דע"ז דשריא ותו 'וכן שם ספר שלהם שבו נשבעין היה שמו בלשון פרס אנגלי שהוא לשון גל וגובה וכן כשם מרקולים היה שמו קילוס אצל עובדיו הוא לשון שבה וכבוד והחליפוהו רבותינו ז"ל והחליפוהו בשם מרקולים ומר לשון תמורה וקילוס בשם קוליס והוא לשון קלון וחירוף וכן החליפו קלוס בקוליס שהוא לשון לעג וקלון: that is, the (holy) Scripture teaches you that a person is obligated to feel disgust and abhorrence toward an idol; and when a temple of an idol is called beth galja (or bes galjo), that is, a high house, one calls it beth carja (or bes carjo), that is, a low house. Our rabbis likewise say that all mockery is forbidden, except for the mockery of an idol, which is permitted, etc. The same applies to their (namely the Christians') book (the Gospel, or New Testament) by which they swear, which was called Angeli in the Persian language (in the Arabic language it is called انجيل Ingil), which signifies a height. The same holds true for the name Marcolis (of the idol Mercury), who was called Killus by those who served him, which word signifies praise and honor; but our rabbis altered it to Marcolis, and the little word Mar signifies an alteration. In the same way they transformed Killus (which means praise) into Kolis, which signifies mockery and insult. This is also read in the Talmudic tractate Bava mezia (or Bovo mezio), fol. 25, col. 2, in the Tosephoth, concerning the word Marcolis. Likewise, in the book Jore dea, fol. 118, numero 147, at the end, it is commanded that one should give an idol a mocking name. Since they regard Christ as an idol, as will be demonstrated below in connection with the fifth, sixth, and seventh mocking names they give Him, it is no wonder that they have altered His holy name in such a manner, and instead of Jeschua, by dropping the last letter, call Him Jeschu in order to mock Him, because He, according to their claim, was not able to save Himself.

Indeed, their wickedness and their hatred toward the most precious name JESUS is so great that in their Selichoth (or Selichos, which are prayers they customarily recite on their feast days), printed at Prague in folio anno 347, that is, in the year of Christ 1587, fol. 12, col. 1, in a prayer for the second New Year's Day, they call Him שם טומאה schem túmah, that is, an unclean name. The prayer reads from the beginning as follows: אלך אקרא, בל יעשקוני: אני יום אירא: דים עזבי יקרה, גמול להשיב שב לבקרה, דין רשע תעול סלה: יקרא, ההושבים להשכיה שם קדש הנכבד, ולהרגיל שם טומאה נקלה ונעבד זה דרכם טובים עז ואז that is, I call to You in the time when I am afraid, so that the arrogant ones (that is, the Christians, who are called arrogant, as can be seen below in the sixteenth chapter of this first part, at the twenty-fifth name they give to Christians) who have forsaken Your precious (law) may not oppress me. Sit in judgment and visit them, so that they may be repaid. Let the wicked and unrighteous have their measure full, those who intend to cause Your glorious name to be forgotten and the unclean name of the Despised and Worshipped One (by which JESUS is meant, whom we Christians worship) to be brought into common use. That is their custom, that they bring the best among our people to their deaths. However, in the Selichoth (or Selichos) printed at Frankfurt in the year 425, that is, in the year of Christ 1665, in place of the word tumab stands the word אליל Elil, which means an idol, in the following manner: ולהרגיל שם אליל נקלה ונעבד, that is, And the name of the despised and worshipped idol be brought into common use. Christ is also called Elil by the Jews, as can be seen below at the fifteenth mocking name they give Him.

The fourth reason why Christ is called Jeschu or Jischu is that it is written in Exod 23:13: "You shall not mention the names of other gods." Therefore, in the Talmudic tractate Sanbedrin fol. 114, col. 2, numero 122, in the Piske Tosephoth (or Tósephos), one reads: אסור להזכיר שם עבודה זרה, that is, it is forbidden to mention the name of an idol. This is also to be found in the book Col bo, fol. 108, col. 3, numero 97. Since they regard Jesus, as already noted, as a false god, they likewise refuse to pronounce His name correctly.

The fifth reason is so that they may curse this holy name, in which, as can be seen in Phil 2:10, all knees in heaven and on earth and under the earth shall bow, with their blasphemous tongues. For they form from the three letters Jod, Schin, Vau, in the Kabbalistic manner already mentioned above, which is called Notaricon, three complete words, namely ימה שמו וזכרו jimmach schemo vesichrono, that is, "May His name and memory be blotted out." Hence in the diabolically inspired blasphemous little book Toledoth (or Toledos) Jeschu p. 6, one reads: ויקראו שמו יש"ו ראשי תיבות ימה שמו וזכרו, that is, "And they (those who were in the high council at Jerusalem) called him יש"ו Jeschu, which are the three initial letters of the three words ימה שמו וזכרו jimmach schemo vesichrono, that is, (as already noted) May His name and memory be blotted out." The very same thing is also found in the written copies of Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's book Jad chasaka, in the treatise on kings, in the eleventh chapter, which has been omitted from the printed editions out of fear of the Christians. And the highly learned Mr. Johannes Wülffer, duly appointed preacher and professor at Nuremberg, notes in his annotations on a little book called Jüdischer Theriack, p. 39, that in the Dillherrian copy held at Nuremberg, in the said passage, after the name ישו Jeschu, there expressly stands ימח שמו jimmach schemo vesichbro, that is, "May His name and His memory be blotted out."

From all of this it is thus clearly to be seen that the godless villain, Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his little book filled with lies, the aforementioned Jewish Theriac, which he wrote against the converted Samuel Friedrich Brenz's little book, the Jewish Stripped Snakeskin, stated in the first chapter, numero 2, against his better knowledge and conscience, that it means nothing improper when our Savior is called Jeschu by the Jews; and that, on the contrary, the converted Ferdinand Heß, in the third part, in the third chapter of his Jewish Scourge, sets forth the plain truth when he says: when they (the Jews) are among others, they may well call our Savior Jeschu, but they always add these two words alongside it: ימח שמו jimmach schemo, that is, may his name be blotted out. This blasphemy has also been exposed and truthfully revealed to Christendom by the converted Dieterich Schwabe in his Jewish Cloak, in the second part, in the fourteenth chapter, p. 141, and by Anthonius Margarita in his little book called The Whole Jewish Faith, p. 109, as well as by the baptized Johann Adrian in his Epistle and Letter of Warning, p. 29. Johannes Buxtorfius likewise attests to this in his Abbreviaturis Hebraicis, pages 101 and 102, where he additionally reports that a Jew with whom he once spoke on this matter told him that the said three letters signify not only, as mentioned, jimmach schemo vesichrono, but also יש"ו שקר ותועבה Jeschu Scheker vetoeba, that is, Jesus is a false god and an abomination. This is not to be wondered at, since they regard Him as a false god, and the word Scheker, as well as Toëfa, sometimes denotes an idol. The word Scheker is indeed taken in this sense in Rabbi Jacob Phidanki's commentary on Aburbanel's commentary, or exposition, on the Second Book of Kings, fol. 66, col. 2, where he writes as follows: עבודה זרה הוא שקר כמ"ש ויאמרו אך שקר נחלו אבותינו, that is, an idol is called Scheker, as Scripture (Jer 16:19) states: and they shall say, our fathers have had (Scheker, that is) false gods. The word Toëfa, however, which properly means an abomination and a detestable thing (Deut 32:16, Isa 44:19, Ezek 11:21, and in other places besides), denotes a false god before whom one ought to feel abhorrence; hence in the little book Othioth (or Otios) of Rabbi Akkiva, fol. 16, col. 3, it is read: אין תועבה אלא עבודה זרה שנ' לא תביא תועבה אל ביתך, that is, the word Toëfa means nothing other than an idol, as it is said (Deut 7:26): you shall bring no Toëfa (that is, no abomination or idol) into your house.

To return to the previous words, however, "jimmach schemó veschichronó": the Jews do not readily say "Jéschu," but for the most part, as I myself have frequently heard, indeed among themselves, whenever they make mention of Christ, they always customarily say י"ש, so that the "ji" in the word "jimmach" may thereby be clearly indicated, which the aforementioned Buxtorf has also noted in the passage cited above. Therefore, in the Sèphér amunáh (or amunoh), p. 24, numero 14, the following is read: חכמינו קוראין אותו בלשון קצר חד בזיון וקצף ר"ל ישו כדי למחק זכרונו that is: Our sages call him briefly (namely, without the letter Ajin) in a contemptuous and wrathful manner "Jischu," so that they may blaspheme and curse him.

Now, if someone were to ask whether such cursing is permitted to them, I give the answer that it is certainly not merely allowed to them, but indeed commanded; as is read in the book Médrasch Schmuël, fol. 50, col. 1, and in the Jalkut Schimóni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 24, col. 2, numero 82, as well as in Bereschith rabba, fol. 44, col. 1, at the beginning of the forty-ninth Parashah: כל המזכיר רשע ואינו מקללו עובר בעשה שנ' ושם רשעים ירקב that is, whoever makes mention of a wicked man and does not curse him transgresses an affirmative commandment, as it is said (Prov 10:7): The name of the wicked shall rot. On the other hand, it is also read there: כל מי שהוא מזכיר צדיק ואינו מברכו עובר בעשה דכתיב זכר צדיק לברכה that is, whoever makes mention of a righteous man and does not bless him transgresses an affirmative commandment, as it is written (Prov 10:7): The memory of the righteous is a blessing. Now, since they blasphemously regard Jesus as a wicked man, as will be demonstrated in the following third chapter, even though He was able to say openly to the Jews (John 8:46): Which of you can convict me of sin? And He never committed any sin, as is read in 1 Pet 2:22, and as is also said in Isa 53:9 concerning the Messiah (who is Jesus, as will be thoroughly established with firm arguments below in the fifth chapter) that He did no wrong to anyone, nor was there any deceit in His mouth: they nevertheless hold that they do God an acceptable and pleasing work when they obey their Talmud in this matter and curse Christ in such a godless manner.

Since the Jewish cursing is mentioned here, I do not consider it unnecessary to indicate what formulas the Jews have for cursing those whom they hate. It should be known that there are five of them. The first consists of the words already mentioned above, from Prov 10:7: "The name of the wicked shall rot," and the use of this formula against the wicked is commanded in the Talmudic tractate Taanith fol. 28, col. 1. In this manner, some are cursed in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Proverbs of Solomon, fol. 136, col. 3, numero 946, and it follows thereupon: מאי ושם רשעים ירקב אמר רבי אלעזר רקבונת תעלה בעצמותם, that is: What do the words "the name of the wicked shall rot" mean? Rabbi Eliezer says (they mean as much as): may rottenness come into their bones. And in the aforementioned Dillherrian copy of the book Jad chasaka or chasoko (in the tenth chapter of the tractate on idolatry), Christ together with His disciples and others (as is indicated in Mr. Wülffer's annotations on the Jewish Theriaca, mentioned in the preceding section, p. 205) is also cursed in this manner, where it is written: מצוה להרגו והמיניים והאפיקורוסין הנתונים לישראל מצוה להורדן עד לבאר שחת מפני שהן מצרין לישראל ומסירין את העם מאחרי ה' כיהושע הנצרי ותלמידיו וצדוק ובייתוס ותלמידיו ותחק שחקי תמיא ושם רשעים ירקב, that is: It is commanded to him (the Jew) to kill with his own hand the traitors of Israel, as well as the heretics and Epicureans, and to cast them into the pit of destruction, because they afflict the Israelites and turn the people away from GOD, as Jesus the Nazarene and his disciples, and also Zadoc and Bajethus together with their disciples have done, whose wicked names must rot. Likewise, it is also read in the Sepher juchasin fol. 151, col. 2: יהודה בן טבאי קטל: 2. לההוא רע שעזר שמו ושם רשעים ירקב ותלמידים של רב יהודאי וקבלו עליו זול קבלות, that is: Behold, the wicked Anan and his son Saul, whose wicked name shall rot, were disciples of Rabbi Jehudai Zakkai, and they fought against him and his Kabbala (that is, his teaching, which he had learned from his teachers) and set themselves against it.

The second curse formula is contained in the aforementioned words jimmach schemo, which they frequently use against Christians, as Ferdinand Heß reports in his Juden-Geissel, in the first part, in the fourth chapter. Likewise, in the book of the most learned Doctor Wagenseil, entitled Tela ignea Satanæ, in Rabbi Nachman's disputation which he held with Brother Paul, it can be seen at p. 25 that Rabbi Nachman writes as follows: אז פתח בידור פול ימה שמו את פיהו, that is: "Then Brother Paul, whose name be blotted out, opened his mouth." And at p. 25 of the same work it again reads: פול ימה שמו ענה, that is: "Paul, whose name be blotted out, answered." This is likewise found there at p. 24, 33, and 39. And in the book Nischmath chajim, at fol. 98, col. 2, in the 27th chapter of the second part, it is said of a wicked woman: שמה זכרה מן העולם, that is: "Her name and memory are blotted out from the world."

The third curse formula is called, when speaking of only one person, תיפח רוחו tippach rucho, that is, "His spirit must burst or shatter"; but when two or more are spoken of, תיפח רוחם tippach ruchan, that is, "Their spirit must burst." In the Sepher juchasin, fol. 158, col. 1, where the author speaks with praise of King Herod, this curse is used against Emperor Titus Vespasian, where the words read as follows: והוא היה גם כן גבור חיל והצליח במלכותו ונלחם בכל אויביו ומצאו ישראל מנוחה בימיו הוא חדש בנין בית המקדש לכבוד ולתפארת ומלכו בניו ובני בניו

עד שחרב הבית על ידי טיטוס הרשע תיפח רוחו תשמתו ביהנם that is: He (Herod) was also a valiant hero and was fortunate in his reign; he waged war against all his enemies, and Israel found rest in his days. He also renewed the building of the Temple to honor and glory, and his sons and grandsons reigned after him for so long until the Temple was laid waste by the godless Titus, whose spirit may burst, and whose soul may be in hell. Concerning those who inquire into the time of the Messiah, in which he is supposed to come, it is also written in the book Ir gibborim, fol. 28, col. 1, numero 54: אסור לחקור ולדרוש אחר ביאת הגואל 54: Ir gibborim, fol. 28, col. 1, numero 54: אסור לחקור ולדרוש אחר ביאת הגואל, that is: It is forbidden to inquire and search after the coming of the Redeemer, as our rabbis, of blessed memory, have said: "The spirit of those who calculate the end must burst." Likewise, in the aforementioned book called Tela ignea Satanae, in the old Nizzachon, p. 46, concerning the words of Num 17:23, or according to others v. 8, "And behold, the staff of Aaron had blossomed before the house of Levi," it is written: אומרים המינים שזה רמז על חריא ז"ל מריה שהייתה בתולה כשילדה את ישו ח"מ כי טח אומרים המינים שזה רמז על חריא ז"ל מריה שהייתה בתולה כשילדה את ישו ח"מ כי טח, that is: the heretics (namely the Christians) say that the words carry a meaning referring to Charja, by which I mean Maria, that she was a virgin when she gave birth to Jesus. Her face must burst, for their eyes are plastered shut so that they cannot see. As for the shameful word Charja, it means, with all due respect, filth or dung, and the holy Virgin Mary is frequently called this by the Jews in a godless manner, through a transposition of the word Maria, as will be shown in greater detail below in this chapter, at the twenty-fifth mocking name they give to Christ.

The fourth curse formula reads נשמתו לגיהנם Nischmatbo (or nischmáto) legebinnom, or begebinnom, that is: his soul must be in hell. This can be seen in the preceding third curse formula, in what was reported from the Sepher juchasin concerning the Emperor Titus, where the words ונשמתו בגיהנם, that is, his soul must be in hell, are found. Likewise, in the aforementioned Sepher juchasin, fol. 131. col. 2., it is written of one by the name of Ben Altiras: ומת בן ומת בן, that is, and Ben Altiras died into hell. From this it is evident that Friedrich Samuel Brenz, in his Jüdischer abgestreiffter Schlangen-Balg [Jewish Stripped Snakeskin], p. 17, in the fourth chapter; and Ferdinand Heß, in his Juden-Geissel [Jews' Scourge], in the first part, in the fourth chapter; as well as Dietrich Schwabe, in his Jüdischer Deck-Mantel [Jewish Cloak], in the first part, in the seventh chapter, have written the solid truth when they report that, whenever a Christian dies, the Jews are accustomed to say nischmóto begebinnom, that is, his soul must be in hell.

The fifth curse formula consists of the words שחק טמיא Schechik timja, or שחק שחק Schechik azamoth (or azómos), by which is meant one whose bones are ground to dust; and the Jews intend thereby to convey that the bones of the one upon whom they curse in such a manner shall be ground to dust, lost, and decayed in hell for eternity, and that he shall never rise again from the dead, but must remain accursed. With the words Schechik timmája, the Emperor Adrianus is mocked in the Rabbobth (or Rabbos) in Bereschith (or Beréschisch rabba), in the 78th Parascha, fol. 70. col. 3., where it is written: אדיינוס שחיק טמיא שאל את ר' יהושע בן חנינא אמר ליה אתם אומרים אין גוף של מעלה למטה אלא נבל' יום דין וק' מהיכן הוא מציץ מציא כח של מלאכים הוי"ש ולו' אסירין שהיו לפניו והולכין וק' : that is, Adrianus, whose bones must be ground to dust, asked Rabbi Jeboschua, the son of Channina, and said to him: you say that up above (in heaven) no company (of angels) praises (God) twice, but rather that the holy and blessed God creates each day a company of new angels who sing before Him, and thereafter they pass away again, etc. The like is also to be found in the book Pesikta rabbetha fol. 36. col. 1. And likewise these words are also used in the book Emek hammélech fol. 139. col. 3. against a Roman Emperor, and in the Jerusalem Talmud, in the Tractate Megilla, at the end of the third chapter, against King Nebuchadnezzar. With the words Schechik azamóth (or azómos), however, the Emperor Adrianus is also cursed in Bereschith rábba fol. 70. col. 3. in the seventy-eighth Parascha, as well as in Echa rábbathi (or rábbati) fol. 306. col. 2., and King Nebuchadnezzar in the Médrasch megilla. In place of these words, however, in the Sépher júchasin, fol. 131. col. 2., as well as in the little book Kabbaláh (or Kabbólos) Haráavad fol. 78. col. 1., against a Jew by the name of Abulphárag, who had been placed under the ban as a heretic, the words יחוקקו בגהינם jischtéachaku azmotháv (or azmósav) begebinnom are read, which mean: His bones must be ground to dust in hell. And such words are also mentioned in the book Nischmáth chájim, fol. 89. col. 2., in the 27th chapter of the second Maamar, with reference to another person. That the bones of the wicked shall be ground to dust in hell is treated in the book Nischmáth chájim fol. 32. col. 2., in the 12th chapter of the first Maamar, upon the words of Ezek 32:27: Shall they not also lie with the heroes who fell from among the uncircumcised? etc. Whose iniquity is upon their bones, where it is read as follows: ראה איך יחזור מיהתם אומר שעון חטאתם ועונם תהיה על עצמותם שישחקו בגיהנם : that is, See how he (namely the prophet) says that after the death of those (uncircumcised ones) their sin also, and their punishment, shall come upon their bones, in that they shall be ground to dust in hell.

On the other hand, when they wish someone well, they say, after mentioning that person's name, זכרונו לברכה Sichróno lifrachá (or lifrócho), that is, "May his memory be in blessing," or "be blessed"; or they say זכור לטוב Sachúr letóf, that is, "He is remembered for good"; or they say זכרונו לחיי העולם הבא Sichróno lecháje haólam hábba, that is, "May his memory be unto the life of the world to come" (that is, unto eternal life); or they say זכר צדיק לברכה Sécher Zaddik lifrachá (or lifrócho), that is, "May the memory of the righteous be in blessing" (that is, be blessed); or they say עליו השלום aláf haschólom, that is, "Upon whom may peace rest"; or they also say נוחו עדן Nuchó Eden, that is, "May his rest be Paradise"; or they also say נשמתו עדן Nischmathó (or Nischmáthó) Eden, that is, "May his soul be in Paradise"; or נחתו תהא בגן עדן Menuchathó (or Menuchóso) tihjê begán Eden, that is, "May his rest be in Paradise"; or also נפשו תהיה בגן עדן Nafschó tihjê begán Eden, that is, "May his soul be in Paradise," as can be seen here and there throughout their books.

Second, Christ is mockingly called אלהי הערלים Elobé haarélim, that is, "the God of the uncircumcised," and by the uncircumcised, Christians are understood, as will be demonstrated below in the 16th chapter of this first part. This expression is found in Rabbi Aben Esra's commentary on the words of the prophet Daniel, Dan 11:14, "And in those times many shall stand up against the king of the south; also the robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves," where he writes as follows: אלהי הערלים שהוא האדם, that is, "These (apostates or transgressors) lived in the time of that man who is the God of the uncircumcised." By the transgressors, however, he understands the holy Apostles, as will be demonstrated in the 7th chapter of this first part.

Third, He is called אלהי אדום Elobé Edom, that is, the God of Edom, or the Edomite God, as can be seen in Abarbanel's Commentario, or commentary on Isa 34:9, fol. 53, col. 2, where he makes mention of the downfall of the city of Rome (which he understands by Bozra, the former capital city of Edom) and writes as follows: במקום שבעיר היא רומי היתה קדושת אלהי אדום ועצביהם תהיה עתה שדים ורוחות, that is: Instead of Bozra, that is, Rome, having been the sanctuary of the Edomite God and of their idols, it will now become a place of devils and unclean spirits. The very same thing is also found in the book Maschmia jeschuah, fol. 18, col. 1. By Edom, however, Christendom is understood, as can be read at length below in the 18th chapter of this First Part.

Fourth, they call Him אלהי נכר Elobé néchar, that is, a foreign god. This is found in the little book Afkáth (or Afkas) róchel, at the end of the third part, where it is attempted to be proven, in a foolish manner through a Kabbalistic method called Gemátria, that Christ is a foreign god, and it is written: אלהי נכר בגימטריא ישו Elobé néchar begemátria Jéschu, that is: The words Elobé néchar amount by Gemátria to as much as Jéschu, namely 316; for Elobé néchar yields 316, and Jéschu the same. So also writes Abarbanel in his book Majene Jeschuáh, fol. 75, col. 4, as follows: אמרו בעלי גמטריאות שרמו באמרו אלהי נכר הארץ אמונת ישו והארץ מרים הנזכרת אמר, that is: Those who understand the Gematria say that through the words (Deut 31:16) אלהי נכר הארץ Elohé néchar baárez, that is, foreign gods of the earth, the faith in Jesus and Mary is signified, inasmuch as אלהי נכר Elohé néchar amounts to as much as Jéschu (namely 316), and הארץ baárez amounts to as much as Mirjam (namely 296) in number, and the words of those persons are true.

It is indeed undeniable that false gods in Holy Scripture are called Elohé néchar, that is, foreign gods, as can be seen in Gen 35:2, Josh 24:20, Jer 5:19, and many other places; however, Jesus is not a foreign but a true God, as will be demonstrated in what follows. As for the proof by means of Gematria, foolish Jews do indeed frequently bring forward something in this manner, but it is entirely absurd and laughable, which shall here be confirmed with only a few examples. In the book Jalkut chadasch, fol. 140, col. 2, 3, num. 313, under the title Mófche, it is written from the book Megalle amukóth (or amúkos), fol. 14, col. 4: משה היה מוכן מבריאת העולם לקבלה התורה הוא שאמר הכתוב וירא אלהים: that is, Moses was ordained from the creation of the world to receive the Law, and that is what the Scripture (Gen 1:4) says: And God saw, את האור eth (or és) baór, that is, the light; for eth baór amounts by Gematria to the same number as משה רבינו mósche rabbénu, that is, Moses our teacher (namely 613), which number contains the 613 commandments; and the word Mosche amounts to the same, when it is written in full as Mem, Schin, He. In the aforementioned Jalkut chadasch there further stands, fol. 118, col. 2, numero 47, under the title Schabbáth (or Schábbas) verasché chodafchún, as follows: בערב שבת בכניסת כלה אז: היה משתה לנישואי לאה שנדווג עמה יעקב: ליל שבת סימן לדבר מ"ש"ה בגימטריא שבת גדול that is, on the evening of the Sabbath, when the bride (that is, the Sabbath, which is called a bride by the Jews) drew near, the wedding feast of Leah was held, for Jacob was wed to her on the Sabbath evening; this is signified by the word משתה mischteh (which means a meal), for it amounts by Gematria to the same as שבת גדול Schabbáth gadól (or Schábbas gôdel), that is, the great Sabbath (namely 745) in number. Such foolish proofs are also found in the Talmud, in whose tractate Jóma, fol. 76, col. 1, it is written as follows: כסא דודו לע"מא דא"ת: that is, David's cup in the world to come holds two hundred and twenty-one measures, as it is said (Ps 23:5): Cost, my cup revájub is full; for the word רייה revájub amounts by Gematria to that much (namely 221). Are these not great weaknesses, that one should bring forward such foolish proofs, over which every person who has sound reason must justly laugh? Therefore Rabbi Aben Ezra also very well rejects them in his commentary on Dan. 11. v. 31. when he thus writes: כל החושבים המלות או האותיות בחשבון גימטריא הכל הבל ורעות רוח: that is, All those who calculate the words or letters by Gematria according to numbers do a vain thing and one that torments the mind.

But if the Jews will believe that this manner of proving something is valid, then it is easy to demonstrate to them thereby that JESUS Christ is the true promised Messiah, and not a stranger, but the eternal GOD; for in the book Zerór hammór it stands fol. 37. col. 2. in the Parascha Vajéze, thus written: מל"ח משיח עולה כמנין ש"נה ובו כלול ש"ילה שהוא עולה ה"שם that is, The word Maschiach (that is, Messias) makes in number 358, and therein is comprehended the word שילה Schiloh (of which mention is made in Gen. 49:10, whereby the Messiah is understood), which yields as much in number as השם Haschém (which among the Rabbins also signifies GOD, namely 345). In such wise it could also be maintained that by the aforesaid word Schiloh in Gen. 49:10 JESUS is to be understood, because the words עד כי יבא שילה ad ki javo Schiloh, that is, until Schiloh or the Hero comes, make just as much in number as ישוע בן דוד Jeschúa ben David, that is, JESUS the Son of David, namely 462. And that the words of Isa. 9:6, פלא יועץ אל גבור, Pele, joëz, El gibbor, that is, Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty GOD, signify JESUS Christ, because they have the same number with the words ישוע בן אלהים Jeschúa ben Elohim, that is, JESUS the Son of GOD, which consists in 529. As also, that the words of Ps. 72:17, ינון שמו Jinnon Schemó, that is, His name shall be continued from child to child, aim at Christ, because their number, namely 462, agrees with the number of the above-mentioned words ישוע בן דוד Jeschúa ben David, that is, JESUS the Son of David; like examples more could be set down here against the Jews. But as little as they accept these as binding and irrefutable, just as little are their proofs, which they bring forth in such manner against the Christian Religion, to be regarded.

Fifth, they call Christ טעות Taüth (or Tóüs), that is, an idol. This word comes from טעה taah, which in the Hebrew language signifies to err, and besides in the Chaldean language, to commit whoredom, and to forget; and an idol, or false GOD, is therefore called Taüth (or Tóüs) because he who serves it errs, commits spiritual whoredom, and forgets the true GOD. Since they now hold Christ, notwithstanding that He is the Lord from Heaven, as is to be seen in 1 Cor 15:47, and has created heaven and earth, as is to be read in John 1:3 and Heb 1:2, for a false GOD, they also give Him this scornful name, as is to be seen in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary on Isa. 9:7 (which verse we interpret of our Savior and Redeemer), according to the testimony of the Bible printed at Venice anno 285, that is, according to our number, 1525, in folio, with some Rabbins' commentaries, where he thus writes: לחשובת המינים האומרים שם לטעיהם יש להשיבם מהו מעתה והלא לא בא אותו טעות עד לסוף שלש מאות

שנה: that is, But to the heretics who interpret these words of their Täuht or idol (that is, JESUS), one must answer: did not that same Täuht or idol first come at the end of 300 years? So is read in the little book Rosch amana (or amôno) fol. 15, col. 1, of the Christians: כל עוד שיאמינו בטעות ובאמונה הכוזבת הם: מינים וכופרים ואין להם חלק לעולם הבא that is, So long as they believe in the Täuht or idol, and persist in the false faith, they are heretics and deniers of GOD, and have no part in the world to come, that is, in eternal life.

Sixth, they call Him יראה Jirah (or Jiroh), which word properly signifies a fear, and in its divine sense, but means an idol which is improperly honored and feared. And thus it is used in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Psalms, fol. 127, col. 3, numero 879, where it is read: אומות העולם עושים יראתם של כסף ושל זהב that is, The nations of the world make their Jirah, that is, their idol, of gold and silver. It also stands in Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon's Sepher Mizvôth (or Mizvos) fol. 82, col. 4, thus: לא תשביעו הגוי ביראתו והוא אמרו יתעלה ושם אלהים: אחרים לא תזכירו that is, You shall not cause a heathen to swear by his Jirah, or his idol, and that is what the praised GOD (Exod 23:13) says: You shall not mention the names of other gods. In like manner the word Jirah is taken in the said Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon's book Jad chasaka (or chasôko) in the first part, in the treatise on idolatry, cap. 5, numero 10, and in the Talmud, in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 63, col. 2. But the blinded Jews call Christ thus because we, according to their erroneous opinion, worship Him in an idolatrous manner, and fear Him as a GOD. Therefore Rabbi Bechai writes in his book Cad hakkémach fol. 34, col. 2, 3, and in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 195, col. 1, in the Parascha Vaethechannán, on the words of Deut 6:4, "Hear O Israel, the LORD our GOD is one GOD," thus: אלו אמר שמע ישראל יי' אחד היה פתחון פה לאומות העולם לומר שעל יראתם אומר וכו' 'כתיב כן שחזה למטה: that is, If he (namely Moses) had said, "Hear O Israel, the LORD is one," then the nations of the world (the Christians) would have had occasion to say that Scripture speaks of their Jirah, that is, their idol, in such terms, which in their view is called Jehôva or the Lord. So also in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, p. 151, numero 276, on the words of Ps 34:9, "O taste and see how gracious the Lord is," the following is written: כאן דברו הנוצרים דברים שאי אפשר לשמוע ופרשו טעמו לשון אכילה ואומרים שאוכלים יראתם ואין הדעת סובלתן, that is: Here the Christians speak things which it is not possible to hear, and they interpret the word טעמו taamu (taste) as "eat," and say that they eat their Jirah, that is, their idol, which reason cannot bear or endure. And in the old Nizzáchon, p. 135, on the words of Isa 45:20, "they that carry their wooden idol," the following is read: זהו שתי וערב ופסל מצויר עליו שהם נושאים את העץ ומתפללים אל אלוה אשר שתי וערב זה עשוי בדמותו והוא לא יושיע ואין לך לומר שבאומה אחרת שנושאת עץ פסלם ומתפללים לעץ עצמו הכתוב מדבר דאם כן הנושאים עץ פסלם

ומתפללים לו היה לו לומר אלא בודאי על אומת זו של אמתת ישו הכתוב מדבר לפי שהם נושאים העץ והצלם להראות דמות יראתם, that is: This signifies the warp and weft (that is, the cross, which the Jews call by this name because the warp and weft in a piece of cloth are made crosswise by the weaver), together with the image formed upon it. They (the Christians) carry the wood and worship that God in whose likeness this cross is made, who nevertheless cannot redeem. You must not say either that Scripture speaks of another people which carries its wooden image and worships the wood itself; for if that were the case, it would not have said "they that carry their wooden idol" and worship it (but would have said in the plural "their wooden idols," etc.). It is therefore entirely certain that Scripture speaks of that people which believes in Jesus, since they carry the wood and the cross in order to display the image of their Jirah, that is, of their idol. In the aforementioned old Nizzáchon, p. 237 and 238, on the words of Exod 23:2, "one must follow the majority," the following is written: וכן מנהג העולם ללכת אחר הרוב והנה אחרי אמתת ישו לא טעו כי אם י"א אומות וכולם אינם כנגד אומה אחת ישמעאלים ועיין ס' אומות עם הישמעאלים כולם מעידים שהכל יראתם וגם אנחנו בני ישראל מעידים, that is: And thus it is the custom of the world to follow the majority; but see, in the faith of Jesus only eleven peoples of the world have erred, and all of them together do not amount to as much as the single Ishmaelite people (in number and multitude). There are therefore still 60 peoples together with the Ishmaelites, all of whom testify that their Jirah, that is, their idol, is sheer vanity. Just as we Israelites also bear witness that the hanged one (Christ) was a human being, born of father and mother.

Seventh, they call Him עבודה זרה Avoda sara (or Avódo sóro), which properly denotes a foreign service by which a false god is worshipped, and in an improper sense also signifies an idol, in which latter meaning it is named in the Sepher mizvoth (or mizvos) of Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon, fol. 83. col. 1., where it is written thus: כ"ב שהזהירנו שלא ליהנות בתכשיטין שקישטו בהן לעבודה זרה והוא מצוה כ"ב שהזהירנו שלא ליהנות בתכשיטין שקישטו בהן לעבודה זרה והוא מצוה כ"ב: that is, The twenty-second commandment is that He (namely God) has warned us that we shall not make use of the ornament of an Avoda sara, that is, of an idol, for our own benefit; and that is what the blessed God says (Deut 7:25): You shall not covet the silver or gold that is on it. That they call Christ Avoda sara, however, is clearly to be seen in the book called Tela ignea Satanae, in the old Nizzachon, p. 146., on the words of Zach 14:9, "At that time the Lord shall be one, and His name one," where the following is read: גם עכשיו בודאי הוא אחד אבל שמו איננו אחד שאין הכל קורין אותו יהו"א אבל המינים הארורים קורין אותו ישו וכן כל אומה ואומה קורין את האלוהות בשם עבודה זרה שלהם: that is, He is also certainly one at this present time, but His name is not one, for He is not called Jehova by all, since the accursed heretics (meaning the Christians) call Him Jeschu or Jesus; and thus every people calls the Deity by the name of its Avoda sara, or its idol. So also writes Rabbi Salomon Jarchi, in his commentary on Exod 23:14: לא תעשה שותפת עם: כותי וישבע לך בעבודה זרה שלו that is, You shall not enter into partnership with any Cutber (that is, Christian, as will be demonstrated below in the 16th chapter) such that he swears to you by his Avoda sara, or his idol (namely Jesus). And in the book Emek hammelech, it is recorded at fol. 20. col. 4. in the 32nd chapter, under the title Schaar olam battobu: זרה: עשמו עבודה זרה: that is, That same man (namely Jesus, who is mentioned there in the preceding passage) has made himself into an Avoda sara, or an idol. Furthermore, in the said book Emek hammelech, fol. 135. col. 4. in the 19th chapter, under the title Schaar rescha diser anpin, the following is written concerning the soul of Christ: היא ממש עבודה זרה אל אחר לכן עשה עצמו עבודה זרה: that is, That same soul is properly the Avoda sara, or the idol, the other (or foreign) God; therefore He made Himself into an Avoda sara, or an idol. In precisely the same way Christ is also named in the Talmud, where in the tractate Avoda Avóda sára, fol. 27. col. 2. the following is read: לא ישא ויתן אדם עם המינים ואין מתרפאין מהן מתרפאין: מהן אפילו לחיי שעה מעשה בבן דמא בן אחותו של ר' ישמעאל שהכישו נחש ובא יעקב איש כפרי: that is, A person shall have nothing to do with heretics and shall not let himself be healed by them, not even insofar as this temporal life is concerned. Thus it came to pass that when the son of Dama, the nephew of Rabbi Ismael, was bitten by a serpent, and Jacob, who was from the village or hamlet of Sechánja, had come to heal him, Rabbi Ismael would not permit it. In the Tosephóth (or Tósephos), however, the following is written on this matter: לא אמרו אלא ברפואה שמוכיר בה שם עבודה זרה: that is, This prohibition (namely, of being healed by heretics) applies only to a healing in which mention is made of an Avóda sára, or an idol; and it follows from this that the Apostle Jacob, the nephew of Rabbi Ismael, had intended to heal in the name of his teacher Jesus, which is why Rabbi Ismael had not been willing to permit it, because it was to have been performed through the invocation of the name of Jesus. On this matter one also reads in the Sépher batterúma of Rabbi Baruch, numero 153, the following: לא ישא ויתן. אדם עם המינים ואין מהרפאין מהן ומעשה בבן דמא בן אחותו של רבי ישמעאל שהכישו נחש ובא יעקב איש כפרי: סכניא לרפאותו ולא הניחו ר' ישמעאל וטעמא משום שרצה לומר לחש של ע"ז וכן איתא בירושלמי פרק שמונה שרצים מעשה אלעזר בן דמא בן אחותו של ר' ישמעאל שהכישו נחש: that is, A person shall have no fellowship with heretics and shall not let himself be healed by them. Such a story we have in the case of the son of Dama, the nephew of Rabbi Ismael, who had been bitten by a serpent, and when Jacob, who was from the hamlet of Sechánja, had come to heal him, Rabbi Ismael did not permit it for the reason that he had intended to do so through the invocation of an Avóda sára, or an idol. So also it stands in the Jerusalem Talmud, in the fourteenth chapter of the tractate Schabbáth (which begins Schemonáh scherazim): It came to pass with Elieser, the son of Dama, the nephew of Rabbi Ismael, that a serpent bit him, and Jacob, who was from the hamlet of Sechánja, came to heal him in the name of Jesus, the son of Pandíra, etc.

Eighth, they call Him מוֹלֵךְ Mólech, which was the name of the Ammonite idol, as can be seen in 1 Kgs 11:7. This is found in Rabbi Jechiel's disputation with Nicolaus, page 5, where Rabbi Jechiel makes mention of an assembly that took place in Paris on account of the Jews, and writes as follows: ביום ב' פרשת בלק בבית המלך נתקבצו כולם המהתהללים במוֹלֵךְ, that is: On the second day (of the week) in which the Parascha (or portion of the Law) Balak (Num 22:2) was read, there assembled in the palace of the King all those who glory in the Molech (meaning Christ). He is likewise called by this name in the prayer book known as Selichoth (or Selichos), in the old Prague printing, fol. 56, col. 2, under the title Lejóm resischébén rosch haschána vejóm hakippur, in a prayer that begins אֵיךְ אוֹכֵל אֵיךְ Ech úchal lavó, and which is prayed on the fourth day between New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement, where the words read as follows: אֵיךְ אוֹכֵל לְבוֹא עֵדִין וְעוֹבְדֵי זֹלָתְךָ ; וְהִמָּה בִקְשׁוּ לְהַפְרִידִי מִיִּיחּוּדְךָ , וְאֲנִי לֹא עֲזַבְתִּי פְקוּדֶיךָ ; אֵיךְ גְּלוּתִי וְאֵלֶּף בְּכֹל לֹא יַעֲלוּנִי לְעַבְדְּךָ , וְהִמָּה בִקְשׁוּ לְהַפְרִידִי מִיִּיחּוּדְךָ , וְאֲנִי לֹא עֲזַבְתִּי ; אֵיךְ גְּלוּתִי וְאֵלֶּךְ בְּכֹל הָאָרֶץ וּמִלְכּוֹ עָלַי מִמְּלִיכִים לְמוֹלֵךְ , פְּקוּדֶיךָ , that is: How can I come before You, seeing that those who serve another rather than You do not permit me to serve You, but seek to separate me from Your unity (that is, they wish to persuade me that You alone are not God, and to compel me to adopt their faith), yet I have not forsaken Your commandments. How wretched am I, driven out and wandering through all lands, and those who hold the Molech as their king rule over me.

Ninth, they call Him בַּעַל Báal, בֵּל Bel, and בַּעַל פְּעוֹר Báal Peor, which are idolatrous names, as can be seen in Judg 2:13, Isa 46:1, Jer 50:2, and Num 25:3, 5. The name Báal is given to Him in the aforementioned Selichóth (or Selichos) printed at Prague, fol. 35, col. 2, under the title לְעֶרֶב רֹאשׁ הַשָּׁנָה Leéref rosch haschána, in the prayer which begins אֵת הַקּוֹל קוֹל יַעֲקֹב Eth (or Es) bakkól kol Jaacóf, where great lamentation is made over the terrible persecutions that have befallen them at the hands of Christians, who partly put the Jews to death by the sword and partly hanged them; and thereafter follows: טוֹמְנִים פֶּחַ לְלִכּוֹד כֶּשֶׁךְ ; יוֹקֵשִׁים יִיחּוּדְךָ לְהַמִּיר בְּבַעַל לְהֵאֵשֶׁם , that is: They secretly lay a snare, that they might catch us as with a fowler's snare, so that we would exchange your unity (and You, who are the one God) and thereby be made to sin against Baal.

The name Bel is given to Him in the great prayer book called Machsor, under the title Schacharith schel rosch haschána jom échad, in the prayer that begins

ממלכה Addéreth mamlachá (or Addéres mamlócho) fol. 15. col. 1. in the Prague edition, in the first part, where they pray as follows: מה אדורת ממלכה על מה הושלכה ועוד לא מלכה לכל המלוכה ואהיו זולכה; שלא כהלכה עלה המולכה גברת ממלכת הושלכה ועוד לא מלכה לכל המלוכה ואהיו זולכה; עד הופיע מלוכה, that is: Why has the royal glory (of Israel) been cast away, so that it no longer reigns? To Bel the dominion has been given, and it (the royal glory) follows after him, which is not right. The mistress of the kingdom (that is, Christendom, as will be shown below in the 17th chapter of this first part, at the nineteenth name that the Jews give to it) holds dominion over them (namely, the Israelites), until the kingdom (of the Messiah) shall shine forth. In the Commentario, however, over the words המלוכה, that is, "To Bel the dominion has been given," it states: שמוסרים עלינו עובדי עבודה זרה הנקראת בל, that is: For those who serve the idol called Bel rule over us. Since the Jews now stand under the power of the Christians, and the Christians serve and venerate Christ, it follows clearly that by this name Bel is meant. They also pray further in the aforementioned Machsor fol. 31. col. 2. of the first part, in a prayer that begins אנסיכה מלכי Ansicha málki, under the title Músaph schel rosch haschána jom rischon: הבל המומלך על מה מלך וגו', that is: Why does Bel, to whom the royal dominion has been given, reign? And in the Commentario upon it, the following is taught: הבל המומלך כלומר מלכות הרשעה: שעובדה עבודה זרה שנקראת בל, that is: By Bel, to whom the dominion has been given, is to be understood Malchuth barescháa, that is, the godless kingdom (that is, Christendom, as will be shown below in the 17th chapter of this first part, at the ninth name that the Jews give to Christendom), which serves the idol that is called Bel.

What concerns the shameful name Báal Péor, it is used under this designation in Abarbanel's preface to the book Májene jeschúa, fol. 5, col. 1, where the following is written concerning Christians: ותחת היותם איביי פושעים ומורדים פכילי אלהיהם עובדים ולבעל פעור נצמידים המה מקטירים לבעל כורעים ומשתחווים: that is, Because they are enemies of God, they are transgressors (or sinners) and rebels; they serve the idols of their God, and cleave to Báal Péor; they burn incense to Baal, and bow down before the man who is clothed in linen.

Tenth, they call him הבל וריק Héfel varik, that is, a vanity and nullity, and this occurs every day twice in their synagogues or schools, in a prayer which begins Alénu (or Olénu) leschabbéach, and reads as follows: עלינו לשבח לאדון הכל לתת גדולה ליוצר בראשית שלא עשנו כגוי הארצות ולא שמנו כמשפחות האדמה שלא שם חלקנו כחלקם וגורלנו כגורלם וגו': that is, It is our duty to praise the Lord of all things, to glorify the Creator of the world, that He has not made us like the heathens of the earth, and has not placed (or made) us like the families of the earth; that He has not appointed our portion like their portion, nor our lot like their lot, etc. After this follow certain words against Christ and the Christians, which are found in the old prayer books, as can be seen in the Machsor printed at Prague in the year 373, that is, 1613 by our reckoning, Part I, fol. 31, col. 1; but in the new ones they have been omitted out of fear of the Christians, in whose place either an empty space is found, so that what was omitted may be written in, or a small circle stands there, to indicate that something has been left out. Those words, however, read as follows: שהם כורעים ומשתחוים להבל וריק ומתפללים אל אל לא יושיע That is, Who bow down and prostrate themselves before the Hefel varik, that is, before the vanity and nullity (or before the vain and null), and worship that God who cannot redeem. Or, as it reads in the aforementioned Prague Machsor: שהם משתחוים להבל וריק ומתפללים ללא יושיע That is, Who bow down before the vanity and nullity, and worship him who cannot save.

The word Hefel properly means a vanity; in its improper sense, however, it denotes an idol, which is a vain thing. In this latter sense it is used in 2 Kgs 17:15 as well as in Jer 2:5, in the words: וילכו אחרי ההבל, that is, "They walked after the Hefel," that is, after vanity; concerning which Rabbi Levi ben Gerson writes in his commentary: ההבל הוא עבודה זרה, that is, Hefel means as much as Avoda sara, that is, an idol. Likewise, the false gods are also called Hafalim, that is, vanities, in Deut 32:21, where it is said: כעסוני בהבליהם, that is, "They have provoked me to anger through their Hafalim or vanities" (namely, their idols). Now, since they regard Christ as a false god, they also give Him this name out of contempt. Hence, in the written Selichoth (or Selichos), in the copy held at Nuremberg, as Mr. Wülffer indicates in his aforementioned annotations on the Jewish Theriack, page 40, in a prayer for the second New Year's Day, which begins Jisraël ammecha techinna brechim, the following is read: טמאים, האומרים נחלתך לחבל להמיר ואחר הבלם להתנכל נצר נתעב לאלוה לקבל, that is, "The unclean ones (Christians) intend to destroy your inheritance, to alter your honor, and that we should defile ourselves with their Hefel or their vanity, and accept the abominable Branch (Jesus) as a God." As for the word Varik, they understand by it (through the already frequently mentioned Kabbalistic method of Gematria) the name ישו Jeschu, that is, Jesus, because these two words yield the same numerical value, namely 316.

That the Jews understand by Hefel varik our most precious Savior is attested not only by the highly learned Buxtorf in his Jews' School, in the tenth chapter, but is also unanimously confirmed by several converted Jews, namely Friedrich Samuel Brentzen in his Jewish Stripped Snakeskin, in the 5th chapter, and Dietrich Schwaben in the 14th chapter of his Jewish Cloak of Concealment, and Ferdinand Hessen in the 3rd chapter of the 3rd part of his Jews' Scourge, as well as Antonio Margarita in his complete Jewish Faith, p. 306; and it is further noted by Buxtorf, as well as Ferdinand Hessen, together with Antonio Margarita, in the aforementioned places, that when the Jews pronounce the said blasphemous words, they spit against Christ and His believers.

It might be objected against this, however, that Christ is not thereby intended, since Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his Jewish Theriack, in the 5th chapter, numero 4, denies this and accuses Friedrich Samuel Brentzen, who had written about this in his aforementioned work The Jewish Shed Snakeskin, of an outright lie; he also indicates therein that Joshua composed this prayer against the peoples in the land of Canaan, who had been given over to idolatry, and that it has nothing whatsoever to do with Christ and the Christians, of whom no one had even thought at that time, with the further addition that in the said prayer there immediately follows: ומושב יקרו ממעל, that is, "And the seat of Jokaro" (or Jekoro), that is, "of His glory, is above" (in Heaven), and that the word יקרו Jekaro would also have to mean ישו Jeschu, because it likewise, as does the latter, yields the number 316 by Gematria, whereby they would indeed be confessing that JESUS is in the highest Heaven, which no Jew does. Furthermore, the objection could also be raised that Rabbi Lipmann, in his Sepher Nizzachon, numero 348, p. 192, likewise does not concede that the words Hebel varik concern Christ; for when this was once put to him by a convert, he replied to him, among other things, as follows: ואשר אמרת ישו בגימטריא הבל וריק אמרתי לו הנוצרים לא קראו לאלהיהם ישו כי בלשונם נקרא ישוים ובלשוננו נקרא ישו"ע וגו', that is, "As for your saying that Jeschu yields, by Gematria, the same number as varik, I reply: the Christians do not call their GOD Jeschu, for in their language He is called JESUS, but in our language He is called ישוע Jeshua, etc." By this he thus intended to convey that JESUS cannot be understood by the word Jeschu, because ישוע Jeshua yields 386, whereas varik yields only 316.

To this I reply that Rabbi Salman Zevi was a desperate villain who, in his Jewish Theriack, sought to deny and distort even the most well-known facts; as is indeed the custom of the Jews, to excuse themselves with all manner of invented false pretexts when their godless conduct is held up before them. And they can rejoice greatly among themselves and exult when they are able to deceive one or more Christians into accepting their false and cunningly fabricated excuses as true. In this manner Rabbi Salman Zevi likewise writes falsehood here, against his better knowledge; for even though it is read in certain Jewish books that the prayer cited, Olenu leschabbéach, was composed by Joshua against the idolatrous peoples in the land of Canaan, this has nevertheless not yet been proven. But even granting that they could prove it, it would still be entirely certain that they directed it against Christ after His time, as can be seen as clear as the sun in Mr. Wülffer's annotations on the Jewish Theriack, pp. 311 and 312, where, from the aforementioned written Commentary on the Machsor and the Selichóth (or Selichos), found in the Nuremberg library, the following terrible words, inspired by the hellish dragon, appear over the words Hébel varik of the said prayer: כל וזהו י"ו בגימטריא יש"ו וזהו כל: That is, Varik yields by Gematria the same value as Jeschu (namely 316), and Hébel by Gematria likewise the same value as Sal (namely 37), which signifies the contemptible and impure JESUS. From these diabolical words it follows irrefutably that such blasphemy is directed against Christ. Now the godless person who composed that Commentary called Him contemptible and impure who is the most glorious and altogether pure Son of GOD, to whom such splendid honorific titles are given in the Old Testament: for He is called the shepherd of the LORD's sheep in Isa 40:11 and Ezek 34:23, the prince over the people of GOD in John 5:14-15 and likewise in Isa 55:4, and the sun of righteousness in Mal 4:2. How then should He be contemptible and impure? You godless blasphemer ought to have known that whoever despises Christ JESUS also despises the One who sent Him, as is seen in Luke 10:16; and that whoever does not honor the Son does not honor the Father either, as is read in John 5:23; and that whoever denies the Son does not have the Father either, as is taught in 1 John 2:23. Had you considered this rightly, you would have refrained from such abominable blasphemy, for which, however, you will have to render account at the Last Judgment before the strict and terrible judgment seat of GOD.

Regarding the word יקרו jekaró (or jekóro), which corresponds in numerical value to JESCHU, and from which Rabbi Salman Zevi seeks to prove that the prayer is not directed against Christ: it should be noted that this word is not found in many copies; rather, in place of the words יקרו ומושב umóschaf jekaró (or jekóro), the words וְכִסֵּא כְבוֹדוֹ vekisse kefódo, that is, "and the throne of His glory," appear instead, as can be seen in the aforementioned old Prague Machsor, fol. 6. col. 2. and fol. 56. col. 1. of the first part, and in the Machsor printed here in Frankfurt am Main in the year 436, that is, 1676, with the German translation in quarto, fol. 13. col. 1., as well as elsewhere, so that the correspondence of the numerical value is avoided. Indeed, there are Jews who do not want the word jekaró to remain in the prayer, as is noted in the aforementioned written Commentario on the Machsor, of which the words in Mr. Wülffers annotations on the Jewish Theriac, p. 311. read as follows: יש שנוהרים מלומר ומושב יקרו כי בגימטריא שי' וריק אלא אומרים ומושב כבודו, that is: there are people who take care not to say umóschaf jekaró (or jekóro), because jekóro amounts to the same numerical value as Varik, but instead say umóschaf kefódo, which agrees with the words umóschaf jekóro in meaning, but not in numerical value. This alteration is therefore made so that, on account of the matching numerical value of the word jekóro and varík, it should not be implied that Jesus is in heaven.

As for what Rabbi Lipmann gave as an answer to a converted Jew, it is entirely absurd to claim that Jesus cannot be understood by Varík because He is called not יהושע Jéshchu but ישוע Jeschúa; for it has been shown in detail above that Jesus is called by them not Jeschúa but only Jéschu out of sheer malice, so that Jéschu and Varík do indeed yield the same number. It is, however, to be observed that, just as Rabbi Lipmann in several other places (which are to be indicated in this book) did not bring the truth and his real opinion to light, but sought out partly absurd and partly sophistical evasions in order to instruct the Jews as to what they should answer the Christians when called to account by them, so he has done the same here as well: and therefore, after having put forward as much as was possible to him in order to cover up his untruth, he writes in the passage cited as follows: ותשובה זו שייכת לומר להם על כל הגנות: שנאמר בתלמוד על ישו יאמר להם שאין זה ישו (the Christians) concerning all those mocking things that are said of Jesus in the Talmud; and one should tell them that this person (Jeschu, of whom the Talmud makes mention) is not Jesus.

The remaining words, namely לא יושיע אל אל לא יושיע, that is, "and they pray to a god who cannot save," are found in Isa 45:20, and the Jews likewise understand by לא יושיע אל, El lo joshía, that is, the god who cannot rescue or save, our Lord Jesus; as can be seen in the old Nizzáchon, page 135, where the cited words of the prophet Isaiah are expounded, and where the impious author, Rabbi Mattátja, writes as follows: בוודאי על אומת זו של אמונת ישו הכתוב: מדבר לפי שהם נושאים העץ והצלם להראות דמות יראתם אבל אינם מתפללים לעץ ולצלם: עצמו אלא למי שנעשה זה העץ אחרי דמותו ובצלמו: והנה הנביא מעיד שהוא אל אשר לו יושיע: that is, "Certainly, Scripture speaks of the people who believe in Jesus, since they carry the wood and the cross to display the image of their Jirah, that is, of their idol. But they do not pray to the wood and cross themselves, but rather to the one in whose likeness the wood and cross were made. Behold, the prophet thus testifies that he (namely Jesus) is the El lo joshia, that is, the god who cannot save." And on page 141 of the aforementioned old Nizzáchon, it is written as follows: אל תבטחו בישו שהוא בן אדם ותלהו כי לא יושיע פי לא יכול: that is, "Do not trust in Jesus, for he is a son of man and was hanged, and he cannot save: he could not even save himself, so how could he have the power to save others and help them?" But the hardened Jews are greatly mistaken in imagining that Jesus could not help himself and could not save himself from the hands of his enemies and from death; for He, as the almighty Son of God, lacked no power to free Himself from it. However, since it was thus ordained in the divine counsel that the second Person of the most holy Trinity, the eternal Son of God, should in the fullness of time take on human nature and accomplish the work of redemption, of which the prophet Isaiah had so clearly prophesied in chapter 53, He willingly submitted Himself in this matter to the Father's will, as can be seen in Matt 26:29, and gladly endured the shameful death of the cross, as is read in John 10:17-18, Phil 2:7-8, and Heb 2:2. For this reason He is also introduced as speaking in Ps 40:7-9 as follows: "Sacrifice and grain offering you did not desire, but you have opened my ears; you do not require burnt offering or sin offering. Then I said, behold, I come; in the scroll it is written of me: I delight to do your will, my God." For otherwise the poor, sinful human race could not have been rescued from hell. He therefore lacked no power whatsoever. He also said to Peter, who, as can be seen in Matt 26:51-53, had cut off the ear of the high priest's servant with a sword and thus wished to defend himself and fight on behalf of Christ: "Do you think that I could not ask my Father, and He would at once send me more than twelve legions of angels?" From all of this it may be rationally concluded that Christ willingly suffered death and did not seek to save Himself from it.

Regarding the aforementioned spitting directed at Christ and the Christians, which is done by the Jews upon the utterance of the above-cited words of blasphemy: in a prayer book printed here in Frankfurt in quarto, in the year 497 according to the Jewish calendar, that is, in the year of Christ 1697, which is called Seder tephilla derech jeschara and was published by Rabbi Jechiel Michael, fol. 73, col. 2, it is denied that this takes place against Christ and the Christians, and the words there read as follows: עלינו לשבח וכו' מין גרוסר שיר ושבח וכו' ווען מען זאגט ואנחנו כורעים ומשתחוים וכו' אונן זיך בוקן דען עלינו האט יהושע בן נון געמאכט ווען ער האט ארץ ישראל איינגענומען /אונן אין דער זעלבגן צייט האבן דיא אומות העולם פאלשן גלויבן געווען אונן דיא הימלשה העיר אן דיא זון אונן לבנה אונן דיא סטערין דיא זייגן הבל וריק דיא גאר קיין גאט זיין. זא זאגן מיר מיר זענען שולדיג השי"ת צו לובן דוא ער וונס ניט בימטיג הויט אלז וויא דיא זעלביגה אומות דיא עבודה זרה געדינט האבן וגו' :פיין טייל לייט שפייאן דא אויס דיא טוען ניט רעכט דראן דארום עס שטעט אונן איין גרוסרה סכנה דארהוף דען דיא אומות קען דען דורות מעכטן מיינען עס געט אויף מירן אמונה דרום שפייאן מיר אויס עס גייט אבר אין אמת געט עס גאר ניט אויף איהרן אמונה דען יהושע בן נון האט עלינו געמאכט אונן אין דער זעלביגה צייט איז דער אמונה פוך דיא אמונה נאך ניט געווען דרום אופהאק פון דיין דורות מעכטן זיין אן דען שורש האמונה וואו הקב"ה איז אלהים קדמון שחדש הכל ומשגיה וכל יכול ובורא עולם גם אין שחר ועונש ואת חן תחיית המתים דאסין זיין פו פערצ זענר עבודה זרה אונן גיבט פילא נארי המינים הכל סבן וסיס דיא That is: Olénu leschabbéach is a great song and praise, etc. When one says: "We, however, bow and prostrate ourselves," one should bow, for Joshua, the son of Nun, composed the prayer Olénu when he took possession of the land of Israel, and at that same time the peoples of the world believed in the heavenly host, in the sun, and the moon, and the stars, which are Héfet varik, that is, a vanity and a nullity, and no God whatsoever. Thus we say that we are obliged to praise the blessed God that He did not create us like those same peoples who served idols, etc. Some people spit there, but they do not act rightly in doing so, for in the first place a great danger thereby falls upon us, since the peoples (meaning the Christians) in these times might think that it is directed at their faith, and that is why we spit: but in truth it is not directed at their faith at all, for Joshua, the son of Nun, composed the prayer Olénu, and at that same time the (Christian) faith did not yet exist. Furthermore, because the peoples (namely the Christians) in these times believe the chief article of faith, that the holy blessed God is eternal, renews all things, knows all things, and provides for all things through His providence, and is also almighty and the Creator of the world: they likewise believe in a reward (of the good) and a punishment (of the evil), and in a resurrection of the dead, and therefore they are not called ovde avoda sara, that is, idolaters. There are also many common (and ignorant) people, and how many more women, who understand no Hebrew at all, yet who know very well where they are supposed to spit. But when one recites the prayer Olénu with devotion, it redounds to the great glory of the holy and blessed God.

These are the words drawn from the aforementioned prayer book, which were inserted there for the purpose of dissuading the Jews from the said spitting, since this frivolous practice is known among Christians, and it is known that it occurs out of contempt for Christ and for Christians, so that they might not come to harm if any Christian should happen to see it; not, however, because they otherwise consider it wrong, for their hatred, as has already been sufficiently demonstrated from what precedes and will be further revealed in what follows, against Christ and against Christians is so unspeakably great that they seek to shame and revile Him and us in every possible way. Moreover, the cited words are a frightful piece of work, inserted by way of deception, and indeed only in a few copies, through the printing of some new complete sheets; for I have seen copies in which not a single word of it appears. Therefore, let no one allow himself to be persuaded by the Jews that this spitting occurs for any other purpose than contempt for Christ and all Christians, for otherwise he will certainly be deceived. I have heard it myself from converts who have attested that they were taught by their Jewish teachers that one must spit during this prayer. But for what purpose, then, is it supposed to be done by them? Certainly not on account of the idolatry that was formerly practiced by the Canaanites, for today's Jews concern themselves little with that. Since they, as has been clearly demonstrated, understand by Hebel varik Jesus, and mention is made therein of those who worship Him, it is irrefutably true that the spitting occurs against Christ and Christians; whereas, on the other hand, everything that is objected against this is false and fabricated for the purpose of deception.

Eleventh, they call Him תלוי Talui (or Tólui) and התלוי battalui (or battólui), that is, the Hanged One, because He was nailed to the cross and hanged upon it. Hence it stands in the book Maggen Abraham, in the 74th chapter: אינם עובדים אלא את התלוי, that is, the Christians serve none other than the Talui, that is, the Hanged One. And in the old Nizzáchon, it is written at p. 19, concerning the words of Gen 22:2, "Take now your only son," as follows: גם אומרים המינוס שזה רמז על התלוי שהעלה נפשו למות לכפר עליהם כמו שנאמר ויעלהו : לעולה תחת בנו. וכן אומרים בפסח ויקחו לכם איש שה לבית אבות גם זה רמז על התלוי : וכן הרבה פסוקים שמהפכים על התלוי. that is, the heretics also say that this passage contains an allusion to the Talui, that is, the Hanged One, who, in order to atone for them, gave His soul unto death, as it is said (Gen 22:13): "And he offered him" (namely the ram) "as a burnt offering in place of his son." They likewise say that the words concerning the Passover (Exod 12:3), "Let every man take a lamb, according to the house of his father," contain an allusion to the slaying of the Talui, that is, the Hanged One; and that there are many verses in Holy Scripture which they twist to refer to the Talui, that is, the Hanged One. So also at p. 151 of the said book, concerning the words of Ps 2:7, "The LORD has said to me, You are my Son; this day have I begotten You," one reads: פסוק זה פותרין ואומרים על התלוי, that is, they (the Christians) interpret this verse as referring to the Talui, that is, the Hanged One. Now it is altogether common for them to call Christ by this name, and it is also found in the handwritten selichóth (or selichos), as Mr. Wülffer demonstrates in his aforementioned Remarks on the Jewish Theriaca, p. 37, from the Nuremberg copy, noting that in the prayer which begins, איה כל נפלאותיה Aje col nifleotécha (or nikleosécha), that is, "Where are all Your wondrous works," the following is read: סגולתך דוסק ולוסץ סברה להמיר בתלוי נצרי, that is, "The Zórer or enemy" (that is, Christendom) "presses and afflicts Your possession, and supposes that we should fall away and adopt faith in the Hanged Nazarene"; upon which the commentary contains this explanation: זה ישו הנוצרי שהיה מנצרת, that is, "This is Jesus the Nazarene, who was from Nazareth." In the printed copies, however, it reads only: סגולתך דוסקת וקודתך מלנצור סברה להמיר בכחש, that is, "She" (Christendom) "presses Your possession, so that Your commandment is not kept; her intention is to alter Your honor."

When this shameful name is held up to the Jews, they immediately know an escape route, and claim that the word Talui means here not a hanged man, but a doubtful one, one who is doubted. Thus the frivolous scoundrel, Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his Jewish Theriac, in the first chapter, num. 1, contrary to his better knowledge and according to his custom, puts this forward and says: because the Christians hold Jesus to be a God, but the Turks dispute this, so that the matter is doubtful and contested among them, whether He is God or not, He is therefore called Talui. This is also deceitfully taught by Rabbi Lipmann in his Sépher Nizzáchon, num. 350. I answer this, however, by saying that while the word talui does, in a loose sense, also mean "doubtful" among the Rabbis, this is very rare, and occurs almost only when it is joined to the word áscham; hence áscham váddai means a certain guilt-offering, and áscham talui means an uncertain and doubtful guilt-offering, as can be seen in Beresbíth rábba (or Beresbís rábbo) in the 43rd Parashah, as well as in the Talmudic tractate Horajóth fol. 11, col. 1, and Zevachím fol. 54, col. 2. That the Jews, however, take it in this sense with respect to Christ is fundamentally false, and has been fabricated to cloak their wickedness. The word talá (or toló), which means "to hang," from which talui derives, is used very frequently in Jewish books with reference to Christ, as it is also read in the Talmudic tractate Sanbédrin fol. 43, col. 1, where it is written: בערב פסח תלאוהו לישו, that is, on the Passover eve, teläúbu lejéschu, they hanged Jesus. Likewise, shortly before, in connection with the tenth name given to Christ, it was shown from page 141 of the old Nizzáchon that it is written there concerning Christ: Do not rely upon Jesus, for he is a son of man, venithla, that is, and was hanged. So also in the large daily prayer book printed here at Frankfurt am Main in the year 448 according to the Jewish reckoning, that is, 1688 according to our reckoning, which the Jews call the thick Tephilla, fol. 42, col. 2, under the title Leschábbath lifne Schevuóth (or Leschábbas lifne Schevuós), in a prayer which begins אותך כל היום קוינו Othechá col hajóm kivvínu, our Savior is called במגוד תלוי Talui bemágod, that is, the one hanged on the nail, where God is addressed by the Jews against Christendom as follows: ועד מתי יי' בורע- לתלוי במגוד. מכריע כך לנגד. לכול עץ יסגד. למה תביט בוגד שופה בוזה וסוגר ביט עמך מנגד. That is: How long, O Lord, shall he who bows before the talui bemágod, that is, the one hanged on the nail, have the upper hand to sin against You; and shall worship the growth of wood (that is, wooden idols): Why do You look upon the transgressor, the robber, the despiser, and the adversary, at the time when You stand opposite? And shortly thereafter He is called נתלה Nitbleh, which means a hanged one, where the words read as follows: הם קנאוני בלא אל ועד מתי יי' קראו: גומרים שפך דם ולא שפוך אלהים לנגדם. ומה לך נרדם ראים 'שמך חוללו. עלילות ברשע יעלילו. ועד מתי יי' שאון קמך עולה להמיר כבודך בנתלה והנכס

בנקלה: That is: They (understand: the Christians) have moved me to jealousy through one who is not God. How long, O Lord, shall the Christians cry out that blood should be shed, and not have You before their eyes: what are You doing, You who sleep so soundly: You see that they desecrate Your name, and in a godless manner seek occasion against us through false deeds. How long, O Lord, shall the raging of Your adversaries ascend on high (against You into heaven), (who seek to compel us) to exchange Your honor with the Nithleh, that is, the Hanged One, and the praiseworthy (that is, You, who are the praiseworthy God) with the Nikleh, that is, the contemptible (Jesus), and to accept him as God in Your place? Here we see clearly that Talui and Nithleh are taken in one and the same meaning, and it cannot be otherwise, for they both derive from the aforementioned root word tala, and the former is the Participium Praeteritum in the first Conjugation, which is called Kal, while the latter is the Participium Praesens in the Passivo Niphal, both of which mean a hanged one; and the word Nithleh is found nowhere to mean "doubtful." So also Christ is called in the Polish Siddurim fol. 77, col. 1, in a prayer which begins יְהוֹשִׁיעַ בְּךָ הָסִיטִי Elobai bechá chasákti, under the title Józer leschábbas revit ácher happésach, תְּלוּי בַּמָּגוֹד Talui bemágod, that is, the one hanged on the nail. Beyond this, Rabbi Bechai writes in his book Cad hakkémach fol. 29, col. 4, on the words of Ps 80:14, יִכְרַסְמֶנָּה חֲזִיר מִיָּעַר Jecharsémenna Chasir mijáar, that is, a wild boar from the forest will root it up (namely the vine), as follows: הֵעֵץ תְּלוּי he'et talui, that is, the letter Ayin is (in the word מִיָּעַר mijáar) telúja, that is, suspended up above (and does not stand in a straight line as the other letters do), because they (namely the Christians) worship the Talui, that is, the Hanged One. From these words it is as clear as sunlight that Talui means a hanged one and not a doubtful one, for here a comparison is drawn between the letter Ayin, which hangs above the three other letters of the word Mijáar, and Christ the Crucified, such that just as the Ayin is suspended, so also was Christ hanged. Just as little as telúja means "doubtful" here, so little can Talui be interpreted in that way. Indeed, in the aforementioned Polish Siddurim, fol. 71, col. 1, under the title Meóra leschábbath schená, in the commentary on a prayer which begins אֵל חַי אֶחָנוּ El chai achánnen, where Christ is likewise called Talui, it is clearly taught: תְּרֵעוּם תְּלוּי צִלּוּב ter'eam talui zivub, that is, Talui means a crucified or hanged one.

Who would then be so simple-minded as to let himself be persuaded that the godless Jews, who pour out all manner of blasphemies, shameful and abusive words against Christ, do not also take it here in a contemptuous sense? Especially since, in place of the word Talui, they sometimes use the word צִלּוּי Zalúi (or Zalub), which means one who has been hanged on the cross, as can also be seen in the old Nizzáchon, p. 117, where, over the words of Isa 54:1,

"Rejoice, thou barren one who dost not bear," it is read thus: כאן פוקרים המינים, ואומרים שהיא אם הצלוב, that is: Here the heretics bring forward a false interpretation, and say that this is to be understood of the mother of the Crucified One. Now just as Nithleh or Zóluf unambiguously means what it means, so it is likewise not true that the malicious enemies of Christ, the wicked Jews, by the word Talui mean someone of doubtful identity, as Rabbi Salman Zevi and Rabbi Lipmann have deceitfully claimed. It is indeed very offensive to them that Christ was hanged on the cross, which is why the holy Apostle Paul says in 1 Cor 1:23, "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness." But we are not ashamed on that account to acknowledge Him as the true Savior and Redeemer; rather, we rightly glory in Him, and every upright Christian may say with the aforementioned Apostle Paul from Gal 6:14: "God forbid that I should glory, save only in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." And from 1 Cor 2:2: "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

Twelfthly, they call Him המקולל Hammekúllal, that is, the Accursed, as may be read in the old Nizzáchon at p. 249, where, alongside many other gross lies which, according to false pretense, are supposed to stand in the Gospel, the following is also stated: כתוב שאמר פילאטוס לישו למה אתה עושה את עצמך בן אלהים: והלא אחיך אינם עושים כן: והשיב לו המקולל ודאי הם אחיי שנולדו מאמי אבל אני לא נולדתי מטיפת זרע כמותם ואיני בשר ודם כמותם that is: It is written (in their Gospel) that Pilatus said to Jesus, why do you make yourself the Son of God (and present yourself as such)? Your brothers certainly do not do so. To which the Mekúllal, that is, the Accursed, replied: they are certainly my brothers, who were born of my mother, but I was not born from a drop of seed as they were, nor am I flesh and blood as they are. And in the book Chisuk emunáh, at p. 470, over the words of the Apostle Paul in Gal 3:13, "Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, having become a curse for us, for it is written" (Deut 21:23): "Cursed is everyone who hangs on a tree," the following malicious words are found: יצא אמת במקרה מפיו that is, the truth has gone out of his mouth by chance; as if the author, Rabbi Isaac, wished to say: what the Apostle has written here by chance and without due consideration is certainly true. He ought, however, to have known that Jesus took upon Himself, who was without any sin, that curse which lay upon the sinful human race, but abolished it through His bitter suffering and death, so that after His victorious resurrection it no longer lay upon Him but was entirely blotted out. Yet it is nothing new among the wicked Jews that they blaspheme our most holy Savior in such a godless manner, out of an unspeakable hatred in which they are raised from childhood. Thus, in the month of March of the past year 1699, at Celle, a Jew by the name of Jonas Meyer, having been brought to the gallows to receive his deserved reward for many thefts he had committed, and already having the rope around his neck, cried out aloud these dreadful words: he cursed Jesus, and all who had a vein in their body that believed in Him, whereupon he was strangled. When, however, the High Princely Government learned of this, it was ordered that on the following day he be taken down from the gallows, and his blasphemous tongue cut from his accursed throat and burned in the public marketplace; the carcass of his body was then dragged by the feet through the city to the gallows and hung there beside a dog. What this blasphemer against God did openly without shame, because he knew that he had to die regardless, other Jews do secretly among themselves, since out of fear of the Christians they dare not do it openly.

Thirteenth, they call Him, in a blasphemous manner, שוטה Schóteb, or נבל nával, that is, a fool. The blasphemous name שוטה Schóteb is found in the Talmudic tractate Schábath (or Schábbas) fol. 104. col. 2., where the words read as follows: תניא אמר להם רבי אליעזר לחכמים והלא בן סטדא הוציא כשפים ממצרים: that is: We learn in a Barájetha that Rabbi Elieser said to the sages: Did not the son of Stada (that is, Christ, as will be demonstrated below in this chapter) bring sorcery out of Egypt in the incision he made in his flesh? But they answered him: he was a Schóteb, that is, a fool, and it is not customary to bring proof from fools. This same passage is also interpreted of our Savior Jesus by Rabbi Abraham Perizol in the 59th chapter of his book Maggen Abraham, whose words are to be cited below in the 6th chapter of this first part.

As for the blasphemous name נבל náfal (or nóvol), it is applied to Christ in the old Nizzáchon p. 67., where, concerning the words of Jer 17:11, "The cuckoo" (as the Jews interpret it) "hatches what it has not laid; so is he who acquires wealth, but not by right. In the midst of his days he shall leave it, and in the end he shall be a fool," it is written as follows: מדמה הנביא את ישו בן חריא לעוף שמו קורא ומנחתו לאסוף ביצים של עופות אחרים ויושב עליהם כדי לחממן כאלו הם שלו וכשיצאון האפרוחין רואה שאינם דומין לו פורח מעליהם ועוזבן לאבד. וזהו ובאחריתי יהיה נבל ר"ל או יבין כי נבלה עשה. כן ישו הסית והטעה ואסף אליו את הבריות ועשה עומר זה בלא משפט ושלא כדין וגו' ובאחריתי יהיה נבל כאשר יחעיבו בו יאמרו אך שקר נחלנו וגו' that is: The prophet compares Jesus, the son of Chárja...

Charja (that is, with all due respect, "of filth," and the holy mother of Christ is thus mockingly called this instead of Mary, as has already been indicated above) is compared to a bird called the cuckoo, which has the habit of gathering the eggs of other birds and sitting upon them to hatch them. But when the young hatch and it sees that they are not like itself, it flees away and lets them perish. And that is the meaning of the words: "And in the end he becomes a fool," for at that point he realizes that he has committed an act of foolishness. Thus Jesus also led the people astray, misled them, and gathered them to himself, and acquired this wealth wrongfully and unjustly, *ἐξ*c. Therefore he will be a fool when they (namely, the Christians, in the future) will hold him in abhorrence and (from Jer 16:19) will say: "Our fathers had vain and false gods."

But, O you godless blasphemers! Shall you call him a fool of whom it was prophesied in Isa 11:2 that the Spirit of the Lord would rest upon Him, the Spirit of wisdom and of understanding, the Spirit of counsel and of strength; who is also called "Counsel" in Isa 9:6, and consequently must have been wise; indeed, who, as may be seen in 1 Cor 1:30, was made wisdom for us by God, and as the true Son of God is wisdom itself? You will, on account of such horrible blasphemy, be tormented in hellfire for all eternity, and on account of such dreadful foolishness as you have committed, you will have to endure the well-deserved punishment.

Your own historian Flavius Josephus bears a completely different witness to the most innocent Jesus, when he writes in the 4th chapter of the 18th book of his Antiquities in the Greek language as follows: Γίνεται δὲ κατὰ τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον Ἰησοῦς σοφὸς ἀνὴρ, εἵ γε ἄνδρα αὐτὸν λέγειν χρὴ. ἦν γὰρ παραδόξων ἔργων ποιητής, διδάσκαλος ἀνθρώπων τ' ἀληθὴ συν ἡδονῇ δεχομένων. καὶ πολλοὺς μὲν Ἰουδαίους, πολλοὺς δὲ καὶ ἐλληνικοὺς ἐπηγάγετο. ὁ χριστὸς οὗτος ἦν. καὶ αὐτὸν ἐνδείξει τῶν πρώτων τῶν ἀνδρῶν παρ' ἡμῖν σταυρῷ ἐπιτετιμηκότος πιλάτου, οὐκ ἐπαύσαντο οἱ γε πρῶτον ἀγαπήσαντες. ἐφάνη γὰρ αὐτοῖς τρίτην ἔχων ἡμέραν πάλιν ζῶν, τῶν θείων προφητῶν ταῦτα καὶ ἄλλα μυρία θαυμάσια περὶ αὐτοῦ εἰρηκότων. εἰς ἔτι νῦν τῶν χριστιανῶν ἀπὸ τοῦδε ὀνομασμένων οὐκ ἐπέλιπε τὸ φύλον. That is: At that same time (namely when Pilate was governor in Judea) there was Jesus, a wise man, if indeed it is fitting to call Him a man; for He was a doer of wondrous works, and a teacher of men who received the truth with gladness, and He drew many Jews and Gentiles to Himself (who adhered to His teaching): this was Christ. And after He had been punished with the cross (and hanged thereon and put to death) by Pilate, at the accusation of the foremost men among us, those who had loved Him did not cease (to cleave to Him): for He appeared to them on the third day alive again, as the divine prophets had foretold this and countless other wondrous things concerning Him. And the race of Christians, who are named after Him, has not ceased to this day. These are the words of Josephus, which stand in direct opposition to your diabolical blasphemy; for JESUS is called by him a wise man. This Josephus lived shortly after the time of the suffering of JESUS, for he was present at the destruction of the city of Jerusalem, at which time everything that had occurred with Christ was still fresh in memory; therefore this testimony of Josephus is rightly to be accepted, while your great book of lies, the Talmud, which was only compiled and forged long afterward, is to be rejected along with its diabolical blasphemy.

Fourteenth, they call him מין ואפיקורוס Min veepicúrus, that is, a heretic and Epicurean. This is read in the handwritten Dillherr book Jad chasaká (or chasóko) of Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon, held at Nuremberg, in the 10th chapter of the tractate on idolatry, as Mr. Wülffer reports in his aforementioned annotations on the Jewish Theriaca, p. 205, where the words read as follows: מוסרי ישראל והמינים והאפיקורוסין מצוה ליה לאבדן בידו ולהורידן עד לבאר שחת מפני שהן מצרין לישראל ומסירין את העם מאחרי יי' כיהושע הנצרי ותלמידיו וצדוק ובייתוס: that is, it is commanded of him (the Jews) to kill with his own hand the traitors of Israel, as well as the heretics and Epicureans, and to cast them into the pit of destruction, because they afflict the Israelites and turn the people away from GOD, as JESUS the Nazarene and his disciples, and also Zadok and Bajethus together with their disciples have done, whose wicked name must rot.

That Christ is called by such a blasphemous name happens for this reason: because He departed from their religion and founded a new one, and in doing so rejected the Pharisaic human ordinances and teachings not grounded in God's Word, as can be seen in Matt 15:1-2 etc. and Mark 7:1-2 etc., and furthermore commanded that one guard against the Pharisaic leaven contained in their supposed oral law, the Talmudic teaching, as is to be read in Matt 16:6 and Mark 4:15. For all those who abandon their religion and adopt another, or who reject their Rabbinic ordinances, are called heretics and Epicureans by them, since they hold their ordinances and Rabbinic teachings far higher than Holy Scripture, as can be gathered from the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 57, col. 1, where it is commanded: הנהר בני אל דברי סופרים יותר מדברי תורה, that is: "My child, pay more heed to the words of the scribes than to the words of the Law (of Moses)." For this reason it is also stated in the book Caphtor uphérach fol. 121: רבא אמר תדע לך שדברי סופרים חביבים מדברי נביאים, that is: "The Rubba has said: you must know that the words of the scribes are more pleasing than the words of the prophets." But if the blaspheming Jews were not so thoroughly hardened, and were willing to reflect properly on the matter, namely that Jesus is the true promised Messiah, who, as shall be demonstrated below at the beginning of the seventh chapter, was to give a new law, and if they were also to consider what a holy life, teaching, and conduct He led, they would certainly refrain from such accursed blasphemies.

Fifteenth, he is called ישו הרשע Jeschu harascha (or haróscho), that is, the godless Jesus, and this is found in the aforementioned Nuremberg Machsor, as Mr. Wülffer indicates in his annotations on the Jewish Theriack, p. 41, where the words of the Machsor read as follows: צור נצורה היא ציון דכתיב נותרה בת ציון עד כעיר מצורה וט"א צור נצורה העיר אשר ישבה איש צר ואויב ישו הרשע אשר פנה לבו מאחרי יי פנה לבו מאחרי יי 'ונעשה אליל': that is, by the words Zur Nazóreth, Zion is understood, as it is written (Isa 1:8): The daughter of Zion is left, etc., up to the words, like a devastated city. Others, however, understand by it the city in which the adversarial and hostile man, the godless Jesus, dwelt, who turned his heart away from God and was made into an Elil, that is, an idol. Likewise he is also called in the Polish Siddurim fol. 83, col. 2, under the title Józer leschábbath schelifne schevúos, in the commentary on the prayer that begins אלקי רשע Elobái ekraachá bemáchaschaf, ráscha, that is, a godless one. And in the Talmudic tractate Gittin he is called at fol. 57, col. 1, פושע ישראל Poschéa Jifráel (or Jisróel), that is, the sinning Israelite, and it is reported that when Titus's sister's son, Onkelos, wished to adopt the Jewish faith, he caused Balaam to come up from hell; and finally he also caused Jesus to come forth; whereupon the words of the Talmud read as follows: אזל אסקיה בנגידא לפושע ישראל א"ל מאן חשיב בההוא עלמא אמר ליה ישראל מהו לאידבוקי בהו א"ל טובתם דרוש רעתם לא תדרוש: that is, Then he (Onkelos) went and caused the sinning Israelite to come forth, and said to him: Who is held in high esteem in that life? He answered him: the Israelites. (He asked him further) should one attach oneself to them? And he gave him the answer: seek their good, and not their evil. That Jesus is to be understood here is evident from the book Maggen Abraham by Rabbi Abraham Perizol, cap. 59, where one reads: ובפרק נוקין אמרו שטוטס העלה לישו באת that is, And in the chapter Nesakin (or nesokin, which is the 5th chapter of the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Gittin, from which the words cited above from fol. 57, col. 1 are taken) our rabbis say that Titus (he meant to say Onkelos) brought Jesus up through sorcery. In the same manner Jesus is also called a godless and God-forsaking man in the Talmudic tractate Sanbedrin, fol. 105, col. 1, in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary, on the second side, in the ninth line, where Balaam and Jesus are cited as examples of godless men. This slander, however, has already been briefly refuted above.

Sixteenth, He is called אדם בליעל Adam (or Odom) beliáal, and איש בליעל haisch (or hoisch) habbeliáal, that is, a worthless and dissolute person, or villain; and the terrible blasphemy appears in the book Emek hammelech, which was written by Rabbi Naphtali Hirz (who, as is indicated in the preface at fol. 7. col. 1. and also at fol. 148. col. 3. by himself, was born in Frankfurt am Main and lived there), where at fol. 20. col. 4. it appears this time, however, in veiled words, so that Christians might not so easily understand it; and this is accomplished through a Kabbalistic permutation of the alphabet called Atbasch, in which, as can be seen in Buxtorf's Abbreviaturis Hebraicis p. 41. and in his Lexico Talmudico under the word Atbasch, the letter Aleph or A is taken for a Tau or T, and the Beth or B for the Schin or Sch, with the same permutation applied to the remaining letters. The words of the aforementioned Rabbi Naphtali Hirz read as follows: האיש עש"כ מיך הלה פגם המצלת המחיצה על קברי התהום שנתקע בה: השם המפורש המונחת על נוקבא דתהומא רבא שלא יצאו השור סמאל וכור היא בת זוגו ע"ש that is: And this Isch habbeliáal, that is, worthless man (namely Jesus, as is clearly evident from what precedes; the concealed word Zaschcám bach signifies the same as Habbeliáal through the aforementioned Atbasch) has torn the covering which covered the grave of the abyss, upon which the Schem hammephorásch (that is, the declared Name, namely Jehova) was written, which was laid over the opening of the great abyss, so that the ox Sammael (or Sammoél) and his companion might not come out of the opening, which is full of serpents and scorpions. After this, the following continues there: ומי גרם כל אלה התמיה: הרביעית על ח"ף ב"ץ ח"ק ח"שכ"מ שעשתה: עצמה זג"ץ שנ' דרך גבר בעלמה כך חז' אשה מנאפת אכלה ומחתה פיה ואמרה לא פעלתי און that is: But who caused all of this? The fourth wonder (over which King Solomon marveled) concerns the mother of Adam beliaál, that is, of the worthless man (for the words tif bach saki schachmebach signify, in the manner described above, the same as אמו של אדם בליעל, that is, the mother of the worthless man, by which Mary is understood), who presented herself as a virgin (for Sachiz is placed in the position of the word עלמה álma, which means a virgin), as it is said (Prov 30:19): And a man's way with an álma, or virgin. In folio 135, however, col. 3 of the aforementioned book Emek hammelech, in the 19th chapter, under the title Scháar réscha dífer ánpin, Christ is also called האיש הבליאל haisch habbeliaál in unveiled words, and the passages cited therewith will be indicated in the following third chapter. But how can this blasphemer, Rabbi Naphtali Hirz, call the Lord Christ a villain or worthless man, when He taught nothing other than what can serve to attain eternal salvation? He truly sought, and made it His concern, to destroy the kingdom of the devil, to deliver poor people from its terrible hostile power, and through His sincere exhortations to repentance and His fervent teaching to bring them to God. But Satan gives the Jews no rest; they must blaspheme Christ; and even when there is no cause for it, they still sharpen their impure and venomous tongues and pens against Him.

Seventeenth, He is called עשו Esav, that is, Esau. Concerning this, it is written in Abarbanel's commentary on the Prophet Isaiah, fol. 54. col. 3. 4., as well as in his book Maschmia jeschúa fol. 19. col. 4., as follows: חכמי האמת קבלו שנפש עשו נתגלגלה בישוע הנוצרי ולכן היה במדברות איש שדה והיה איש ריב ומדון לחכמי הפרושים ואולי שעל זה נקרא ישוע שאותיותיו הם אותיות שם עשו במלואו ומפני זה כל המחזיקים בדתו ואמונתו ועובדים אותו הודו ראוי שיקראו בני אדם כיון שישוע הוא עשו that is: The theologians, or divines, have received through tradition that the soul of Esau passed into Jesus the Nazarene, and that He therefore dwelt in the wilderness and was a man of the field, and also quarreled and disputed with the wise men of the Pharisees. Perhaps He is also called for this reason ישוע Jeschúa, that is, Jesus, because His letters (namely, the letters of the name ישוע Jeschúa) are the letters of עשו Esav, that is, Esau, when Esau is written in full (namely, with the addition of the letter Jod). It is therefore fitting that all those who have adopted his religion and faith and serve him should be called children of Edom, because Jesus is Esau, and Esau is Edom. The method of proof that Abarbanel employs here is Cabalistic, and is called תמורה Temúra, according to which the letters of a word are transposed, and through this transposition another word emerges, just as here ישוע Jeschúa and עשו Esav have the same letters in Hebrew, which are however transposed, and from Jeschúa comes Esau.

So that this Jewish blasphemy may be brought to light all the more clearly, I must here indicate where Esau's soul, according to Rabbinical teaching, came from, and from whom he received it. It is to be known, then, that the soul of the wicked Cain is said to have passed into Esau, as is taught in the book Sérah Abraham, fol. 14. col. 2. with these words: דאמרינן ראוי היה להבל הבכורה לפי : שהחונן כו' ש'יצא הזהומא עמו לפי שהוא מזהומא דנחש כפי עשו שהיא גלגול קין that is, it was certainly fitting that Abel should have had the right of the firstborn, for Cain had to be born first, so that the impurity (which is mentioned in what follows) might come out with him, for he was of the side of the serpent (that is, of the devil), just as Esau was, into whom the soul of Cain had passed. And in the third columna of the same place it is stated: לפי שעשו ומצרי וקרה הם חלק : רע ויתרו היו חלק טוב מקין לכך הרגו משה that is, since Esau and the Egyptian (whom Moses slew, of whom one may read in Exod 2:12, 14) as well as Korah were the evil portion, whereas Aaron together with Jethro were the good portion of Cain, Moses therefore killed him (namely, the Egyptian).

From where the godless fratricide Cain received his soul can be seen in the Jalkut chadasch fol. 5. col. 2. numero 52. under the title Adam &c., where it is written: קין לא היה מזרעו של אדם אלא מן זוהמת סמאל היינו נשמתו כשהטיל זוהמא והיה מקשקש במעיה ולא היה גוף להתלבש בו וכשבא אדם על חוה נולד הוא הגוף ותתלבש חרה בגוף זה ועל כרהו כן הוא שזכר כתיב וחזותם חרה את חזות that is, Cain did not come from the seed of Adam, but from the impurity of Sammael, which is to be understood of his soul. When Sammael cast his filth into Eve (through touching her, as is reported elsewhere), the spirit made a noise in her womb and had no body with which to clothe itself. But after Adam lay with Eve, he begat the body, and this spirit (namely, the soul) clothed itself with that body; and this happened against its will, for it is written (Gen 4:1): "And Adam knew his wife." This same thing is also to be read in Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 31. col. 1. 2. in the Parascha Bereschith, as well as in many other places. From this it is clearly evident that Cain received his soul from the supreme devil Sammael, and that the most holy and most pure soul of Christ, according to the Jewish diabolical blasphemy, is supposed to have its origin from the devil, as is expressly taught in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 20. col. 4. in the 32nd chapter under the title Schaar olam battobu, where the words read as follows: רוא דקצה האחרון שבהזחת קין קנא דמסאבותא וזהמת הנחש שבא על חוה והוא סוד ע"ז של ניצוצ שמאל ממש שרצונו לעשות עצמו אלוה להשתחוות לו ולכן אותו האיש היה משמש השם לע"ז והוא נרמז במלת קין שהוא נוטריקון קרה מ"כפ טפ"הגם ועל זה אמר הציוני ובקדה חקור ודרוש ותמצא ב"אם פש"ג ולא זכרו בשמו מפני הסכנה ולשון חקור ודרוש ר"ל חקור ודרוש בכל גלגוליו that is: He (Jesus) is the uttermost end, which is in the impurity of Cain, the nest of filth, the impurity of the serpent that lay with Eve. He is the mystery of the idol, the spark of Sammael truly and certainly, who wanted to make himself a God so that he would be worshipped. For this reason that man (Jesus) used the Name (Jehova) for idolatry, and he is indicated by the word קין Kain, which by Notarikon (whereby each letter of a word forms a separate word in its own right) קרה מ"כפ טפ"הגם Korach Mabab Tafbagam signifies (that is, when the second and third words, which are altered by Atbasch in the manner described above, are restored to their proper form, it reads קרה ישו נורי Korach Jeschu Nozeri, that is, Korach, Jesus the Nazarene; for the three letters K.I.N. in the Hebrew language make Kain, and by this it is signified that the soul of Cain passed into Korach, of whom mention is made in Num 16, and from Korach into Jesus the Nazarene). For this reason the Zijoni says (in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 82. col. 1., search and inquire in the Parascha Korach, and you will find ב"אם פש"ג baam paschgach, that is, according to the Atbasch alphabet Scheti veeref;) that is, the cross (namely, the crucified Jesus). He (the Zijoni), however, did not name him (meaning Jesus) by name on account of the danger. But by the words "search and inquire," he intended to convey that one should search through all his gilgulim, that is, one should examine how his soul passed from one body into another; these transmutations of souls are called gilgúlim.

Concerning this abominable blasphemy, the following is also read in the aforementioned book Emek hammelech fol. 135. col. 4., in the 19th chapter, under the title Scháár réscha disëir ánpin: הוא היה זוהמת נפש קין הורג נפש זוהמת אל אחר שגלגולו קין מ"כפ טפ"הגם ד"ת קין והיא נפש המקלל שרגמו אותו באבנים במדבר שהיה מברך את השם והיא זוהמת הנחש שבא על חוה ויצא ממנה קין קנא דמסאבותא והיא חלק זוהמא של נפש קין שלא יטהר לעולם אף על פי שכמה ניצוצות ממנו נתקנו והוא ממש that is: He (namely JESUS) is the impurity of the soul of Cain, the murderer of men, the impurity of El ácher, that is, of the other or foreign God (namely of Sammael, who is called El ácher, as has already been seen above, and will be further demonstrated below in the 18th chapter of this first part); for his gilgúl, or transmigration of souls, is קין מ"כף טפ"הגם Kain, Mabaf, Tafhagam, that is, when the two words altered by Atbasch are restored to their proper form: קין יש"ו נוצרי Kain, Jeschúa Nózeri, Kain, Jesus Nazarener, in which three words the initial letters K., J., N., that is, Kain, are formed. This soul (the soul of Cain) was the soul of the blasphemer (Lev 24:10 etc.) who was stoned in the wilderness, because he had blasphemed the name of God. That same soul was also the filth of the serpent who lay with Eve, from whom Cain, the nest of impurity, sprang forth. It was the portion of the filth of the soul of Cain that will never be purified in eternity, although many sparks of it have been set right; and that same soul is properly the idol, the El ácher, or the other and foreign God, and for this reason he made himself into an idol.

To refute these accursed blasphemies, it must be noted that the proof which Abarbenel adduces by means of the Kabbalistic method of Temúra, namely that Jeschúa means the same as עשו Esau, is just as foolish and irrational as the proof he put forward in the preceding section by means of Gematria. This mode of proof is, to be sure, very common among the presumptuous rabbis, but that it is entirely absurd and tasteless is plain as the sun from what follows. In the small Jalkut Rubéni, under the title Mabbul, numero 6, it is proven from the book Tikkúnim in this manner that Noah's soul had passed into Moses, and the words read as follows: משה גלגול נח וכו' לכן אמר משה מחני נא ר"ל כבר that is, Moses was Noah's gilgúl (that is, Noah's soul had passed into Moses, etc.); therefore Moses said (Exod 32:32): מחני Mechéni, that is, "Blot me out," by which he intended to convey: I did not pray during the time of the Flood (namely, on behalf of the people), but now I will give my soul for it. And that is what is written: מחני mechéni, "Blot me out," which consists of the letters of the words מי נח me Nóach, meaning "the waters of Noah." Is this not a senseless proof that Noah's soul had passed into Moses, simply because the transposition of the letters of the word מחני mechéni yields מי נח me Nóach? By this same subtle method, it is demonstrated in the Jalkut chádasc fol. 139. col. 2. numero 290., under the title Mosche, that Moses deserved to be driven into exile because he killed the Egyptian, where it is written: משה שהרג את המצרי היה חוטא כדו, and ונתחייב גלות והוא אשר ינוס שמה אותיות משה, that is, Moses sinned because he killed the Egyptian, and therefore became guilty of exile; and this is signified by the words (Exod 21:13) אשר ינוס שמה ascher janús schámma, that is, "to which he shall flee," because the word שמה schámma, meaning "thither," yields (through transposition of its letters) the name משה Mosche, that is, Moses. From this one can see how subtle and sharp-witted the rabbinical blockheads are.

In this manner, one could also maintain that Laban's soul passed into Nabal, and the soul of שם Schem, or Shem, the son of Noah, passed into מֶשֶׁח Masch, or Mas, who is mentioned in Gen 10:23; and that the soul of מֶשֶׁח Méschech, or Mesech, of whom one may read in Gen 10:2, passed into שכם Schéchem, or Shechem, who is mentioned in Gen 34:2; and likewise that the soul of נָדָב Nadab, the son of Aaron, passed into בֶּדֶן Bedan, of whom one may read in 1 Sam 12:11, since by the transposition of the letters called consonants, from לָבָן Laban one can read נָבָל Nabal, from שֵׁם Schem one can read מֶשֶׁח Masch, from מֶשֶׁח Méschech one can read שכם Schechem, and from נָדָב Nadab one can read בֶּדֶן Bedan. One could likewise prove by this method that Cain was innocent when he killed his brother Abel, because from קַיִן Kain the word נָקִי náki, which means "innocent," arises through the same transposition of letters; and also that Lamech was a king, because from לֶמֶךְ Lémech the word מֶלֶךְ Mélech, which means "a king," can be formed; and no less, that Moses was God Himself, since the word הָשֵׁם Haschéme, which among the rabbis often signifies God, and the name מֹשֶׁה Mosche contain the very same letters, which are merely transposed. But as foolish and unreasonable as it would seem to the Jews if one were to prove to them in this fashion that Cain was innocent, Lamech a king, and Moses God Himself, just so senseless is what Abarbenel puts forward concerning Jeschua and Esav. Indeed, there is a further wanton wickedness involved, for the word עֵשָׂו Esav is never written in Holy Scripture with the letter Yod as יֵשָׁעוּ Esav, but always without it as עֵשָׂו Esav, so that from יֵשָׁעוּ Esav יֵשָׁעוּ Jeschua cannot possibly be derived, since the former has only three letters while the latter has four.

Regarding the transmigration of souls, this is a foolish doctrine originating from the pagan philosopher Pythagoras, the worthlessness of which shall be addressed more fully below in the first chapter of the second part. That the Jews teach so blasphemously concerning the most holy soul of JESUS Christ, namely that it came from the chief devil Sammael and was given to Cain, then passed from him into Korah and Esau, and finally entered into JESUS, this was instilled in them by the chief devil, as the father of all slanderers and blasphemers and the sworn enemy of Christ, who makes the most innocent JESUS hateful to them in this manner, so that they might not believe in Him and acknowledge Him as their Savior. Whoever is of the devil does the devil's work, and earnestly applies himself to enlarging the devil's kingdom; but Christ led a holy and blameless life, as the Jewish historian Josephus himself bears witness, which was cited in the preceding text at p. 94, and through the conversion of men He destroyed the devil's kingdom. Indeed, the Messiah is called Isa 7:14, Immanuel, that is, GOD with us, and Isa 9:6, El gibbor, that is, Mighty GOD, and אבי עד Abi ad, that is, Father of Eternity, as also Jer 23:6, The Jehovah or LORD, who is our righteousness; how then can they so abominably blaspheme JESUS, who is the true promised Messiah, as shall be demonstrated below in the fifth chapter, and ascribe to Him such impurity of soul, seeing that He is not only a holy man but also at the same time God?

Likewise, the proof through Notarikon that the letters of the word קין Kain, namely K, I, N, carry the aforementioned meaning, and that through the Koph or K the names Kain and Korach are indicated, while through the Jod and Nun, or I and N, the words Jesus Nazarenus are signified, is just as foolish and absurd as that which is derived through Gematria or Temura, for it is founded on nothing other than a foolish fantasy and fabrication. One could equally say that the Jod or I in the word Kain has a reference to the patriarch Isaac or Jacob, and the Nun or N to Naphtali the son of Jacob, or to Nun, the father of Joshua: but these are nothing but Rabbinical ravings.

Since it is also evident from the words cited above from Abarbanel's book Maschmia Jeschua fol. 19, col. 4. that Jesus quarreled and disputed with the Pharisees for the reason that the soul of Esau had entered into Him, this too must be noted here, along with what is to be found on this subject in their books: whereby it is to be observed that they teach that Christ was born under the planet Mars, whose power and soul is the chief devil Sammael, and that those who receive an influence or influx from the said planet are prone to quarreling and strife.

That Christ was born under Mars is found in the said Abarbanel's commentary on the prophet Isaiah fol. 54, col. 4., as well as in his book Maschmia Jeschua fol. 19, col. 4., in these words: להיות ישוע הנוצרי תחת מאדים היה דמו בראשו ומהר הוא ותלמידיו ושלוחיו ועמים רבים מהנמשכים אחריו that is, Because Jesus the Nazarene was under the planet Mars, his blood was upon his head, and he, together with his disciples, apostles, and many peoples who had followed him, was put to death.

That the supreme devil Sammael is the power and soul of Mars is written by Rabbi Bechai in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 79, col. 4., in the Parascha Beschallach, as follows: אין אומה נופלת עד שתיפול שרה תחלה והגלגל הזה הוא גלגל מאדים שבו היו המצריים ראויים לנצח ולהגבור לולי השם שהי 'נוחם לישראל. וזהו הגלגל הוא סמ"אל ומל"א"פן הוא חסר ו"או כחשבונו that is: No people falls before its prince (meaning that devil who rules over it in the air, as will be seen below in the 18th chapter of this first part) falls. This sphaera, or sphere, however, is the sphere of Mars, through which the Egyptians would have been capable of overcoming and gaining the upper hand, had not GOD fought on behalf of us Israelites; but the power and force of this sphere is Sammael, and the word אָפֶן ofan (which means a wheel), written without Vau, yields through Gematria the same numerical value as סמאל Sammael, namely 131. This is likewise found in the book Toledóth, or Toledos Jizchak, fol. 52, col. 1, in the aforementioned Parascha Beschallach.

That those who are born under Mars are quarrelsome is taught in the book Cad bakkémach, fol. 24, col. 3, with these words: זה המלאך נברא להשטין ולהזיק ואולי כי מאצילות כחו הוא לאדם שטנה כי הוא סנה לכוכבי חורבן הדמים החרב המלחמות ופירוד והכלל נפש לגלגל מאדים that is: This angel (Sammael) was created to hate and to cause harm, and perhaps because from the influence of his power hatred comes to mankind; for he is the cause of the stars of destruction, of bloodshed, of the sword, of wars, of blows, of wounds, of quarrels, and of all division, and, to put it briefly, he is the soul of Mars. This is also found, in nearly the same words, in Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses.

Bücher Mosis in the Parascha achare moth (or mos), fol. 141 c. 2. 3. All those who receive an influx or influence from him shall also be lost; concerning which, in the small Jalkut Rubéni under the title שקר Schéker, numero 3, the following is read: בטומאה נקרא סמאל כל הנאצלים ממני כולם שקרנים ואינם ספירה ה' בטהרה, that is: the fifth Sefira in impurity is called Sammael, and all those who receive an influence from him are liars and do not stand by their words. From all of this, when one reflects carefully on the matter, a further judgment may be drawn as to what the godless Jews mean when they say that the soul of Cain has entered into Christ.

Eighteenth, they blasphemously call Him ממזר Mámser, that is, a bastard child, or ממוזר בן הנדה Mámser ben hannidda, that is, a bastard child and son of an unclean woman, who was conceived by his mother during the time of her female impurity. This, as well as the reason for such an opinion, is set forth in detail in the accursed, hellish little book Toledóth (or Tóledos Jeschu) (which is to be found in full, from beginning to end, in this chapter as well as in the following third, fourth, and seventh chapters, wherein the devil has poured out all his malice and poison against our Savior), where the words from the beginning up to p. 6 thereof read as follows: בשנת תרע"א לאלף הרביעי בימי ינאי מלכא היתה צרה גדולה על שונאי ישראל אשר קם אחד רועה זונת איש רע ובלעיל מגזע יהודי שבט יהודה ושמו יוסף פנדירא והוא היה בעל קומה וגבור מלחמה ויפה תואר ורוב ימיו בנאוף וזימה וזול ומרס היה שוכן בבית לחם יהודה וקרוב לביתו היתה שוכנת אלמנה אחת ולה בת

That is to say: In the year 671 of the fourth thousand (that is, in the year 4671 after the creation of the world), in the days of King Jannai, a great misery had come upon Israel; for there arose a whoremonger, a wicked and worthless fellow, from the cut-off branch of the tribe of Judah, by the name of Joseph Pandira, who was of great bodily stature, a capable soldier, and of handsome appearance, and who had spent most of his days in adultery, shameful deeds, robbery, and wrongdoing. He dwelt in Bethlehem of Judah, and close to his house there lived a widow who had a daughter named Maria, and this is that Maria who braided the hair of women, of whom mention is made in the Talmud (in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 67, col. 1, and Shabbath or Shabbas, fol. 104, col. 2, as well as Chagiga, fol. 4, col. 2, as is clearly to be seen in the Tosephoth therein). Now when she had grown up and come of age, her mother betrothed her to a young man named Jochanan, and this young man was humble, of gentle spirit, and God-fearing. It came to pass, however, that when Joseph once walked past Maria's door and looked upon her, an evil lust and desire was kindled in him, on account of which he gradually wasted away (in body). His mother said to him: why are you so thin? He answered: I have fallen in love with Maria, the betrothed. Thereupon his mother said: do not let your mind be tormented on that account; rather, see to it that you seize her and deal with her according to your pleasure. Thereupon Joseph Pandira did accordingly, and went continually to Maria's door; but he found no convenient opportunity until one Sabbath evening, when he found her sitting before the door of her house, and went with her into a chamber of the house near the door, and lay down with her. She, however, supposed it was Jochanan, to whom she was betrothed, and said to him: do not touch me, for I am unclean. But he would not listen to her, and had his way with her, and then returned to his house. In the middle of the night, however, the evil lust was kindled in him again, and he therefore rose from his sleep and went to Maria's house; and when he came into her chamber, he seized her a second time. The girl was greatly alarmed at this and said to him: what is this, my lord, that you have come to me twice in one night? I have not experienced this since the time you were betrothed to me. But he remained silent, did it again, and answered not a word. Then Maria said to him: how long will you heap one sin upon another? Have I not already told you that I am unclean? But he did not listen to her, did his will, and went his way. It came to pass, however, after three months, that Jochanan was informed: your betrothed is with child. He was greatly alarmed at this, went to Schimon ben Schetach, his teacher, told him the matter, and asked him what he should do. His teacher, however, answered him (and asked): whom do you suspect? He said: no one is suspect to me except Joseph Pandira, who is a whoremonger and lives close to her house and in her neighborhood. Thereupon his teacher said to him: my son, follow my counsel and keep silent; if he has come to her once and lain with her, it cannot be that he will not come to her a second time. Act according to your prudence, and set witnesses against her (that is, against Maria), and bring him, Joseph Pandira, before the high court (which is called the great Synedrium). After this the young man went out to return to his house, and was very sorrowful. But when the matter became known that she was with child, Jochanan said: now people will say that she is with child by me; and so, out of great shame and disgrace, he departed from the land of Israel and went to Babylon, and remained there. After this Maria bore a son and called his name Jeboscha, after her kinsman, her mother's brother. When the boy had grown up, his mother hired and engaged for him a teacher named Elchanan, who taught the boy, and he had a good understanding for grasping things. It came to pass, however, that the boy once walked past the Synedrium, or great council, in Jerusalem, and it was the custom at that time that everyone who passed before them covered his head and bowed and inclined himself before them. But this boy walked past them, uncovered his head, and bowed with an impudent brow only before his teacher. Then they all said: since he is so impudent, he is perhaps a Mamser, or bastard child. But one among them answered and said: he is certainly a Mamser uben nidda, that is, a bastard child and the son of an unclean woman. Thereupon Schimon ben Schetach answered and said: I recall today that many years ago my disciple Jochanan came to me and said to me: woe to me on account of the shame and disgrace! For Maria my betrothed (who was the mother of this boy) is with child by another man and not by me, and this is that very boy. But when I had asked him whom he suspected on that account, he said: Joseph Pandira, who is her nearest neighbor. After it became known that she was with child, Jochanan immediately departed out of shame to Babylon, where he still is. Thereupon they all said: if that is so, then he is certainly a Mamser and ben nidda, that is, a bastard child and son of an unclean woman; and they blew 300 trumpets and proclaimed against him that he was a Mamser, or bastard child, and unfit to enter the congregation (the Temple); they also called his name יֵשׁוּ Jeschu, which are the initial letters of the words שְׁמוּ וּזְכְּרוּנוּ jimmach schemo vesichróno, that is: may his name and memory be blotted out. Thus far are the words of the diabolical blasphemous pamphlet Toledoth Jeschu.

In the Talmudic tractate Cálla, however, it is written thus at fol. 18, col. 2: עז פנים רבי אליעזר אומר ממזר בן הנדה ר' יהושע אומר בן הנדה ר' עקיבא אומר ממזר וממזר ובן הנדה. פעם אחת היו זקנים בשער ועברו לפניהם שני תינוקות אחד כסה את ראשו ואחד גילה את ראשו רבי אליעזר אומר ממזר ר' יהושע אומר בן הנדה ורבי עקיבא אומר ממזר וממזר ובן הנדה. אמרו לו לרבי עקיבא היאך מלאך לבך לעבור על דברי חבריך אמר להן זה אני מקיימנו. הלך אצל אמו של תינוק וראה שהיתה יושבת ומוכרת קטנית בשוק אמר לה בתי אם את אומרת לי דבר שאני שואלך אני מביאך לחיי עולם הבא. אמרה לו השבעה לי היה רבי עקיבא נשבע בשפתיו ומבטל בלבו אמר לה בנך זה מה טיבו. אמרה לו כשנכנסתי לחופה נדה הייתי ופירש ממני בעלי ובא עלי שופכני והיה לי בן זה נמצא התינוק ממזר ובן הנדה. אמרו גדול היה רבי עקיבא כשהכחיש את רבותינו. באותה שעה אמרו ברוך יי' אלהי That is to say: Rabbi Eliezer says that an impudent person is a Mamser, or bastard child; Rabbi Jehoshua says he is a Ben nidda, or son of an unclean woman; but Rabbi Akkiva says he is a Mamser and a Ben nidda. Once, when the elders were sitting at the gate, two boys passed before them; one covered his head, and the other uncovered his. Rabbi Eliezer said that the one who had uncovered his head was a Mamser, or bastard child; Rabbi Jehoshua said he was a ben hannidda, or the child of an unclean woman; but Rabbi Akkiva said he was a Mamser and a ben hannidda. Then they said to Rabbi Akkiva: how do you dare to have the heart to pass over the words of your colleagues (that is, to be of a different opinion from them and to contradict them)? He answered: I will prove it. He therefore went to the boy's mother, who was sitting in the marketplace selling legumes, and said to her: my daughter, if you tell me what I am about to ask you, I will bring you into the life to come (that is, eternal life). She said to him: then swear it to me. Thereupon Rabbi Akkiva swore with his lips, but in his heart he annulled the oath, and asked her: what is the nature of your son? She said to him: when I was married, I was unclean, and my husband separated himself from me; but the one who had led me at the wedding lay with me, and from him I have this son. It was thus found that this boy was a Mamser and a ben hannidda. Thereupon they said: Rabbi Akkiva is great, in that he has proven his rabbis to be in error. At that same time they said: blessed is the Lord, the God of Israel, who has revealed His secret to Rabbi Akkiva, the son of Joseph. That this passage is also to be understood as referring to Jesus Christ is evident, among other things, from the fact that the boy mentioned here is said to have been a disciple of Rabbi Jehoshua; and because it is reported of Jesus in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 107, col. 2, and in the tractate Sota fol. 47, col. 1, that the aforementioned Rabbi Jehoshua was His teacher.

Thus our most beloved Savior is also called a Mamser in the Talmudic tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas fol. 104. col. 2. in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary), where it is written: בעל סטדא בועל פנדירא ונקרא על שם בעל אמו :אף על פי שהיה ממזר that is, The husband (of Mary) was called Stada, but he who lay with her was called Pandira: He (Jesus), however, was named after the name of his mother's husband (ben Stada, or the son of Stada), although he was a bastard child. Beyond this, the renowned Buxtorf also reports in his Talmudic Lexicon, in the Radice משר Mesar, in col. 1184, that when once a Jew of great standing and great learning was requested and called upon to present a halacha (or balócho), that is, a ruling from the Parascha, or section of the Law of Moses, which was read that day in the synagogue, the same man said in a blasphemous manner: The Parascha of today begins (Lev 26:3) אם בחקתי תלכו Im bechykkothái tbélechu (or bechykkosái sélechu), that is, If you will walk in my statutes. The first word אם Im is explained through Notarikon (the Kabbalistic mode of proof, of which mention has already been made above) as follows: אומות משאלים איה that is, The nations (understand: the Christians) ask, where is your God? We answer them, our God is our King; your God is a Mamser, or bastard child. From this it is once again plainly to be seen that Rabbi Salman Zevi, in the first chapter of his Jewish Theriac, numero 3, denied against his better knowledge and conscience that our Savior Jesus is called Mamser ben hannidda by them.

Are not all of these terrible blasphemies, which the hellish dragon pours out against Christ through his faithful servants, the godless Jews? If a common man were to give another such shameful and contemptuous names, or were to drag him through the mud in so slanderous a manner and cut off his honor, as the malicious Jews do to our Savior, then that person, if he were to be brought before the authorities, would rightly be punished for it. Indeed, a Christian would not go unpunished before Christian authorities if he were to attack and disgrace a Jew in such a manner. How much more reason, then, does the high Christian authority have to visit well-deserved punishment upon the insolent

Jews on account of such and similar other grievous blasphemies, by which our most precious Savior Christ Jesus, God and man in one person, is so greatly reviled and despised by them, and to apply every possible rigor to curb in every way this rampant evil, so that our dearest Savior may not be so greatly blasphemed in the very midst of Christendom, and God's righteous wrath be further kindled against us?

Against the above diabolical blasphemy, by which our most precious Redeemer is called a Mamser and Mamser ben hannidda, God's Word teaches us in the New Testament, Matt 1:18 etc. and Luke 1:26 etc., that He was conceived and born not of a lewd woman, but of a chaste and pure virgin; and not through carnal union with a man, but through the working of the Holy Spirit and the overshadowing of the power of the Highest, which accords with what hath long before been prophesied in Isa 7:14 in these words: Behold, a עלמה Alma (or Almo), that is, a virgin, is with child and will bear a son, and she will call him Immanuel; where the word Alma, which derives from עלם Alam or נעלם Néelam, that is, "to be hidden," signifies nothing other than a pure virgin, who is called by this name because she keeps herself hidden at home in chaste and modest conduct and in the performance of domestic duties, and does not run about much among people; just as a virgin in the Hebrew language is also called בתולה Bethulá (or beſſula), which derives from the lost root word בתל batál, still to be found in the Arabic language, in which בתל batala means "to separate," because she is separated from other people and does not go out much into the public streets, but remains at home; whereas in the Chaldean language a harlot is called נפקת נafkath bára (or nafkas bóro), that is, "a street-runner," because she is accustomed to running about here and there. For this reason, Abarbanel writes in his little book מפעלות אלהים Miphaloth (or Miphalos) Elohim, fol. 37, col. 1, where he treats of the aforementioned word Néelam, not incorrectly when he says: כתבו המדקדקים אשר לנו שמה הלשון נקרא הנער צעיר הימים עלם ועלמה מצד שענינם נעלם אם יהיה בעתיד חכם או סכל טוב או רע וגם שבפי המנהג ועל that is: Our Grammatici write that from this word Néelam, a young person is called Elem and Alma, because his nature is hidden, as to whether he will turn out wise or foolish, good or evil; and also because, according to custom and for the most part, an Elem, or young boy, and an Alma, or virgin, keep themselves hidden and secluded at home. It is likewise evident from 2 Macc 3:19 that virgins in former times kept themselves hidden in their houses and did not go out among the people, for it is read there that when a great lamentation arose in Jerusalem because Heliodorus had been sent there by King Seleucus to take the treasure from the Temple, even the virgins, who otherwise did not go out among the people, ran to the gates and onto the walls. Furthermore, it is also clearly to be seen from

Gen 3:15 that the Messiah, who is Jesus, was not to have had a bodily father, where God the Lord addressed the serpent, that is, Satan, in these words: I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your seed and her seed; he shall crush your head. For here only the seed of the woman is mentioned, and no mention is made of the seed of a man.

Regarding that which has been drawn from the accursed little book Toledoth - - or Tóledos Jéshu, it is very easy to see from it that it was inspired by the Devil, the father of lies, inasmuch as so many palpable, gross lies appear in it that nothing surpasses them; moreover, there are also things contained in it which are presented in an entirely different manner by other Jews, which is a sure sign of their diabolical slanders. For, firstly, it is stated that Jesus was born in the time of King Jannæi, whereas this king, who is called Alexander Jannæus in the historical records and was of the Hasmonean lineage, was made king in the year 3863 after the creation of the world, and thus 10 years before the birth of Christ, and long before the time of the Roman Emperor, as can be read in the Jewish historian Josephus in the 13th chapter; and he died in the year 3890 after the creation of the world, that is, 74 years before the birth of Christ, as the aforementioned book of Josephus shows in the 23rd chapter.

Second, it is alleged that Joseph Pandira, who was a great man, could find no suitable opportunity to come to Mary except once on a Sabbath evening, when she was sitting before her door, and that he went straight inside with her into a chamber and committed fornication with her, but that she believed it was her betrothed, Jochanan, who is said to have been a God-fearing man. Likewise, that Joseph Pandira went to her again from his house in the middle of the night and took his pleasure with her, but spoke not a word. But how could it have been that Mary went straight with Pandira into the house and into her chamber and allowed herself to be lain with by him? If it was completely dark, why would she have been sitting before her door? But if it was still a little light, she could surely have seen immediately that it was not her betrothed. Suppose, however, that it was completely dark: she would surely have spoken to him, and if he had not answered her, she could easily have noticed that something was not right and that Jochanan was not with her. But if he had answered, the deception would have been discovered immediately by the unfamiliar voice. Furthermore, it is written of Jochanan that he was a pious and God-fearing man, and Mary could therefore have gathered at once from the improper conduct and behavior of Joseph Pandira, especially because he refused to listen to her when she told him not to touch her, since she was afflicted with her womanly impurity, that it could not be the pious Jochanan but must be another, and indeed a godless villain. Moreover, Mary's house and chamber would surely not have stood open at night such that Pandira could have come to her again in the middle of the night; but if he had knocked, or called out to Mary to open for him, then in response to the knocking the question would have been asked: who is there? And if he had answered, or, as suggested, had called out to Mary without knocking, the deception would likewise have been revealed by the unfamiliar voice. To say nothing of many other absurd and unreasonable things that can be concluded from this.

Third, it is said that Mary had been slept with by Pandira and had become pregnant by him; likewise, that her betrothed, Jochanan, had complained of this to his teacher, Rabbi Shimon ben Shetach, and that Jochanan thereafter, once the matter had become publicly known, went away to Babylon. Had the matter been true, Rabbi Shimon ben Shetach would have reported it to the High Council, and certainly both Pandira and Mary would have been stoned, or, if Mary had been found innocent because she was under the impression that it had been her betrothed, then at the very least Pandira would have been stoned according to the Law of Moses: "If a young woman is betrothed to someone, and a man finds her in the city and lies with her, then you shall bring them both out to the gate of that city and stone them both to death." Deut 22:23-24. But since this did not happen, it is clear and plainly evident that it is an accursed lie and blasphemy.

Fourth, it is alleged that Mary had intercourse at a time when she was afflicted with her menstrual impurity. Had this been true, both Mary and Pandira would have forfeited their lives, and what the law requires in Lev 20:18 would infallibly have been carried out against them, where it is written: "If a man lies with a woman during her illness, and uncovers her nakedness, and uncovers the fountain of her blood, and she uncovers the fountain of her blood, both of them shall be cut off from among their people." For if they did not spare the one who gathered wood on a Sabbath, as can be seen in Num 15:32 etc., the Jews would have spared these two far less; indeed, after the matter came to light and they became the bitterest enemies of Christ, they would, out of hatred toward Christ, have very quickly brought Mary to punishment, and yet they let her go free until her death.

Fifth, it is reported that Mary lived in Bethlehem and gave birth to Jesus there; afterward it is said that he went to school in Jerusalem, whereas he was in fact raised in Nazareth, as is to be read in Matt 2:22, and accordingly went to school there. Finally, sixth, it is blasphemously claimed that Jesus was a Mamser, or son of a whore. The falseness of this diabolical lie and slander is, however, irrefutably demonstrated by the fact that Jesus taught very often and for long periods of time in the Temple at Jerusalem. Had this blasphemy been true, he would not have been permitted to enter it, nor to come before the congregation of God, for it is expressly written in Deut 23:2: "No bastard shall enter the congregation of the Lord." Indeed, the scribes and Pharisees, who were his declared enemies, would not have permitted him to enter, but would rather have seized upon this as further grounds to persecute him and to make him hated by everyone. Yet we read nowhere in the history of the New Testament that such a charge was ever brought against him, even though many other blasphemous matters, which were mentioned above at the beginning of this chapter, are found therein, and the Evangelists would not have kept silent about it.

It is also well worth noting, in addition to the above, that according to the testimony of the Talmud, no bastard was permitted to go to Jerusalem, or to sit among the boys who were learning and studying, as is read in the tractate Avóth Rabbi Náthan (or Ovos Rabbi Nóson) fol. 5. col. 1. as follows: מי שעבר עברה והוליד ממזר אומרים לו ריקה חבלת בעצמך חבלת בי היו יושבין ושונין בירושלים והיה הממזר יושב עד שמגיע באשדוד ואומר אוי לי אלו לא הייתי ממזר כבר הייתי יושב ושונה בין התלמידים עכשיו שאני ממזר איני יושב ושונה בין התלמידים לפי שאין ממזר נכנס בין התלמידים שזאמר וישב ממזר באשדוד that is: To the one who commits a transgression and begets a bastard, it is said, you have wronged yourself and wronged me. They (namely the schoolboys) sat and learned in Jerusalem, but the bastard sat until he came to Ashdod, and said: Woe is me! If I were not a bastard, I would now also sit and learn among the disciples; but now, since I am a bastard, I do not sit and learn among the disciples, for no bastard enters Jerusalem, as it is said (Zech 9:6): And the bastard sat in Ashdod. Now if these words of the Talmud are held by the Jews to be true, how could it have come to pass that Jesus came to Jerusalem and went to school there? How also could he have passed before the council in Jerusalem and bowed to no one among them except his teacher, if no bastard was tolerated in Jerusalem or admitted to the school? His teacher, Rabbi Jehoschua ben Perachja, is expressly stated, as noted in the book Emek hammelech fol. 135. col. 3. in the nineteenth chapter cited above, under the title Scháár réscha difer ánpin, to have also been a member of the great council; how then would that man have accepted a bastard as his pupil? That the said Rabbi Jehoschua ben Perachja is supposed to have been his teacher is found in Abarbanel's book Májene jeschúa fol. 67. col. 1. in the tenth Májan, in the eighth after Tamar, in these words: וספק אחר יש לבני עמנו בדבר הזה במה שאמרו שישוע הנצרי מת ס"ב שנה קודם חרבן הבית כי מצינו בתלמוד שהיה תלמידו של יהושע בן פרחיה that is: Our people also have yet another doubt in this matter, inasmuch as they (the Christians) say that Jesus the Nazarene died forty-two years before the destruction of the Temple, for we find in the Talmud that he was a disciple of Jehoschua ben Perachja. As for the Talmud that Abarbanel mentions, it is read therein in Tractate Sanhedrin fol. 107. col. 2. and in Tractate Sota fol. 47. col. 1. that when King Jannai had the Rabbis killed in Jerusalem, the said Rabbi Jehoschua ben Perachja fled to Alexandria in Egypt, and his disciple Jesus went there with him; and this is also stated in the book Chisuk emuna, p. 435, as well as in the book Maggen Abraham in the fifty-ninth chapter. Since, therefore, according to the teaching of the Talmud, no bastard was permitted to come to Jerusalem, go to school, and study there, and yet Jesus, according to the testimony of the Talmud, studied in Jerusalem and is even said to have had a member of the great council as his teacher, it follows from this that he was by no means a bastard.

Because those who deal in frivolous lies are always inconsistent and do not agree with one another in their fabrications, the same thing happens here, in the same manner, with the godless Jews driven by the father of lies, the wretched Devil, who do not agree with one another in what they write about Jesus, as will be seen as clear as the sun from what follows. First, it is to be observed that the one who wrote the accursed little book Toledoth (or Toledos) Jeschu states that Joseph Pandira was an inhabitant of Bethlehem and was of the tribe of Judah, from which it follows that he was a Jew. Moreover, the name Joseph also indicates that he must have been a Jew, since the pagans at that time gave no one among them such a name. Rabbi Abraham Perizol, however, writes in his book Maggen Abraham, in the 59th chapter, as follows: ואו פנדירא כתב הרמב"ם ז"ל גוי היה, that is: Concerning this Pandira, Rabbi Moshe bar Maimon, of blessed memory, writes that he was a pagan.

Second, it is reported in the little book Toledoth Jeshu that Mary's bridegroom was named Jochanan, while Joseph Pandira was a soldier who spent his life in robbery and wrongdoing. Rabbi Abraham Perizol, on the other hand, writes in the aforementioned 59th chapter that Mary's bridegroom was named Joseph, while Pandira was a carpenter, and his words read as follows: וזה מנהג לישראל שהיו קידושים לארוס עם ארוסתו וכן עכר בפרק א' מכתובות ועל כן לא היה יכול לטעון טענת בתולים וזה יוסף היה רגיל להתייחד עמה בכל לילה בצאתו מבית הועד ולילה אחד בא פנדירא וחשבה שהוא ארוסה ונתעברה הימנו והיה פנדירא חרש עצים: that is, it had been the custom in Israel to leave the bridegroom alone with his bride, as is reported in the Talmudic tractate Kethuvóth (or Kesúvos) in the first chapter, and for this reason he could not bring a complaint regarding her virginity. This Joseph, however (Mary's bridegroom), was accustomed, whenever he went out from the synagogue or school, to be alone with her (with Mary). But one night Pandira came, and she supposed it was her bridegroom, and she became pregnant by him; and this Pandira was a carpenter.

Third, it is said in the aforementioned poisonous slander-book Toledóth Jeschu that when Pandira had lain with Mary, she had supposed it was her bridegroom Jóchanan; whereas in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Calla fol. 18. col. 2. it is reported that, because her husband had separated himself from her at their wedding on account of her menstrual impurity, the one who had escorted her at the wedding came to her and lay with her.

Fourth, it is stated in the aforementioned booklet Toledóth Jeschu that it was proclaimed with three hundred trumpets and announced that Jesus was a Mamser and unfit to enter the congregation. In the Talmud, however, a different reason is given for why the trumpets were blown, and not with three hundred but with four hundred, where in the tractate Sanhédrin, fol. 107. col. 2. it is written as follows: כי קטלינהו ינאי מלכא לרבנן אזל ר' יהושע בן פרחיה וישו לאלכסנדריא של מצרים כי הוה שלמא שלח ליה שמעון בן שטח מיני ירושלים עיר הקדש לייכי אלכסנדריא של מצרים אחותי בעלי שרוי בתוכך ואנכי יושבת שוממה קם אתא לאתרמי ליה ההוא אושפיזא עבדו ליה יקרא טובא אמר כמה יפה אכסניא זו אמר ליה רבי עיניה טרוטות אמר לו רשע בכך אתה עוסק אפיק ארבע מאות שיפורי ושמתי, אתא לקמיה כמה זמנין אמר ליה קבלן לא הוה קא משגח ביה יומא חד הוה קא קרי קריאת שמע אתה לקמיה סבר לקבוליה אחוי ליה בידיה הוא סבר מדחא דחי ליה אזל זקף לבינתא והשתחוה לה אמר ליה הדר בך אמר ליה כך מקובלני ממך כל החוטא ומחטיא את הרבים אין מספיקין בידו לעשות תשובה: that is, when King Jannai killed the Rabbis, Rabbi Jehóscha ben Peráchja went with Jesus to Alexandria in Egypt. But when there was peace, Schimón ben Schétach sent him a letter with the following content: From me, Jerusalem the holy city (herewith comes a greeting) to you, Alexandria in Egypt. O my sister, my husband dwells within you, but I sit desolate (or devastated). Thereupon he (Rabbi Jehóscha ben Peráchja) set out with his disciple Jesus to return to Jerusalem, and came to an inn where great honor was shown to him, and he said: how beautiful is this achsanja, that is, inn. Then (Jesus, who understood this to refer to the innkeeper, since achsanja also means an innkeeper) said to him: her eyes are oblong and round (and she is therefore not so very pretty). At this the Rabbi Jehoscha became angry and said to him: you godless man, do you pay attention to such things? He also had four hundred trumpets brought (and blown with them) and placed him under the ban. Jesus, however, went to him frequently and begged him to receive him back; but he paid no attention to him. One day, however, when Rabbi Jehoscha was reading the words (Deut 6:4) "Hear, O Israel," etc., he came before him, and the Rabbi Jehoscha had it in mind to receive him again and beckoned to him with his hands; but he (Jesus) supposed that he had been entirely dismissed and rejected by him (with such a beckoning), and therefore went away, set up a baked brick, and bowed down before it (or worshipped it). When Rabbi Jehoscha then told him that he should turn back and repent, he said to him: I have been taught by you that when someone sins and causes many others to sin, the power to repent is not granted to him. This blasphemy appears in almost the same words also in the Talmudic tractate Sota fol. 47. col. 1. and in the disputation of Rabbi Jeziel which he held with Nicolaus, p. 19. Instead of four hundred trumpets, however, only three hundred are given by the aforementioned Jeziel, as in the booklet Toledoth Jeschu.

Since it has been mentioned here that Christ was placed under the ban through the blowing of trumpets, I cannot refrain from noting in this connection that it was formerly customary among the Jews, when someone was placed under the ban, to blow trumpets, so as to strike all the greater terror both into the one upon whom the ban was laid and into the congregation. This is confirmed in the book En Jisrael, fol. 66, col. 1, from the fourth chapter of the Talmudic tractate Kidduschin, fol. 70, col. 1, with these words: הוא גברא דעל לבי מטבחיא בפומהדיתא אמר להו הבו לי בשרא אמדו ליה נטר עד דשקיל שמעיה דרב יהודה בר יחזקאל ברישא ונהב לך אמר מאן יהודה בר שיקקאל דקדים לי דשקיל מן קמאי אזלו אמרו ליה לרב יהודה איפקר אפיק שיפורה ושמתייה: that is, Once a man came into the butcher's stall in Pumbeditha and said to them (namely, the butchers): give me meat. They said to him: wait until the servant of Rabbi Jebuda, the son of Jecheskeel, has received his portion first, and then we will give to you as well. To this he replied: who is Rabbi Jebuda, the son of Schaviskal (that is, of the roast-devourer, thus mockingly altering the name Jecheskeel, which means Ezekiel, into the name Schaviskal, which signifies a devourer of roasts), that he should go before me and receive before me? They then went and told Rabbi Jebuda, and he became angry and had the trumpets blown and placed him under the ban. So also in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 7, col. 2, it is read: רב הונא כי הוה נפיק לדינא אמר הכי אפיקו לי מאני דחנותי מקל ורצועה ושופרא וסנדלא: that is, When Raf Huna went to court, he would speak thus: bring me the instruments of my workshop, a staff and a strap, and a trumpet, as well as a shoe. And Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes in his commentary on this passage in the following manner: סנדל: שופר לשמתא תנדל: שופר למלקות: רצועה לרצועה: לחליצה: that is, the leather strap was for flogging; the staff for the blows of chastisement, so that he (namely, the one who had done wrong) might repent; and the trumpet for the pronouncement of banishment (which is called Schammata and Niddui); and the shoe for the drawing off, namely when a widow drew off the shoe of her deceased husband's brother who refused to marry her, as is commanded in Deut 25:9. From this it is thus evident that the judges made use of trumpets for the ban. In this same manner the Samaritans are said to have formerly been placed under the ban by the Jews, as may be read at the end of the 37th chapter of the chapters of Rabbi Elieser, where it is reported that the Samaritans waged war against the Jews while they were engaged in the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem and sought to kill Nebemiah, whereby the work was hindered for two years; and it then follows: מה עשה עזרא וזרובבל בן שאלתיאל ויהושע בן יהוצדק קבצו את כל הקהל אל היכל יי' והביאו שלש מאות כהנים ושלש מאות תינקות ושלש מאות שופרות ושלש מאות ספרי תורה בידם והיו תוקעים והלויים משוררים ומזמרים לו ומגדים את הכותיים בסוד שם המפורש ובכתב הנכתב על הלוחות ובחרם בית דין העליון ובחרם בית דין התחתון שלא יאכל אדם מִישראל פת כותי עד עולם מכאן אמרו כל האוכל פת כותי כאלו אוכל בשר חזיר. ואל יתגייר אדם כותי ואין להם חלק בתחיית המתים שנ' לא לכם ולנו לבנות בית אלהינו לא בעולם הזה ולא בעולם הבא ועוד חלק בתחיית המתים שנ' שלא יהיה להם חלק ונחלה בירושלים: that is, What did Ezra and Serubabel, the son of Schealtiel, as well as Josua, the son of Jebozadak, do? They assembled the entire congregation in the Temple of the LORD and brought three hundred priests, together with three hundred boys and three hundred trumpets, and held three hundred books of the Law in their hands; and they blew (with the trumpets), while the Levites sang and made music, and they placed the Cutheans (or Samaritans) under the ban through the mystery of the Schem hammephorasch (that is, of the name of GOD, Jehova), and through the writing inscribed upon the tablets, as well as through the ban of the supreme court (in heaven) and the ban of the lower court (on earth), so that no person among the Israelites should ever eat of the Cutheans' bread: wherefore they said, whoever eats of a Cuthean's bread does as much as if he were eating swine's flesh. (They further pronounced the ban upon them thus:) that no Cuthean should be received as a fellow believer; and that they should have no share in the resurrection of the dead, as it is said (Ezra 4:3): it is not fitting that you and we should build the house of our GOD, neither in this world nor in the world to come. And furthermore, that they should have no part nor any inheritance in Jerusalem.

Just as people were put under the ban by the blowing of trumpets, so it is also read in the Talmudic tractate Schebuoth fol. 36. col. 1. and in the tractate Moéd Káton fol. 16. col. 1. that the city of Meros, which is mentioned in Judg 5:23, was banned in this manner, since it is written there as follows: אמר עולא בארבע מאה שיפורי שמתיה עולא למרוז that is: Ula said that Barak put the city of Meros under the ban with four hundred trumpets.

Regarding the ban by which a person is punished, it should be known that among the Jews there are three kinds of it, concerning which Rabbi Elias writes in his little book Tischbi, fol. 92, col. 2, under the word Schammáta, as follows: שלשה מיני חרמות הן נדוי חרם ושמתא ומאי היא הריחוק ואם לא היה שב היו משמתין אותו that is: There are three kinds of ban, Niddui, Cherem, and Schammáta; and the word Niddui signifies a separation (or rejection); and when the one who has been placed under the ban Niddui does not repent, he is placed under the (second) ban Chérem, which is called חרם

Chérem (a word whose letters sum to 248) because it (through the curse that thereby befalls the person) penetrates into his 248 limbs. If, however, he still does not repent, he is placed under the (third) ban Schammáta, and the word Schammáta means as much as scham mitha, that is, death is there, which may be far from us. The aforementioned Elias also expresses himself on this matter in the said little book, fol. 56, col. 2, under the word Niddui, as follows: נידוי זה גדול מזה חרם ושמתא כולם ענין חרם that is: The words Niddui, Chérem, and Schammáta all three signify a ban, but each one is greater than the other. Concerning the first two bans, the following is taught in the book Schylchan aruck, in the section Jore dea, numero 334, §. 2: אין נדוי פחות משלשים יום ואם אינו חוזר בו מחרימים לו עד שלשים יום לאחר שלשים יום ואם אינו חוזר בו שונים לנדות: that is: The ban Niddui lasts no fewer than thirty days; and if he does not repent, he is placed under this ban for a further thirty days. But if he does not repent, one waits yet another thirty days, and he is then placed under the Cherem, which ban is more severe than the ban Niddui. By means of this ban Niddui, which word derives from נדה Nada, that is, to withdraw, to step back, and Nidda, that is, to separate and exclude, a person is separated and excluded from human society, so that no one may sit within four cubits of him, as may be seen in the cited passage of the book Jore dea, and he is excluded from the synagogue. By the ban Cherem, however, which is more severe than Niddui, the transgressor is expelled from the community and the synagogue with curses pronounced over him. By the ban Schammáta, however, which is the most severe of all, he is completely and forever excluded from all human society, both in civic life and in the synagogue, and is surrendered to divine judgment, in such a manner that he can no longer be reconciled with men. As for what causes there are for which a person is placed under the ban, and how one otherwise proceeds further with him in such a state, this may be sufficiently seen in the aforementioned passage of the book Jore dea. With this, however, enough has been said about the ban; we must now return to the previous subject, namely the disagreement among the Jews in their fabrications concerning Jesus.

Finally, fifth, it is read in the satanic little book Toledoth Jeschu that, when Jesus had passed before the Synedrio, or High Council in Jerusalem, and had shown honor only to his teacher and had bowed before him, it thereby came out and came to light that he was a child of a whore. The converted Dietrich Schwabe, however, recounts in the first part, in the first chapter of his Jüdischer Deckmantel, p. 28 and 29, the matter from a book called מעשה תלוי Maase Tolui, that is, the Story of the Hanged One, in an entirely different manner, which he had learned during his time in Judaism, and reports that the following is written therein: There had been in the Second Temple a loose, worthless rogue who had thrown or struck a ball before the Temple, so that the ball had run into the Temple under the table where the Sanhedrin, that is, the seventy most learned men, had taught and passed judgment. This runaway rogue (by whom they mean Christ) had run into the Temple after the ball, בפריעת ראש bifrias rosch, that is, with uncovered head, which the scholars regarded as a great evil and sin; and one among the seventy scholars, by the name of Schómma, had said: see what a חוצץ chózuf, or עז פנים as pánim, that is, what a shameless youth this one is. Another rabbi, by the name of Hillel, had said: see what a Mamfer, or child of a whore, this one is. Likewise the third had spoken, saying he was a Mamfer and ben hannidda, that is, a child of a whore, who had been conceived in his mother's uncleanness. Now it came to pass on the next following day that the aforementioned rabbi had come to the market to buy a pot of milk, and had gone to a woman by the name of Maria, who had the milk; whereupon the people said to this rabbi: Rabbi, why would you buy from this whore? Thereupon the rabbi asked the woman whether this was true. She, however, answered: Rabbi, it is true; it once came to pass that my husband was not at home, and a blacksmith came to me and had his way with me, from which this son came, whom you yesterday called Mamfer ben hannidda. Then the rabbi spoke: במקום ברוך bóruch hammókom, blessed be GOD, who has put the true truth into my mouth. Thus far are the words of Dietrich Schwabe. When one now holds this fabricated blasphemy against what was presented above from the little book Toledóth Jéschu, p. 3, 4, 5, 6, and from the Tractate Cálá found in the Talmud, fol. 18, col. 2, one finds that most of it does not agree with one another at all, which is an infallible mark of diabolical lies. Various such blasphemous books have been written against our Savior, and the wretched devil has inspired and breathed into one person to write this, and into another to write that; hence the matter is presented yet differently in Samuel Friedrich Brentzen's little book, Der Abgestreiffte Jüdische Schlangen-Balg, namely as he had learned it from his rabbis during the time when he was still a Jew, where at p. 2 in the first chapter he writes as follows: In a book called Máase tólui, which is not printed but written in Hebrew cursive script, and which the Jews read secretly in their homes on Christmas night, it is openly stated that Christ was a child of a whore, who had studied exceedingly well. Once he had gone out of school and had thrown a ball onto a roof, whereupon his rabbi, or schoolmaster, called out: who threw onto the roof? Some of his schoolmates answered that Jeschu had done it, whereupon the rabbi cried out: stop throwing, you Mamser ben hannidda, that is, you son of a whore, who were conceived in uncleanness. Thereupon Jeschu immediately ran to his mother and asked her where his father was; his mother said he had died, with which he would not be satisfied, but pressed her so long until his mother told him that he was a Mamser, or son of a whore. These are the words of Samuel Friedrich Brentzen. It is therefore from all of the above more than sufficiently evident that Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his little book Der Jüdische Theriak, in the first chapter, number 3, once again shamelessly and against his better knowledge accused the aforementioned converted Friedrich Samuel Brentzen of lying, in that he denied against him that the Jews call Jesus a Mamser and Ben hannidda.

So that the godless Jews may be all the more convicted of their accursed lies and terrible blasphemy, I will set down here from Suidas what took place in the time of Emperor Justinian, who reigned in the year of Christ 528, between a silver merchant who was a Christian and was called Philippus, and a Jew by the name of Theodosius, who was the foremost among the Jews. The words read as follows, p. 1228. Ὡς. of the Geneva printing from the year 1619, under the entry Ἰησοῦς Jesus, in the Greek language:

Ἐν τοῖς χρόνοις τοῦ εὐσεβεσάτου βασιλέως Ἰουστινιανοῦ γέγονεν ἄνθρωπός τις ἀρχηγὸς τῶν Ἰουδαίων, Θεοδόσιος ὄνομα αὐτῷ, ὃς πλείστοις τῶν χριστιανῶν γνωσὸς ὑπῆρχε, καὶ αὐτῷ τῷ μνημονευθέντι πιστῷ βασιλεῖ. κατὰ δὲ τοὺς χρόνους ἐκείνους ἦν τις ἄνθρωπος χριστιανός, Φίλιππος ὄνομα αὐτῷ, τὴν μέθοδον ἀργυροπράτης. οὗτος γνωσὼς ἔχων τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεοδόσιον, καὶ πολλὴν πρὸς αὐτὸν σῶζων τὴν γνησιότητα προετρέπετο αὐτὸν, καὶ ἐνεθέτει γενέσθαι χριστιανόν. ἐν μιᾷ οὖν τῶν ἡμερῶν ὁ προλεχθεὶς Φίλιππος πρὸς τὸν λεχθέντα Θεοδόσιον τοιαῦτά τινα ἔλεγε. τί δήποτε σοφὸς ἀνὴρ ὑπάρχων, καὶ ἀκριβῶς ἐπιστάμενος τὰ τοῦ νόμου καὶ τῶν προφητῶν κεκηρυγμένα περὶ τοῦ δεσπότου χριστοῦ, οὐ πιστεύεις αὐτῷ, καὶ γίνῃ χριστιανός; πέπεισμαι γὰρ περὶ σοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ ἀγνοῶν τὰ τῶν θεοπνεύστων γραφῶν προλεχθέντα περὶ τῆς κοινῆς ἡμῶν δεσπότου χριστοῦ παρουσίας, παραιτῇ τοῦ γενέσθαι χριστιανός. σπεῦσον οὖν σῶσαι τὴν σεαυτοῦ ψυχὴν, πιστεύων εἰς τὸν σωτήρα καὶ κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν χριστόν, ἵνα μὴ ἐπιμένων τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, κρίσει αἰωνία ὑπεύθυνον σεαυτὸν καταστήσῃς.

That is to say: In the time of the most pious Emperor Justinian, there was a man who was the chief of the Jews, Theodosius by name, who was known to very many of the Christians, and also to the aforementioned faithful emperor. Now in those times there was a certain Christian man, Philippus by name, a silversmith by trade. This man, being well acquainted with Theodosius and maintaining great genuine affection toward him, urged and encouraged him to become a Christian. On one of those days, then, the aforementioned Philippus said something of the following sort to the said Theodosius: Why is it that you, being a wise man and knowing precisely what the law and the prophets have proclaimed concerning Christ the Lord, do not believe in Him and become a Christian? For I am persuaded concerning you that it is not out of ignorance of what the God-breathed scriptures have foretold concerning the coming of our common Lord Christ that you refuse to become a Christian. Make haste, therefore, to save your own soul by believing in our Savior and Lord Jesus Christ, lest by persisting in unbelief you render yourself liable to eternal judgment.

Having heard these things spoken to him by the Christian, the Jew received him, offered him verbal expressions of thanks, and replied to him as follows: "I accept your love according to God, because, being zealous for the salvation of my soul, you strive to persuade me to become a Christian. Therefore, as before God, who knows and beholds the hidden things of hearts, I will speak my words to you without deceit, without hypocrisy, and with all truth. That the Christ proclaimed beforehand by the Law and the Prophets, the one worshipped by you Christians, has indeed come, I am fully persuaded and confess boldly, as to a genuine friend who is always zealous for my benefit. But, held fast by human reasoning, I do not become a Christian, and in this I condemn myself. For now, being a Jew, I am a leader among the Jews, and I enjoy great honor and many gifts of all things necessary for this life. And I suppose that even if I were to become patriarch of the catholic church, or were to receive greater offices and positions of eminence from you, I would not be deemed worthy of such great esteem. So, in order not to fall away from what seems to be pleasant in this life, I despise the life to come, doing this wrongly. But in order to demonstrate to your love that my words are true, I will confide to you a mystery which is kept hidden among us Hebrews, from which we know with certainty that the Christ worshipped by you Christians is himself the one proclaimed beforehand by the Law and the Prophets, not only from those things written above, but also from the mystery recorded and kept hidden among us."

The account of the mystery is as follows. In ancient times, when the temple in Jerusalem was being built, it was the custom among the Jews to appoint priests in the temple equal in number to the twenty-two letters of our alphabet. For this reason we also count the divinely inspired books as twenty-two. A register was therefore kept in the temple, in which the name of each of the twenty-two priests was recorded, along with the name of his father and his mother. When one of the priests died, the remaining priests would assemble in the temple and by vote appoint another priest in place of the deceased, thus filling out the number of twenty-two priests; and it was recorded in the register that on such and such a day such and such a priest had died, the son of so-and-so and so-and-so, and that in his place such and such a person had been appointed, the son of so-and-so and so-and-so. While this custom prevailed among the Jewish people, it came to pass in those times when Jesus was residing in Judea that one of the twenty-two priests died, before Jesus had begun to reveal himself publicly and to teach people to believe in him. The remaining priests therefore assembled to appoint another priest in place of the deceased, and as each one proposed the person he considered worthy of the office, the others rejected him as lacking in the virtue required of one who is to be appointed priest. For if a man was wise and of good character and conduct, yet happened to be ignorant of the law and the prophets, he was judged unfit for the priesthood. After many priests had thus been nominated and all had been rejected, one priest rose and stood in the midst of the assembly and said to the rest: "Behold, many whom you have named have been found unsuitable for the priesthood. Hear me also, then, as I speak of one man who ought to be appointed in place of the deceased priest. For I believe that none of you will be displeased with the nomination I am about to make." When the other priests gave their consent, he spoke: "I wish that in place of the deceased priest, Jesus the son of Joseph the carpenter should be appointed, who is young in age but adorned with eloquence, conduct, and good character. And I believe that no man has ever been seen who is his equal in speech, in manner of life, or in character. And I think this is known and undeniable to all of you who dwell in Jerusalem." When the other priests heard these words, they accepted the man and confirmed the resolution, declaring Jesus to be more fit for the priesthood than any other man. Some, however, objected that he was not of the tribe of Levi but of the tribe of Judah, since they assumed him to be the son of Joseph; for so he was known among the Jews. And all testified that Joseph was descended from the tribe of Judah, not from the tribe of Levi. For this reason, on the grounds that he appeared not to be of the Levitical tribe, they opposed his appointment as priest. But the priest who had nominated him replied to them that his lineage was of mixed descent; for long ago, in ancient generations, there had been an intermingling of the two tribes, and from that intermingling the family of Joseph was descended. When the other priests heard this, they consented to the resolution, and it was the common decision of all the priests assembled that Jesus should be appointed in place of the deceased priest.

Since it was the custom to record not only the name of the one being made a priest in the register, but also the names of his father and his mother, some of them said that they ought first to summon the parents and learn their names from them, and also to receive their testimony as to whether the one being appointed to the priesthood was indeed their son. And this pleased everyone. The one who had proposed that Jesus should become a priest said that Joseph, the father, had died. They all therefore agreed to bring his mother before the council, to learn from her whether she was the mother of Jesus and whether she had borne him, and to hear the name of her husband by whom she had borne Jesus. And since this pleased everyone, they summoned the mother of Jesus and said to her: "Since a certain priest, the son of so-and-so and so-and-so, has died, and we wish to appoint your son Jesus in his place, and since it is the custom to record the name of the father and the mother, tell us whether Jesus is your son and whether you bore him." Mary, upon hearing this, answered and said to the priests: "That Jesus is my son I confess, for I bore him, and the men and women who were present when I gave birth to him bear witness to me. But as for his having no father on earth, receive from me whatever assurance you wish. For when I was a virgin, staying in Galilee, an angel of God, while I was awake and not asleep, entered the dwelling where I was and brought me the good news that I would bear a son by the Holy Spirit, whose name he commanded me to call Jesus. Being therefore a virgin, and having seen this vision, I conceived and bore Jesus, remaining a virgin until this day, even after having borne him." When the priests heard this, they ordered trustworthy midwives to come, and they permitted them to examine carefully whether Mary was truly still a virgin. These, having received confirmation from the facts, affirmed that she was indeed a virgin. There also came the women who had been present and had seen her giving birth, bearing witness that Jesus was her son. The priests, being utterly astonished at what Mary had said and at those who had testified concerning her, answered and said to Mary: "Tell us openly, so that we may hear from your own mouth whose he is and whose son he is, so that we may thus register him. For whatever parents you name to us, those and no others we will register." She answered and said: "In truth I bore him, knowing no father of his on earth; but from the angel I heard that he is the Son of God. He is therefore the son of me, who am called Mary, and the Son of God; and I remain a virgin who has not married." When the priests heard this, they brought the register and wrote as follows: "On this day a certain priest, the son of so-and-so and so-and-so, died; and in his place, by the common vote of all of us, Jesus has become a priest, the Son of the living God and of Mary the Virgin."

And thus the codex was saved from the temple through the diligence of those who held the foremost rank among the Jews, at the time of the capture of the temple and of Jerusalem, and it lies stored away in Tiberias. And this mystery has become known to very few and faithful members of our nation, wherefore it was also revealed to me as a ruler and teacher of the nation of the Jews. For we have been fully persuaded not only from the Law and the Prophets that the Christ worshipped by you Christians is Himself the Son of the living God, who came upon the earth for the salvation of the world, but also from the census

When the Christian heard these things spoken to him by the Jew, he was moved by divine zeal and said to the Jew that he would immediately and without delay report to the faithful and pious king what had been said by him, so that he might send to Tiberias and bring to light the codex of which he spoke, as a refutation of the unbelief of the Jews. But the Jew said to the Christian: why do you wish to bring judgment upon your own soul, and to bring this matter before the king, and yet fail to obtain what you are striving for? For if any such thing were to happen, a great war is likely to break out, and killings will follow. And then, if they see themselves being overpowered, they will burn the place in which the codex is stored. And we shall have labored in vain, failing to achieve what we are striving for, becoming merely the cause of the shedding of blood. For I have made these things plain to your love as to a genuine friend, in order to persuade you that it is not out of ignorance that I am holding back from Christianity, but out of vainglory.

When the Christian heard these things from the Jew and believed what was said by him to be true, he did not make this account known to the faithful Emperor Justinian, lest that faithful and great emperor, moved by divine zeal, should bring about a shedding of blood, and that without even the desired goal being accomplished. But he made this account known to many of his acquaintances and friends; and we, having learned it from those who heard it from the aforementioned Philip the silversmith, took no small care, wishing to know whether the Jew had truly spoken these words concerning such a registration. We therefore found Josephus, the writer of the capture of Jerusalem, of whom Eusebius of Pamphilus makes frequent mention in his ecclesiastical history, plainly saying in his memoirs of the captivity that Jesus sanctified in the temple together with the priests. Having found Josephus, an ancient man who lived not long after the apostles, saying this, we sought to find this same account confirmed also from the divinely inspired scriptures. We therefore found in the Gospel according to Luke that Jesus entered into the synagogue of the Jews, and a book was handed to him, and he read from Isaiah the prophet, who says: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because of which He has anointed me; He has sent me to preach good news to the poor." And we reasoned that if Christ Jesus had not held some liturgical office among the Jews, a book would not have been given to him in the synagogue to read aloud to the hearing of the people. For not even among us Christians is it permitted for just anyone to read to the people in church from the books of the divinely inspired scriptures, unless one is enrolled in the clergy. And from what was written by Josephus, and from what was recorded by the evangelist Luke, we came to know that Theodosius the Jew, in telling the aforementioned account to the said Philip the silversmith, did not fabricate it, but truly, as to a genuine friend, entrusted to Philip the mystery that had been kept hidden among the Jews.

That is: In the times of the very pious Emperor Justinian, there was a man, a chief of the Jews, by the name of Theodosius, who was known to most Christians, and indeed also to the aforementioned believing Emperor. Now at that same time there was a Christian by the name of Philippus, a silversmith by trade. This man had knowledge of Theodosius's conduct and manner of life, and maintained great sincerity toward him, and warned and admonished him that he ought to become a Christian. For this reason, the aforementioned Philippus said one day to the said Theodosius these words: Since you are a wise man, and are well aware of what is proclaimed in the Law and in the Prophets concerning the Lord Christ, why then do you not once believe in Him and become a Christian? For I am assured by you that it is not out of ignorance of that which has been foretold in the God-given Scriptures concerning the presence of our common Lord Christ that you refuse to become a Christian. Hasten therefore to save your soul, and believe in our Savior and Lord Jesus Christ, so that you do not, if you persist in unbelief, make yourself subject to eternal judgment (or eternal damnation).

When the Jew had heard these words spoken to him by the Christian, he praised him and thanked him for his speech, and answered him in the following manner. I accept your love, which comes from God's prompting, that you apply diligence to bring about the salvation of my soul, and that you take pains through admonition that I should become a Christian; for this reason I wish to speak with you, as before God, who knows and sees the hidden things of hearts, without deceit and hypocrisy, and with pure truth. That the Christ proclaimed in the Law and the Prophets has come, who is worshipped by you Christians, this I know with complete certainty, and I confess it in confidence, as to my sincere friend, who always applies himself to acts of kindness toward me; but since I am overcome by human thoughts, I do not become a Christian, and I condemn myself in this. For since I am now a Jew, I am a chief among the Jews, and am greatly honored, and receive many gifts, and enjoy all that is serviceable to this life. I hold, however, that even if I were to become a Patriarch of the Catholic Church, or were to receive greater dominion and dignities from you, I would still not be deemed worthy of such honor as befalls me among the Jews. So that I may not, in this life, be deprived of those things which are held to be pleasures, I disregard the life to come, and do ill in this. But in order to make my words true to you, as my dear friend, I entrust to you a secret which is kept hidden among us Hebrews, from which we know precisely that the Christ who is worshipped by you Christians is the very one who was proclaimed in the Law and the Prophets, not only from what has been written above, but also from the secret transcribed and kept hidden by us.

This mystery, however, has the following nature. In ancient times, when the Temple in Jerusalem was being built, it was the custom among the Jews to appoint as many priests in the Temple as we have letters, which are twenty-two; hence we also count twenty-two divinely inspired books (in the Old Testament). Now there lay a book in the Temple, into which the name of each of the twenty-two priests was written, along with the name of his father and his mother; and when one of the priests died, the remaining ones gathered together in the Temple and, by common agreement, appointed another in the place of the deceased, thus restoring the number of twenty-two priests to its full count, and it was written in the book that on such and such a day, the priest N. N., son of N. N. and of N. N., had died, and that in his place N. N., son of N. N. and of N. N., had been chosen (and received). Now, while this custom was in use among the Jewish people, it came to pass in those times when Jesus was residing in the Jewish land, that one of the twenty-two priests died, before Christ had begun to reveal Himself and to teach that men should believe in Him. For this reason the remaining priests gathered together, so that they might place another priest in the place of the deceased; and when each one proposed the person he deemed worthy of becoming a priest, the others rejected him as one who did not fully possess the virtue required for a priest to be appointed. For if a man was already wise and good in his conduct and life, but had no knowledge of the Law and the Prophets, he was judged unfit for the priesthood. Now when in this manner many priests had been proposed and all had been rejected, one priest rose up and placed himself in the midst of them, and spoke to the others: behold, many of you have been named and found unfit for the priesthood; so receive (and hear) me now as well, as I speak of a man who ought to be chosen in the place of the deceased priest, for I hold that none of you will take displeasure at the proposal I am about to make. And after the remaining priests had urged him to speak his mind, he said: I wish that Jesus, the son of Joseph the carpenter, who is indeed still young in years but is adorned with words, with life, and with good conduct, should be placed in the deceased priest's stead; and I believe that no man has been seen who is so constituted in speech, in life, and in conduct as this one is; and I hold that this is known to all of you who dwell in Jerusalem, and cannot be contradicted. Now after the remaining priests had heard this speech, they received the man and confirmed his proposal, and declared that Jesus was more fit for the priesthood than any other man. Some, however, said of him that he was not of the tribe of Levi but of the tribe of Judah, and supposed that he was the son of Joseph; for so he was called by the Jews. That Joseph had come from the tribe of Judah and not from the tribe of Levi, all attested; and therefore, because it was held that he was not of the Levitical tribe, they prevented him from being made a priest. But the priest who had named (and proposed) him answered them and said that his lineage was mixed, for in former times, among the ancient genealogies, a mingling of these two tribes had occurred, from which Joseph's lineage descended. When the remaining priests heard this, they assented to his judgment, and it was determined by the common counsel of all the assembled priests that Jesus should be placed in the deceased priest's stead.

Since it was customary that not only the name of the one who was to become a priest, but also the name of his father and his mother, should be entered into the book, some among them said that one would first have to summon his parents and obtain their names from them, as well as their testimony as to whether the one chosen for the priesthood was indeed their son; and this pleased everyone. But the one who had first named Jesus to become a priest said that Joseph, the father of Jesus, had died, and that his mother alone was living; whereupon they all agreed that his mother should be brought before the council, and that one should inquire of her whether she was the mother of Jesus and whether she had borne him, and that one should hear the name of her husband by whom she had borne him. When this had pleased everyone, they summoned the mother of Jesus and spoke to her: since the priest N. N., son of N. N. and of N. N., has died, and we wish to receive your son Jesus into his place as priest, and since the custom is that the name of the father and the mother be recorded, tell us whether Jesus is your son and whether you have borne him. When Mary heard this, she answered and said to the priests: I do indeed confess that Jesus is my son, for I have borne him, and the men and women who were present when I bore him can testify to this; but as for his having no father on earth, receive a certain account of this from me, if you will: for when I was a virgin and was staying in Galilee, the angel of God came, while I was awake and had not been sleeping, into the house in which I was, and announced to me the joyful tidings that I would bear a son by the Holy Spirit, whose name he had commanded to be called Jesus. Since I was a virgin and had seen this vision, I conceived and bore this Jesus, and remained a virgin to this very day, even after I had given birth.

After the priests had heard this, they summoned trustworthy midwives and commanded them to examine carefully whether Mary was still certainly a virgin. And when these had obtained certainty from the matter, they confirmed that she was a virgin. There also came those women who had been present and had watched when she gave birth, and they testified that Jesus was her son. And the priests were astonished at what was said concerning Mary and those who gave testimony regarding her birth, and they said to Mary: "Now speak freely, so that we may hear from your own mouth whose he is and whose son he is, so that we may thus record him (in the book); for whomever you declare to have no parents, those and no others shall we record." But she answered and said: "I have indeed borne him, and I know of no one who is his father on earth; rather, I have heard from the angel that he is the Son of God. Therefore he is my son, I who am called Mary, and the Son of God; and because I have had no husband, I am a virgin." When the priests had heard this, they brought the book and wrote in it as follows: "On the day N. N., the priest N. N., son of N. N. and of N. N., died, and Jesus, the Son of the living God and of the Virgin Mary, by the common consent of us all, was made priest in his place."

This book was carefully preserved from the Temple by those who were the most prominent among the Jews at the time of the conquest (and destruction) of the Temple and the city of Jerusalem, and it lies in the city of Tiberias. This secret is known to very few of the faithful among our people, and for this reason it has also been revealed to me as a chief and teacher of the Jewish people; for we are assured not only from the Law and the Prophets, but also from the copy (of the aforementioned book) which has been preserved to this day and lies at Tiberias, that the Christ who is worshipped by you Christians is the Son of the living God, who came to earth for the salvation of the world.

When the Christian had heard such things said to him by the Jew, he was moved by a divine zeal and spoke to the Jew: I will immediately, and from this very hour, bring before the faithful and pious king what you have said, so that he may send to Tiberias and bring to light the book of which you speak, as proof of Jewish unbelief. But the Jew said to the Christian: why do you wish to bring damnation upon your own soul, and also to lay such a burden upon the king, and yet not obtain that which is sought with all diligence? For if this happens, a great war will arise, and acts of murder will follow upon it; and then when they (namely, the Jews of Tiberias) see that they are exhausted, they will burn the place in which the book lies; and we labor in vain if that which is earnestly sought should not succeed, and we were only the cause of a bloodshed. This I have made known to you, as my dear and sincere friend, so that I might prove to you that I reject Christianity not out of ignorance, but out of a vain delusion.

After the Christian had heard this from the Jew and had believed that what had been said by him was true, he did not, to be sure, make this account known to the King (or Emperor) Justinian, so that this believing and great King would not be moved by a divine zeal to bring about a bloodshed, since that which is so earnestly desired would not proceed successfully; however, he did make this account known to many acquaintances and friends. And when we learned it from those who had heard it from the aforementioned Philipppo, the silver merchant, we applied no small care, since we wished to know whether the Jew had spoken these things truthfully concerning this copy; therefore we found Josephus, the chronicler of the conquest of the city of Jerusalem, of whom Eusebius Pamphilus makes frequent mention in his Ecclesiastical History, who in the Commentarii or books of his captivity (and of the destruction of the city of Jerusalem) clearly states that Jesus performed divine worship in the Temple with the priests. Now when we had found that Josephus, who was an old man and had not lived a long time after the Apostles, had said this, we also searched in the divinely inspired Scriptures to find this account confirmed, and found in the Gospel of Luke (Luke 4:16-18) that Jesus had gone into the synagogue of the Jews, and that a book had been given to Him, and that He had read from the prophet Isaiah, who (Isa 61:1) says: The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, therefore He has anointed me and has sent me to proclaim the Gospel to the poor. We also concluded among ourselves that, if Christ Jesus had not held a priestly office among the Jews, no book would have been given to Him in the synagogue for Him to read before the people; for it is also not permitted among us Christians in the churches for anyone to read to the people any books of the divinely inspired Scriptures unless he belongs to the number of those who are appointed to the spiritual offices. We therefore know, from what has been written by Josephus and from what has been reported by the Evangelist Luke, that the Jew Theodosius did not fabricate what he recounted to the aforementioned Philipppo, the silver merchant, but rather entrusted to Philipppo, as an upright friend, the secret kept hidden among the Jews, and did so truthfully. These are the words from the Suidas.

From this, today's Jews can sufficiently see what the nature of Christ is, namely that He was conceived by the Holy Spirit and born of an undefiled virgin, and was thus the Son of God and of the Virgin Mary; likewise, that He was received into the number of the priests in the Temple, which testimony a chief man among the Jews was himself compelled by the prompting of his conscience to give Him, according to the contents of a book that had been kept in the Temple at Jerusalem, rescued from it before its destruction, and preserved in the city of Tiberias. If they were to consider this properly, as well as the aforementioned splendid testimony that Josephus gives concerning Christ, they would refrain from the abominable blasphemies and abusive words which, out of their great obduracy and blindness, they are accustomed to pour out against Him in a malicious manner, and would not call Him a Mamser, that is, a whoreson, as they do in a God-blaspheming fashion; nor would they attribute such shameful things to His holy and most innocent mother as is customary among them, of which matter partial account has been given in the preceding section, and further report will be rendered in what follows.

Nineteenth, they call Him בן סטדא ben Stada or בן פנדירא Ben Pandira, that is, the son of Stada, or the son of Pandira. Concerning this, the following is read in the book Maggen Abraham, chapter 59: נתעברה מפנדירא על כן היו קורין: למרים סטדא כלומר סטות דא מבעלה, that is, She (the Maria) became pregnant by Pandira, and for this reason she is called Stada, as if one wished to say, Sethath da mibbaalah, that is, this one has strayed from her husband. So too it has been reported at length above, from the accursed little book Toledos Jeschu, that the Jews allege that Pandira lay with Mariam, and that JESUS was begotten by him. This devilish blasphemy, however, is taken from the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 67. col. 1. and Schabbath (or Schabbas fol. 104. col. 2.), where JESUS is called the son of Stada, the son of Pandira; and it is disputed there whether Stada was the name of the husband of Maria, or rather the name of Maria herself. In the old Nizzachon, however, Joseph, the foster-father of Christ, is called at page 142 Ben Pandira, or the son of Pandira, where the following is read: כתוב להם בספר אלכסנדרוס לכשילדה חריא את בנה ישו בבית לחם: בחור אחד ושם היה חשכה גדולה יותר מן האורה ובא יוסף בן פנדירא ולקה הנער ושם אותו קריפא, that is, It is written in the book of Alexander, among them, that when Charja (that is, to avoid giving honor, "the filth," which is set in place of Maria mockingly, as has already been noted more than once) had given birth to her son Jesus in Bethlehem in a cave in which there was more darkness than light, Joseph, the son of Pandira, took the infant and laid him in a manger. From this it is clearly to be gathered that Rabbi Jechiel, in his disputation which he held with Nicolaus, as mentioned above, frivolously denied at page 18 that the mother of Christ is to be understood by the said Mariam who is alleged to have strayed from her husband.

Twentieth, they call him עול חזימא Ul hassimma, that is, a child of vice or shame, who was begotten through a committed act of vice, namely adultery (just as in Ezek 23:44, Oholah and Oholibah, on account of committed adultery and fornication, are called אשת הזמה Ischoth hassimma, that is, women of vice or shame, or vicious and shameful women); as also ייחום הזימא Jichum hassimma, that is, one conceived in a vicious manner. The word Jichum, however, properly means an inflammation or heating, and Isaac is called in the first part of the old Prague Machsor, fol. 118, col. 2, in the prayer that begins אמיץ כוח Ammiz coach, under the title Musaph schel jom Kippur, יחום זקוניו, that is, a heating of his (Abraham's) advanced age, because Abraham begot him in his old age; and in the Commentario, or the exposition thereon, it is explained by חימום הזרע Chimum bassera, that is, a heating of the seed. Both of the aforementioned blasphemous names are found, however, in the already frequently mentioned Nuremberg manuscript Machsor, in the prayer that begins: הגוים אפס ותוהו נגדך Haggójim ofes vatohu negdecha chaschuvim, under the title Schacharith (or Schacharis) schel jom Kippur, or Jozer lejom Kippur, which prayer, as Mr. Wülffer indicates in his annotations on the Jewish Theriack, p. 42, reads in its entirety as follows: הגוים אפס ותוהו נגדך חשובים בחוניך בדודים ועמם לא נחשבים מגומ נעולים מעשה העתוע והבלימ דבקך כדודים ממגדי לעז בולימ חזים הכין פסל מבקשים חרשים ונתיקך בהשכם נהערב ייחודך פורישימ הגוים והבם לאפדת מסכה מכינים ובירו דבך לעובדך ביראה מוכנים הגוים טוענים בכתף יתר צלייהם ידועך כורעים לך בפיקוק תליותם הגוים כסף מצפים עץ פסלם לקוחך בחביון עוזך ישימו פסלם הגוים מכנים קדושתך לעול הוסרו נשואים משקצט יחום אשת הזינוה הגוים סמל תמונת גאלת מאלוהיהם עמך מעידס אדונותך אלהי האלהים הגוים גר מוכס פזוות תכלתם צבאיך אתה קדוש יושב תהלותם הגוים קוראים ללא מושיע ומועיל דייניך נשענים כך סלמך להועיל הגוים שקר נסכם ולא אמן תמימך אומן מושיע ומועיל דייניך נשענים כך סלמך להועיל הגוים שקר נסכם ולא אמן תמימך אומן That is: The Gojim (understand: the Christians) are counted as absolutely nothing before You; Your proven ones (that is, the Jews) are separated from them and are not reckoned among them. The Gojim are (to You) an abomination on account of their erroneous and vain works; but we, who cleave to You, are separated from those who bow before a wooden block. The Gojim seek craftsmen to prepare images; but Your pious ones declare (and recount) early and late Your oneness (that You alone are God). The Gojim prepare their gold as a covering (or cladding) for the cast images; but we, who tremble at Your word, are ready to serve You with fear. The Gojim carry upon their backs that wood which remains to them as a surplus from what they use for roasting (in the kitchen) (understand: the image that is carved from the wood, whose hewn-off shavings were thrown into the fire); but we, Your acquaintances, bow before You with the locking of the joints of the spine (that is, deeply, and with a very bent and curved body). The Gojim overlay their wooden idols with silver; but those whom You have received (into Your people) place their trust in the hiddenness of Your strength. The Gojim give the name of Your holiness (that is, the name Jehovah and God) to the child of vice (by which the godless Jews understand Christ); Your carried ones (that is, the Israelites, of whom it is said in Isa 46:3, "you who have been carried from the womb") have an abomination before the conception of the vicious woman (that is, before him who was conceived of the vicious woman, by which, in a most blasphemous manner, Christ the Lord and His most innocent mother are understood). The Gojim make a God out of the image of the likeness of the Stinking One (by which Christ is also understood, because He, according to the error of the Jews, is supposed to have rotted and decayed in the earth); but Your people bear witness that You are the Lord and God of gods. The Gojim (worship) a trampled dead body, which is a frivolity of their corruption; but Your hosts (namely the Jews, say to You:) You are holy, and (for their sake) You sit (and wait) upon their praise (when they praise You in their prayers). The Gojim call upon one who can neither save nor be of use; Your friends (namely the Israelites) rely upon You, who teach how to be of benefit. The cast images of the Gojim are false (that is, false gods) and there is nothing true in them; but Your upright ones speak the truth of faith in You in their assembly (that is, in their synagogues and schools). These are the words of the aforementioned blasphemous prayer.

That this hellish blasphemy concerns our most precious Savior is clearly evident from the commentary on it, in which it is stated that by Ul bassimma, that is, the child of vice, is to be understood ישו הנוצרי שהוא בן הזימה, that is, Jesus the Nazarene, who is a son of vice. There also, over the words Jichum eschbeth (or elohes) bassimma, the following is written: הוא ישו הנוצרי שחטאו אמו, that is, This is Jesus the Nazarene, whom his mother, who was a licentious woman, conceived, and who was born through a committed act of vice. In the printed Jewish books of the Machzor, however, out of fear all the lines beginning with the word haggójim are omitted, with the exception of the first line, which the Jews know well by heart, or which they write alongside it, or on a separate piece of paper placed beside it, the like of which I myself have seen. And in the aforementioned printed books, in place of the words בשואיך משקצים יהום אשה הזימה, that is, Your bearers abhor the conception of the licentious women, stand the words בשואיך משקצים יהום ערת הזימה, that is, Your bearers abhor the conception of shame and vice (that is, him who was conceived through shame and vice), as may be seen in the Machzor printed here at Frankfurt am Main in the year 450 according to the Jewish reckoning, that is, anno 1690 according to our calendar, in quarto, fol. 71, col. 2, and in the aforementioned old Machzor published in folio at Prague, in the first part, fol. 98, col. 2, as well as in the second part of the Machzor printed in folio with a commentary at Wilmersdorf, fol. 185, col. 1, under the title Schacharith (or Schacharis) schel jom kippur, or Józer le jom kippur. Likewise, in the old Nizzachon, p. 87, over the words of Isa 9:6, "A child is born unto us," the following is written: אומרים אומרים המינים כי זה נאמר על יהום הזימה, that is, The heretics (namely the Christians) say that this is spoken of him who was conceived through an act of vice. And at p. 136 of the same work one reads: בפסוק אחד כתיב ולמשוח קדש קדשים ובפסוק שלישי למטה ממנו כתיב ואחרי השבועים ששים ושנים יכרת משיח ואין לו . הם עושים משני פסוקים פסוק אחד ואומרים לכשיבא

:יהודה, דוד ויהודה: יפסוק מלכות מבית דוד ויהודה: that is, In one verse (Dan 9:24) it is written: And to anoint the Most Holy; and in the third verse below this (that is, v. 26) it is written: And after the sixty-two weeks the Messiah shall be cut off and shall be no more. But they (the Christians) combine these two verses into one and say that (the purport of these words is) that when the Jichum bassimma, that is, he who was conceived through an act of vice, would come, the royal dominion of the house of David and Judah would then cease. This devilish blasphemy, however, has already been sufficiently refuted above.

Twenty-first, he is called נצר נאפוף Nezer Naafuf, that is, a branch of adultery, or adulterous branch, and this appears in the Selichoth (or Selichos) found in the Nuremberg Library, as the honorably remembered Mr. Wülffer indicates in his oft-cited annotations on the Jewish Theriaca, p. 40, where in a prayer beginning אנון תחן Esón táchan, on the fifth New Year's Day, the following is prayed: . ליבטום קמים ובה שוחת מערימים פה סמך להדיחם ומכבידים עול להכשיל כוחם . נואקים אליך בהתעטף רוחם . נחת למצוא מכובד שחוחם . שיה עקים במעמד צפוף וסליחה . עושקיהם יקניאוס בנצר נאפוף : that is: The enemies (namely the Christians) want to make them (Your children of Israel) fall, and dig a pit. They proceed secretly with cunning, so as to turn them away from You. They make the yoke heavy, in order to weaken their strength. They (the Israelites) cry out to You when their spirit grows faint, so that they may find rest from the burden of their misery. They pour out their prayer in a crowded state (that is, when they stand pressed close together in their synagogues), and ask for forgiveness with bowed head. Their oppressors (the Christians) provoke them with the adulterous branch (that is, with the תלוי Talui, as it is explained in the Commentario on this passage, which means "the hanged one" and signifies the crucified Christ). The aforementioned blasphemous words also appear in the prayer book of the Jews of Poland, Russia, Lithuania, Bohemia, and Moravia, printed at Amsterdam in the year of Christ 1681, in quarto, fol. 31, col. 1, under the title Selichoth le jôm schéni in erm. sdte, in the prayer Esón táchan; but in the other printed prayer books that I have been able to examine, the final words have been altered out of fear, as follows: עושקיהם יקניאום וינתנום לשיטוף, that is: Their oppressors provoke them and deliver them up to be torn apart.

Twenty-second, he is called נצר נתעב Nézer Nitaf, that is, a horrible or abominable branch. These two words Nézer nitaf appear in Isa 14:19, where the king of Babylon is thus named. The godless Jews, however, also apply this mocking name to our most precious Savior JESUS, and this occurs in their Selichóth (or Selichos), in a prayer for the second day of the New Year, which begins: ישראל עמך תתנה עורכים Jisraél ammechá techinna órechim, where the words in the aforementioned copy held in the Nuremberg Library, as can be seen in Mr. Wülfer's frequently cited annotations on the Jewish Theriaca, page 40, read as follows: טמאים הזוממים נחלתה לסבל כבודך להמיר ואחר הכל להתנצל / נצר נתעב לאלה לקבל יראתה הקדושה לנטוש ולחבל (Christians) intend to corrupt your inheritance, to alter your honor, and that we should defile ourselves with their vanity, accept the abominable branch as a God, and abandon and corrupt your holy fear. These blasphemous words have been omitted from the printed copies out of fear; in the Polish Siddúrim, however, this diabolical blasphemy stands at fol. 67, col. 2, under the title Józer leschábbath rischón ácher happésach, in a prayer which begins אין כמקרבאלים En camócha baillemím, expressed quite plainly with these words: משינאיד ראש נשאו דורשי אבות ואילים : יאמרו אויבינו פלילים . מה היהודים האמללים : קבו לכם עצה • פן תהיו לשמצה הן לריב ומצה : זאת תהיו כמותנו • לנצר נתעב תפנו : לעם אחד והיינו : יעקו לוקים וייעט • לא נשוב ולא נעבדה • שקץ תשקצנו • נתעב תתעבנו • סי וקינו גאלנו • אותו נעבד ונחשכנו , that is: your haters, (O God,) who consult the spirits of soothsayers and idols, lift up their heads. Our enemies, who are judges, say (to us:) what are you doing, you feeble Jews? Give yourselves counsel, lest you become a disgrace. Behold, there shall be strife and contention among us. But if you become such people as we are, and turn to the נצר נתעב Nézer nitaf, that is, the abominable branch (that is, as can be seen in the commentary thereon, accept as God him who came from the city of Nazareth, namely JESUS), then we shall be one people. Thereupon, however, those who are struck (by the Christians) cry out and answer: we will not apostatize, and will not serve him, (for it is written in Deut 7:26:) you shall hold it in utter abhorrence and loathing. Our Redeemer lives and is immortal; Him we will serve and praise.

It should also be mentioned here what Abarbenel writes in his book Májene jeschúa in the eighth Majan, in the fifth Tamar, fol. 44, col. 1, on Dan 7:8, after he has, at fol. 43, col. 4, interpreted the little horn as referring to the Pope of Rome and his clergy, and noted that the same speaks and acts against God's law, calling Christ Ben Nezer, and then breaks out into the following words: אתה דע לך שפירוש המראה הזאת כאשר הגעתי לפניו ער חמש עשרה שנה והעתיקה הקדוש ברוך הוא בשם אמר חז"ל כבר והיו עיני בו לפי שהיא פעלה הזות אמת המראה כפי מה שפירשתה . אני זה לשונם מסתכל היות בקרניא ואלו קרן אחרי זעירא סלקת ביניהון זו בן נצר ותלת מן קדמיתא אתעקרו מן קדמיה זה מוקדון וקרים וקירום . ואלו עינין כעיני אנשא בקדניא דא ופום ממלל ברברבן זו מלכות הרשעה כו 'ראה גם ראה איך פירשו אותו דקון אחרי זעירא על כן נצר שהוא ישוע הנוצרי ומידו בעינינו כפי המשך הכתוב מלכות הרשעה שהיא אדום , that is: You must know that the interpretation of this vision, as I have set it forth, came to my mind fifteen years ago; but see now, God has caused something to come before me which our sages, of blessed memory, had already said, whereby my eyes have been enlightened, since it brings to light that the truth of this vision is constituted just as I have explained it. This, however, is their statement: I observed the horns, and behold, another little horn broke forth between them, that is the Ben Nezer (or, that signifies the Ben Nezer). And three of the foremost horns were uprooted by it, that is (or signifies) Mokedon, and Kerus, and Kerirus. And behold, this horn had eyes like human eyes, and a mouth that spoke great things; this signifies the godless kingdom (that is, Christendom, as will be shown below in the seventeenth chapter of this first part, &c.). Take careful note of how they have interpreted that same little horn as referring to the Ben Nezer, who is Jesus the Nazarene, and have, in this matter, according to the sequence of Scripture, added thereto the godless kingdom, which is Edom and his people. This is also found, though somewhat altered, in Bereschith rabba (or Bereschis rabbo), fol. 69, col. 3, in the 76th Parascha, and in the Jalkut Schimóni on the prophet Daniel, numero 65, fol. 156, col. 3. Buxtorf also notes in his Chaldaic and Talmudic Lexicon, at column 1383, that he found in a handwritten Aruch, or Jewish lexicon, under the word Nezer: המקולל נצר, that is, Nezer is the accursed Nazarene.

That the godless Jews dishonor Jesus Christ in such a highly punishable manner comes from their dreadful obduracy, because they will not recognize and accept Him as the true Messiah; otherwise they would consider that He, as the true Messiah, is called נצר Nézer, that is, a branch (Isa 11:1); and צמח Zémach, that is, a shoot or sprout (Zech 3:8); and צמח צדיק Zémach zäddik, that is, a righteous shoot (Jer 23:5); and צמח צדקה Zémach zedaká (or zedóko), that is, a branch of righteousness (Jer 33:15); as also מטע לשם *Mátta lesché*m, that is, a renowned plant, or a plant which shall become a name, that is, a glory (Ezek 34:29); and that therefore He cannot, without great blasphemy, be called Nézer nifaf, that is, an abominable branch.

Twenty-third, He is called ילוד חסימה Tiuf schikkuz jelúd bassiomma, that is, a horrible and abominable son of vice, and this blasphemy is found in the aforementioned Nuremberg copy of the Jewish prayers called Selichóth, in a prayer that begins על שאנו מודים לך Al scheánu modim lach, in which, as Mr. Wülfer indicates in his oft-mentioned annotations on the Jewish Theriac, p. 171, the following is read: על גוים בנחלתך נפלו פתאום על קהילת הקודש בה 'לעומר בעשרים לחדש שנת ה'ק' לפרט קטון הרגו ושרפו והשו חדש עד יום האחד ועשרים לחדש וגו' בגלל התיעוב שיקין ילוד חסימה לבלתי לבחור לאלהותו בחרו מיתה מהחמה: (That is: O GOD, the heathens, that is, the Christians, have come into Your inheritance; they suddenly fell upon the holy congregation on the fifth day of the Omer, that is, of the sheaves, of which mention is made in Lev 23:15-16, on the twentieth day of the month of Nisan, in the year 907 according to the minor reckoning, that is, in the year of Christ 1147; they killed, burned, and trampled until the twenty-first day of the month, etc., on account of the horrible and abominable son of vice, because they did not wish to accept him as GOD, they chose rather to endure a dreadful death.)

Twenty-fourth, He is called אלהי תועבות Elohé to'efōth (or to'efōs), that is, a God of abominations, or an abominable and detestable God, and this blasphemy is found in the old Nizzáchon p. 83, where, concerning the words of Isa 5:20, "Woe to those who call evil good and good evil, who make darkness light and light darkness," the following is written: אותם שמחלפים את אלהי השמים באלהי תועבותם שמים חושך לאור ר"ל שמים את יש"ו שיר 'לגיהנם לאור: that is, these (namely, the Christians) are those who exchange the GOD of Heaven for their abomination-God, who make darkness out of light, that is, who place Jesus, who descended into Hell, in the light (and say of Him that He is and sits in Heaven), or who regard and acknowledge Him as the light.

Twenty-fifth, He is called חריא בן חריא Ben Chárja, that is, a Son of the Filth, and this derives from a malicious alteration of the name Maria, which in Hebrew is מרים Mirjam, into the mocking word Chárja. This appears very frequently in the old Nizzáchon, of which some indication has already been given in the preceding pages, and therein on p. 66, over the words of Jer 17:9, "The heart is a deceitful and yet wicked thing; who can know it:", it is written thus: עקבות מיליהם שאומרים את אלהי השמים אנו יראים. ואף בפייהם נכונה כי סוף סוף המה אומרים שאלהיהם ר"ל ישו נולד מחריא הנה אנוש הוא ואני יי' חוקר לב וגו' ר"ל מכל מקום אני יודע חריא : that is, The words of those (understand: the Christians) who say we fear the God of Heaven are deceitful, and there is no truth in their mouths; for in the end they say that their God, namely Jesus, was born of the Chárja: behold, then He is a man. (From this follows in verse 10:) I the LORD can search the heart, etc., that is to say, I know nonetheless that they believe in Jesus the Son of the Chárja. The like is also to be seen on p. 96 and elsewhere. So also on p. 46, concerning the holy Virgin Maria, over the words of Num 17:8, or according to others verse 23, "And behold, the staff of Aaron of the house of Levi had budded," it is written thus: אומרים המינים שזה רמז על חריא ר"ל מריה שהיתה בתולה כשידה את ישו תיפח רוחם כי : that is, The heretics say that this has a signification pointing to the Chárja, that is, Maria, who was a virgin when she bore Jesus. May their spirit burst asunder, for their eyes are sealed so that they cannot see, and their hearts so that they cannot understand, inasmuch as the Chárja was not of the tribe of Levi.

Twenty-sixth, he is called חֵלֶה Chélah, that is, a scum or filth; for in the Polish Siddurim, fol. 71, col. 1, under the title Meóra leschábbath schenia, in a prayer which begins אֵל חַי אֵל אֶרֶץ El chai arannén, the following is prayed:

לשון זהם וכנא 'לטנפני בבאוש וחלאה פירוש שהאומות רוצים לטנף אותי בעבירה זהו חלאה: that is, My oppressors oppress me with affliction, and wish to defile me with much Chela, that is, scum or filth, and say: see what kind of affliction this is; you are reviled on account of the committed sin of the crucifixion (of Christ). And in the Commentario on this, over the words and wish to defile me with much scum or filth, the following is written: חלאה לשון זהם וכנא 'לטנפני בבאוש וחלאה פירוש שהאומות רוצים לטנף אותי בעבירה זהו חלאה: that is, The word Chéláb signifies a filth. In another book, however, (in place of the words: and wish to defile me with much Chelab, that is, scum or impurity) one reads: (and wish to) defile me with stench and scum or impurity, which means as much as: the nations (understand: the Christians) wish to defile me with the stinking and filthy idolatry. Or by this is understood the one who was born in impurity, namely the Nazarene (by whom Christ is meant, as has been indicated above in this second chapter). This blasphemous prayer is also found in the prayer book printed here in Frankfurt, the thick Tephilla, fol. 41, col. 2, under the title י"ז בתמוז יוצר לשבת ראשון אחר י"ז בתמוז Józer leschábbath ríschon achár Jod Sain betámmus.

Twenty-seventh, he is called טמא ומת Tamé uméth (or Támé uméth), that is, an Unclean and Dead one, and this appears in all their printed Selichóth (or Selichos) in a prayer which they recite on the sixth New Year's Day, and which begins as follows: בקום עלינו בעלי. בראות בצרה. גזרים עלינו אדון מלקרות. גואלנו יי' שמו צבאות. דודי צה ואדום דגול מרבבות. דברו להבזות ואותו להלאות. העצב נבזה לקבל אלוה השתחוות לסמל לפניו לעלוח לבלתי הקדיש המרבה לסלוח. וגם לא לירא איום אלוה. זאת בשמעי יחדד לבי ואת אשיבה תשובה למריבי. חלילה לשכוח ולעזוב הטיבוח אל אלהי אבי. טמא ומת חדש הוא that is: We call upon You, O You terrible (God,) hide not Your face from beholding the misery, when the accursed people (namely the Christians) rise up against us, when they take counsel together like brute beasts and pronounce judgment against us, that we should not call upon the Lord our Redeemer, the Jehovah whose name is called Zebaoth, our Friend who is white and red and surrounded by many tens of thousands (of angels), that we should despise His word and cause Him vexation, that we should accept the contemptible idol (by which they mean Christ, as the aforementioned Mr. Wülfer demonstrates in his annotations on the Jewish Theriack, p. 142) as a God, bow before the image, and serve before it, so that He who forgives abundantly (that is, the true God) should not be sanctified, and the terrible God should not be feared. When I hear this, my heart trembles. I give to him who quarrels with me this answer: Far be it from me that I should forget the praise due for the beneficence of God, the God of my fathers, and forsake Him. The unclean and dead (god) is new and has come but recently (and is therefore not the ancient and eternal God.) What is his nature, that I should mingle him with God (that is, forget God, and likewise regard him also as a God)? I will declare of the Creator of all things that He is the one God, etc. These are the words of the prayer.

Therefore, it stands in the old Nizzáchon, p. 143, that a Jew once answered an emperor who wanted to compel him to adopt either the Christian or the Turkish faith as follows: חלילה לי שאניח אלהי מחוללי צורי ואלי אלהים חיים ומלך: that is, Far be it from me that I should forsake my GOD, my Creator, my Rock, the living GOD, and eternal King, and cleave to faith in a carcass and a dead man. And in the Correctionibus Lipmannianis of the highly learned, excellent, and renowned Doctor and Professor at Altdorf, Mr. Wagenseil, it is reported at p. 35 that in a Sēpher Nizzáchon of Rabbi Lipmann the following is written: אם בְּחַקְמֵי ת: אומות מְקַנְטְרִין אֵיָה מַלְכְּכֶם אָנוּ: מְשִׁיבִים אֱלֹהֵינוּ מֶלֶךְ בְּשָׁמַיִם חַי קַיָּים תָּמִיד יִמְלֹךְ: אֱלֹהֵיכֶם מֵת אָמֵן מְרִיָּם בְּמִיתָה חֲמוּרָה אם בְּחַקְמֵי ת: that is, (the letters of the two words) קִטְלוּהוּ תוֹלְעִים יֹאכְלוּהוּ Imbechykkothäi (which stand in Lev 26:3) are the initial letters (of the words:) The nations mock and say: Where is your King? We answer: our GOD is a King in Heaven, who lives, endures, and reigns at all times; but your GOD, whose mother is called Mary, has died, was put to death by a grievous death, and has also been devoured by worms. Therefore it stands in the Polish Siddúrim fol. 80, col. 2, under the title Józer lēschábbath chamíschí ácher happésach, in the Commentario of a prayer which begins: אֱלֹהִים לֹא אָדַע זֹלָתָךְ: Elobim lo ēda zulathēcha, written thus: אומות העולם אומרים על התלוי שהוא אלוה: that is, The nations of the world (understand: the Christians) say of the Hanged One (namely Christ the Crucified) that He is GOD; but it is not so, rather He died like a fool. The hardened Jews ought, however, to consider that the Messiah must have been not merely a simple man but also GOD at the same time, and that He did indeed die according to His human nature, but yet rose victoriously from the dead on the third day and was therefore not subject to corruption.

Twenty-eighth, He is blasphemously called הכלב המת bakkēlef hamméth (or hammēs), that is, "the dead dog"; and this diabolical insult appears in a small book printed at Prague in the year 1590, composed by Rabbi Schem Tof and called Iggéreth (or Iggères) havicuach, in a prayer arranged according to the alphabet, whose title is Bakkaschá al dérech Aleph beth. And because this book contains many abominable blasphemies, I have wished to set it down here in its entirety, and it reads as follows:

אל אלהי הרוחות לכל בשר היד יי' תקצר בורא עולם איה נפלאותיך על מי נשטת צאן מרעיתך זכרו וצעקו קוני הייטב בעיני יי' 'זובים ואריות אכלונו וכל העמים דלקונו היינו לבז ולשסה ואין אנו יודעים על מה ואני ביי' 'אצפה ואשאלה ממנו דבר פה זדים עלי קמו וכוס

That is: O GOD, thou GOD of the spirits and of all flesh, how long shall thy people be in the power of the enemy (namely the Christians, as will be demonstrated below in chapters 16 and 17 of this first part)? Is the hand of the LORD shortened, so that He cannot keep us alive this day? O thou Creator of the world, where are thy wondrous works? Where is thy zeal and thy power? Why hast thou forsaken the flock of thy pasture in this great wilderness? My oppressors have grown mighty and strong, and have put my children to death by the sword. Is it then pleasing to the LORD that this entire congregation should be destroyed? The bears and lions devour us, and the savage dogs have surrounded us; all nations persecute us, these on this side and those on the other. We have become a prey and an abomination to all the ends of the earth, and we do not know why we are in misery under this host (namely the Christians). But I will place my trust in the LORD, for apart from Him there is no physician, and I will ask Him whether I shall recover from this sickness. The arrogant ones (that is, the Christians, as may be seen below in chapter 16 of this first part) rise up against me and intend to take my soul, and they place in my hand the cup of abomination, which is full of mingled drink and overflows. They have dug pits for my soul; I have also been caught in the snare of my bonds and can flee nowhere to go out free, for there is a wall on every side. I have sunk into deep mire, and am entangled in captivity and misery. There is thick darkness, and no one comes to another. The priests of the idolatrous altars have taken counsel to lead all nations astray, so that one should stand and pray among the bones, among this murderer. Each one among them brings forward lies and false things, gives us a name (namely the name of JESUS), and babbles about this dead dog, and says: why have you killed the wretched and the poor? Why has he been cast out from the place of his rest? Behold, we will demand his blood. This is a grievous affliction. We will take vengeance upon you; there shall be war between us. (By this, there is doubtless a reference to what is read in the book Zémach-David, first part, fol. 37, col. 2, that in the year 4856 according to the Jewish reckoning, the Christians marched from all lands with more than six hundred thousand men toward Jerusalem, and everywhere persecuted and killed the Jews, and declared that they wished to avenge themselves upon them on account of the Messiah. The like is also to be found in the small book Schevót Jehúda, fol. 28, col. 2, and fol. 45, col. 2, and fol. 62, col. 2, as well as in the book Schalschéleth hakkabbála, fol. 95, col. 2. And one may also consider what was cited above in connection with the twenty-second title given to Christ, drawn from the Polish Siddúrim.) For it is resolved in every mouth (that we wish to make war upon you), whether perhaps the sin (which you committed against Jesus) can be atoned for. Whoever holds flesh to be his arm and his strength is opposed to the LORD and His Anointed, and must be placed under the ban like Jericho. They (the Christians) lean upon a broken reed, which has eaten and drunk and (what it has eaten and drunk) has let pass from itself. This contemptible idol is shattered. They (our forefathers) killed this man; they tormented the Isch beliál, that is, the worthless man (so too is Christ called in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 20, col. 4, in chapter 32, under the title Schäär ólam battóhu, as has been noted above in this chapter), and learned the manner of Jerubbaal (who, as may be seen in Judg 6:25ff., destroyed the altar of Baal). Do you (Christians) wish to fight for Baal? What kind of deed is this? He (namely Jesus) was a sinner from his mother's womb, and has not let us see his honor and his glory. He was an orphan and had no one to help him. Why have you done this? The hosts of Israel were commanded on Mount Sinai that one such as this shall not enter the congregation of GOD. (Understand: one who is a bastard shall, as commanded in Deut 23:2, be excluded from the congregation.) Behold, it is written of me (Jer 22:30): "Write this man." (Here the following words of the verse are also to be considered, in order to grasp the purpose of these words correctly.) They (the Christians) call upon the dumb stone (namely Christ), which cannot raise itself up. He is likened to a beast, and this calf has come of it. Behold, he was born of a woman who was covered with shame. Now that our soul is dried up, how can this one help us? Hear all this, ye nations, who serve images. Are there also among their idols (namely those of the said nations) any that can cause rain to fall? You do not know who this one is who wanders astray in spirit, and you have forsaken the eternal GOD and serve flesh and blood (that is, Jesus, who is nothing but a mere man) even on this very day. Here end the dreadful words of Rabbi Schem Tof.

But if this godless blasphemer had considered that the Messiah necessarily had to suffer, die, and be buried in order to redeem mankind from the power of the devil and from eternal damnation, as can be seen in Isa 53, and that he, as is written in Ps 16:10, was not to decay in the grave but rather to rise again, and that after having overcome his enemies, namely death, sin, the devil, and hell, as was prophesied in Ps 68:19, and having ascended into heaven, he was to sit in triumph at the right hand of his heavenly Father, as can be seen in Ps 110:1; then it would not have seemed so strange and peculiar to him that Jesus, the true Messiah, was crucified and treated so mockingly in this world. He would especially have had different thoughts, had he also considered that the rabbis interpret the words of Isa 53:5, "He was wounded for our transgressions," as referring to the Messiah, as can be read in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 98, col. 2, and in the book Medrasch Ruth rabba (or Rus rabbo) fol. 283, col. 2, as well as in Jalkut chadasch num. 29, fol. 154, col. 4; and that the Messiah had to endure a great deal on account of sinners, which is treated at length in Jalkut Schimoni on Isaiah, numero 359, fol. 56, col. 3-4, and in the book Pesikta rabbetha (or rabbesu) fol. 62, col. 1-2, all of which, God willing, is to be set forth in detail in another book in which I intend to demonstrate the truth of the Christian religion from the Jews' own books. Finally, in the twenty-ninth place, they call him אֲתוֹ הָאִישׁ Otho haïsch, or הָאִישׁ הָהוּא Haïsch habu, or הָהוּא גַבְרָא Habu gabra, that is, "that same man" or "that certain man," or else פְּלוֹנִי Ploni, which among the Hebrews signifies as much as N. N., and this occurs at times when they do not wish to mention his name and want to write about him in a concealed manner, so that Christians should not know whom they mean by it. By the words Otho haïsch he is signified in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzachon, numero 112, where it is written as follows: מה שייחסו אותו האיש למשפחתו של דוד המלך עליו השלום את אותו האיש (the Christians) attribute Otho haïsch, that is, that same man, to the family of King David, upon whom be peace, and indeed also with regard to his mother. Rabbi Isaac Abarbenel likewise writes in his commentary on Isaiah, fol. 78, col. 1, on the words of Isa 52:13, "Behold, my servant shall deal wisely," in the following manner: הנוצרים פירשו על אותו האיש שחלו בעד עונותינו וכאן בעונותינו, that is: The Christians have interpreted this passage as referring to Otho haïsch, that is, that man who was hanged at the end of the Second Temple in Jerusalem, and who, in their opinion, was the Son of the blessed God, and who also took on a body in the womb of the Virgin. As for the words Habú isch, in Aben Ezra's commentary on Gen 27:40, in the Basel edition, it is said of the Emperor Constantine that he had brought the Christian religion into currency, and the following passage comes after it: וּשְׁם עַל דְּגְלוֹ צוּרַת הָאִישׁ הַהוּא, that is: And he placed upon his banners the image of that man. By the words báhu gábra he is signified in the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 57, col. 1, and in the book Nezach Jisráel (or Jisróel) fol. 10, col. 3. As for the word Plóni, he is indicated by it in the Talmudic tractate Chagiga fol. 4, col. 2, in the Tosephóth, as well as in the book Medrasch Kohéleth (or Kohéles) fol. 312, col. 4.

Chapter III.

Herein is shown what our most precious and most holy Savior JESUS is alleged, according to the blasphemous pretenses of the godless Jews, to have committed and contrived, by means of which he performed his miracles, how he fell into the hands of his enemies, and why he is said to have been condemned to death.

When one looks up in the Old Testament what is written therein concerning the Messiah, one finds that glorious titles of honor are given to Him; for He is called in Joel 2:23 a teacher of righteousness, and in Mal 4:2 the Sun of Righteousness, and in Isa 40:11 as well as Ezek 37:24 a shepherd of the sheep of the Lord, and in Isa 49:6 the light of the Gentiles and the salvation of God. These excellent titles of honor we rightly ascribe to our dearest Savior Jesus Christ, the true promised Messiah, as one who has powerfully demonstrated in deed that He is the one to whom they belong. He taught sinful mankind the way of righteousness and showed them in what manner they can be righteous before God; indeed, He Himself was made unto us by GOD wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, as may be seen in 1 Cor 1:30. He rightly shepherded the sheep of the Lord and even laid down His life for them, as is read in John 10:11, 14-15; and He also caused the Gentiles, who had previously been mired in the greatest darkness and had served idols, to be brought to the light of the saving knowledge of GOD through His holy apostles, whom He sent into all the world to preach the Gospel. He diligently instructed mankind in the practice of all manner of virtues and in the fear of GOD, and earnestly warned them away from the works of darkness through His zealous preaching, and sought nothing other than that the kingdom of the devil might be destroyed and the church of GOD increased, as the history of the New Testament demonstrates with the clarity of the sun and in manifold ways. Moreover, He never committed any sin, as may be seen in 1 Pet 2:22, 1 John 3:5, and 2 Cor 5:21, so that He was also able to say boldly to the scribes and Pharisees in John 8:46: "Which of you can convict me of a sin?" The wretched devil, however, who is a father of lies and slanders, teaches through the godless Jews the complete opposite, inasmuch as they blasphemously allege that He was a godless, wicked man defiled with sins, as may be read in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 107, col. 1, and in the commentary of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, and in the tractate

Gittin fol. 57, col. 1; and they teach that He was punished with death on account of the grave misdeeds He had committed.

Concerning now the sinful nature that is attributed to the most innocent Jesus by the wicked Jews, at the instigation of Satan, it is supposed to consist in this: that He learned sorcery and subsequently practiced such sorcery, seduced the people, turned them away from God, and committed idolatry.

Regarding the sorcery, it is written thus in the Talmudic tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas) fol. 104, col. 2: בשרו שעל בשרו במצרים כשפים מוציא הוציא בשרו that is, "Did not the son of Stada (that is, of Mary, as has been demonstrated in the preceding second chapter) bring sorcery out of Egypt by means of an incision that he made in his flesh?" The reason, however, why this is supposed to have occurred by means of an incision in the flesh is explained by Rabbi Solomon Jurchi in his commentary on the cited words of the Talmud, where he states: שלא היה יכול להוציאן מכשפים שבמצרים בחניקן של הוצאתן שלא יוצאו that is, (it happened for this reason,) because he would not have been able to bring them out in writing (namely, out of Egypt), since the (Egyptian) sorcerers searched all those who departed, so that they might not bring the sorcery out of the country and teach it to the people of another land.

According to the blasphemous Talmud, Jesus is supposed to have learned sorcery in Egypt and brought it back from there, having been in that country with his teacher, Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachia. But just as it was indicated in the preceding chapter that the Jews do not agree with one another in their godless slanders which they employ against Christ, so here too two mutually contradictory statements are to be found. For Rabbi Naphtali, in his book Emek hammelech, fol. 135, col. 3, in the 19th chapter under the title Schaar peschia di seir anpin, reports that Jesus learned sorcery from his aforementioned teacher, Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachia, who had been a member of the Synedrium, or High Council, at Jerusalem; which High Council had received the patriarch Abraham's Maschichta, or treatise on sorcery, through an oral tradition and had been well versed in it. His words on this matter read as follows: הם תלמידו של אברהם אבינו ע"ה הם אשר קבלו המנהיגין הם תלמידו של אברהם אבינו ע"ה הם אשר קבלו המסכתא ההיא והספר יצירה בקבלה איש מפי איש כולם נקראים תלמידיו מפני שנמשכים אחר קבלתו הם פועלים לידע הישופים כיצד נעשו כדי שידעו להבין ולהורות לדון דין המכשפים ואף על פי שפועלים בכישוף אודות פסק הלכה וכן להחיות כישוף הגחוק על ידיהם לא ידי לגיהנם על ידי זה כי אם לגן עדן והיה אהוב בעיני המקום וכעניי הבריות ולא כמו האיש הבליעל שכשף והסית והדיח את ישראל מאביהם שבשמים וכל זה קבל מרבו ר' יהושע that is: Those who sat in the Synedrium (or High Council) had been disciples of our father Abraham, upon whom be peace.

They were those who had received that same treatise (which Abraham wrote concerning sorcery), as well as the book Jezira (which was likewise composed by the said Abraham), from mouth to mouth through a tradition, and they were all called his disciples because they followed his tradition. They had applied themselves to knowing the sorceries, how they were performed, so that they might understand them and be able to teach others how to pass judgment upon sorcerers. And although they practiced sorcery on account of a ruling and the formulation of a judgment, or in order to dissolve a sorcery by which someone had been harmed, through their hands, none of them was therefore consigned to hell (or condemned), but rather they all came into paradise and were pleasing both in the eyes of God and of His creatures; and it was not with such a one as it was with the Isch habbelial, that is, the worthless man (by which, as was demonstrated above in the second chapter, Christ is meant), who practiced sorcery and seduced and led Israel away from their heavenly Father. All of this, however, he learned from his teacher, Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, who was also a member of the High Council. But since, according to the Talmud, he is supposed to have learned sorcery in Egypt from the Egyptian sorcerers, how could he have learned it from his teacher, Rabbi Jehoscha? In any case, both accounts are a diabolical lie.

That in the Synedrium, or High Council, there were nothing but people who were able to practice sorcery is written thus in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 17. col. 1.: אמר רבי יוחנן אין מושיבין בסנהדרין אלא בעלי קומה ובעלי חכמה ובעלי מראה ובעלי זקנה ובעלי כשפים ויודעים בשבעים לשון שלא תהא סנהדרין שומעת מפי המתורגמן that is: Rabbi Jochanan said, one places in the High Council none but people who are tall of body, wise, distinguished, old, and sorcerers, and who understand seventy languages, so that the High Council need not hear anything from the mouth of an interpreter. In Rabbi Salomon Jarchi's commentary on this passage, the following is stated: בעלי קומה ומראה שיהא אימתן מוטלת על הבריות: ובעלי כשפים להמית לכשפים והבוטחים בכשפיהם להנצל מידי בית דין ולגלות על המכשפים that is: they had to be of great stature and distinguished in appearance, so that the people would fear them; but they had to be sorcerers as well, so that they might put to death those sorcerers who trusted in their sorcery to escape the court, and so that they might expose those sorcerers who led the people astray through their sorcery and turned them away from God, as the Nazarene (that is, Jesus) had done. Since, however, in Rabbi Menachem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 37. col. 2., in the Parascha Bereschith, it is written, as is indeed the truth: המעשה הכשפים: וישדין יש להם השפעה מצד המדה הנקראת רוח מסאבא that is: sorceries and the works of devils have an influence, or influx, from that Middah, or quality, which is called the unclean spirit; it follows from this that all members of the High Council must have received their influence from the devil.

Concerning this terrible blasphemy against our most holy Redeemer, one must marvel at how the godless Jews could have devised such abominable things against Him. Those who learn sorcery and practice it renounce GOD, give themselves over to the Devil, have great fellowship with him, do everything that is pleasing and agreeable to him, and defile themselves with all manner of terrible sins, doing evil wherever and to whomever they possibly can. But Christ held fast to His heavenly Father, resisted Satan mightily, and drove the evil spirits out of those who were possessed; for which reason those spirits also addressed Him, as can be seen in Matt 8:29, in these words: "Ah, Jesus, thou Son of God, what have we to do with thee? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" We likewise read in Mark 1:23-25 that an unclean spirit addressed Him thus: "Hold, what have we to do with thee, Jesus of Nazareth? Thou art come to destroy us: I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God." From all of this it is evident that Jesus was the Devil's greatest enemy; how then could He have had any fellowship with him? Furthermore, He led a holy life and a pious walk, such that no one could truthfully charge Him with any sin, as has been demonstrated shortly before, and as the Jewish historian Josephus, whose words were cited above in the second chapter, himself attests. Therefore everything is manifestly false that the depraved Jews, driven by the impulse of unclean spirits, say about this matter and put forward out of sheer hatred.

Regarding the claim that Jesus is supposed to have led the people astray and turned them away from God, it is written in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 107. col. 2. and Sota fol. 47. col. 1. as follows: יֵשׁוּ כִּישָׁף וְהִסִּית וְהָדִיחַ אֶת יִשְׂרָאֵל, that is, Jesus practiced sorcery, and led Israel astray, and turned them away (from God). This slander is also to be seen in what was cited shortly before from fol. 135. col. 3. of the book Emek hammelech. But how could Christ have turned the people away from God and led them astray, seeing that everything He did was directed solely and exclusively toward converting them to God, as the history of the New Testament clearly demonstrates? One reads in Matt 22:36, etc., that when a scribe tempted Him and asked which was the foremost commandment in the Law, He answered: You shall love God your Lord with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind. This is the foremost and greatest commandment. Here He plainly directed people toward fervent love of God, and gave them to understand that this is the chief duty of man. How then can one say of Him that He turned the people away from God?

Regarding the idolatry which he is said to have committed: it is read in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 107, col. 2 (which words have already been cited above in the second chapter) that when his teacher, Rabbi Jehoscha the son of Perachja, had beckoned to him with his hands and by this gesture had intended to make known to him that he wished to receive him back as a penitent, Jesus misunderstood this and supposed that by such a beckoning he had been rejected; and therefore he had erected baked bricks and committed idolatry with them. The words of the Talmud read as follows: יומא חד הוה קא קרי קריאת שמע אתא לקמיה סבר לקבוליה : אחווי ליה בידיה הוא סבר מדחא דחי ליה אזל : that is: On one day, as he (Rabbi Jehoscha was reading the words of Deut 6:4) "Hear, O Israel," etc. (the reading or recitation of which by the Jews is called Keriäs Schema), he (Jesus) came before him; then Rabbi Jehoscha had it in mind to receive him back again and beckoned to him with his hands; but he (Jesus) supposed that he had utterly repelled and rejected him (by such a beckoning), and so went away, erected a baked brick, and bowed down before it. This frivolous lie and blasphemy also stands, in these very same words, in the Talmudic tractate Sota, fol. 47, col. 1, as well as on p. 19 in the Disputation of Rabbi Jechiel which he held with Nicolaus. It is also written on this matter in the book Maggen Abraham by Rabbi Abraham Perizol, in the 59th chapter, as follows: לפי דברי ז"ל לא עשה עצמו אלוה אלא שזקף לבינה והשתחוה ערופה : that is: According to the statement of our rabbis, of blessed memory, he (Jesus) did not make himself out to be a God (or present himself as such), but rather he erected a baked brick and bowed down before it, and also led many of Israel astray through the worship (or veneration) of Markolis, that is, of Mercury, as is mentioned in the chapter Chélek (namely Sanhedrin fol. 107, col. 2) and in the chapter Egla arufa (or Eglo arufo, namely Sota fol. 47, col. 1).

What kind of idolatry this was, however, can be seen from the Talmudic tractate Bava mezia, fol. 25, col. 2, where the following is read: מצא מעות מפוזרות : הרי אלו שלו : כאבני בית קוליס חייב להכריז . ואלו הן אבני בית קוליס אחת מכאן ואחת : that is: if someone finds scattered money, it is his; but if he finds it lying in the manner of the stones of the place Kôlis (that is, in which Markolis is served), he must have it proclaimed (so that it may be learned to whom it belongs).

The stones of the place of Markôlis, however, are arranged such that one lies on this side, another on that side, and one lies on top of them. By the aforementioned word Kôlis, however, Markôlis is understood, as Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes in his commentary thereon, and as can be seen in the Tosephoth (or Tósephos) alongside it. In the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, however, it stands at fol. 60, col. 2 as follows: הזורק אבן למרקולים זו היא עבודתו that is: he who throws a stone at Markólis commits idolatry, for this is that by which it is served. It is therefore evident from this that the idolatry of Markólis was performed with stones.

That Christ should have committed such idolatry is yet another diabolical fabrication, for he, as may be read in Luke 4:8, said to Satan: "You shall worship the Lord your God, and Him alone shall you serve." Likewise, the Evangelist and Apostle John said in 1 John 5:22: "Little children, keep yourselves from idols," which he learned from Christ. Indeed, idolatry is presented in the New Testament, which contains the teaching of our Savior that he gave to his disciples, as an abominable sin; and the spirit of Paul was provoked when he saw the city of Athens so thoroughly given over to idolatry, as may be read in Acts 17:16. So too did Paul forbid in 1 Cor 5:11 that one should eat with any idolater; and in 1 Cor 6:10 he teaches that idolaters shall not inherit the kingdom of God. How then should Christ himself have practiced idolatry, when he declared that one must worship God and serve Him alone, and when those who followed his teaching forbade idolatry so earnestly and under penalty of the loss of eternal salvation?

We must now also examine by what means Christ, according to the teaching of the godless Jews, is supposed to have performed his miracles; and here it must be known that they divide themselves on this point into two opinions. For some teach that he performed and accomplished them through the שם המפורש, Schem hamphorash, that is, the name of God, which is called the declared or separated name; but others say they came about through sheer sorcery.

that the Schem hammphorasch has 42 letters, and this is read in the aforementioned Bechai's commentary, fol. 64. col. 1., in the Parascha Schemoth, where it describes the manner in which Moses killed the Egyptian, and what follows thereafter: ת"ש ז"ל שהרגו בשם המפורש ות'ו' וישם המפורש של מ"ב אותיות that is: Our rabbis, of blessed memory, have taught that he killed him with the Schem hammphorasch, etc., and that it was the Schem hammphorasch of 42 letters. In other places it is found that it also has 72 letters, and this is to be demonstrated from Exod 14:19-21, because each of those verses has 72 letters. For this reason Aben Esra writes as follows in his commentary on that passage: בעבור שאלה הא' פסוקים דבקים זה עם זה תל אחד יש בו ע"ב אותות על כן מצאנו בספרים ת"ש ז"ל שהרגו בשם המפורש ות'ו' וישם המפורש של מ"ב אותיות that is: Because these three verses stand together and each has 72 letters, we find it written in books that this is a mystery of the Schem hammphorasch. More on this matter can also be found in the book Zeror hammór, fol. 37. col. 1., in the Parascha Vajeze. This is what I wished to report on this subject, and it is also to be noted here that, according to the book Caphtor uphérah, Moses is said to have performed all his miracles through the power of the Schem hammphorasch. But I must return to my previous purpose.

Concerning the first opinion, that Christ performed His miracles through the Schem hammphorasch: in the accursed blasphemous booklet Toldoth Jeschu, on pages 6, 7, and 8, immediately following what was reported above in chapter 2, page 108, regarding the excommunication and exclusion of Christ from the congregation by the High Council at Jerusalem, the following is read: וכששמע ישו הדבר שמחל לבוא בקהל ולידעו ועבר וילך לו אל גליל העליון ויהי שם כמה שנים ובעת ההוא היה שם מפורש חקוק בבית המקדש על אבן שתייה שכסברה דוד המלך את העפר מצא שם אבן אחת על פי התהום ועליו היה חקוק השם העלה אותו והניחו בקדשי הקדשים והיו החכמים יראים מן הבחורים שלא ילמדו את השם ויחריבו את העולם חס ושלום ועשו שני אריות של נחשת ותלו אותם על פתח קדשי הקדשים אחד מימין ואחד משמאל וכל מי שנכנס ולמד את השם מיד כשיצא היו נובחים בו האריות ומרוב פחד ובהלה היו השמות פורחים מלבו ושכח אותם וכשנגלה הקול עליו שהוא ממזר יצא מגליל העליון ובא בהחבא לירושלים ונכנס להיכל ולמד שם האותיות הקדושים וכתב השם על הנייר והזכיר השם שלא יכאב לו וחתך את בשרו והחביא בו את הנייר עם השם והחזיר שנית את השם וחזר הבשר למקומו ועל ידי כישוף ושם טומאה נכנס למקדש דאם לא כן איך הניחו הכהנים בני אהרן הקדושים ליכנס אלא ודאי בשם הטומאה וכישוף פעל את הכל וכשיצא מן הפתח נבחו בו האריות ושכח את השם. אז הלך חוץ לעיר וחתך את בשרו והוציא את הכתב וצירף האותיות ולמד את השם והלך לבית לחם יהודה מקום לידתו וצעק בקול גדול מי הם אתם המשומדים שאומרים עלי שאני ממזר ופסול הם הממזרים ופסולים הלא ילדתי אמי בתולה ודין קדקדה נכנסתי בה ואני בן אלהים ועלי נבא ישעיה הנביא הנה העלמה הרה וגו' הלא אני בראתי את עצמי ובראתי את השמים ואת הארץ ואת הים וכל אשר במ. ויענו ויאמרו לו תן לנו אות ומופת שאלוה אתה ויען ויאמר הביאו לי מת אחד ואחיה אותו ורצו ויחפרו קבר אחד ולא מצאו בו דקי עצמות ויבואו ויגידו לו לאמור לא מצאנו רק עצמות ויאמר הביאום לי ויביאום לו ויצרף העצמות עצם אל עצמו וקדם עליהם עור ובשר וגידין ויקם ויעמוד על רגליו וחי וראו האנשים את

הדבר ויחמהו ויאמר להם הזאת תימה הביאו לי מצורע אחד וארפא אותו וריפאו לו מצורע (that is: After Jesus had heard that he had been declared unfit by the High Council to enter the congregation of God, he was greatly distressed, took to flight, and went into upper Galilee, where he remained for many years. At that same time, however, the Schem bammaphorasch was engraved in the Temple upon the Even Schetija, that is, upon the foundation stone of the Temple. For when King David had dug the foundation of the Temple, he found there a stone upon the abyss, upon which that same Name was engraved; he took it away from there and laid it in the Holy of Holies. But since the Sages feared that the students, or young men, might perhaps learn this Name and thereby destroy the world, God forbid, they made, through the Schem (through which miracles are performed), two bronze lions and hung them above the door of the Holy of Holies, one on the right side and one on the left. As soon as anyone had gone in and learned that Name, the lions would bark at him when he came back out, whereupon the Name, on account of the fear and consternation that had come upon him, flew from his mind and memory, so that he forgot it. After it had become publicly known and manifest concerning Jesus that he was a Mamser, or bastard, he departed from upper Galilee and came secretly to Jerusalem, entered the Temple, learned the holy letters, wrote the Name upon parchment, and after he had spoken the Name, so that he would feel no pain, he cut open his flesh and concealed the parchment with the Name therein; and when he spoke the Name a second time, the flesh returned to its place and grew back together. He entered the Temple, however, through sorcery and through an unclean Name, that is, through the name of an unclean spirit; for if it were not so, how would the priests, who were of the holy lineage of Aaron, have permitted him to enter? Therefore it is certain that he accomplished everything through an unclean Name and through sorcery. But when he went out through the door, the lions barked at him and he forgot the Name. Thereafter he went out of the city, cut open his flesh, and after he had taken out the writing, assembled the letters, and learned the Name, he went to Bethlehem in Judah, to the place where he was born, and cried out with a loud voice: What sort of wanton fellows are these who declare of me that I am a bastard and unclean? They are the bastards and the unclean ones. Did not my mother bear me as a virgin? I entered into her through the crown of her head, and I am the Son of God. Of me also did the prophet Isaiah prophesy (Isa 7:14): Behold, a virgin is with child, etc. Did I not create myself? Did I not create heaven and earth and all that is therein? They answered him, however, and said: Give us a sign and a wonder that you are God. He then answered and said: Bring me a dead man and I will make him alive. They ran off, dug up a grave, but found nothing in it but dry bones, and reported this to him, saying: We have found nothing but bones. He, however, said: Bring them here. And when they had brought them to him, he laid them together, fitting bone to bone, and covered them with skin, flesh, and sinews. Thereupon the one who had been dead rose up, stood upon his feet, and was alive again. When the people had seen this, they marveled. He, however, spoke to them: Do you marvel at this? Bring me a leper and I will heal him. Then they brought him a leper, and he healed him as well through the Schem hammphorasch. After they had seen this, they fell down and worshipped him, and said to him: You are assuredly the Son of God. These are the words of the blasphemous booklet Toledoth Jeschu.) It is likewise written on page 11 of the aforementioned booklet that when Jesus appeared before Queen Helena, before whom he had been accused by the Sages as a sorcerer, he likewise performed miracles through the Schem hammphorasch, cleansed a leper, and raised a dead man back to life.

From this it can be seen that the godless villain who wrote the little book had, here and there, set his sights on something from the New Testament, which he sought to distort and pervert, and to apply in his diabolical slanders. Just as it is, however, a palpable lie that lions made of bronze should bark, and moreover that lions are not accustomed to bark but to roar, so too is all the rest an untruth instilled by the hellish dragon, which is not worthy of refutation. This much, however, is to be noted: that the Jews do not even agree among themselves as to whether Jesus presented Himself as a God or not. In the words of the blasphemous little book Toledoth Jeschu cited above, it is clearly stated that He presented Himself as the Creator of heaven and earth; whereas Rabbi Abraham Perizol, in his book Maggen Abraham (or Abrohom), in the 59th chapter, as has already been indicated above, writes that this is not the case, when he says: לפי דברי ז"ל לא עשה עצמו אלוה, that is, according to the testimony of our rabbis, he did not present himself as a God.

Since mention has also been made of the foundation stone, which is called Even Schatja, I do not consider it unhelpful to indicate as well what foolish dreams the Jews have about it. It is to be noted that some of them hold that it was the stone mentioned in Gen 28:11, which Jacob placed under his head and slept upon, but which God afterward sank into the earth. Therefore, in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, numero 120. fol. 35. col. 4., over the words "and he took a stone of the place, etc.," it is written thus: ויקח את האבן אשר שם מראשותיו מה עשה הקב"ה מגדל ימינו הטביע האבן עד עמקי תהום ועשה אותו סניף לארץ כאדם שהוא סניף לכיפה לפיכך נקרא אבן שתיה שמשם הוא טבור הארץ ומשם נמתחה כל הארץ ועליה היכל עומד שנאמר והאבן הזאת אשר שמתי מצבה יהיה בית : that is, "And he (namely Jacob) took the stone of the place and laid it as his pillow. What did the holy and blessed God do: He trod the stone with

His right foot down to the depths of the abyss, and made it an appendage of the earth, just as a man makes an appendage for a vault; therefore it is called Even Schatja, that is, the stone of the foundation, because there is the center of the earth, and from there the entire earth was spread out, upon which the Temple also stands, as it is said (Gen 28:22): 'And this stone, which I have set up as a pillar, shall become a house of God.'" This little fable also appears in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 38. col. 4., in the Parashah Vajeze, and in the commentary of Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman on the said Five Books of Moses, fol. 25. col. 4., in the last-mentioned Parashah, as well as at the end of chapter 35 of the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, and in the Midrash Tillim on Ps 91, fol. 40. col. 4.

Others, however, are of the opinion that God sank this stone into the abyss at the very beginning, at the creation of the world. In the Jalkut chadasch fol. 35. col. 2. numero 23, under the title Beriath baolam vebaadam, the following is read from the Sohar on this subject: בשעה דק"ב את העולם השקיע בתוך התהום: אבן אחד חקוק עליו כשמו והשקיע בתהום וכשהמים רוצים לעלות רואים שם הקודש חקוק על ההוא צרור ושבים לאחוריהם ועד היום הזה ההוא צרור חקוק כשמו גו התהום וכשבני האדם נשבעין באמת האי צרור עולה ומקבל השבועה זו בתוך לחון התהום ומקיים העולם וכשנשבעין לשקר האי צרור עולה לקבל השבועה ומיד חוזר לאחוריו המים נגרים ונצים ומחיות החקוקים על הצרור פוזדים לתוך התהום ונסתריין ומיד המים רוצים לעלות ולהציף העולם עד ששולח הק"ב מלאך ששמו יעזריאל שיש בידו מפתחות ברזא דשמא קדישא וחקק את העולם מתקיים: על ההוא צרורא האתייא כבתחלה ומרן העולם מתקיים: that is, when the Holy and Blessed God created the world, He sank a stone into the midst of the abyss, upon which His name is written. Now when the waters wish to rise up, they see the holy name (namely the Schem hammphorasch) that is written upon the stone, and they turn back. And to this very day that same stone, upon which His name is written, remains in the midst of the abyss; and when people swear an oath in truth, this stone rises upward and receives that oath, and thereafter returns back into the midst of the abyss and sustains the world. But when they swear a false oath, this stone rises up and receives that oath, and immediately turns back again; the waters, however, pour out and overflow, and the letters that are written upon the stone scatter apart in the midst of the abyss and disperse. Thereupon the waters immediately wish to rise up and flood the world, until the Holy and Blessed God sends an angel by the name of Jasariël, who holds in his hand seventy keys according to the mystery of the holy name, and writes the letters back upon that stone as they stood upon it before, and thus the world is preserved. And at the end of the little book printed in Prague, Iggéreth (or Iggéres) haviccúach schel Rabbi Schem Tof, half a sheet is printed at the end, in which the following is stated on this matter: ה' בחכמה יסד ארץ כונן: שמים בתבונה ללמדך שכשברא הקב"ה את עולמו כילד אשה בראו מה ילד אשה מתחיל

מטבורו ופוחת לכאן ולאכענה עדדין כך התחיל הקב"ה לברוא את העולם מאבן שתייה ומקדש הקדשים ומשם הושחת העולם ולכך נקראת אבן שתייה שממנה התחיל הקב"ה לברוא את עולמו וברא בית המקדש למעלה בשמים ובית המקדש למטה בארץ זה לעומת זה שנאמר: תביאמו ותטעמו בהר נחלתך מכון לשבתך אל תקרי מכון אלא מכוון זה לעומת זה כנגד זה: that is, (it is written Prov 3:19:) The LORD founded the earth by wisdom and established the heavens by understanding. This teaches you that when the Holy and Blessed God created His world, He created it as a child that is born of a woman. Just as a child begins to form from its navel and spreads outward in all four directions, so God began to create the world from the Even schetija, that is, the Foundation Stone, and from the Holy of Holies of the Temple; and from that same stone the world was laid and founded. For this reason it is called Even schetija, or the Foundation Stone, because God began from it to create His world. And He created a Temple above in heaven as well as a Temple below upon the earth, and indeed created the one directly opposite the other, as it is said (Exod 15:17): Bring them in and plant them on the mountain of Your inheritance, the machon, that is, the place of Your dwelling. Read not máchon, that is, the place, but rather mecuvvan, that is, directed over against Your dwelling, one opposite the other. In the Chaldean translation of Jonathan, Exod 28:30 is also read as follows: וחקק ומפרש בשמן שתיה דביה חתם: מרי עלמא פום תהומא רבא מן שרוייא: that is, it was also (the Schemhamphorasch, as may be seen from what precedes) written and explained upon the Foundation Stone, with which the Lord of the world sealed the mouth of the great abyss from the beginning. In the Talmudic tractate Joma, however, this stone is mentioned at fol. 54. col. 2. as follows: משניטל הארון אבן היתה שם מימות נביאים: מרי עלמא פום תהומא רבא מן שרוייא: that is, after the Ark was taken away, there was a stone there from the times of the first prophets, which was called Schetija and was three fingers' breadth above the ground. In the Gemara, however, following upon this, it stands at fol. 54. col. 2.: תנא שממנה הושתת העולם, that is, we learn that from that same stone the earth was founded. And shortly thereafter it follows: רבי יצחק נפחא אמר אבן ירה הקדוש ברוך הוא בים: that is, Rabbi Isaac the Smith said: the Holy and Blessed God cast a stone into the sea, and from it the earth was founded. These are the rabbis' dreams concerning such a stone.

From what has been cited from the defamatory little book Toledoth Jeschu, however, a gross lie is plainly visible: in the words quoted above, it is stated that when King David had the foundation of the Temple dug, he found that stone upon the abyss, which the sages are then supposed to have placed in the Holy of Holies of the Temple. For how can it be possible that the foundation was dug so deep as to reach the middle of the earth and into the very midst of the abyss of the sea? Indeed, since that stone, according to the content of what has been cited from Jalkut chadasch, fol. 35. col. 2. and taken from the Sohar (which is held in very high esteem by the Jews), was sunk into the abyss at the very beginning of the creation of the world and is supposed to remain there to this very day, how then can it be that it was ever dug out and placed in the Temple, and that Christ learned the Schem hammphorasch from it?

Returning now to the matter of the performance of miracles: these are said to be possible not only through the Schem hammphorasch, but also through other holy names. Hence in the book Nischmath (or Nilchmas) chajim by Rabbi Menasse ben Israel, in the 30th chapter of the third part, fol. 147. col. 1. 2., the following is written: כי עם השמות הם ככלי אומנתו של מקום מהם כרצונו או לכבודו של מקום כשהדין הוא אהוב למעלה ונחמד למטה ואינו מת בחצי ימיו ואינו נופל ביד שונאיו אמר השם ליסמה ע"ה ונלחמו אליך ולא יוכלו לך כי אתך אני להצילך. אבל מי שישתמש בהם מרעת עצמו ושלא לכבודו של מקום הוא נכרת בחצי ימיו ונופל ביד שונאיו וסוף שיחתם ברעה אמרו רז"ל דאשתמש בתגא חלף והרי זה כמי שגנב טבעתו או כליו או חותמו של מלך ומשתמש בהם שהוא חייב מיתה. ואפילו ישעיה שהיה נביא אמת לפי שהזכיר שם מן השמות להנאת עצמו כמו שאח"ל במפכת יבמות אמר שם ונתבלע בארו נענש ונפל ביד שונאיו והרגוהו כפי שזוכר שם והבן זה מאד כי בדבר הזה יבחנו המשתמש בשמות שלא ברצונו של מקום that is: the names are, as it were, the instruments of God's art, for He has placed within their power that signs and wonders shall come to pass through them. Moreover, he who makes use of them according to God's will, as the prophets (did), or employs them for the honor of God, as the pious (are accustomed to do), is beloved above (in heaven) and pleasing here below (on earth), and does not die in the middle of his years, nor does he fall into the hands of his enemies; for this reason God said to the prophet Jeremiah: "Though they fight against you, they shall not prevail against you, for I am with you to deliver you" (Jer 1:19). But whoever uses them according to his own mind and not for the honor of God shall be cut off in the midst of his days, and shall fall into the hands of his enemies, and shall in the end come to a wretched end. Hence our Rabbis, of blessed memory, say: whoever makes use of the crown shall pass away and die; for such a one is like someone who has stolen the king's ring, or his vessels, or his seal, and makes use of such things, whereby he becomes guilty of death. Indeed, even Isaiah, who was a true prophet, and of whom our Rabbis, of blessed memory, report in the Talmudic tractate Jevamóth (or Jevómos) that he pronounced a name and was swallowed up by a cedar tree, was punished and fell into the hands of his enemies, who killed him, as is mentioned there in the Talmud, because he had used one of the holy names for his own benefit. Take careful note of this, therefore, for by this a person who uses the names without God's will is put to the test, namely when he dies a sudden death and is cut off in the midst of his days and loses his life.

In the booklet Schévet Jebúda, at fol. 64, col. 1, numero 61, the following is also read concerning such miracles: שמעתי כי בספר העלילו קצת שמצאו נער בבית איש יהודי הרוג וקרוע כנגד הלב ואמרו כי הוציאו את לבו לחוג בו ובא דון שלמה הלוי חכם ומקובל היה ושם תחת לשון הנער שם אחד הקיץ הנער ואמר מי הרגו ומי הוציא את לבו להעליל נגד העניים היהודים: that is, I have heard that in Spain there were some who sought a pretext and occasion against the Jews to do them harm, and who alleged that they had found a boy in a Jew's house who had been killed and split open at the chest; they therefore claimed that the Jews had removed his heart in order to use it for their festival. But there came Don Salomon Levi, who was a wise man and a Kabbalist, and he placed a certain name under the tongue of the boy, whereupon the boy awoke and said who had killed him and removed his heart, and that this had been done so that a pretext might be had against the poor Jews, and such a deed attributed to them. A similar example is also found at fol. 45, col. 1–2, numero 38, in the aforementioned booklet Schevet Jebuda. So too is the following read in the said book Nischmath (or Nischmas) chajim, in the 28th chapter of the third Maamar, fol. 145, col. 1: כתב בעל שלשלת הקבלה בדף נ"ה: וזכור חכם אהד מקובל נידון לשרפה בזמן הרמב"ן וזרקו על האש המור תחתיו בחשנם שהיו כסולין עונוי והצור מעזה שמח כגלת לעיני הרמ"ב"ן חי וקיים כמנהגו. וגם בשנת חמשת אלפים ושלוש מאות ושנים ליצירה מפורסם הוא ומהועת זאת בכל הארץ איך הקיסר קאראלוס החמשי יצא בהיל גדול ועצום כבד מאד ויהי המאה וחמשיה האוניות בארבע מאות ויסע ממיוקרה והגיע לאלגזיר עיר בארץ ברבריה ויצאו אנשי הקיסר אל היבשה וילחמו עם הערבים וסבי ההבש וחונן על העיר סביב ותבוא העיר במצור. ואין בלילה ההוא ה' הטיל רוח גדולה אל הים ויהי סער גדול בים והולך ה' את הים ברוח קדים עזה כל הלילה ויגער בים ויהמו גליו ויזועו אנשי אוניות הקיסר בשבור חכמתם בלע. והשברתה חמש עשרה ומהשמיטות ושנים מהגדולות ולאתניות הבינוניות אין מספר. וגם בשאחית ההיה יד ה' רבה וישכרו החתים. וגם באנשי החיל אשר ביבשה ביתה מהמות ה' ולא יכלו עמוד על רגליהם מקור ומהערב וחצי צעקה גדולה בים וביבשה כיס ההוא אשר כמוהו לא נהייתה מאז כי יד ה' היתה בם להוונם ולאבדם. מהם סתו מהם מהם ברעב מהם ירדו חיים שאולה. וירא הקיסר כי מן השמים גלחמו וישא רגלו וילך לו אל ארצו. כך כתבו כל סופרי העתים המעשה הזה. אמנם דע נא כי סבת הסער הטול ההוא היה חכם אחד הנקרא בבגדו רוהן מקובל גדול כי בראותו הסכנה העצומה ואך כל היהודים היו מעוונדים למוח חטיל בים איזה שמות הקדש הכובים על לה ויהמו גליו ותנעשו כי חזה לו והאוניות צללו בעופרת במים אדירים כאשר שבעת: that is, he who composed the book Schalscheleth hakabbala (or Schalschéles hakkabbólo) writes at fol. 55 (in my copy printed at Amsterdam it stands at fol. 43, col. 1) how a wise man who was a Kabbalist was condemned to the fire in the time of Rabbi Mosche bar Nachman, and that those who were to burn him threw a donkey into the fire in his place; but after the evening prayer of the Sabbath he came to Rabbi Mosche bar Nachman, alive and well, just as he had been. Likewise, that the Emperor Carolus the Fifth, in the year 532 after the creation of the world (that is, in the year of Christ 1542), as is well known and acknowledged in all lands, set out to sea with a great army and a very mighty host, having some four hundred ships; and when he had sailed from the island of Majorca and landed near Algiers, a city in Barbary, the Emperor's men went ashore and made war upon the Arabs, who rode on swift horses, and they also encamped all around the city and besieged it. And how God caused a great wind to come upon the sea that same night, and there was a mighty storm, so that God drove the sea the entire night with a strong east wind and rebuked it, so that its waves roared and the Emperor's men who were aboard the ships were tossed about like drunkards, and their wisdom was brought to nothing; so that fifteen of the galleys and two of the great ships were shattered, and of the medium-sized vessels a countless number; and the mighty hand of the LORD was also upon the rest, so that their masts were broken. And the plague of God likewise came upon the soldiers who were on dry land, so that they could not stand on their feet for frost and hunger, and there was a great cry at that time on water and on land, the like of which had never occurred before, for the hand of the LORD was against them to afflict them and bring them to ruin. Some of them perished by the sword, some by hunger, and some went down alive into the pit. And when the Emperor saw that he was being fought against from heaven, he set out again and returned to his own land. All the chroniclers have recorded this event in this manner. But you must know that a certain wise man and Kabbalist, who is called by his surname Dorange, was the cause of this great storm; for when he saw the great danger before his eyes, how all the Jews would lose their lives, he cast certain holy names that were written upon a tablet into the sea, whereby its waves roared and moved violently, and the ships sank like lead in the mighty waters, as you have already heard. For this reason the king (of Algiers) also gave him a place of residence in the forecourt of the innermost royal palace and received him as his counselor.

Regarding the Schem hammaphorasch, the following is also written about it in the book Rasiel: שיזכור בי: זה שם המפורש שהזכיר משה רבינו עליו השלום בסנה בי: אותו על השד יברח ועל האש'כבה ועל החולי יתרפא ועל החורף יתגרש ואם יזכור אדם שמו ויכתוב אותו על דףתנא ימפ ועל השלטון יאהב אותו והדור שלא תקרא אותו אלא אם דהוה טהור, ונקי מכל טומאה וכל מי שיקרא אותו ואינו טהור ונקי ימות ודאי, that is: This is the Schem hammaphorasch, of which our teacher Moses, upon whom be peace, made mention in the bush. When someone invokes it over a devil, the devil takes flight; over a fire, it is extinguished; over an illness, it is healed; over thoughts, they are driven away. When someone also makes mention of it and writes it upon an enemy, that enemy will die; written upon a ruling regent, he will come to love him. Take care, however, that you do not read it unless you are pure and clean of all filth, for whoever reads it and is not pure and clean will surely die. By this name, Moses is also said to have slain the Egyptian (who is mentioned in Exod 2:12), as can be read in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary on that passage and in the book Zerór hammór fol. 64. col. 4. (because in v. 14 an Israelite said to Moses: "Do you say this to strangle me?" Just as if he had meant to say: do you also wish to kill me through the utterance of certain words, as you did the Egyptian?), where it is written: מכאן אנו למדים שהרגו בשם המפורש, that is: "From this we learn that he killed him through the Schem hammaphorásch." Likewise, in the book Zeena ureéna fol. 6. col. 1. 2., in the Parashah Nóach, it can be read from the Jalkut Schimoni that a maiden named Ischtahar, with whom the angel Schamchas had wished to commit fornication, ascended into heaven by means of the Schem hammaphorásch. And in the little book Ben Sirá, at fol. 9. col. 2., mention is made of Lilith (or Lilis), Adam's first wife, that she likewise flew up into the air by means of it, as will be shown in greater detail below in the 8th chapter of this first part. Likewise, it will be reported below in the 8th chapter of this first part how Abishai, through the utterance of a name, caused King David, whom Isbbi of Nob had intended to kill, to remain suspended between heaven and earth, in the air. But let this suffice for now regarding the performance of miracles through the Schem hammaphorásch or other holy names.

Concerning the other opinion of the godless Jews, namely that the miracles of Christ did not occur through the Schem hammaphorásch but through sorcery: on this matter the following is read in the old Nizzáchon p. 41: כל מעשיו כשוף: that is, All his works were sorcery. And p. 90, where his miracles are mentioned, it is written: הא לך אשר כי על ידי כישוף עשה כמו שעושין חוברים וקסמים: that is, Say that he performed them through sorcery, as sorcerers, soothsayers, and black magicians are accustomed to do. So also at p. 239 of the same work it is reported of him thus: דעו כי מכשף היה וכל נפלאותיו היו על ידי כישוף: that is, Know that he was a sorcerer, and that he performed all his miracles through sorcery. And p. 34, on the words of Exod 8:7, "Then the magicians did likewise," it is written: מכאן אמר רבי אברהם הגר שלא ידע ישו שם המפורש שהרי אפילו בימי משה שהיו דור קדוש לא ידעו כ"ש אחרי כן אלא כל מה שעשה עשה על ידי כישוף כי כתוב בעוון גיליון שהיה במצרים ב' שנים ושם למד הכישוף כדאמרינן עשרה קבין : that is, Therefore Rabbi Abraham the proselyte, who adopted our faith, says that Jesus did not know the Schemhamphorasch; for consider that even in the time of Moses, which was nonetheless a holy generation, they did not know it, how much less then was it known after those times; therefore he accomplished everything he did through sorcery; for it is written in the Gospel that he was two years in Egypt, and there he learned sorcery, as we say (in the Talmudic tractate Kidduschin fol. 49, col. 2) that ten measures of sorcery came down into the world, and Egypt took nine measures, while the rest of the world took only one measure. So also in the book Chissuk emuna, p. 452, it is said of Simon that through sorcery he deceived people to such a degree that they regarded him as a divine man, and the following is added: מכאן ראייה גם לאותות ישו שהיו נעשים בכישוף ולפיכך הפתאים והפתיים אחריו חשבוהו כמו כן לאלוה : that is, From this we also have proof against the miracles of Jesus, that they occurred through sorcery; for this reason the simple-minded who were led astray after him (so that they believed in him) likewise regarded him as GOD, as you see to this day.

From this and the preceding discussion, it is thus evident what godless things the senseless Jews teach concerning the most holy and innocent Savior Christ. For this reason, in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 103. col. 1., the question is also raised as to what the words of Ps 91:10, "And no plague shall come near your dwelling," mean, and the answer given is: שלא יהי לך בן או תלמיד שמקדיח : that is, that you may have no son or disciple who burns his food publicly (that is, who strays from the right path, practices heresy and idolatry, and spreads such teaching publicly,) as Jesus the Nazarene did. We can also reasonably conclude from this that what the converted Dietrich Schwabe indicates in his work "The Jewish Cloak," in the 2nd chapter of the first part, must be true, where he writes as follows: They (namely the Jews) misuse the name of JESUS to such a degree, and hold it in such contempt, that when they become angry with their children and wish to call them by the most shameful names, just as one might say "you ill-bred rascal" or "you arch-villain," they call them Jeschu Nozeri, that is, JESUS of Nazareth, as a term of contempt, as if they wished to say: you are as wicked a rascal or knave as Jesus of Nazareth was. This is also confirmed in the converted Ferdinand Hesse's "Jewish Scourge," in the second part, in the fourth chapter, where he likewise holds this up to the Jews and says: When you have children who are wicked knaves and refuse to behave, you call them Jesus, in this manner: "Oh, what a Jeschu you are!" And in the third chapter of the third part he writes as follows: When the Jews call Jesus by the most honorable name they can, which they may sometimes be compelled to do on account of Christians, they call him Jeschu. Likewise, when they are angry with their own children, or wish to call some wicked and dissolute rascal and knave by a name, they say Jeschu Nozeri, that is, Jesus of Nazareth, as a term of contempt, as if they wished to say: you are just as much a rascal and knave as Jesus of Nazareth. This is likewise attested by the converted Jew Samuel Friedrich Brenz, in his little book which he entitled "The Jewish Shed Snakeskin," where in the first chapter he breaks out into these words: When a Jew wishes to insult another in the most extreme manner, he calls him Jeschu Nozeri, or "you Tolui." When one among them refuses to behave properly, the Jews have this proverb among themselves and say he acts like the Tolui, that is, like the Hanged One.

All of this is to be believed all the more because in the Sepher chasidim, number 1103, it is commanded to give the name of a wicked person to one who does not behave well, where the words read as follows: אם צדיק יִשׁ לוֹ בֵן יִשֶׁע מִצְנָה לִקְרָא לוֹ שֵׁם אוֹתוֹ פְּלוֹנִי כְמוֹ עֲשׂוֹ בֶן יִצְחָק עֲשׂוֹ בֶן נִמְרֹד וְאִם לְאוֹתוֹ רָשָׁע קָטָן רָשָׁע יִקְרָא אֹתוֹ בֶּן מְנַשֶּׁה בֶּן אֲחִיז, that is: when a righteous or pious man has a wicked son, it is commanded to call him Esau the son of Jacob, Esau the son of Nimrod. But when that same wicked son has had a wicked forefather, one must call him Manasseh the son of Ahaz. Now, since they are supposed to call an ill-bred son Esau, because Esau was a wicked man, as will be demonstrated at length from their books below in the 16th chapter of this first part, there is no room for doubt whatsoever that they also call such an ill-bred son Jeschu, since they regard JESUS, in the most blasphemous manner, as a wicked man.

The two aforementioned opinions of the Jews, driven by the hellish spirit, must be briefly yet thoroughly refuted; and they must therefore know that Christ performed His miracles neither through the Schem hammephorash, nor through sorcery, but through His own divine power and might, which He possessed as the only Son of God and the true Messias. For He is called in Isa 9:6 פֶּלֶא Pêle, that is, wonderful or wonder-working; אֵל גִּבּוֹר El gibbor, that is, mighty God; and אָבִי עַד avi ad, that is, Father of Eternity, or Eternal Father; from which it is clearly to be seen that He, as the mighty and eternal God, was to be wonder-working. So also, as the uncreated Angel of the Lord, who manifested Himself many times during the period of the Old Testament, when He appeared to Manoah (as is to be seen in Judg 13) and was asked what His name was, He gave this answer: Why do you ask after my name, which is indeed פֶּלִי Péli, that is, wonderful or wonder-working? That the words of Isaiah are also to be understood as referring to the Messias is attested by Rabbi Moses bar Maimon in his letter called Iggereth (or Iggeres) battéman, which is printed at the back of his Sepher mizvôth (or Mizvos) at Amsterdam, where at fol. 127, col. 1, his words read as follows: קרא לוֹ הַק"ב שֵׁם שְׁמוֹת כְּאֵמָרוֹ כִּי יוֹלֵד לָנוּ בֵן נִתֵּן לָנוּ וְתֵהִי הַמְּשֵׁרָה עַל שְׁכֵמוֹ וִיקְרָא שְׁמוֹ פֶּלֶא יוֹעֵץ אֵל גִּבּוֹר אָבִי עַד שֶׁר שְׁלוֹם וְזֶה שְׁקָרָא that is, The holy blessed God has named him (the Messias, as the preceding words clearly indicate) with six names, when it is said: Unto us a child is born, a son is given unto us, whose government is upon his shoulder, and he has called his name wonderful or wonder-working, Counselor, mighty God, Eternal Father, Prince, Peace. That he calls him El, that is, God, however, is done hyperbolicè, that is, in a manner of excessive speech, in order thereby to give to understand that his glory will be more excellent than the glory of all men. The said words are likewise expounded of the Messias in the book Rabbôth (or Rabbos) in Devarim rábba (or Devorim rabbo), fol. 235, col. 1. In this, however, Rabbi Moses bar Maimon errs, in holding that he is called El, that is, God, by way of excessive speech; for this name properly belongs to Him as the eternal Son of God, which is proven by the fact that He is also called Father of Eternity, and it is said of Him in Mic 5:2 that His going forth has been from eternity. So also the name El gibbor, that is, mighty God, is given in Holy Scripture to the Lord alone, as is to be seen in Deut 10:17, Neh 9:32, Isa 10:21, and Jer 32:18. That the word El here does not mean "mighty," as it sometimes has this meaning elsewhere in Holy Scripture, but rather means "God," is confirmed by the Chaldean translation, in which the words El gibbor are rendered אֱלֹהָ גִבּוֹרָא, which sufficiently demonstrates this. If this is indeed the case, then He performed all His miracles through His own divine power, as the wonderful and mighty God, and not, as the devil alleges through the Jews, through the Schem hammephorash or sorcery.

But this too is an accursed slander, that Christ performed His miracles through sorcery, since no sorcerer, and no devil either, can raise a dead person, as Christ the Lord did, even according to the testimony of that infernal little book Toledóth Jéschu, and I prove this from the book Nischmáth (or Nischmas) chájim fol. 148. col. 1., where Rabbi Menasse ben Israel, in the third chapter of the third Máamar, writes as follows: אמרו ח"ל שלשה מפתחות לא נמסרו ביד שליח: לזכר מטר פרנסה תחייה חיה רמזו לנו שלא יש כח ובמערבא אמרי ד' וסימנם מפ"תח רצוני: לזכר מטר פרנסה תחייה חיה רמזו לנו שלא יש כח בשום שד או רוח שהם שלוחי השם לפעול הפעולות הללו ולכן לא תמצא שום מכשף אשר נאמר עליו שהיה לו כח להוריד מטר להחיות זרע ופרנסה בעולם להחיות מתים או לפתוח רחם העקרות וזולת הנביאים הקדושים היו פועלים אותם דמיון משה שמואל אלישע אליהו ודומיהם על ידי תפלה והתנונים להשם יתברך כי אין יכולת בשום בריה לפעול אותם מבלעדי האון: that is, our Rabbis, of blessed memory, say (in the Talmudic tractate Taanith (or Taanis) fol. 2. col. 1. and in the tractate Sanhedrin fol. 113. col. 1.) that there are three keys which are not given by God into the hand of one who is sent by Him; in the land toward the setting of the sun, however, it is said there are four, which are indicated by the word מפתח maphtéach (which means "a key" and consists of the letters M, P, T, and Ch), and the first letter M signifies Mátar, that is, rain; the second P signifies Parnása, or parnóso, that is, sustenance or nourishment; the third T signifies Techija, that is, the resurrection of the dead; and the fourth Ch signifies chája, that is, childbearing, or birth; and by this they have indicated that no devil or spirit, which are God's messengers, has any power whatsoever to perform such works. Therefore you will also find no sorcerer of whom it is said that he had the power to bring down rain, to bring forth seed and nourishment, to raise the dead to life, or to open the barren womb; and the holy prophets, such as Moses, Samuel, Elisha, Elijah, and others like them, performed such things only through their prayers to God, for no creature has any power to bring these things to pass except God, and the true prophets are distinguished from those who do evil by this very prerogative. These are the words of the aforementioned Rabbi Menasse.

Those, therefore, who dared to say in a godless manner of Christ that He performed His miracles through sorcery, and consequently also raised the dead through sorcery, were incompetent asses who did not even know that, according to their own Talmud, this could not be true; or else the Devil, the sworn enemy of Christ, had so hardened their minds that they could not think of it. It is also well worth noting that Rabbi Menasse ben Israel reports that none but the true prophets of God had done such things, and that by this means the false prophets and wicked men are distinguished from the true prophets; from which it then irrefutably follows that Jesus, who, as is reported in the little book Toledoth Jeschu itself, raised certain dead persons, must at the very least have been a pious and true prophet. Since, moreover, it is said of God in Ps 72:18 that He alone does wonders, and He would therefore have had to have performed those miracles that are attributed to Christ, it would follow from this, in a blasphemous manner, that God had thereby helped Christ to carry out his seductions away from the paths of righteousness, to introduce all manner of errors, and to bring a shameful idolatry into circulation, which wicked deeds are blasphemously imputed to our most innocent Savior by His sworn enemies, the Jews.

Having now seen from the foregoing what abominable vices the godless Jews, at the instigation of the devil, attribute to Christ the Lord, we also wish to consider at this point what they further write about Him from such an impulse, and how He is supposed to have fallen into the hands of His enemies. The history of the New Testament teaches us that when the time of His suffering, which had been appointed from eternity, drew near, Satan entered into Judas Iscariot, who was one of His disciples, and who betrayed Christ, whereupon He was seized and led away as a prisoner, as may be read in Luke 22. The devil, however, presents this matter in the blasphemous little book inspired by him, the Toledoth Jeschu, mixed with horrible lies and in a manner altogether different, so that he might only cast suspicion upon the New Testament, as though the matter were presented therein in a completely different way than it actually is. But so that the devil's shameful tricks therein may be seen, I will set down here everything that is found therein on this subject; from page 8 to page 17 the words read as follows: ויהי ביום החמשי ותבא השמועה רעה לירושלים : ויהי בבואם לעיר הקדש ויגד להם את כל אשר עשה ישו ושמוחו הפריצים שמחה גדולה : אבל הזקנים והחסידים והחכמים געו בבכיה מאד וסנהדרי גדולה וסנהדרי קטנה אכלו אבל גדול : ויאמרו לשלח אליהו אחריו כי אמרו בלבבם אולי ננצח אותו בעבור ה' להפילו בדין ומשפט מות וישלחו אחריו את ענניה ואת אחזיה אנשים חשובים מסנהדרי קטנה ויבאו לפני

one who wrote it, perverted and twisted the history of Christ's Passion, so that the Jews who read the New Testament and might find the matter described differently therein would regard it as false and untrue. One must also consider with what embittered spirit that same villain, damned for all eternity, called our most innocent Savior so often a whore's child and son of the unclean. But this accursed and blasphemous fabrication contains so many gross lies that all the Jews who accept it as pure truth ought to be ashamed of it. For first, it is stated that what was narrated took place in the time of Queen Helena, who had assumed the government of the Jewish land after the death of her husband, King Jannæi; and that King Munbas or Monobazus, who was also called Hyrchanus, was her son, whom his servant Herodes had put to death. But the Jews must know that King Jannai, or Alexander Jannæus, had not Helena but Alexandra as his wife, who assumed the government after his death; and that Queen Helena, the mother of Munbas, was a queen of the Adiabeni and thus an entirely different person, who 25 years before the destruction of the Temple, and therefore long after the Passion of Christ, converted to the Jewish faith together with her son Munbas. Likewise, that Hyrchanus was never called Munbas, but that these two names belonged to two entirely different persons; and that Queen Alexandra, the wife of Jannæi, who is here called Helena through a gross error, lived before the Roman Emperor Julius Caesar, and therefore very long before the time of Christ; whereas Christ was born under Emperor Augustus and crucified under Emperor Tiberius. How then can the dull blockhead who, at the instigation of the devil, the father of lies, composed the accursed lying-pamphlet Toledóth Jéschu, write that Jesus was born in the time of King Jannæi and, after his death, during the reign of his wife Helena, was stoned and hanged, when in fact Queen Alexandra, as noted, lived so long before the time of Christ, and Helena, as a pagan queen who never ruled in Jerusalem, only converted to the Jewish faith after His Passion and death? But if the senseless Jews are unwilling to believe this, I will prove it to them clearly from their own books, and they must know that in the Jewish historian Josephus, in the thirteenth book of the Antiquities, in chapter 24, as well as in the first book of the Jewish War, in chapter 4, it is stated that after the death of King Jannæi, his wife Alexandra assumed the royal government and had two sons, the elder of whom, named Hyrchanus, she first made high priest and subsequently also elevated to royal dignity; the younger, however, who was called Aristobulus, she left in his former lowly station on account of his fierce temperament and hasty disposition. And it is to be noted here that this Queen Alexandra died in the year 3899 after the creation of the world, and 65 years before the birth of Christ. So too does Rabbi David Gans write in his history book Zémach David, in the first part, fol. 23, col. 1, numèrò 668, as follows:

that is: Alexandra, the wife of King Jannæi Alexandri, who held the royal government of the house or lineage of the Hasmoneans, reigned in the year 688 (of the fourth thousand of the world's chronology, that is, in the year 3688 after the creation of the world according to Jewish reckoning, which does not agree with ours, briefly mentioned just before); and she was a wise and pious woman, and loved the Pharisees, and gave them authority over the Sadducees to deal with them as they saw fit. She had two sons, the elder of whom was Hyrcanus the third, who held the Pharisees in esteem, and his mother gave him the high priesthood; the second, however, was called Aristobulus the other, who loved the Sadducees, and his mother made him a commander of the army over the Sadducees.

Regarding Queen Helena and her son Munbas, one finds in the aforementioned twentieth book of Josephus, in the 2nd chapter, that she was the queen of the Adiabenes and a pagan, but that in the year 4009 after the creation of the world, that is, 49 years after the birth of Christ, she, together with her two sons, one of whom was called Izates and the other Munbas or Monobazus, adopted the Jewish faith; and it is further recorded there that she subsequently traveled to Jerusalem in order to see the Temple and to worship God there. The aforementioned Rabbi David Gans likewise writes of these same persons in his said book, fol. 15. col. 2., in the second part, as follows: הילני מלכת האדיאבני ושני בניה מתבו ואיזאטי התגייירו בימי הקיסר קלודיוס that is, Helena, the queen of the Adiabenes, and her two sons Munbas and Izates adopted the Jewish religion in the time of Emperor Claudius. On this same matter, Rabbi Azariah also writes in his book Meôr enäim, cap. 51. fol. 162. col. 1. as follows: עם אמרם ז"ל ביומא שהילני היתה אמו של מונבז לא אמרו שמונבז היה ממלכי חשמונאי ואיך יתכן זה כי מספר העתים לידידיה ומן היסופון לרומיים וליהודים וכל דסופרים מקצה ובפרט הראב"ד בזכרון דברי בית שני נודע לודאי שהאחרון במלכי חשמונאי היה הורקנוס בן ינאי המלך והמלכה אלכסנדרא ושנמשכה פעולתו ל"ד שנים עד קום הורדוס חתנו ויהרגהו וגו' תוכן הדבר שהילני ובניה היו גרי צדק מגיי הארץ וכמו שיתבאר בע"ה מן הפרק הבא אשר ממנו ידעו גלגולי סבותם איך באו לחסות תחת כנפי אלהינו בימי הקיסר קלאריאו כעשרים וחמש שנים קודם חרבן הבית. שאו דור אגרופוס מלך וישמעאל בן פאבי כהן גדול that is: Although our Rabbis, of blessed memory, say in the Talmudic tractate Yoma that Helena was the mother of Munbas, they did not say that Munbas was descended from the kings of the Hasmoneans. How indeed could that be the case? For from the chronology, or the book of times, of Jedidja, and from

Josephus, which the Romans (that is, the Christians) and the Jews possess, as well as from other writers, and in particular from the history of the Second Temple by Rabbi Abraham Ben David, it is certainly known that the last of the kings of the Hasmoneans was Hyrcanus, the son of King Jannaeus and Queen Alexandra, and that his glory and reign lasted thirty-four years, until Herod, his son-in-law, rose up and put him to death, &c. It is therefore clear that Helena and her sons converted from the pagans of the earth to the Jewish faith and adopted it fully and in all respects, as will be demonstrated in the following chapter, with God's help, from which the circumstances shall become known of how, in the time of Emperor Claudius, approximately 25 years before the destruction of the Temple, when Agrippa was king and Ishmael, the son of Phabi, was High Priest, they took shelter under the wings of our God. Thus far are the words of the said Rabbi Azariah. It is therefore evident from the testimonies adduced that everything reported in the little book Toledoth Jeschu as having supposedly occurred between Queen Helena and Christ is a presumptuous and gross lie, for this queen never saw him and did not come to the Jewish land until long after his death; from which one may also reasonably judge concerning all the rest, that it consists of nothing but diabolical lies.

Second, it is mentioned therein that Jesus was a kinsman and blood relative of Queen Helena, and that she had therefore sought to save him; and the claim that he was her kinsman is taken from the Talmudic tractate Sanhadrin fol. 43. col. 1., where one reads: קרוב למלכות היה, that is, He was a close relative of the royal authority. But how could he have been her kinsman, given that he was of Jewish descent and she of pagan descent?

Third, it is said that after Judas had likewise learned the Schem hammphorasch, he appeared before Queen Helenam, and Jesus was also summoned there, and that the two of them subsequently fought one another while flying through the air; from which it follows that they must have come to know each other quite well, and since Jesus had his disciples with him everywhere, Judas, the adversary of Christ, must also have become sufficiently known to them. How then could it be possible that Judas, so shortly after this, could have presented himself as such a stranger to Christ and all his disciples that they would not have recognized him immediately when he mingled among their company, proposed the scheme of making and wearing the same kind of clothing, and went with them into the city of Jerusalem? Should they not, having previously seen in many places that he was Christ's declared enemy, who had so fiercely persecuted and publicly reviled Him, have driven him away from themselves? It is therefore easy to conclude from all this that the whole affair is likewise a palpable lie.

Fourth, it is reported that, after JESUS had healed the Schem hammphorasch into his flesh in the Temple at Jerusalem, he subsequently, once he had left Jerusalem, took it out again and thereby performed his miracles; and nowhere is it mentioned that he put it back into his flesh. Yet notwithstanding this, it is said that Judas, when Jesus had fallen into a deep sleep, cut open his flesh and took out the Name, after which Jesus could no longer perform miracles. But how could he have cut it out of the flesh, seeing that it was no longer in there, but was supposed to have already been cut out by Jesus himself beforehand? How also could he have taken the Name away from Jesus, since through much practice he must have learned it so thoroughly by heart and impressed it so firmly into his memory that it would have been impossible to deprive him of it? Indeed, how could Judas even have known where Jesus had healed the Name into his body, so that he could have found it so readily? How also could such a thing have been done so secretly, given that Jesus always had so many disciples around him, and indeed, when Judas was with him and had disguised himself, there were supposed to have been as many as two thousand men with him? Would not someone have noticed it?

Fifth, it is stated that Jesus was first stoned to death and only then hanged, which is, however, a gross untruth, for he was nailed to the cross alive, in accordance with Roman custom.

Sixth, it is alleged that Jesus had conjured the wood, while he still possessed the Schem hammephorasch, so that none of it would bear him, but rather broke beneath him; and that he was therefore hanged upon a large cabbage stalk, which Judas had brought from his garden. But this too is once again a senseless fabrication; for to what end should Christ, since he is supposed to have known that he would be hanged, have conjured the wood in such a manner, seeing that one could have hanged him on a stone, or on an iron bar fixed in a wall (although such a manner of hanging was not customary), or killed him in some other way, so that he would have gained no benefit from such conjuring? He would rather have had to conjure his adversaries, so that they could have undertaken and accomplished nothing against him. And just as it is an exceedingly great lie, what is read in the Talmudic tractate Kethuvóth (or Kesúvos) fol. 111, col. 2, where it is written thus: אמר רבי שמעון בן תחליפא קלה: של כרוב הניח לנו אבא היינו עולים ויורדים בו בסולם, that is, Rabbi Shimon, the son of Chalafta, has said: my father left us a cabbage stalk, and we climbed up it with a ladder and climbed back down again; since no cabbage stalk of such a size is to be found anywhere in the entire world; so likewise it is a shameless untruth that Jesus, as is also reported in the old Nizzáchon p. 137, was hanged upon a cabbage stalk, which without doubt would have had to be no smaller than the one that Rabbi Shimon's father is supposed to have left behind. The author of the old Sepher Nizzáchon, p. 10 also contradicts the booklet Toledóth Jeschu, inasmuch as he writes that God had said that Jesus was to be hanged upon a piece of wood, as his own words, which will follow shortly, demonstrate: how then should he have been hanged upon a cabbage stalk? Finally,

Seventh, it is said that Jesus was stoned and hanged by the Jews, with no mention whatsoever of the Roman governor Pontius Pilate and his subordinate soldiers, even though Pilate had Him nailed alive to the wood and crucified at the Jews' urgent insistence, as can be seen in Matt 27:26 etc. and John 19:13 etc. That Christ was crucified by order of Pilate, however, can be seen from the pagan historian Cornelius Tacitus, who writes thus in the 15th book of his Histories: Auctor nominis ejus Christus, qui Tiberio imperante, per Procuratorem Pontium Pilatum supplicio affectus erat. That is: the originator of that name (namely of the Christians, as the preceding words make clear) was Christ, who, during the time when Tiberius was Emperor, was executed by the governor Pontius Pilate. There are indeed many other shameful lies contained in the cited words of the oft-mentioned little book, but since they are not worthy of a response, I have chosen to remain silent about them.

Since it has also been mentioned in the foregoing that Jesus was condemned to death and executed, we wish, in conclusion to this chapter, to examine as well for what reasons this is supposed to have occurred, according to the Jews' diabolical teaching; and it is to be known that three such reasons are found in their books.

The first reason is supposed to be that He, according to their damnable opinion, practiced sorcery. Concerning this, the following is written in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 43. col. 1.: בערב הפסח תלאוהו לישו והכרו יוצא 1: לפניו מ'יום יצא ליסקל על ששישף והסית והדיח את ישראל כל מי שיודע לו זכות יבא וילמד פסח that is, On the eve of the Passover feast, Jesus was hanged; but a crier had gone out before him forty days, and declared that he was to be stoned, because he had practiced sorcery and led the people astray and turned them away (from the true faith); but anyone who knows something in his defense should come forward and make it known. Nothing, however, was found to justify him, and therefore he was hanged on the eve of the Passover feast. And in the old Nizzáchon, the following is read at p. 139.: וכן תלהו כי כשפ והדיח

'ועל נפלאותיו היו על ידי כישוף ועל כן נדון למיתה כדין וכמשפט כאשר צונו ה' אלהינו וגו' that is, Know, however, that he (namely Jesus) was a sorcerer, and that all his miracles were performed through sorcery; therefore he was, as is right and proper, and as God commanded us, condemned to death.

The second reason is supposed to be that he practiced idolatry and thereby also led the people into that same idolatry, namely the worship of Markolis, or Mercurius. Concerning this, the following is read in Rabbi Abraham Perizol's book Maggén Abraham, in the 59th chapter: לפי דברי ז"ל לא עשה עצמו אלה אלא שזקף לבנה והשתחוה לה והטעה הרבה מישראל בעבודת מרקוליס כמו שנזכר בפרק חלק ובפרק עגלה ערופה ובאון גליון לא נזכר מזה כלום אלא שהיה אומר על עצמו שהיה בן אלהים ומ"מ מפני הטיה זה נדחו ישראל להריגה, that is: According to the statement of our rabbis, of blessed memory, he did not present himself as a God, but rather he erected a baked stone and bowed down before it, and also led many of Israel astray through the worship of Markolis, as is indicated in the chapter Chelek (of the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 107, col. 2) and in the chapter Eglarúfa (of the tractate Sota fol. 47, col. 1). In the Gospel, however, not the slightest mention is made of this; rather, (only the following is read,) that he said of himself that he was the Son of God; notwithstanding this, the Israelites condemned him to death on account of leading the people into idolatry.

The third reason is supposed to be that he led people astray and turned them away from God, and that he also, according to some opinions (for, as can be seen from the preceding section from the book Maggén Abraham, not all agree on this point), presented himself as a God. Therefore it is written in the old Nizzáchon, page 239, as follows: אחרי כן שגדל ה"נ ואמר שבן אלהים הוא והיהוה: למיתה כב' מסיית ומדיח that is: After he (namely Jesus) had grown up and said that he was the Son of God, they condemned him to death as a seducer and one who leads others into apostasy. And on page 10 of the aforementioned Nizzáchon it is written: לפי שראה הקב"ה שעתיד ישו להטעות העולם ולומר שהוא אלוה אמר הקב"ה מוטב ימותו בני אדם וישו יתלה על העץ ואל יאכל מעץ החיים וידעו כל באי עולם כי לא אלוה הוא that is: After the holy and blessed God had seen that Jesus would lead the world astray and into error, and would say that he was God, God said it is better that people die and that Jesus be hanged on a tree and not eat from the Tree of Life, so that all those who come into the world may know that he is no God. Likewise, the words of Balaam in Num 24:23, אי מי יחיה, that is, as the Jews interpret them: Alas, who will live on account of him who presents himself as a God? are understood by the blind Jews as referring to Jesus; hence in Abarbanel's book Maschmia jeschua, fol. 5, col. 1, the following is read: אי מי יחיה משומו אל פירושו בלא ספק אי מי יחיה באותם הימים שאידם ילוד אשה ישים עצמו אל שרמז בזה לישוע הנצרי שאמר על עצמו שהוא אלוה או שאמרם אחרים עליו כי לא מצאנו זולתו שישים עצמו אלוה ואע"פ שאמר נבוכדנצר אדמה לעליון אין זה מורה על האלהות בלתי השווי תם שהוא חרף וניא וישא מרום עיניו אל קדוש ישראל הנה לא אמר שיהיה הוא הסבה הראשונה בורא עולם כאשר עשה ישוע הנצרי או עשו

עליו. ואולי אמר אי מי יחיה משומו אל על בני יהודה שהרגוהו בירושלים וסבבו לבני ישראל בגלות אדום צרות רבות ורעות: The interpretation of the words "Alas, who will live before him who presents himself as a God?" is without doubt this: Alas, who will live in that time in which a man born of a woman will set himself up as a God; by which Jesus the Nazarene is meant, who said of himself that he was God, or of whom others said this; for we find no other who presented himself as a God. And although Nebuchadnezzar (Isa 14:14) said "I will make myself like the Most High," this is nevertheless not to be understood as referring to divinity, for in wishing to be like Him, he did not make himself equal to Him. Even though he also blasphemed and reviled, and lifted his eyes on high against the Holy One of Israel, he nevertheless did not say that he was the first cause and the Creator of the world, as Jesus the Nazarene did, or as others did on his behalf. Perhaps he (Balaam) spoke the words "Alas, who will live before him who presents himself as a God?" concerning the children of Judah, who killed him in Jerusalem and thereby caused the children of Israel many and grievous afflictions in the Edomite exile or misery (in which they live among the Christians). In this sense the aforementioned words are also taken in the book Majene jeschua, fol. 49, col. 2, in the eighth Majan, in the eighth Tamar. So also in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, page 14, number 8, it is written on this matter as follows: הלא על הנצרי נבא בלעם אי מי יחיה משומו אל כי אי לכל אותם שיהיו מן אותו שישים עצמו אל אי לעולם שהרי לשאינם מאמינים בו מצרים אתם: that is: Did not Balaam prophesy of the Nazarene: "Alas, who will live before him who presents himself as a God?" For woe to all those who will be of him who will make himself a God! Yes, woe to them all! for they will afflict those who do not believe in him; but those who do believe in him will be lost in the world to come (that is, in eternal life).

These are, according to the godless teaching of the malicious Jews, the reasons why Jesus was supposedly condemned to death; but the claim that He was arrested and executed on account of sorcery, idolatry, and leading people astray is a diabolical falsehood. For He, as the eternal Son of God and true Savior of the world, could not have committed any sin, as has already been demonstrated above; how then could He have practiced sorcery and idolatry, and turned people away from God? The testimony of the Jewish historian Josephus, cited above in the second chapter, teaches the exact opposite.

As for the matter of His having presented Himself as God, we read in Matt 26:63-64 that when the high priest had adjured Him to say whether He was Christ, the Son of God, He answered: "Thou sayest it," which means as much as "Yes, I am He," as is clearly seen from Mark 14:61; for which reason the high priest also tore his garments and said: "He has blasphemed God; what further need do we have of witnesses? Behold, now you have heard His blasphemy. What do you think?" And thereupon the answer was given: "He is guilty of death," as is seen in Matt 26:65-66 and Mark 14:63-64. Christ, however, spoke entirely rightly and well in this matter, for He is in truth the eternal Son of God, and consequently true God, as will be demonstrated with powerful proofs in the fourth chapter immediately following. But He did not wish, as already noted above, to deliver Himself from the hands of His enemies, although He, as an almighty God and Lord, could have done so with the greatest ease; rather, He willingly submitted to the suffering for the sake of which He had assumed human nature, so that the poor, sinful human race might thereby be redeemed from eternal damnation, and that which had been determined in the counsel of God, as is read in Acts 2:23 and 4:28, might be accomplished. Thus the holy Apostle Paul also writes of Him in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. 2:9-10, as follows: "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, crowned with honor through the suffering of death, so that by the grace of God He might taste death for all. For it was fitting for Him, for whom are all things and through whom are all things, who has brought many children to glory, that He should make the captain of their salvation perfect through suffering."

Chapter IV.

Therein is shown what, according to the accursed teaching of the godless Jews, is supposed to have happened to Christ after His suffering and death; and it is demonstrated that He is the true Messiah, and not merely a plain man, but also GOD; with an additional account of what the Turks' Quran says concerning Christ.

The history of the New Testament teaches us that after JESUS had given up His spirit on the cross and had died, Joseph of Arimathea, with Pilate's permission, laid His body in a new tomb hewn out of a rock, and rolled a great stone before the door of the tomb. But the next day the chief priests and Pharisees went to Pilate and asked him that the tomb might be secured by guards, so that no one could come and take the body of Christ out of it, and that His disciples might not have occasion to say He had risen from the dead; in which Pilate also complied with them, so that the tomb was well guarded and the stone upon it was sealed, as can be seen in Matt 27:57 ff. On the third day He rose again from the dead (Matt 28:1 ff.; Mark 16:1 ff.; Luke 24:1 ff.; John 20:1 ff.), and thereafter appeared to His disciples at various times and in different places, and spoke with them (Matt 28:16 ff.; Mark 16:14 ff.; Luke 24:13 ff.; John 20:19 ff.); and after He had restored Peter, who had denied Him, to his office (John 21:15), and had given His apostles the command to preach the Gospel throughout the whole world (Matt 28:19; Mark 16:15), He ascended visibly and publicly into heaven before the eyes of His disciples (Luke 24:51; Acts 1:9-10), where He sits at the right hand of His heavenly Father (Eph 1:20; Heb 1:3), from whence He will come again to raise the dead (Phil 3:20-21 and 1 Thess 4:14) and to judge the living and the dead, as is read in Matt 25:30-31; Acts 17:31; Rom 2:16 and 14:10. But the wretched devil, who has at all times taken great pains to turn men away from the sole saving faith in Christ, teaches through his willing instruments, the Rabbis, something entirely different, so that he might not only keep the hardened Jews in that hatred toward Christ and the Christian religion into which they are raised and trained from youth, as well as in their abominable blindness, but might also lead astray the Christians as much as ever possible. For this reason, in the oft-mentioned blasphemous little book Toledoth Jeschu, breathed into existence by him, immediately following what was last extracted from it on p. 173, the following is written further concerning Jesus: ויהי לעת ערב ויאמרו

(That is: It came to pass toward evening, after Jesus had been hanged, that the wise men said: it is not fitting to transgress a single letter of the Law on account of this whoreson; although he led the people astray, we will nonetheless let the law of the Law be done unto him; they therefore buried him at the place where he had been stoned. But it came to pass that his disciples came in the middle of that same night, and sat upon the grave, and wept bitterly, and mourned for him. When Judas saw this, he took the corpse and buried it in his garden, beneath a watercourse; for he had diverted the water elsewhere; and after he had buried him, he let the watercourse run again as before, back to its former place. Now when they had come again the following day, sat down, and wept, he said to them: why do you weep? Seek and look upon the buried man. But when they had sought him and had not found him in his grave, his godless assembly cried out: he is not in his grave, but has

ascended into heaven; for thus he prophesied of himself while he was yet alive, saying: for He (namely my heavenly Father) will take me (unto Himself), Selah! When the Queen had heard these things, she sent for the wise men of Israel, and they came before the Queen; and she said to them: what have you done with the man of whom you said that he was a sorcerer and led the people astray? They answered her: we buried him according to the law of the Law. Thereupon she said to them: bring him here to me. But when they had gone and sought him in his grave and had not found him, they came before the Queen and said: we do not know who has taken him from his grave. Then the Queen answered them and said: he is the Son of God, and has ascended to his Father in heaven, for thus he prophesied of himself: for He will take me, Selah! But they answered her: let not such things enter your mind, for he was a sorcerer; and the wise men also bore witness against him that he was a whoreson, the son of an unclean woman. The Queen, however, gave this answer: what more shall I say to you? If you bring him here, you shall be innocent; but if not, I will leave not one of you alive. Then they all spoke and said: give us time until we may know how the matter will fall out; perhaps we shall find him there; but if that should not be, deal with us as seems good to you. She thus gave them three days' time, and the wise men and the pious went out from the Queen with sorrowful hearts and were very sad, since they did not know what to do, and they proclaimed a fast. Now when the appointed time drew near and they had not found him, many went out from Jerusalem to flee from the Queen. There also went out an old man by the name of Rabbi Tanchúma, and he wandered back and forth across the field in great distress; and when he saw Judas sitting in his garden and eating, Rabbi Tanchúma said to him: what is this, Judas, that you are eating, while all the Israelites are fasting and are steeped in sorrow? Thereupon Judas was startled and said: how so, my lord? Why then are they fasting? Rabbi Tanchúma said: on account of the whoreson who was hanged and buried at the place of stoning, but has gone missing, and no one knows who has taken him from his grave; but his godless assembly claims he has ascended into heaven; and the Queen has said that she would have all the Israelites put to death if they do not find him. Then Judas answered and said: if this whoreson, the son of the unclean woman, were to be found, would Israel then be saved and suffer no harm? Rabbi Tanchúma said in reply: if he is found, then certainly Israel will be saved. Then he said: come here, and I will show you the man you are seeking, for I stole the whoreson from his grave, because I feared his godless assembly might take him out of it, and I buried him in my garden and caused a little stream to run over him. Thereupon Rabbi Tanchúma made haste and went and reported the matter to the wise men of Israel, and they all came together as one man and bound him to the tail of a horse and dragged him along and threw him before the Queen, and said: behold, this is the man of whom you said that he had ascended into heaven. When the Queen saw him, she was ashamed and could not answer a single word. But when they had brought him there, they had dragged him along and torn out the hair of his head; and for this reason the Gallachím (or גללוחים Gallohim, that is, the clergy among the Christians, as can be seen below in the 10th chapter of this first part) now shave the hair in the middle of their heads in remembrance of what happened to Jesus. These are once again the words of the accursed blasphemous little book Toledóth Jeschu.)

The falsity of this diabolical slander is immediately apparent. For how could it ever be that Judas, who, as shown above from that very same booklet, was also one of the sages and perhaps even a member of the high council, and who had previously revealed all his plans against Jesus, should now, without the knowledge of the high council, have taken Him from His grave and secretly buried Him in his garden, without any person's knowledge? Should he not have made it known that the disciples of Jesus had gone to the grave at night, had sat there and wept, and that there was reason to fear they might take Him out and claim that He had ascended into heaven, whereby people could be strengthened in their faith in Him? Should he not also have disclosed his plan to remove Him from His grave and bury Him in his garden, so that nothing of the sort might come to pass? How, moreover, could he have told the disciples to seek Jesus in the grave from which he had already stolen Him, when he could surely have anticipated that they would immediately, upon not finding Him, publicly declare that He had risen, from which a great commotion would arise? Should he not rather have informed other people that he had made a fool of the disciples and had them search in vain? How can it also be true that the very man who had previously always associated with the high council, and had taken it so greatly to heart to deliver Christ into the hands of His enemies, should now have lived entirely cut off from all people, outside the city of Jerusalem, in his garden, so that he would have known nothing whatsoever of what had taken place after the burial of Christ, both within and outside the city, on account of which a general fast was proclaimed and everyone was in the greatest fear and peril of life because of the queen's threats? To put it briefly: the entire narrative of the accursed booklet Toledoth Jeschu is a crude, foolish, diabolical, and self-contradictory fabrication. Furthermore, Judas did not live beyond the death of Christ, since, when Christ was condemned to death, he repented of having betrayed innocent blood, and after returning to the chief priests and elders the thirty pieces of silver he had received as the reward for his betrayal, he immediately hanged himself, as can be seen in Matt 27:3.

The Hebrews are also accustomed to saying in a proverb: שקר אין לו רגלים, that is, a lie has no legs, by which it is meant that a lie is unstable, and that those who are given to lying do not remain consistent with one another or with words that agree among themselves. This is found to be entirely certain and true in this very place as well, for the godless blasphemer who wrote the little book Toledoth Jeschu claims, as mentioned, that Judas stole the body of Jesus from the grave and buried it in his garden; whereas, on the contrary, Rabbi Abraham Perizol, in his aforementioned book Maggen Abraham, which he wrote against the Christian religion, and which a Portuguese Jew in Amsterdam lent me to read through, and which has never yet been printed, writes as follows in the 59th chapter: תלמידיו גנבוהו ליל שבת שהיה לילה ראשון לפסח שהיו ישראל טרודים במועדיהם ומהעסוקים באכילת פסחים ולא יכלו לשמרו ותלמידיו חללו שבת והוציאוהו מהשוחה שהכניסוהו בה הנקראה שפילקרו כמו שכתוב באון גלין וקברוהו בתוך גן אחד והם העידו כי ראוהו חי ודברו עמו, that is: His disciples stole him on the Sabbath night, which was the first night of the Passover feast, during which the Israelites were occupied with their solemn assemblies and engaged in eating the Passover lambs, and were therefore unable to guard him. His disciples consequently desecrated the Sabbath and stole him from the grave, which they call sepulchrum, as is written in the Gospel, into which he had been laid, and buried him in the middle of a garden; they also testified that they had seen him alive and had spoken with him. These are the words of Abraham Perizol, which are entirely inconsistent with what stands in the little book Toledoth Jeschu, and by this each one exposes the other's shameless and crude lies.

The sworn enemy of Christ, the wretched devil, was not satisfied with having inspired the Jews to write and teach the above blasphemous and mocking things about Christ; rather, he proceeded still further with his venomous blasphemies. In the book Toledóth (or Táledos) Jizchak, one reads at fol. 8, col. 2, in the Parascha Bereschith: המעורר מחלוקת נידון בגיהנם, that is: Whoever stirs up quarrel or strife shall be punished in hell. And in Rabbi Bechjai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, it is written at fol. 6, col. 1, in the aforementioned Parascha: המחלוקת וגיהנם נבראו ביום להחננו מרה שכל המעורר מחלוקת נידון בגיהנם, that is: Strife and hell were created on the same day, from which it is to be understood that everyone who stirs up discord shall be punished in hell. Now the godless Jews say that Christ was a great quarreler and instigated much discord; therefore Abarbanel writes in his book Maschmía Jeschúa, fol. 19, col. 4, as well as in his commentary on the Prophet Isaiah, fol. 54, col. 3, on chapter 35, as follows: חכמי האמת קבלו שנפש עשו נתגלגלה בישוע הנוצרי, ולכן היה במדברות איש שדה והיה איש ריב ומדון לחכמי הפרושים, that is: The sages of truth (understand: the theologians or divines) have received through tradition that the soul of Esau passed into Jesus the Nazarene, and that for this reason he gladly dwelt in the wilderness and was a man of the field, and also had quarrel and strife with the sages of the Pharisees. From which it then follows that he must have descended into hell. Indeed, that he came into hell is expressly taught in the old Nizzáchon, p. 83, on the words of Isa 5:20, "Woe to those who call evil good and good evil, who make darkness light and light darkness," where it is written as follows: הוי אומר רע וטוב רע וטוב רע שמהלפים, את אלהי השמים באלהי תועבותם שמים חושך לאור ר"ל שמים את ישו שירד לגיהנם לאור, that is: The words "Woe to those who call evil good and good evil" signify those who exchange the heavenly God for their abomination-god; "who make darkness light," that is, those who place Jesus, who descended into hell, in the light.

In what place of Hell he is supposed to have arrived is to be seen from the following; and it is to be known that there is said to be a certain place therein which is called צואה רותחת Zóa rotáchat (or rosáchas), that is, the boiling filth, concerning which one reads in the book Emék hammélech fol. 7. col. 3. in the second preface, in the third chapter, as follows: המלעיג על דברי תלמידי חכמים, גידון בצואה רותחת, that is, Whoever mocks the words of the disciples of the wise shall be punished in the boiling filth. And in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, p. 42. numero 68. one reads: המלגלג בדברי חז"ל דברי ר"זל עונשו לידון, בצואה רותחת, that is, Whoever mocks the words of our sages, of blessed memory, shall, according to the pronouncement of our rabbis, be punished in the boiling filth. More on this subject will also be reported below in the 6th chapter of the second part. Now, since Jesus said that He was the Son of God and rejected the ordinances of the Pharisees, the godless Jews teach that He is punished in that place of Hell, namely the boiling filth, and must suffer there for eternity; and this is set forth in the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 57. col. 1., where, as has already been mentioned once above, it is reported that Onkelos, the nephew of Titus, when he wished to adopt the Jewish faith, had Titus and Balaam summoned up to him from Hell by a necromancy and sorcery, and asked them who was held in high esteem in that other life, namely the eternal life to come, and that they answered that Israel was held in high esteem. Thereupon follows: אזל אסקיה לנגידא לפושע ישראל אמר ליה מאן חשיב בההוא עלמא: אמר ליה ישראל מהו לאדבוקי בהו אמר ליה טובתם דרוש רעתם לא תדרוש כל הנוגע בהן כאלו נוגע בבבת עינו אמר ליה דיניה דההוא גברא במאי אמר ליה בצואה רותחת דאמר מר כאלו נוגע בבבת עינו אמר ליה דיניה דההוא גברא במאי אמר ליה בצואה רותחת דאמר מר, כל המלעיג על דברי חכמים גידון בצואה רותחת, that is, Thereupon he went and caused the sinful Israelite (that is, Jesus, as may be seen above on p. 97.) to come up, and asked him who was held in high esteem in that life; whereupon he answered him: the Israelites. (Onkelos asked again:) Should one also cleave to them? He answered, however: seek that which redounds to their benefit, and not that which redounds to their harm; whoever lays a hand on them does as much as if he were laying a hand on the apple of his own eye. (Onkelos asked again:) In what does that man's (that is, your) punishment consist? And he gave answer: in the boiling filth, for the Master (that is, the rabbinical teacher) has said, whoever scorns the words of the wise shall be punished in the boiling filth. The Talmudic words of blasphemy are also cited in the book Nézach Jisraël, fol. 10. col. 3. in the fifth chapter, and thereafter it is written as follows: היה גברא דבק היה בעבודה זרה שהסית והדיח את ישראל ואף על גב שהסית והדיח היה עקר דינו במה שהלעיג על דברי חכמים הוא מינות גמור אשר הוא עוד יותר מעבודה זרה, that is, That man (that is, Christ, as indicated above on paginâ 147.) clung to idolatry and led the Israelites astray and turned them away. Yet although he led them astray and turned them away, this was nonetheless the principal cause of his punishment (in the boiling filth): that he mocked the words of the wise, which is a complete heresy and worse than idolatry. On this subject one may also consult the book Megalléh amukkóth fol. 23. col. 1. at the end of the eighty-first Ofen, where, however, the name of Jesus has been omitted out of fear.

In the book Emek hammelech, fol. 15, col. 3, in the first chapter, under the title Scháar tikkúne batteschúva, the following is also read: דגיהנם הוא כמו ספוג השואב אליו כל הזוהמא וכל הזוהמא נופלת למדור התחתון הנקרא אבדון ושם הם דרגין הנקראים צואה רותחת שנאמר עליו צא תאמר לו ואין בו ניצוץ קדושה ובו כל הנפשות הטמאות ארסו וזהמתו של נחש הבאה על חוה אשר עשו עצמם עבודה זרה ופרט אשם ששי, that is: Hell is like a sponge that draws all filth into itself; but the filth falls into the lowest dwelling, which is called Aváddon, that is, Perdition, and there are the steps which are called Zóa rotháchath, that is, the boiling excrement, of which it is said (Isa 30:22): "You shall call it filth" (as the author, along with some other Jews, understands it, though it properly means: "Go out, you shall say to it, namely to the image"), and in it there is no spark of holiness. In it are also all unclean souls, the poison and the filth of the serpent that lay with Eve, and those who have made themselves into an idol; in particular אשם ששי, Ascham schischi, that is, the sixth guilt-offering (namely the Talui, or the Hanged One, by which Jesus is meant), in which there is no spark of holiness. Therefore, no one who descends there ever comes back up. From this we see that Christ is supposed to sit in the abyss of hell in the boiling excrement, where all souls defiled by the poison and impurity of the serpent, namely of the chief devil Sammael, are said to dwell; which is indeed a horrifying blasphemy. That the crucified Christ is to be understood by Ascham schischi, that is, the sixth guilt-offering, was disclosed to me in confidence by a rabbi and demonstrated from the Talmudic tractate Sevachim, fol. 54, col. 2, where in the third line from the end, six guilt-offerings are discussed, the sixth of which is called אשם תלוי, Ascham talui, that is, the doubtful guilt-offering, which was sacrificed when there was doubt as to whether one had sinned or not. Now since the word talui properly means a hanged person, but in a secondary sense means "doubtful," as has already been indicated above in the second chapter, p. 89 and 90, and since Christ is called Talui by the Jews, that is, the Hanged One, as has likewise been demonstrated above at p. 88, he is referred to here, and in other places in the book Emek hammelech, by the godless rabbi Naphtali, in a cunning manner, as Ascham schischi, by which Talui, that is, the Hanged One, and thus Christ, is covertly meant; and this is done to the end that Christians who read the book may not understand what is intended by it.

Against this, however, someone might object that the above-cited words of the Talmud from Gittin fol. 57. col. 1. are not to be understood as referring to Jesus Christ, since Rabbi Jechiel, in his Disputation which he held with Nicolaus, a converted Jew, before a queen in Paris, denied this, and said that the Jesus mentioned in the Talmud at this point is not called ישו הנוצרי Jesbu hannózeri, that is, Jesus the Nazarene, but rather ישו גרדא Jéschu Geréda, that is, Jesus Geréda; and that this Jesus Geréda not only despised the words of the Sages (that is, the oral law or the Talmud), but also led Israel astray and presented himself as a God, thereby denying the foundation of the faith; whereas, by contrast, Jesus the Nazarene only rejected the oral law or the Talmud, but accepted the written law, namely the five books of Moses, and for this reason is called merely a heretic; all of which is to be seen in the aforementioned Disputation p. 15. and 16., where the words read as follows: ואמר כן: פתח איוב את פיהו ויוסף לשאול ויאמר זה העם הם פוחזים ומגופים את אלהי הגוים ואתם גלחות מה לכם לחוטם ביניכם: העם הזה מוכרים בידאתכם לאמור כי אלהיכם מרון בצואה ורותחת ויקרא בספרא גדולן דכתיב אונקלוס בעי לאגיוהי אסקיה לבלעם בנגידא פירוש על ידי אוב אמר לו דינא דגברא ההוא במאי א"ל בשכבת זרע רותחת. ויאמר המין על מי נאמד דינא דגברא ההוא במאי, ויען הרב על בלעם נאמר ועליו שאול כך, ואתה הן דעת למה נידון בשכבת זרע ולא צרע המין. ויאמר הרב אגיד לך לפי שהתחילו העם לזנות בשיטים בעצת בלעם לפיכך חטא ביהין גרון סאה בסאה כדכתיב בסאסאה בשלחה תריבנה במדה שאדם מודד מודדין לו. ויאמר המין ויקרא אחרי כן אסקיה לישו בנגידא א"ל דינא דגברא הוא במאי על מי אמר כן ויען הרב על ישו ועליו שאל כך. אמר המין ומה ענה לו שנידון בצואה רותחת ואמר זה בלשק לעו לפני המלכה להבאיש את ריחנו. ויען הרב מים שנפרדת ממנו זה ט"ו שנה בלשת חואנה עלינו להתגולל בעלילות רשע ולא תצלח ובאמרי פיך נוקשת והנה אשיבך כדברך כי הוא וככתב לא אכפור בשביל חרפתך. אמנם לא על אלהי הגוים דברנו ככה רק על ישו אחר שהלעיג על דברי חכמים ולא האמין לדבריהם כמותך רק לתורה שבכתב, וחדע שכן הוא שהרי אין כתיב ישו הנוצרי אלא ישו וגידא ועד אם אותו היה לא זו בלבד עשה אלא הסית והדיח את ישראל ועשה עצמו אלוה וכפר בעיקר. אלא וודאי אחר היה שלא כפר בתורה שבכתב רק מין את ישראל ועשה עצמו אלוה וכפר בעיקר. that is: Thereupon the enemy (namely the converted Nicolaus) opened his mouth and continued to ask, and said: this people (namely the Jewish people) blasphemes and reviles the God of the Gentiles (that is, Christ, whom the Christians regard as a God); why do you clergy permit them to dwell among you? This people speaks against your God and says that he is punished in boiling filth. He (the converted Nicolaus) also read from the end of Nesikin (that is, from the 5th chapter of the Talmudic tractate Gittin, fol. 57. col. 1.), where it is written: When Onkelos wished to convert to the Jewish faith, he summoned Balaam (from hell) by means of sorcery and asked him what punishment he had to endure; whereupon he answered him that he was punished by the outpouring of boiling seed. The heretic (namely the converted Nicolaus) then asked: of whom are these (following) words spoken, "In what does that man's punishment consist?" The Rabbi answered him: they are spoken of Balaam, and it was of him that he (namely Onkelos) asked him. But do you know (said Rabbi Jechiel to Nicolaus) why he is punished by the outpouring of seed? Since he did not know, the Rabbi said to him: I will explain it to you; because the people (Israel) in Shittim had begun to fornicate through the counsel of Balaam, he is therefore punished thus, and measure is repaid with measure, as it is written (Isa 27:8): "In measure you contended with him, driving him away." With whatever measure a man measures, it shall be measured back to him. After this the heretic read on (further in the Talmud): He (Onkelos) also summoned Jesus up by sorcery, and asked him (namely Rabbi Jechiel) of whom these words, "In what does that man's punishment consist?" were spoken; whereupon the Rabbi said: they are spoken of Jesus, of whom the question was thus put. The heretic asked: what then did he answer him, that he is punished in boiling filth? And he said this in the language of the country (namely in the French language) before the queen, in order to make us stink. Thereupon the Rabbi answered him: from the day on which you departed from us, which is now fifteen years ago, you have sought occasion to bring evil upon us through godless intrigues, but it will not succeed for you; rather, you will be caught by your own words. See, I will answer you according to your own words: the matter stands as you have said; what is written I will not deny, so as to put you to shame. We have spoken of this, however, not with reference to the God of the Gentiles (that is, Jesus, the God of the Christians), but with reference to another Jesus, who mocked the words of the Sages and did not believe them, as you do, but acknowledged only the written law. Know also that the matter is so constituted, for it does not say Jesus the Nazarene, but Jesus Gereda. Moreover, it is not the same one (in whom you believe), for he did not only do this, but also led Israel astray and turned them away, and presented himself as a God, and denied the foundation. It is therefore certainly the case that he (in whom you Christians believe) was a different one,

To this I reply that what he gave as an answer was nothing other than a cunning evasion, and that through such false pretense he sought only to conceal the godless teaching of the Jews and to turn away the zeal and hatred of Christians from them. The Jews have always had the custom that when one reproaches them with such things as are contrary to the Christian religion, they seek to slip away deceitfully through distortion and false interpretation of the matter, or else deny it in a thoroughly shameless manner, or maliciously keep silent about it, as is demonstrated here and there in my present work "Entdecktes Judenthum" with sufficient examples drawn from Rabbi Salman Zevi's "Jüdischer Theriak," Rabbi Lipmann's "Nizzáchon," as well as the little book "Schévet Jehúda," and others. As regards the distortion of words, it is read in the book Lefárjeh fol. 17. col. 4. that Rabbi Gamaliel once held a conversation with a prelate and acted in precisely this deceitful manner, of which the words read as follows: כמך צער היה נצטער אותו צדיק דבי גמליאל עד (that is:) How greatly did the pious Rabbi Gamaliel torment himself until he gave the prelate such an interpretation as an answer, one which can be taken in this and that sense (that is, in a twofold sense), so that the prelate might not understand his true intention and meaning.

Concerning the secretiveness of the Jews, the converted Ferdinand Heß writes in the 9th chapter of the second part of his Juden-Geissel as follows: It is a practice among them that is kept in such great secrecy and concealed from Christians with such diligence and earnestness that not even many Jews, excepting the most prominent ringleaders, have any knowledge of it; and for that reason there are also few who reveal it to their children, since otherwise they would have to fear that they might perhaps fall away and be converted to the Christian faith. There is also a passage in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 63, col. 4, near the end of the Parascha Vajechi Jaacóf, stating that through the merit of four things, of which secretiveness is one, the Israelites were delivered from Egyptian bondage, and the words read as follows: בזכות ארבעה דברים יצאו ישראל ממצרים שלא שינו שמם ולא שינו את לשונם ולא גילו מסתורין שלהם ולא נפרצו בעריות, that is: Through the merit of four things the Israelites went out of Egypt, because they did not change their names, and did not change their language, and did not reveal their secrets, and did not multiply themselves through fornication. For this reason they will also keep themselves secretive among Christians, so that they may likewise be delivered from the Exilium, or misery, in which they find themselves among them.

The aforementioned Rabbi Jechiel also employed such a distortion of the true nature of the matter, and a suppression or concealment of the truth, before the Queen at Paris; for what he put forward concerning Jeschu Gereda was a pure fabrication, of which not the slightest trace is to be found in any Jewish book. But so that his false pretense in this matter may be clearly brought to light, I will thoroughly expose the Jews' actual teaching on this subject from the oft-mentioned accursed book Emek hammelech, where at fol. 20. col. 4. in the 19th chapter, under the title Scháar ólam battóhu, the words read as follows: סוף כל הנשמות והאילות להטהר ולהתקדש ועל כל חלק וחלק ממנו נפרו הוזהמא ולסוף כלה על הקצה האחרון שאינו יכול להטהר והולך לאבדון שיש שם צואה רותחת והוא מדור הוזהמא התחתון שבכולם שכל הוזהמא מהיכלות הטומאה שעליון נופלים בו מוזהמא הנפשית אשר בדם ולכן אותו האיש הנידון בצואה רותחת אינו יכול להטהר עוד והוא הקצה האחרון שבו הוזהמא קץ קנא דמסאבותא וזמרת הנחש שבאה על חוה והוא ע"ז של ניצוץ סמאל ממש שרצונו לעשות עצמו אלוה להשתחוות לו ולכן אותו האיש עשה עצמו עבודה זרה זה הוא הקצה האחרון שבנפשו של קין שהיה מקורס באיש נוקב חשם בנו של מצרי שהרג משה לכן גם כן אותו האיש היה משמש השם לעבודה זרה והוא נרמז במלת קין שהוא נוטריקון קרח סביב מטה נגס וג' 'האיש שסכ' סוך הלוי פגם במחצלת המחפה על קבר התהום שנתקן בין השום המפורש המונחת על נוקבא דתהומא רבה שלא יצאו השור סמאל ובור היא בת זוגו 'שיש בה נחשים ועקרבים שאו יבעה האדם בליעל בשדה אחר הוא השדה אשר ברכו ה במתנותיה והיא חקל תפוחין קדישין והנבער הוא האיש שכ' סוך שקלקל המתקלא סא"ק ששם מתחיל הקלקול של שם המפורש והחסד והרחמים יתעלה למעלה וגו' 'מזה הגיע החרבן ובפרט ססנערת סוזרין הוכרחו להשתמש בו להפילו וסקצתם להחזיק כחו ואמונתו בארץ תק"ס אע"פ שכונתם היתה מוסרחת לטובת הכלל על כל זאת גרמו עונות אותו הדור הענין that is: In the end, all souls and trees (by which trees souls are also understood, each of which is compared to a tree having seven branches, as may likewise be seen at fol. 20. col. 4. of the aforementioned book Emek hammelech) will be purified and sanctified, and from each part of them the filth will be removed, which in the end all falls upon the last part, which cannot be purified and goes to the place (of Hell) called Aváddon, or Perdition, where the boiling excrement is. And this place is the lowest dwelling of filth, which is the lowest of them all; for all filth falls into it from the palaces of impurity that stand above it, out of the impure souls that are within them. For this reason, that man (by whom Jesus is understood, as will be seen in what follows) who is tormented in the boiling excrement can no longer be purified. He is the last part, which is found in the filthiness of Cain, the nest of impurity, the uncleanness of the serpent that lay with Eve. He is properly the idol of the spark of Samaël (namely, the chief devil, as is to be read below in the 18th chapter of this first part), who wanted to make himself into a GOD so that he would be worshipped. For this reason, that man (namely, JESUS) also made himself into an idol, and he is that last part which was in the soul of Cain, which had previously been in that man (of whom one reads in Lev 24:10, etc.) who blasphemed the Name, the son of the Egyptian whom Moses killed. For this reason he also used the Name (that is, the Schem hammephorásch, of which so much is written in the little book Toledoth Jéschu) for idolatry. He is also signified by the word קין Kain, which by Notarikon (of which mention has already been made above at page 100) makes קרח ישו נוצרי Kórach Jéschu Nózeri, that is, Korach, Jesus Nazarenus (for the two words מבי"ה mabab tafbagam, through the alphabet Atbasch, as has already been shown in the 2nd chapter, mean יבצנ Jéschu Nózeri, that is, Jesus the Nazarene), etc. This worthless man also (for so the most holy JESUS is called, as has been reported above at page 97, and רשכ"מ Zaschéamsach signifies through the said alphabet Atbasch as much as הבליעל Habbeliäal) tore the covering that had covered the grave of the abyss, upon which the Schem hammephorásch was written, which had been laid upon the hole of the great abyss (by which is indicated what was reported above at page 175 from the little book Toledoth Jéschu, namely that JESUS is said to have learned the Schem hammephorásch from the stone that lay in the abyss but was afterwards dug up by King David and placed in the Holy of Holies of the Temple), so that the ox Samaël, and Bor, that is, the pit, which is his companion, wherein are serpents and scorpions, might not come out; so that the evildoer (namely, Samaël) might not cause harm in another field which GOD had blessed with His gifts, and which was the field of the holy apples. But the fire (which Samaël set for this reason) was the worthless man, who corrupted the weight (מתקלא matkela; what this signifies I do not know, nor have I been able to find out), where the corruption (that is, the misuse) of the Schem hammephorásch had its beginning, and goodness as well as mercy was lifted up (and withdrawn) on high, etc. And from this came the devastation (of the city of Jerusalem), and indeed especially because some members of the high council were compelled to use it (the Schem hammephorásch) in order to cast him down (by which Judas is indicated, who, as is reported in the little book Toledoth Jéschu and cited above at page 177, is said to have also learned the Schem hammephorásch in the Temple and thereby brought JESUS to his fall), while others used it for the purpose of establishing his power and belief in him in the land of Edom (that is, in Christendom, which is here taken for Edom through Atbasch תקפו Takpu) (by which is aimed at what is recounted below in the seventh chapter of this first part concerning Simon Kepha from the little book Toledoth Jéschu, namely that he also learned the Schem hammephorásch in the Temple and went with it to Rome), although their purpose was entirely good. In short, the sins of that generation caused this entire affair, namely that the rind (that is, the devil) gained the upper hand to such a degree, because he (namely, JESUS) was not punished immediately. The like is also found at fol. 35. col. 4. in the 63rd chapter, under the title Schäär olam battóbu of the aforementioned book Emek hammélech. Further, in the same work at fol. 127. col. 3. in the 10th chapter, under the title Schäär réscha dißéir änpin, it is written as follows: ההוטא נשלך במדור התחתן של גיהנום הנקרא צואה רותחת ובהם נידון פ"נכ וסיעתו וכדומה לו that is: The filth is cast into the lowest dwelling of Hell, which is called the boiling excrement, and therein JESUS and his assembly, and others like them, who have mocked and despised the words of our Rabbis of blessed memory (that is, the Talmud, or the oral law), are punished.

And this is also read at fol. 135. col. 3, 4. in the 19th chapter under the aforementioned title Schäär réscha dißéir änpin, of the aforementioned book Emek hammélech, concerning the words of Ps 91:10, "And no plague shall come near your dwelling," as follows: כוונת זה הפסוק שלא יהיה לך תלמיד שאינו הגון הנקרא נגע שמקדיח את תבשילו : כרבים כגון תלמידו של ר' יהושע בן פרחיה שכישף והדיח את ישראל מאביהם שבשמים ולכן הוא נידון בצואה רותחת שהוא המדור התחתון של גיהנום שנופל שם כל הזוהמא מהנפשות היושבות בהמדורים שעליה והוא כמו בית הכסא שם נופל כל המותרות אשר אין בו ניצוץ קדושה ולכן נקרא צואה רותחת בסוד קיא צאה כלי מקום שנאמר עליו צא תאמר לו והוא הפסולת והזוהמא הנופל מן הנפשות הנדבקות על ידי עבירה ומי שיורד שם אין לו ניצוץ קדושה רק זוהמא נחש הקדמוני לכן אתו עולח ואינו ירפא מהגיהנום לדורי דורות ולעולמי עולמים אפילו בשמחות רמים טובים לפי שלא שמר אותם והוא וזאת וחמת נפש קין והוא נפש והזאת אל אחר שנתגללו קין מנצפ"ך טפח"ם ר"ת קין (היא נפש המקלל שרגמו אותו באבנים במדבר שהיה מברך את השם והיא זוהמת הנחש שבאה על חוה that is: The intent of this verse is that you should have no disciple who is not worthy (or honorable), who is called a plague, who has publicly ruined his dish, as did the disciple of Rabbi Jebóschua the son of Perächja (that is, Jesus, as may be seen above at p. 166), who practiced sorcery and led Israel astray and turned them away from their Father who is in heaven; for this reason he is punished in the boiling filth, which is the lowest dwelling of hell, into which all impurity falls from the souls that reside in those dwellings above it. He is also (with all due reverence) like a privy, and all superfluity, in which there is no spark of holiness, falls therein; for this reason he is called the boiling filth, according to the mystery of the words (Isa 28:8): "Vomit and filth, so that there is no place left clean"; of which it is said (Isa 30:22): "You shall say 'filth' to it." This is that which is worthless and the impurity that falls from the souls and clings through sin. Whoever descends there has no spark of holiness, but only the impurity of the ancient serpent; therefore he does not come back up, and goes not out of hell for all eternity, not even on Sabbaths and feast days, because he did not observe them. And this is the impurity of the souls of Cain, the murderer of men, the uncleanness of the other god (that is, of Sammael, who is called אל אחר El acher, that is, the other god, and who, when he lay with Eve, caused such impurity to fall upon her, as may be seen below in the 18th chapter of this first part), whose gilgul (that is, the transmigration of the soul from one body into another, of which more is treated at length below in the first chapter of the second part) is קין ישו נוצרי Kain, Jeschu Nózeri, that is, Cain, Jesus the Nazarene (for מנצ"פ טפח"ם Mabap tafbagam is, by Atbasch, as has already been noted more than once, equivalent to ישו נוצרי Jeschu Nózeri), and the three first letters of the three words Kain, Jeschu, Nózeri (namely K., J., N.) form the word קין Kain. This impurity is also the soul of that blasphemer who was stoned in the wilderness, who had reviled the name of God. It is the impurity of the serpent that lay with Eve, from whom Cain, the nest of impurity, came forth. It is also that portion of the uncleanness of the souls of Cain which shall never be purified for all eternity. So also is it to be found in the book Megallêh ammykkóth fol. 23. col. 1. at the end of the eighty-second Ofan, that such blasphemy against Christ is stated in the Talmud; and the words of that book are to be read below in the fourth chapter of the second part.

From all of this we can clearly see that Rabbi Jechiel reported nothing but falsehoods to the queen and the entire assembly before which he disputed with Nicolaus, in that he claimed that the aforementioned Talmudic passage does not treat of Jesus the Nazarene but of another person called Jesus Gereda: for here in the book Emek hammélech there is no mention whatsoever of the invented Jesus Gereda, but only of Jesus the Nazarene, and it is found in express words that such abominable blasphemy against our most precious Savior is taught by the Jews. In connection with this, however, it is to be known that Rabbi Naphtali, who wrote the book Emek hammélech, at fol. 40. col. 3., in the 69th chapter, under the title Scháar olam battóhu, entreats the discerning reader not to reveal these and similar other matters to strangers, that is, to Christians, when he writes thus: נאני נפתלי מספר הזה בקשתי מאת כל חכם המעיין בספרי ונפתלי וזה להסתיר דברים אלו וכיצא בהם שהיו לו לבו ולא לזרים אתו: that is: I, Naphtali, the author or writer of this book, entreat every learned person who will apply his reflections to this my book to keep these and similar matters secret, so that he alone may possess them, and no stranger together with him. If one also had the remaining nine books which the said Rabbi Naphtali, according to his preface to the aforementioned book Emek hammelech, fol. 5. col. 1., has written, one would without doubt find therein still far more matters that are contrary to the Christian religion and are denied by the Jews.

It is truly astonishing with what brazen disposition and bold manner the malicious Jews dare to deny even the most well-known things; and I have observed this sufficiently among them, whenever I have on occasion confronted one or another of them with this or that matter. When I once reproached a Jew here in Frankfurt am Main for the fact that the little book Toledoth Jeschu contains such palpable lies and terrible blasphemies against our most innocent Savior, that same person had the audacity to answer me that it had not been written by any Jew, but that someone else had composed it out of spite against the Jews, in order to make them hated among Christians, even though he knew perfectly well that it is a well-known Jewish booklet. And because other people might perhaps receive a similar answer from the Jews, such shameless liars can be refuted and convicted of falsehood by the fact that the greater part of what is contained therein is irrefutably to be seen, as is plain from what was cited from it shortly before, briefly comprised in the book Emek hammelech; where it is clearly pointed to that Jesus learned the Schem hammphorasch, which was written upon the stone of the abyss, and thereby caused great harm. As also that the high council was compelled to make use of that same name in order to bring Jesus to ruin. Beyond this, the converted Ferdinand Hess also reports the following concerning this little book in the 3rd chapter of the first part of his Juden-Geissel: I once heard from my mother's sister, who had an only son whom she loved, and told him these things of which I have spoken (namely, of the two lions made of brass, which roared in the Temple whenever someone had learned the Schem hammphorasch): alongside this she had a small booklet, comprising about four sheets of paper, which was written, and she called it Toledos Jeschu, that is, concerning the birth of Jesus; but after this booklet I spent much toil and labor throughout the days of my life, yet never managed to see it anywhere; for it is kept so secret among the Jews that scarcely one Jew in a hundred may get to see it, and the booklet is said to be full of all the vices which they have falsely written concerning the birth, life, and conduct of Jesus Christ. These are the words of Ferdinand Hess, from which it is evident what the nature of this booklet is and how secretly it is kept among the Jews. Had no Jew made it, they would not regard it.

Regarding the claim that Jesus flew through the air and fought with Judas therein, as is read in the booklet Toledoth Jeschu, this is also mentioned with few words in the old Nizachon, p. 239, where it is written: ולמה היה פורח באויר: נפשו עד שבא יודש אישקריטא ופרח עליו והפילו ארצה בעל כרחו ושלח בשובו למלט ממות: that is, Why then did he (Jesus) fly into the air to save his life from death, until Judas Iscariot came and flew over him, and cast him down to the earth against his will and intention, whereupon he was hanged? Likewise it stands at p. 86 of the aforementioned old Nizzachon: הלא יהודה סיכל את עצתו: that is, Did not Judas frustrate his plan? From all of which it may be rationally concluded that, since the contents of the accursed booklet Toledoth Jeschu are contained in the book Emek hammelech and in the old Nizzachon, as Jewish books, the same was most certainly composed by a wanton, vicious Jew at the instigation of the Devil. Not to mention that all converted Jews are able to give account of this accursed booklet, having learned something of its contents during their time in Judaism, as may be seen in Dieterich's Jewish Cloak, in the first and second chapters, where he calls it מעשה תלוי Maase Tuluj or Tolui; and in Ferdinand Hess's Jewish Scourge, in the third chapter of the first part. The celebrated Buxtorf also purchased a copy of this booklet from a Jew, as is read in his Bibliotheca Rabbinica p. 421.

Returning now to the Jews' terrible blasphemies, by which our most precious Savior is so greatly dishonored and reviled, the wicked Jews must know that He is the true Messiah promised in the Old Testament, and not merely a simple human being, but at the same time also the true, only-begotten Son of God, and that consequently they sin so grievously through their abominable blasphemy that, unless they convert, they will without fail be damned for all eternity. That He is the true Messiah, I prove to them from the fact that all the marks thereof are found in Him, and all the prophecies concerning Him have been fulfilled in Him. For, first, the Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem, since it is written in Mic 5:2: "And you, Bethlehem Ephrath, though you are small among the thousands of Judah, out of you shall come forth to me one who is to be ruler over Israel." That by this ruler the Messiah is to be understood is evident from the Chaldean translation, where the words "out of you shall come forth to me one who is to be ruler over Israel" are rendered as follows: מנך קדמי יפוק משיחא למהי עביד שולטן על ישראל, that is, "Out of you shall the Messiah come forth before me, to rule over Israel." With this Rabbi Salomon Jarchi and Rabbi Kimchi also agree in their Commentarii, or expositions, since the former explains the said words thus: ממך לי יצא משיח בן דוד, that is, "Out of you shall come forth to me the Messiah, the Son of David"; while the latter expounds them in this manner: ממך לי יצא שופט להיות מושל במשח, that is, "Out of you shall come forth to me the judge, to be a ruler over Israel, and this is the King Messiah." Jesus Christ, however, was born in Bethlehem, as is to be seen in Matt 2:1-2 and Luke 2:4 etc. And Rabbi David Gans also acknowledges this in his book Zemach David, in the second part, number 761, fol. 14, col. 2, where he writes as follows: ישוע נוצרי נולד בבית לחם יהודה ביום ומחצית ממילת מירושלים משנת ג' אלפים תשס"א ליצירה והיא שנת מ"ב לקיסר אוגוסטוס, that is, "Jesus the Nazarene was born in the year after the creation of the world 3761, which is the forty-second year of the Emperor Augustus, in Bethlehem of Judah, one and a half miles from Jerusalem."

Second, He was to be born of a virgin, according to the prophecy of Isa 7:14: "Behold, a virgin is with child and will bear a son, and she shall call his name Immanuel"; which is also why He is called in Gen 3:15 the seed of the woman, and not the seed of the man. But Jesus was born of a virgin, as may be read in Matt 1:18 etc. and Luke 1:26 etc., and as is demonstrated by the story cited above in the second chapter, p. 122 etc., drawn from Suidas, concerning the exchange between the silversmith Philippus and the Jew Theodosius.

Third, He was to be born at that time when the scepter would be taken from Judah, and the מחקק Mechokek, or lawgiver, that is, the Synedrium, or the high council, would be abolished, and the entire Jewish government in both civil and ecclesiastical matters would have to come to an end; for it is written in Gen 49:10: The scepter (in Hebrew it is called שבט Schevet, a word which also means a rod and a staff) shall not depart from Judah, nor the Mechokek, i.e., the lawgiver, from between his feet, until Schiloh (i.e., the Messiah) comes, and unto him shall the peoples cleave. Jesus, however, was born at that time after which Jerusalem was soon destroyed and the entire Jewish government was overthrown. But since the malicious Jews interpret the aforementioned passage in a completely different manner today, seeking in it all manner of evasions, and among other things presume to claim that the word Schévet here means not a scepter but a rod, and the word Mechokék means a staff, and insist that the Hebrew words must be interpreted as follows: the rod shall not depart from Judah, nor the staff from between his feet, until the Messiah comes, by which it is meant that the Jews shall remain so long in exilio, or misery, under the rod and staff of other peoples, and be plagued by them, until the Messiah comes who will redeem them from such misery: one can, when they say this, stop their useless mouths with the fact that in all three ancient Chaldean translations, which are called by them Targum or Targúnim, the word Schévet is taken to mean a royal scepter, or civil dominion, and the word Mechokék to mean the lawgivers, or scribes; for in the Chaldean translation of Jonathan the son of Uzziel, they are translated as follows: לא פסקון מלכין ושלטון מדבית יהודה: וספרין מלפי אורייתא מנרעיה עד זמן די ייתי מלכא משיחא ודיליה היא מלכותא ודיליה וספרין, that is: the kings and rulers shall not cease from the house of Judah, nor the scribes who teach the law from his seed, until the time when the King Messiah shall come, and on his account the peoples shall melt away. In the Hierosolymitan Chaldean translation the words read as follows: לא פסקון מלכין מדבית יהודה אף לא סברין מלפי אורייתא מבני בנאיה עד זמן די ייתי מלכא משיחא ודיליה היא מלכותא וליה עתידין דישמעבדון כל מלכותא דארעא, that is: the kings shall not cease from the house of Judah, nor the learned who teach the law from the sons of his sons, until the time when the King Messiah shall come, to whom the kingdom belongs, and unto him shall all the kingdoms of the earth submit themselves. In the Chaldean translation of Onkelos, however, it reads as follows: לא יעדי עבד שולטן מדבית יהודה וספרא מבני בנאיה עד עלמא עד דיתי משיחא ודיליה היא לא יעדי עבד שולטן וליה ישתמעון עממא, that is: the ruler shall never depart from Judah, nor the lawgiver from the sons of his sons, until the Messiah shall come, to whom the kingdom belongs, and unto him shall the peoples be subjected. The Jews dare not contradict these Chaldean translations, for in the book Schalschéleth hakkabála it is written at fol. 20, col. 1: תַּרְגוּמוֹ הָיָא קַבְלָהָ לְמֹשֶׁה רַבֵּינוּ עָלֵינוּ הַשְּׁלוֹם: מְסִינִי, that is: the Targum, or the Chaldean translation, was received (and delivered) from Moses, our teacher, upon whom be peace, from Mount Sinai. Likewise, in the book Avodáh hakkódasch, fol. 86, col. 3, in the 29th chapter, under the title Chelek hattáchlith, it is explained with regard to the words of Neh 8:8, "And they read in the book of the law of God," that is, "distinctly," thus read: אָמַר רַב אִיקָא בַר אַבִּין אָמַר רַב חֲנַנְאֵל אָמַר רַב וִיקְרָאוּ בִּסְפֵר תּוֹרַת הָאֱלֹהִים זֶו מְסִינִי מִימֵי הַנְּבִיאִים אֲשֶׁר אֵין סִפְק שְׁהִיוּ מְקוּבְלִים בּוּ מְסִינִי אֵלָא שֶׁשְׂכַּחוּם וְאַחֵר כִּךְ חֹזֵר עֲטָרָה לְיוֹשְׁנָה וִיסְדוּם עַל יְדֵי אוֹנְקֵלוֹס הַגֵּר ע"ה, that is: Rabbi Ika the son of Abbin says that Raf Chananeel said that Raf reported: the words "and they read in the book of the law of God" signify the Bible (or the Scripture), and the word "distinctly" or "plainly" signifies the Targum, or the Chaldean translation, &c., and they (namely the rabbis) have interpreted this to mean that the same (Targumim, or Chaldean translations) had been forgotten and thereafter set down again. See, they have (in this manner) plainly indicated that they have the Targum from the times of the prophets, so that there is no doubt that the same (Chaldean translations) were received from Mount Sinai (from Moses) but were forgotten; thereafter the crown returned to its former state (that is, after this they were written down again as they had been before), and they were set down through the convert to the Jewish faith, Onkelos, upon whom be peace. Now if God Himself taught Moses such translations on Mount Sinai, as the Jews claim, then they can say nothing against them, but must accept them, and consequently must also give their assent to the threefold translation in this matter.

Fourth, he was to flee into Egypt, as can be seen in Hos 11:1; and Jesus did flee into Egypt, having been brought there by his parents on account of King Herod, who had wanted to kill him, as is found in Matt 2:13-15.

Fifth, he was to be of the lineage of David, for God the Lord made this promise to King David in Ps 89:30, that He would give him seed forever and maintain his throne as long as the heavens endure; by which no one other than the Messiah can be understood, who was to reign with him throughout all eternity. For this reason he is also called a righteous Branch of David in Jer 23:5 and 33:15, and in Isa 11:1 it is said of him that he was to come forth as a rod from the stem of Jesse. But Jesus was of the house and lineage of David, as can be seen in Luke 1:32.

Sixth, he was to be a great prophet, inasmuch as Moses in Deut 18:15

1. v. 15. written of him as follows: "A prophet like me shall the LORD your God raise up for you from among you, from your brothers; him you shall obey." That the Messiah must be a great prophet is also taught by Rabbi Moshe bar Maimon in his epistle called Iggéreth Temán, wherein he writes at fol. 27, col. 1, in the Amsterdam quarto edition, to a Jew as follows: אבל אני תמה ממך : that is, "I marvel at you, however, my brother, that you have studied the Law and gone through the books of the Wise, and yet do not know that the Messiah will be a very great prophet, and greater than all the prophets, excepting Moses, upon whom be peace." So too does Rabbi Levi ben Gershom note in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 198, col. 2, in the Parascha Balak, that the Messiah will be a great prophet, indeed greater than Moses; with which Abarbanel likewise agrees in his commentary on the Prophet Isaiah, on the second verse of the eleventh chapter. And Jesus was such a one, as is read in Luke 7:16, John 4:19, and John 6:14.

Seventh, He was also to be a king and priest, as can be seen in Zech 6:12-13 and Ps 110:2, 4; yet a poor king, as is written in Zech 9:9, which is why the Messiah, the Son of David, is called in the book Jesód Schirim, fol. 12, col. 2, איש מסכן וחכם, that is, a poor and wise man. Jesus, however, is called a king in Luke 1:33, Heb 1:8, and Rev 17:14, not in the sense that He was to have been a worldly king, for He Himself said in John 18:36 that His kingdom is not of this world; and therefore, on account of His very lowly and humble worldly station, He is called in Isa 53:3 the most despised and most worthless, and in Isa 47:7 the despised soul. Nevertheless, according to the prophecy of Zech 9:10, He was to rule from one sea to the other, which could not be said of Him if He were supposed to have been a great worldly king and monarch, as the foolish Jews vainly imagine that their supposed Messiah, so long awaited in vain, will be a great potentate and ruler in the world. Rather, His kingdom is a spiritual kingdom over His church. So too is He a high priest, as can be seen in Heb 2:17 and 4:14.

Eighth, He was to have a forerunner in the wilderness, as was prophesied in Mal 3:1, who was to preach in the wilderness and prepare the way before Him. Jesus, however, had John the Baptist as such a forerunner, as can be seen in Matt 3:3 and Luke 3:2-4, and in the spirit and power of Elijah, Luke 1:17.

Ninth, He was to begin preaching the Gospel in Galilee, as is written in Isa 9:1-2. This was fulfilled through Jesus, as is found in Matt 4:12-15, 23, Mark 1:14, Luke 4:14-15, and John 4:43.

Tenth, he was to come into the second Temple, as can be seen in Mal 3:1. But JESUS taught publicly in that very Temple (John 7:14), and also drove out the money-changers and those who sold oxen, sheep, and doves there, as is recorded in Matt 21:12, Luke 19:46, and Mark 11:15.

Eleventh, he was to perform many miracles to confirm his teaching, and was to make the blind see, the deaf hear, the mute speak, and the lame walk, as Isaiah prophesied in his 35th chapter, verses 5 and 6; for which reason he is also called פֶּלֶא Pele, that is, "wonder-worker," in Isa 9:6. All of this, however, JESUS did: when He made the blind see again (Mark 8:22-23; John 9:1, etc.; Matt 20:30, etc.), the deaf hear and the speechless speak (Mark 7:32, etc.; Matt 9:32, etc.; Luke 11:14), and the lame or palsied walk, as is recorded in Matt 4:24 and 9:2 and Mark 2:3-4; and besides these He also healed many other severe illnesses and performed many other great miracles.

Twelfth, his preaching was to be rejected by most of the Jews, even though he had performed so many and so glorious miracles, as is recorded in Isa 49:4 and 53:1. For this reason, according to the words of Isa 53:3, he was to be utterly despised and of no account, and according to Ps 22:6, a mockery of the people and an object of contempt among the nation. But Christ, although he performed very many miracles, was nonetheless despised by most of the Jews and his preaching rejected, so that the people of Nazareth drove him out of the city (Luke 4:16, etc.), the inhabitants of Jerusalem sought to stone him (John 10:30), and he was finally executed outright as a supposed evildoer.

Thirteenth, He was to be a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense to both houses of Israel, as was prophesied in Isa 8:14. But JESUS was indeed such a one, at whom many took offense, as is recorded in Luke 2:34, Rom 9:32, and 1 Pet 2:8.

Fourteenth, He was to make His entry into Jerusalem and ride upon a donkey, as is seen in Zech 9:9. This, however, was fulfilled in JESUS, as is taught in Matt 21:2, etc., and John 12:14, etc.

Fifteenth, He was to be betrayed by one of His disciples and household companions (Ps 41:10) and sold for thirty pieces of silver (Zech 11:12-13). This, however, befell JESUS through His disciple Judas, who betrayed Him, Matt 26:47-50 and John 18:2-3, etc., and who received thirty pieces of silver as his reward for it, Matt 26:15-16.

Sixteenth, He was to be reckoned among the evildoers, as was prophesied in Isa 53:12. This, however, happened to JESUS, as is recorded in Mark 15:27-28 and Luke 22:37.

Seventeenth, He was to be scourged, mocked, and spat upon (Isa 50:6), and to suffer for our sins (Isa 53:3-4), to endure the greatest anguish of soul (Ps 22:2 and Isa 53:11), to be pierced through hands and feet on the cross (Ps 22:17), mocked and given vinegar to drink (Ps 22:8 and 69:22), pierced (Zech 12:10), and lots cast over His garments (Ps 22:19), yet no bone of His was to be broken (Ps 34:21). All of this, however, was fulfilled in JESUS: for He was scourged (Matt 27:26), mocked and spat upon (Matt 26:67 and Mark 14:65), suffered for our sins (Matt 20:28; John 3:16; Rom 4:25; and Gal 3:13), endured the greatest anguish of soul (Matt 26:38-39 and John 12:27), was crucified and thus pierced through hands and feet with nails (Matt 27:31 etc.; Luke 23:33), mocked on the cross (Matt 27:31 etc.; Luke 23:35-36), given vinegar to drink (Matt 27:34; Mark 15:23), pierced in His side (John 19:34), lots cast over His garments (Matt 27:35; Mark 15:24), and no bone of His was broken (John 19:33).

Eighteenth, He was to be buried as a rich man (Isa 53:9), yet not see corruption but rise again (Ps 16:10), ascend into heaven (Ps 68:19), sit at the right hand of God His heavenly Father (Ps 110:1), and be crowned with praise and honor (Ps 8:6), after which Jerusalem was soon to be laid waste (Dan 9:26-27) and the conversion of the Gentiles was to take place (Isa 2:2 and 11:10). And Jesus was indeed buried as a rich man, in that a wealthy man, namely Joseph of Arimathea, had Him laid in his own new tomb, which he had prepared for himself (Matt 27:57; Mark 15:43; Luke 23:50), whereupon He rose again on the third day and thus did not see corruption (Matt 28:1 &c.; Mark 16:1 &c.; Luke 24:1 &c.), and shortly thereafter ascended into heaven (Luke 24:50-51; Acts 1:9), and sits at the right hand of God (Eph 1:20; Heb 1:3, 13; and 1 Pet 3:22), crowned with praise and honor (Heb 2:9), after which, not long after Christ's triumphant ascension into heaven, Jerusalem was destroyed, but the holy Apostles preached the Gospel in all lands and thereby brought about the conversion of the Gentiles who had been steeped in abominable idolatry.

That the Messiah had to be not merely a simple human being, but at the same time also God, so that as the mediator between God and mankind He could suffer according to His human nature, yet according to the divine nature overcome death, sin, the devil, and hell, and bring about an infinite merit through the suffering of the human nature: this can be demonstrated to them clearly and powerfully, and indeed first from Isa 9:6, where it is written of Him:

"A child is born to us, a son is given to us," by which His human nature is indicated, since He was to be born like other human beings. After this follows: "And He is called wonderful (or wonder-working) Counselor, אל גבור El gibbor, that is, Mighty God, אבי עד Avi ad, that is, Father of Eternity," by which His divine nature is indicated, as has already been demonstrated above on pp. 168 and 169, and therefore need not be repeated here.

Second, from Jer 23:5-6, where it is written: Behold, the time is coming, says the Lord, that I will raise up for David a righteous Branch, and he shall be a King who will govern well and establish justice and righteousness upon the earth; by which is signified not only his human nature, in that he was to be of the lineage of David, but also, alongside this, it is made clear that he would lead a holy, unblemished, and blameless life, in that he is called righteous and it is said of him that he would establish justice and righteousness upon the earth. Upon this there follows further: And this shall be his name, by which he will be called יהוה צדקנו Jehova Zidkenu, that is, the Jehova or Lord who is our righteousness; by which name Jehova his divine nature is indicated, for this holy name cannot be given to any creature, but belongs to God alone, as may be seen in Exod 3:15 and 15:3, and Isa 42:8, and Hos 12:5, and Amos 5:8, as well as Ps 83:19.

That it belongs to no creature and is given to none, this is also taught by many rabbis; hence in the book Avodath (or Avodus) bakkodesch, fol. 84, col. 3, in the third chapter, under the title Chelek battachlith, one reads: אין שם יהוה, that is, the name Jehova is not imparted (to creatures). And immediately thereafter, in the fourth column, it again states: שם יהוה אינו ראוי, לשום נברא, that is, the name Jehova is not common (or is not imparted), and His simplicity has no end. And in the book Sóbar chádásch, it is taught at fol. 5, col. 2, in the Medrásch néelam: אמר רבי אבהו בוא וראה כמה חשש הקב"ה על כבוד שמו, הגדול שהוא יהוה כי הוא שמו ממש אבל שם אלהים משותף הוא על יד הנבראים, that is, Rabbi Abbu has said: come and see how greatly the holy blessed God has been concerned for the honor of His great name Jehova, for this is properly His name; but the name Elohim is also imparted to creatures. Rabbi David Kimchi likewise agrees with this, when he writes the following concerning the words of Hos 12:6, "But Jehova is the God of hosts, Jehova is His name": בזה השם: בזה השם, "But Jehova is the God of hosts, Jehova is His name": אין משותף עם זולתו, that is, in this name He has fellowship with no one. Rabbi Joseph Albo also expresses himself on this matter in his Sepher Ikkarím (or Ikkórim), under the title Máamar schení, in the 28th chapter, fol. 54, col. 1, as follows: שם הנכתב ביו"ד ה"א וי"ו ה"א הוא הנקרא שם המפורש ורוצה לומר השם הנבדל וגו' פירוש שם המפורש הוא שהוא נבדל ומיוחד לו יתברך מזולתו מן השמות וזה כי שאר השמות הם שמות נאמרים עליו יתברך ועל זולתו לפי שהם שמות הונחו לו יתברך אם מצד הפעולות ואם מצד בחינה אחרת זולת חיוב מציאותו יתברך כמו אלהים המורה על היכולת ועל כן יאמר עליו ועל זולתו כי אלהים יאמר על המלאכים והדיינים. וכן אדני המורה האדנות יאמר עליו ועל זולתו. וכן בשאר השמות יש שהם על זה הדרך רוצה לומר שכבר אפשר שיאמרו עליו ועל זולתו אם בשתוף גמור אם בקדימה ואחור. ואולם שם בן ארבע אותיות אי that is, the name which is written with Jod, He, Vau, He (that is, the name Jehova) is the one called Schem hammephorásch, that is, the separated name, etc. Thus Schem hammephorásch signifies a name that is separated from all others and proper to God (and belonging to Him alone) among the names; and this is so because the remaining names are spoken of God and also of others, for they are names given to God either with respect to certain works, or with respect to some other consideration, without the necessary consequence of the divine essence. Such a name is Elohim, which denotes power or authority; for this reason it is spoken of Him and of others, since the angels and the judges are also called Elohim. Likewise the name Adonái, which signifies lordship, is given to Him and to others. So too among the remaining names of God, with which the situation is similar, that is, those of which it is possible that they may be spoken of Him and of others, either through complete fellowship, or first (of Him) and subsequently (of others). But the name of four letters (that is, the name Jehova, which in the Hebrew language is written with four letters, namely Jod, He, Vau, and He) cannot possibly belong to any other in any manner whatsoever, since it is a name given to God with respect to the necessary consequence or implication of His (divine) essence. These are the words of Rabbi Joseph Albo. Rabbi Isaac Abardenel likewise teaches this in his little book Miphalóth (or Miphalos) Elohim, fol. 79, col. 4, at the end, and fol. 80, col. 1, where he states: שם יה"ו ה"א ואו ה"א לא נאמר בשום צד כי אם על הסבה הראשונה, that is, the name Jod, He, Vau, He is spoken in no manner of anyone other than the first cause (that is, God). And this is likewise demonstrated at length in the book More Nevochim, in the first part, cap. 61, as well as in the two commentaries on it, namely Ephodi and Schem Tof.

The origin of this name also demonstrates, namely the word havah הוה, which means "to be," that it cannot be attributed to any creature; for by it one is taught not only that God gives all things their being and causes them to exist, as is written in the book Reschith (or Reschis) chóchma under the title Scháar hajira, cap. 3. fol. 11. col. 1., where the words read as follows: השם הוה יהוה נקרא הוא יתברך מצד שהויה כל ההויית, that is, GOD is called by this name Jehovah because He has given all things their being; but it also indicates the eternity of GOD. Hence in the aforementioned book More Nevochim, fol. 43. col. 2., in the 61st chapter of the first part, in the Commentario Schem Tof, one reads: דע כי שם י"י מורה על שהוא היה והוה ויהיה, that is, Know that the name Jehovah teaches that He was, still is, and will be. For this reason Rabbi Bechai also writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 10. col. 3., in the Parascha Bereschith: שם המיוחד יתברך יעיד על קדמותו ומציאותו, that is, The Schem hamjuchád, or the proper name (namely Jehovah), bears witness to the eternity and the being of GOD. For this reason He is also called by the rabbis שם ההויה Schem habávaja, that is, the Name of Being; שם העצם Schem haézem, that is, the Name of Substance; שם הנכבד Schem hannichbad, that is, the Glorious Name; שם הנורא Schem hannóra, that is, the Awe-inspiring Name; שם הגדול Schem haggadol, that is, the Great Name; שם הנעלם Schem hannéelam, that is, the Hidden Name; שם המופלא Schem hammúfla, that is, the Wondrous Name; שם המיוחד Schem hamjuchád, that is, the Proper or Attributed Name; and שם המעולה Schem hammeúlle, that is, the Praised Name; and also κατ' ἐξοχης, that is, on account of its glory, simply השם *hasché*m, that is, The Name. And this name is held in such high and holy regard by the Jews that they are not even permitted to pronounce it, for which reason they also call it שם הנכתב ולא נקרא Schem hannichtaf veló nikra, that is, the name which is written but not read. What punishment, however, awaits the one who pronounces it may be seen in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 90. col. 1., where among those who have no share in eternal life there is also counted the one who does השם את השם בהויתו, that is, who pronounces the name (Jehovah) with its letters. Hence in the commentary of Rabbi Menáchem of Rekanat on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 82. col. 2., in the Parascha Schemóth, one likewise reads: ההוגה אותו אין לו חלק לעולם הבא, that is, Whoever pronounces it has no share in eternal life.

The reason, however, why it should not be pronounced is to be found in Schemóth (or Schemós) rabba fol. 98. col. 4., in the third Parascha, on the words of Exod 3:15, זה שמי לעלם zeh schemi leólam, that is, "this is my name forever," where it is written: חסר ואו שלא יהנה אדם את השם באותיותיו, that is, without Vau (the word לעלם is written) so that no one may pronounce the name with its letters. So too it stands in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary thereon: חסר ו"ו לומר העלימהו שלא יקרא ככתבו, that is, without Vau (it is written) to indicate that he has kept it concealed, so that it should not be read as it is written. The meaning intended here, however, is that instead of leólam one must read leallem, which means to conceal and to keep secret, as is to be read in the Talmudic tractate Kidduschin, fol. 71. col. 1., in order thereby to convey that this name must be kept hidden and secret; for which reason it is also called, as was mentioned just a short while ago, Schem hannéelam, that is, the hidden name. On this matter the book Ammudéba schiva fol. 43. col. 1. may also be consulted under the title Ammud revii.

That the Messiah is also called Jehova, and that the aforementioned passage Jer 23:6 is interpreted of Him by the Jews, is acknowledged by Rabbi David Kimchi in his Commentary thereon, where he writes as follows: ויקרא המשיח: that is, The Messiah is called by this name Jehova Zidkénu, that is, The LORD, who is our righteousness, because in His days the righteousness of God will be a continual preservation for us. Concerning this, one also reads in Rabbi Joseph Albo's book Sépher Ikkarim (or Ikkórim), under the aforementioned title, Maamar schéni, cap. 28. fol. 54. col. 2., as follows: ויקרא הכתוב שם המשיח יהוה צדקנו להיותו אמצעי: that is, Scripture calls the name of the Messiah Jehova Zidkénu, that is, The LORD who is our righteousness, because He is the Mediator, so that we may obtain righteousness from God through Him. Likewise, in the Talmudic tractate Báva-bâthra (or bâtra), fol. 75. col. 2., as also in the book Nezach Jisrael (or Jisróel), fol. 48. col. 1. cap. 36., this is understood of the Messiah, and it is stated that the name JEHOVA is given to Him. He is likewise called JEHOVA in the book Medrasch Mischle, fol. 67. col. 1., where the words read as follows: ראשך זה מלך המשיח שעתיד לעבור בראש ישראל שנאמר: that is, (the words) "Thy head" signify the Messiah, who in the future will go before Israel, as it is said (Mic 2:13): And their King will go before them, and JEHOVA at their head. It is also well worth noting that He is called JEHOVA Zebaoth (or, as the Jews pronounce it, Adonái Zevóos), that is, the LORD of hosts; for the words of Isa 28:5, "In that time JEHOVA Zebaoth will be a beautiful crown," etc., are understood of the Messiah in the Chaldean translation, which reads as follows: בעדנא ההיא יהי: that is, In that same time the Messiah of the LORD Zebaoth will be a crown of joy, etc. Likewise, in the little book Midrasch (or dáas), fol. 21. col. 2., on the words of Ps 24:7, "Lift up your gates, and be lifted up, you everlasting doors, that the King of glory may come in," it is written: דא משיח הוא כבוד דמלך: that is, "That the King of glory may come in" signifies the Messiah. In verse 10, however, the question is asked who this King of glory is, and the answer given is: He is the LORD Zebaoth. Likewise, Isa 8:13-14 reads that the LORD Zebaoth will be a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense to both houses of Israel, a snare and a fall to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. This, however, is interpreted of the Messiah in the Talmudic tractate Sanbedrin, fol. 38. col. 1., where one reads as follows: אין בן דור בא עד שיכלו שני בתי אבות מישראל ואלו הן ראש גולה שבבבל ונשיא בארץ ישראל שנאמר ויהי למקדש ולאבן נגף וגו': that is, The Son of David (that is, the Messiah) does not come until the two houses of the fathers, namely the head of the captivity in Babylon and the prince in the land of Israel, come to an end, as it is said: And He will be a sanctuary, but a stone of stumbling, etc. Concerning which, Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes in his Commentary as follows: משיח של ישראל למקדש וגו' של ואלה אבנים וגו' that is, The Redeemer of Israel (the Messiah) will be a sanctuary for Israel and a stone of stumbling. It is thus clearly to be seen from all of this that the Messiah is called Jehová and Jehová Zebaoth; from which it follows, since this name belongs to no creature and yet is given to the Messiah, that He must necessarily also be God.

Third, it is proven from Mic 5:2 that the Messiah must have been not only a man but also God, because it is said there that he would come from Bethlehem, by which his human nature is indicated, for he was to be born at Bethlehem from the seed of David, as already mentioned above; and there follows: ומוצאתיו מקדם מימי עולם Umozäothäv mikkédem mimê olam, that is, "And his goings forth (that is, his excellent and glorious going forth) are before the beginning (namely, of the creation of the world) and before the days of antiquity, or of the world" (for the word עולם olám also means "the world"), by which his divine nature is indicated, for God alone existed before the creation of all things.

That the word "goings forth" signifies an excellent and glorious going forth of the Messiah is evident from the fact that in the Hebrew language, the plural number sometimes signifies the excellence or greatness of a thing. For this reason, the highest wisdom in Prov 1:20 is called חכמות Chóchmôth, or Chóchmos, that is, "wisdoms," instead of חכמה Chóchma, that is, "wisdom"; and in Dan 2:1-2, a particular dream that King Nebuchadnezzar had dreamed is called חלמות chalomôth, or chalómos, that is, "dreams," instead of חלום chalóm, that is, "a dream," as it is read in v. 3; and an elephant in Job 40:15 is called בהמות Behemôth, or Behémos, that is, "animals," instead of בהמה Behema, which means "an animal," on account of its greatness, because it is as large as many other animals combined. Likewise it is read in Ps 88:9 that King David said: שטתני תועבות למו Schattáni toëvôth, or toëvos lamo, that is, "Thou hast made me an abomination unto them" (that is, a great abomination). And in Ezek 28:10 it is said to the king of Tyre: מותי ערלים תמות, that is, "Thou shalt die the deaths (that is, a violent death) of the uncircumcised." Likewise it is written of the Messiah in Isa 53:9: ובמותו עשיר, that is, "And in his deaths (that is, in his violent death) he is with the rich." From all of which it is evident that the plural number indicates the excellence or greatness of a thing.

That the letter, or the præpositio Mem, which otherwise commonly means "from," also signifies "before," as I have interpreted it in the words mikkédem mimê olam, is attested by Rabbi David Kimchi in his commentary on Isa 43:13, on the words גם מיום אני הוא, that is, "Also, I am before a day existed," where he notes that the Mem in the word mijom serves as much as "before." And in this sense it is also taken three times in Prov 8:23, as is clearly to be seen from the preceding verse 22 and the following verse 24. That it must be understood in this way in the cited passage Mic 5:2 is emphatically evident from Ps 72:17, where it is said of the Messiah: לפני שמש ינון שמו, that is, "Before the sun, His name is established," by which it is given to understand that before the creation of the world, and thus before the sun existed, the Son of God existed, and that He was begotten of the Father before the beginning of all things and from eternity; as indeed Rabbi Solomon Jarchi also explains the aforementioned words, "And His going forth is before the beginning," by the words "Before the sun, His name is established." So also in the little book Pirke Rabbi Eliezer, in the third chapter, concerning these two sayings, it is written thus: עד שלא נברא העולם שמו של משיח מנין שנאמר לפני שמש ינון שמו ומוב אותי חסד ואמת בונה להם אפתה עתיד להיות באלפי יהודה ומוצאותיו מקדם מקדם עד שלא נברא העולם, that is: "Before the world was created, the name of the Messiah existed. From where is this proven? Because it is said (Ps 72:17): 'His name is established before the sun.' And another saying (Mic 5:2) declares: 'And you, Bethlehem Ephrata, are you too small to be among the thousands of Judah? And His goings forth are before the beginning, before the beginning, before the world was created.'" From this it is thus clearly to be seen that, according to the teaching of the Jews as well, the word in Mic 5:2, in the word מקדם mikkedem, and מעולם, signifies as much as "before," which must also rightly be interpreted in that way in that passage.

That Ps 72:17 says of the Messiah that His name was established before the sun, it follows that one must know that by the name of God, God Himself is frequently understood in Holy Scripture, as can be seen in Ps 20:8 and 76:2 and 79:9, as well as 119:55. Therefore Rabbi David Kimchi writes, on the words of Mal 3:16, "And those who think upon His (namely the Lord's) name," as follows: שמו הוא הוא שמו, that is, His name is He Himself, and He Himself is His name; which he also indicates in his commentary on Jer 16:21. Likewise, in the book Michlal jofi, on Ps 145:1, on the words "I will exalt You, my God, my King, and praise Your name," it is taught thus: אמר תחלה ארוממך ואחר כך, אמר שמך להודיע כי הוא שמו ושמו הוא, that is, He (namely King David) says first, "I will exalt You," and afterward he says, "Your name," thereby indicating that He is His name, and His name is He. Now just as by the name of God, God Himself is to be understood, so also in Ps 72:17 must the Messiah Himself be understood by the name of the Messiah, since He, as has been demonstrated in the foregoing, is also God. In addition to this, it is to be noted that the words "His name was established before the sun" are also interpreted of the Messiah in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 98. col. 2., and in the tractate

Nedarim (or Nedôrim) fol. 39. col. 2., as well as in the tractate Pesachim (or Pesôchim) fol. 54. col. 1.

Since it is now irrefutably clear from the powerful proofs presented that Jesus Christ is the true promised Messiah, and not merely a simple human being but also at the same time God (for which reason He is rightly and justly called God in John 1:1, Acts 20:28, and Rom 9:5), one may therefore judge what abominable blasphemers the godless Jews are, and in how senseless a manner they revile, slander, curse, and defame our most innocent and most holy Redeemer, thereby earning temporal and eternal punishment. This is taught in the book Cad bakkémach, fol. 42, col. 1, from the Talmudic tractate Sôta, fol. 40, col. 2: ארבע כתות אין מקבלים פני שכינה ואלו הן כת חנפים כת שקרים כת מספרי fol. 40, col. 2: לשון הרע כת לצים, that is: Four companies will not behold the face of God, and these are the company of hypocrites, the company of liars, the company of those who speak evil of others or slanderers, and the company of mockers. Since they fabricate such devilish lies about Christ, speak so much evil of Him, and slander and mock Him in so terrible a manner, they can see from their own Talmud what dreadful judgment they must therefore expect. Yet another judgment is also pronounced in the Talmud against such wicked slanderers, as one reads in the tractate Pesachim, fol. 118, col. 1, as well as in the tractate Maccôth (or Máccos), fol. 23, col. 1: כל המספר לשון הרע וכל המקבל לשון הרע וכל המעיד עדות שקר בחברו ראוי להשליכו לכלבים שנ' לכלב תשליכו אותו... וכתיב בתריה לא תשא שמע שוא, that is: Every one who speaks evil of or slanders another, and every one who receives the slander, and also every one who gives false testimony against his companion (that is, against a fellow human being), is worthy of being thrown to the dogs, as it is said (Exod 22:31): You shall throw it to the dogs; and thereafter it is written (Exod 23:1): You shall not raise a false report.

To conclude this chapter, I wish to show here from the Arabic Alcoran what the Turks, who are nonetheless sworn enemies of the Christians, teach concerning Christ and His immaculate mother, the holy Virgin Mary, so that one may see from this what a great difference there is between the Turks and the Jews, and which of these two may be considered the greater enemies of the Christian religion. Regarding the birth of Christ, it is written thus in the third chapter, which is called Surat Al-âli Imrân: إِذْ قَالَتِ الْمَلَائِكَةُ يَا مَرْيَمُ إِنَّ اللَّهَ يُبَشِّرُكِ بِكَلِمَةٍ مِنْهُ اسْمُهُ الْمَسِيحُ عِيسَى ابْنُ مَرْيَمَ وَجِيهًا فِي الدُّنْيَا وَالْآخِرَةِ وَمِنَ الْمُقَرَّبِينَ * وَيُكَلِّمُ النَّاسَ فِي الْمَهْدِ وَكَهْلًا وَمِنَ الصَّالِحِينَ * قَالَتْ رَبِّ أَنَّى يَكُونُ لِي وَلَدٌ وَلَمْ يَمَسِّنِي بَشَرٌ قَالَ كَذَلِكَ اللَّهُ يَخْلُقُ مَا يَشَاءُ إِذَا قَضَىٰ أَمْرًا فَإِنَّمَا يَقُولُ لَهُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ * وَيُعَلِّمُهُ الْكِتَابَ وَالْحِكْمَةَ وَالتَّوْرَةَ وَالْإِنْجِيلَ مَا يَشَاءُ إِذَا قَضَىٰ أَمْرًا فَإِنَّمَا يَقُولُ لَهُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ * وَرَسُولًا إِلَىٰ بَنِي إِسْرَائِيلَ That is: (Remember) how the angels said, O Mary! God does indeed announce to you His word from Him, whose name is the Messiah, Jesus the Son of Mary, who shall be held in great esteem in this world and the next, and shall be among those who are admitted near (to God). He shall also speak with people in the cradle, as one who is thirty to fifty-one years old, and shall be one of the righteous. Then she said: my Lord, how should I have a child, seeing that no man has touched me? But He answered: God thus creates what He wills; when He has resolved a matter within Himself and says to it that it shall come to pass, it comes to pass. He will also teach him the Scripture, wisdom, the Law, and the Gospel, and send him to the children of Israel. So also in the 19th chapter, which is called Surato Márjama, that is, the chapter of Mary, one reads thus: فَاتَّخَذَتْ فَاتَّخَذَتْ مِنْ أَهْلِهَا مَكَانًا شَرْفِيًّا فَاتَّخَذَتْ مِنْ دُونِهِمْ جُجَابًا فَأَرْسَلْنَا إِلَيْهَا رُوحَنَا فَتَمَثَّلَ لَهَا بَشَرًا سَوِيًّا قَالَتْ إِنْ أَعُوذُ بِالرَّحْمَنِ مِنْكَ أَنْ كُنْتُ تَقِيًّا قَالَ إِنَّمَا أَنَا رَسُولُ رَبِّكِ لِأَهَبَ لَكِ غُلَامًا زَكِيًّا قَالَتْ أَنِي يَكُونُ لِي غُلَامٌ وَلَمْ يَمْسَسْنِي بَشَرٌ وَلَمْ أَكُ بَغِيًّا قَالَ كَذَلِكَ قَالَ رَبُّكَ هُوَ عَلِيَّ هِينٍ وَلَنَجْعَلَ آيَةً لِلنَّاسِ وَرَحْمَةً مِنَّا وَكَانَ أَمْرًا مَقْضِيًّا فَحَمَلَتْهُ فَانْتَبَذَتْ بِهِ مَكَانًا قَصِيًّا *فَاجَاءَهَا الْمَخَاضُ إِلَى جُذْعِ النَّخْلَةِ قَالَتْ يَا لَيْتَنِي مِتُّ قَبْلَ هَذَا وَكُنْتُ نَسِيًّا مَنْسِيًّا *فَنَادَاهَا مِنْ تَحْتِهَا أَلَا تَحْزَنِي قَدْ جَعَلَ رَبُّكِ تَحْتَكِ سَرِيًّا *وَهَزِيَ بِالنَّخْلِ فَجَذَعَ النَّخْلَةُ تَسَاقُطَ عَلَيْكَ رَطْبًا جَنِيًّا *فَكَلِيَ وَاشْرَبِي وَقَرِّي عَيْنًا فَمَا تَرَيْنَ مِنَ الْبَشَرِ أَحَدًا *فَقُولِي إِنِّي نَذَرْتُ لِلرَّحْمَنِ صَوْمًا فَلَنْ أَكَلِمَ الْيَوْمَ أَنسِيًّا *فَأَتَتْ بِهِ قَوْمَهَا تَحْمِلُهُ قَالُوا يَا مَرْيَمُ لَقَدْ جِئْتِ شَيْئًا فَرِيًّا *يَا أُخْتَ هَارُونَ مَا كَانَ أَبُوكَ أَمْرًا سَوْءًا وَمَا كَانَتْ أُمُّكَ بَغِيًّا *فَأَشَارَتْ إِلَيْهِ قَالُوا كَيْفَ يَكْلَمُ مَنْ كَانَ فِي الْأُمِّهِمْ صَدِيدًا *قَالَ إِنِّي عَبْدُ اللَّهِ آتَانِيَ الْكِتَابَ وَجَعَلَنِي نَبِيًّا *وَجَعَلَنِي مُبَارَكًا أَيْنَمَا كُنْتُ وَأَوْصَانِي بِالصَّلَاةِ وَالزَّكَاةِ مَا دُمْتُ حَيًّا *وَبَرَاءَ بِالْأَدْنَى وَلَمْ يَجْعَلْنِي جَبَّارًا شَقِيًّا *وَالسَّلَامُ عَلَيَّ يَوْمَ وُلِدْتُ وَيَوْمَ أَمُوتُ وَيَوْمَ أُبْعَثُ *ذَلِكَ عِيسَى ابْنُ مَرْيَمَ قَوْلَ الْحَقِّ الَّذِي فِيهِ يَمْتَرُونَ that is: Remember that which is written of Mary, how she went away from her people to a place toward the rising of the sun, and took a covering with her from them, and we sent our Spirit to her, who appeared to her in the form of a perfect man. She said: I take my refuge in God from you, if you are God-fearing. He (the Spirit of God) spoke: I am assuredly a messenger of your Lord, to give you a pious little boy. She answered: how should I have a boy, seeing that no man has touched me and I am no harlot? He said: thus has your Creator spoken; this is easy for me, so that we may set him before the people as a sign (or wonder) and as a grace from us, and this is a resolved matter. Now when she was with child by him, she went away with him to a distant place, and when the birth-pangs came upon her at the trunk of a palm tree, she said: would to God I had died before this, so that I would have been utterly forgotten. But he (the angel) called out to her from below her (and said): be not grieved; your Creator has already made a little stream beneath you, which has been led to you, together with a palm tree; cause the fresh, ripe dates to fall broken down upon you. Eat and drink and be refreshed in your eyes (that is, be merry and of good cheer), and when you see a person, say: I have vowed a fast to the merciful God, and will speak today with no human being. Now when her people came to her and she had carried him (meaning Jesus), they said: O Mary! you come assuredly with a wondrous thing. O sister of Aaron! your father was no wicked man, and your mother was no harlot. Thereupon she beckoned to him (namely her son, that he should answer them). But they said: how should a child lying in the cradle speak? Then he (namely Jesus) said: I am a servant of God, who has given me the Scripture and made me a prophet, and has also blessed me wherever you may be, who has also enjoined upon me prayer and purity as long as I live, and also to be dutiful toward my mother, and has not made me stubborn and wretched. Peace (or salvation) be upon me on the day I was born, and on the day I shall die, as also on the day I shall be raised again. This is Jesus, the Son of Mary, concerning whom they doubted. Thus far are the words of the Alcoran. From all of the above it is to be seen that Christ the Lord, according to the teaching of the Alcoran, which is the Bible of the Turks, was born of a pure virgin through the working of the Holy Spirit.

Further, in the 66th chapter, which is called Surat at-tabrim, the following is written concerning the Virgin Mary: ومريم ابنت عمران التي احصنت فرجها فنفخنا فيه من روحنا وصدقت بكلمات ربها وكتبه وكانت من القانتين فنفخنا فيها من روحنا وصدقت بكلمات ربها that is: And Mary the daughter of Imram, who preserved her virginity, and we have breathed into her from our Spirit. She also believed the words of her Lord. As for Christ, he is called the Word of God and His messenger, concerning which the words in the 4th chapter, Súrato nisäi, read as follows: اتينا عيسى ابن مريم رسول الله وكلمته that is: Verily the Messiah, Jesus the Son of Mary, is a messenger of God and His Word. And in the 2nd chapter, which is called Súrat-ol-bakárati, that is, the chapter of rest, it is written that God spoke of him thus: أتينا عيسى ابن مريم البينات وأيدناه بروح القدس that is: We have given Jesus, the Son of Mary, clear proofs, and strengthened him through the Holy Spirit. And in the 5th chapter, which is called Súrat ol majidat, that is, the chapter of the table, the following is read: اذ قال الله يا عيسى ابن مريم اذكر نعمتي عليك وعلي والدتك ان أيدتك بروح القدس تكلم الناس في المهد وكهلا وان علمتك الكتاب والحكمة والنورية والأنجيل وان تخلق من الطين كهينة الطير باذني فتنفخ فيها فتكون طيرا باذني وان تخرج الموتى باذني وان كففت بني اسرائيل عنك ان جيتهم بالبينات فقال الذين كفروا منهم ان هذا الا سحر ميين that is: Then (when God will gather His prophets and apostles) He will say to Jesus, the Son of Mary: Remember my grace, which I have shown to you and to your mother; how I strengthened you through the Holy Spirit, when you spoke with the people in the cradle, just as a man of thirty to fifty-one years; and how I taught you the Scripture, the wisdom, the Law, and the Gospel; and how you formed the shape of a bird from clay, with my permission, and breathed upon it, and through my permission a bird came forth from it; and how, through my consent, you caused the dead to go forth (from their graves); and how I drove the children of Israel away from you, when you came to them with clear proofs and testimonies, and the ungodly among them said: this (which Jesus does) is nothing other than manifest sorcery.

Further, in the fifty-seventh chapter, which is called Surat al-badid, that is, the chapter of iron, the following is written: ولقد أرسلنا نوحا وابراهيم وجعلنا في ذريتهما النبوة والكتاب فمنهم مهتد وكثير منهم فاسقون * ثم قفينا على آثارهم برسلنا وقفينا بعيسي that is: We have sent Noah and Abraham, and have given to the offspring of them both prophecy and scripture. Some of them were guided onto the right path, but many of them strayed from it and were ungodly. Thereafter we caused our messengers (or envoys) to follow in their footsteps, and caused Jesus the son of Mary to come after them, and gave him the Gospel, and placed kindness and mercy in the hearts of those who followed him. And in the sixth chapter, which is called Surat al-anam, that is, the chapter of cattle, Jesus is likewise counted among the pious, where the words read as follows: ووهبنا له اسحق ويعقوب وكلا هدينا ونوحا وهدينا من قبل ومن ذريته داوود وسليمان وابوب ويوسف وموسي وهرون وكذلك نجزي المحسنين that is: We also gave him (Abraham) Isaac and Jacob, and guided them all onto the right path. We also guided Noah aright beforehand, and from his lineage David, and Solomon, and Job, and Joseph, and Moses, together with Aaron, (and thus we reward those who do good,) and Zechariah, and John, and Jesus, as well as Elijah, all of whom were pious.

So writes also Mahomed in the third chapter of his Alcoran, that the teaching of Jesus Christ is to be believed, and that He is to be held in just as high regard as Moses and others, and indeed in these words: قل امنا بالله وما انزل علينا وما انزل على ابراهيم واسماعيل واسحق ويعقوب والاسباط وما اوتي موسي وعيسي والنبيون من ربهم لا * that is: Say, we believe in GOD, and in what has been given down to us from above; and in what was given down from above to Abraham, and Ishmael, and Isaac, and Jacob, and the (twelve) tribes; also in what Moses, and Jesus, and the prophets have received from their Creator, and we make no distinction between any one of them.

Furthermore, the Turks believe that Christ was not crucified, but was taken up into Heaven by GOD, for in the fourth chapter of the Alcoran, which, as already mentioned above, is called Surato nisai, that is, the chapter concerning women, it is written thus: طبع الله عليها بكفرهم فلا يؤمنون الا قليلا * وبكفرهم وقولهم علي مريم بهتاناً عظيماً * وقولهم انا قتلنا المسيح عيسي ابن ابن مريم رسول الله وما قتلوه وصابوه ولكن شبه لهم وان الذين اختلفوا فيه لفي شك منه ما لهم به من علم الا اتباع الظن وما قتلوه يقينا بل رفعه الله اليه وكان الله عزيزا حكيما that is: GOD has sealed them (namely their hearts), (that is, hardened them) in their unbelief, and only few of them believe, inasmuch as they are mired in unbelief, and speak great slander against Mariam, and say: We have killed the Messiah, JESUS the son of Mary, the messenger of GOD; but they did not kill Him, nor crucify Him, but rather another, who appeared to them to resemble Him. Those, however, who do not agree with this and stand in doubt, have no knowledge thereof, but follow their own opinion. They most certainly did not kill Him; rather, GOD took Him unto Himself, for GOD is mighty and wise.

This is the little that I wished to set down here from the Quran, although much more could have been drawn from it. It is, however, sufficiently evident from this that, although the Turks will not acknowledge Christ as the Son of God, they nonetheless hold Him in high esteem, also making honorable mention of His mother, the holy Virgin Mary, and that they are far to be preferred over the wicked Jews, who know nothing but to utter blasphemies, shameful and abusive words against our most precious Savior and His most innocent mother.

Chapter V.

In which the question is examined whether, by that Jesus of whom mention is made in the Talmud in certain places, our Savior Jesus Christ is understood by the Jews, or whether he was a different person who also bore the name Jesus.

When the godless Jews are confronted with the fact that our Savior JESUS is so greatly blasphemed and reviled in their Talmud, they are accustomed to take their refuge and excuse in saying that the Jesus mentioned therein is not the same one whom the Christians regard as the true Messiah, but rather a different person; by this, however, they seek only to appease the Christians and to deflect all hatred from themselves, leading them astray with their smooth and flattering words. But so that the true nature of the matter may come to light, I will here indicate what is found in the Jewish books by which their customary refuge and empty pretense appears to be confirmed; and there comes into consideration what is read on pages 20 and 21 of Rabbi Jechiel's Disputation, which he held before a queen in Paris, in a well-attended assembly, with the convert Nicolaus, where the following is written: ועוד לפי האמת לא היה זה אלהיהם: כי זה היה בימי יהושע בן פרחיה ובימי ינאי המלך ושמעון בן שטח דמו של רבי יהודה בן טבאי שמעיה ואבטליון ממני הלל הזקן ראש הנשיאים אבא שאול ורבן גמליאל הזקן ואמרינן בפרק קמא דשבת הילל ושמעון גמליאל נהגו נשיאותן לפני הבית מאה שנה ושמעון בן שטח היה לפני בן שליש מאות שנה וע"ב שנה באלף החמישי. נמצא שיש יד. מאות שנה וע"ב מישו זה. ולפי חשבון הגוים אין מלידת ישו רק אלף שנים ומאתים ומ' שנה: וכן מוגה בחשבון איקריניון (ר"ל יונימי (נמצא שזה התלמיד קודם לשלהם יותר ממאתים שנה. וגם שלהם היה בימי הורדוס המלכה וזה היה בימי ינאי המלך וההוא דגומר הדין דתניא ולבסוף נסקל לא אלהיהם הוה. ובכל התלמוד לא נזכר והיינו נמי ההוא דקאמר בחלק תגע לא יקרב באהליך לומר לך שלא יהיה לך בן או תלמיד שמקדיה תבשילו ברבים כגון ישו הנוצרי היינו ההוא דרבי יהושע בן פרחיה ויכול להיות שגם שלהם that is: (after the heretic Nicolaus had ceased blaspheming against us and our Talmud, the Rabbi began again to assert) that this matter (what transpired between Jesus and Rabbi Jehoshua, the son of Perachja, as may be seen on page 19 of the Disputation, and as was also indicated on pages 116 and 117) does not concern their (the Christians') God; for that one (of whom the Talmud speaks in the Tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 107, col. 2, and in the Tractate Sota, fol. 47, col. 1, reporting that Rabbi Jehoshua, the son of Perachja, expelled him) lived in the times of Rabbi Perachja and King Jannai, as well as of Simeon the son of

Schetach, who was the teacher of Judah Tabbai, and of Shemaiah and Abtalion. We also read in the first chapter of the Talmudic Tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas, fol. 15, col. 1) that Hillel and Simeon Gamaliel ruled as princes one hundred years before the Temple (meaning before its destruction). But Simeon the son of Schetach was three hundred years before that, and lived seventy-two years into the fifth millennium; and one hundred and seventy-two years before the destruction the four thousand years came to an end: behold, then, three hundred and seventy-two years into the fifth millennium, and it follows from this that from the times of that same Jesus until now, one thousand and four hundred years have elapsed. According to the reckoning of the Gentiles (meaning the Christians), however, only one thousand two hundred and forty years have passed since the birth of Jesus; for so they count according to the reckoning of Hieronymus, and it follows from this that that same disciple lived more than two hundred years before their Jesus. Moreover, theirs lived in the times of Queen Helena, but that one in the times of King Jannai. Likewise, the one mentioned in the chapter called Nigmar baddin (that is, in the Talmudic Tractate Sanhedrin, in the sixth chapter, fol. 43, col. 1) as having been stoned was equally not their God, and is not mentioned at all in the Talmud. In the same way, the one who was the disciple of Rabbi Jehoshua the son of Perachja, of whom it is said in the chapter Chelek (that is, in the aforementioned Talmudic Tractate Sanhedrin, in the eleventh chapter, fol. 103, col. 1): "And no plague shall come near your tent" (Ps 91:10), this indicates that you should have no son or disciple who burns his food publicly, as Jesus the Nazarene did. And it may well be that theirs also was called Jesus, just as the disciple of Rabbi Jehoshua the son of Perachja was. At this the clergy (in the aforementioned assembly) said to him: who will believe your words, etc. What the aforementioned Rabbi Jechiel further brought forward against Nicolaus on this matter has been cited above on pages 198 and 199.

Rabbi Lippmann likewise denies, in his Sepher Nizzáchon, numéro 347, that the Jesus mentioned in the Talmud is our Savior Christ, since he reports that a converted Jew who had been confronted with the blasphemies against Christ received the following answer: הריק אמרתי לו : כי בלשונם נקרא יוֹשׁ ובלשונוּנוּ נקרא ישוע. ענה ואמר אמת ומצאתם קורין לו ישוע וכן שמו לפי שהושיע להם מן הגיהנם. אז השבתי חבריך מעידים שאינך יודע מאומה כי ישועה ומנוחה פעולה אחת המה. וכשם שאינך יכול מנוח בסגול ובלא ח"א שיהא פעולה מנוחה כך אינך יכול ישוע בסגול ובלא ה"א שיהא פעולה ישועה. ובדברי הימים נכתב ישועה בלא ה"א ונכתב בסגול אלא שהוא שם העצם כשאר שמות ותשובה זו שייכת לומר להם על כל הגנות שנאמר בתלמוד על ישו ואמרו להם שאין זה יוש; גם הוכחנו בפני פריז להם ששני ישו היו שהרי ישו שמאמינים בו היה בימי הילני המלכה שקורין לה הלינא כמו שפרשתי בדניאל בסימן שלב. היא היתה בימי הליל כמו ששנינו בנזיר ומייתי לה

 ; סוטה. That is to say: he (namely the converted Jew) said that ישו Jeschu (that is, Jesus) signifies, by Gematria, as much as הבל וריק Hével varík, that is, a vanity and a nullity; to which I answered him that the Christians do not call their God Jeschu, for in their language He is called Jesus, but in our language ישוע Jeschúa. He, however, replied in turn and said: it is true, yet some among you call Him ישוע Jeschúa, and this is His name, because He delivered them (mankind) from Hell. To this I answered him: your words bear witness that you know nothing at all, for the words ישועה jeschúah and מנוחה menucháh are of the same character; and just as you cannot say מנוח menuách with the Vocali Segol and without He or ha and have it mean straightforwardly as much as מנוחה menúchah, so likewise you cannot say ישו Jeschúa with the Vocali Segol and without the letter He and have it mean straightforwardly as much as ישועה jeschúah. Now in the First Book of Chronicles (1 Chr 24:11) ישוע Jeschúa is written without the letter He and with the Vocali Segol, because it is a Nomen proprium, or proper name, as other names are. This answer must be given to them (the Christians) concerning all the reproaches that are reported of Jesus in the Talmud, and one must say to them that the said person is not (their) Jesus. The sages of Paris likewise demonstrated to them that there were two men named Jesus, for behold, the Jesus in whom they believe lived in the time of Queen beleua, as I have explained in my commentary on Daniel, numérô 332. She, however, lived in the time of Hillel, as we learn in the Talmudic tractate Nasir and as is cited in the first chapter of the tractate Schabbath. But the Jesus who is mentioned in the Talmud lived in the time of Rabbi Jehoschua, the son of Perachja, as may be seen in the eleventh chapter of the tractate Sanhedrin and in the tractate Succa; and Hillel lived many generations after Rabbi Jehoschua the son of Perachja, as is to be found in the tractate Avoth (or Ovos). These are the words of Rabbi Lippmann.

In this manner, Rabbi Salman Zevi also took great pains, in his little book which he called the Jewish Theriac and wrote against the converted Friedrich Samuel Brenz's shed Jewish Serpent-Skin, to prove that the Jesus whom the Talmud mentions is not our Jesus. In the 1st chapter, num. 7, he writes in German-Hebrew as follows:

I have applied great effort and diligence, and have gone through the greater part of the Talmud, and have found ten certain testimonies that the Jesus of whom our Talmud makes mention in several places cannot be the same Jesus in whom the Christians believe, and that there must have been yet another person before him who was called Jesus and was put to death by the Jews; this

I will diligently demonstrate to you: if you can prove the contrary to me, I will gladly admit that I have been mistaken.

First, all nations acknowledge, and all chronicles attest, that the Second Temple stood for 420 years and some months, until the Romans Titus and Vespasianus destroyed it. So it is written in the little book Seder Olam, and especially in the Talmud, and in all books, that Rabbi Jehoscha, son of Perachja, was the teacher of Jesus of Nazareth. This Rabbi Jehoscha, son of Perachja, and Simeon, son of Schetach, lived in the year 3521 after the creation of the world, according to the reckoning of the Jews, and 233 years after the Temple was built. This one was the Rabbi or teacher of Jesus of whom it is written in the Talmud. But Jesus of Nazareth, in whom the Christians believe, was born, according to their Gospel, in the times of King Herod: in those same times Hillel and Shammai lived, fully 130 years after the aforementioned Jehoscha, son of Perachja, who was the teacher of that Jesus who appears in the Talmud. This I will prove to you by means of the genealogies and lines of descent.

See in the Pirke Avoth (or פרקי אבות), in the first chapter, it states: Simeon the Just was one of the members of the great Synagogue or assembly that had traveled with Ezra from Babylon to Jerusalem; they composed our prayers. This Simeon the Just lived in the times of Alexander the Macedonian, as Josephus writes in the Josephus of the Romans. This Simeon, Josephus and Alexander the Macedonian called Jaddus, and he was held in high esteem, as all chronicles write. That was one generation or lineage.

The second generation, or the second line of descent, was Antigonus of Succo. In his times the accursed Zaddukim, whom the nations, and also the Christians in the Gospel, call Sadducees, began.

The third generation, or the third birth, was Jose, the son of Joëser, one from Zerida, and also Jochanan from Jerusalem. After them came Joschia (or Jehóscha), the son of Peráchja: he was the teacher of Jesus, of whom the Talmud writes. That is the fourth generation, or the fourth birth: that was 207 years before the destruction of the second Temple.

The fifth birth was Juda, the son of Tabai, and Simeon, the son of Schetach.

The sixth birth was Schemája and Abtálion.

The seventh birth was Hillel and Schammai. These lived in the final times of King Herod: in those same times, Jesus the Nazarene was born in Bethlehem in Judea, on which point Christians and Jews are in agreement. Thus it is found that two generations or births elapsed between Jehóscha, the son of Peráchja, who was the teacher of Jesus, up to Hillel and Schammai, at the time of Herod. Only in that same period was the Christians' Jesus born, and under Pontius Pilate put to death in Jerusalem; and according to this reckoning, there are more than 130 years from Rabbi Jehoschuah ben Perachjah, the teacher of Jesus, to the birth of Jesus, the Messiah of the Christians: so Jesus the Nazarene would have had to be more than 130 years old when he was condemned, whereas everyone knows that he was no older than 33 years. This is now a strong proof that the Jesus of whom the Talmud writes was a different Jesus.

In the second place, the Talmud says in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 44, where it speaks of the seducer and instigator, that there was one who was called Jesus, whom they stoned and afterward hanged: yet Jesus the Nazarene, according to the words of the Gospel, was hanged alive.

Third, it is stated in the aforementioned passage that for forty days, one after another, a public proclamation was made: Jesus would be stoned; whoever knows of his innocence, or anything good, or a truthful testimony on his behalf, by which he might be declared free (and acquitted), should come forward and present it. But Jesus, in whom the Christians believe, was arrested in haste without delay, and on the following day, according to the Gospel of Matt, Mark, and Luke, was put to death.

The fourth testimony: the Talmud writes in the aforementioned passage in Sanhedrin that Jesus had five disciples. Yet Jesus of Nazareth had twelve disciples.

The fifth testimony: there, it names the five disciples by name; the first was called Mátthai, the second Nákai, the third Nézer, the fourth Bónai, the fifth Tôda. But the disciples of Jesus of Nazareth had no such names; rather, they were called John, Peter, Paul, Luke, Martin, Judas, etc.

The sixth testimony: the aforementioned Talmud writes that all five of the said disciples were executed in Jerusalem on the accusation of the Jews. But the disciples of Jesus of Nazareth were executed here and there by pagan kings, as is to be found in the Acts of the Apostles.

The Seventh Testimony. There the Talmud also writes that Jesus was judged according to the law, that he was stoned and afterward hanged. But Jesus of Nazareth was, under the authority of Pontius Pilate, the city prefect appointed by the Romans in Jerusalem, crucified alive contrary to the law and to all Jewish custom. This is directly contrary to the law, for we have no more than four kinds of death prescribed in the law by which judgment was carried out, namely stoning, burning, execution by the sword, and hanging. But because we were at that time under the power of the Romans, the Romans nailed him alive to the cross according to their custom, which was very common among them, as Josephus writes, saying that he once found, on a journey, several of his acquaintances hanging on the cross who were still alive, and whom he had released. Therefore the Jesus about whom the Gemara writes cannot be the Messiah of the Christians.

Eighth, it is written in the oft-named Talmud, in the tractate Sanhedrin fol. 67. col. 1., that Jesus was captured and judged at Lud, in a city that bore that name. But Jesus of Nazareth was captured and judged in Jerusalem, as both Christians and Jews acknowledge.

Ninth, it is stated that Jesus' father was called Papus, the son of Judah. But the betrothed of Mary was called Joseph, as is written in the Gospel.

Tenth, it stands written in the Talmudic tractate Sota fol. 47. col. 1. that JESUS set up a brick as an idol, bowed down before it, and served it; yet we find nowhere that JESUS, the Christians' Messiah, practiced idolatry, or called upon any other than the Father. Thus there are ten differences between that JESUS of whom the Talmud writes and the Christians' Messiah; and it is impossible for me to find that this person is the JESUS in whom the Christians believe. And if there were nothing else but the first testimony, by which it is proven that the Jehoshua of Perachja's son and Simeon of Schetach's son lived in the time of the Hasmoneans, whom the Christians call the Maccabees, that alone would be sufficient. At that same time also lived Ezra and his company, who composed our prayers, not long after the redemption from Babylon, in the time of Simeon the Just, as Josephus and all truthful writers attest. Thus the Jesus of whom the Gemara writes lived in those times, a full hundred and thirty years before JESUS the Nazarene, the Christians' Messiah, who was not born until the time of Herod and of Hillel and Shammai, not long before the destruction. In this matter I say once more, for my own part, that our Talmud spoke of a different JESUS. Thus we find nothing of his history; only what Josephus wrote in the book he composed for the Romans, where he makes mention of John the Baptist. But the reason why our forebears wrote nothing at all about Jesus the Christians' Messiah is that no Jew stands to gain anything by it; on the other hand, someone might easily have written something that could be interpreted unfavorably against us, as unfortunately happens to us daily. For our forebears and the Talmudists saw that the Christian religion was growing stronger from day to day, and so they restrained themselves as much as they were able.

Rabbi Gedalja also writes in his book Schalscheleth hakkabala (or Schalscheles hakkabboto), fol. 24, col. 1, that our Savior Jesus was not a disciple of Rabbi Jehoschua, the son of Perachja, where his words read as follows: יהושע בן פרחיה ושמעון בן שטח קבלו מיהודה טבאי ואבטליון ואנשי כנסת הגדולה ואלטש תר"כא לבריאה שהיא שנת ד"ג לבנין הבית זה יהושע אינו אותו שהיה לתלמיד הומה כמו שחשבו קצת האנשים אבל היה אחר בימי תלמיד הלל ושמאי כמו ע' "שנים קודם חרבן הבית שבימיו קצת האנשים אבל היה אחר בימי תלמיד הלל ושמאי כמו ע' "שנים קודם חרבן הבית שבימיו That is: Jehoschua the son of Perachja, and Simeon the son of Schetach, received their teaching from Jebuda Tabai and Natai the Arbelite, in the year 3621 after the creation of the world (and learned it), which was the two hundred and thirteenth year after the building of the Temple. This Jehoschua did not teach the Law to that disciple who is meant (understand: Jesus Christ), as some people have held, but rather there was another who lived in the time of the disciples of Hillel and Shammai, about seventy years before the destruction of the Temple, in whose days those new events came to pass.

This is what I have found in the Rabbinic books on this matter, and it all has such an appearance that one could easily be persuaded by it that great injustice is done to the Jews when one charges them with blaspheming our Savior in their Talmud. Indeed, the aforementioned Queen of France was so taken in by the above-cited defense of Rabbi Jechiel that she (as can be seen on page 22 of the mentioned Disputation of Rabbi Jechiel) addressed her clergy, when they refused to accept his defense, in the following manner, as Rabbi Jechiel renders it in Hebrew: מה לכם להבאיש ריחכם הנראה לכבודכם אמר שעל אלהים לא פערו פיהם ולא אמרו עליו כן שיהא מרין בניגוד דחיותיכם ?ואתם מבקשים להוציא חרפתכם מפיו : That is: Why do you wish to make your own odor stink? See, he says to your honor that they did not open their mouths against your God, and did not say of Him that He is punished in the boiling filth, and you seek to bring your shame out of his mouth: is it not a disgrace to you that you speak in such a manner? But there have also been certain scholars, such as Wilhelmus Schickardus, Galatinus, and Paulus Riccius, who firmly convinced themselves that our Savior is not mentioned at all in the Talmud; however, they were certainly very much mistaken in this. In order that the contrary may now be demonstrated with irrefutable grounds, we wish to examine in turn that which was presented above from the aforementioned Rabbi Jechiel's Disputation, from Rabbi Lippmann's Sepher Nizzachon, and from Rabbi Salman Zevi's Jewish Theriac, which appears to serve the Jews' cause, and to set against it what is found in the Jewish books to the contrary.

Concerning Rabbi Jechiel's proof: he seeks to establish thereby that our Jesus cannot be the one who, as shown by the Talmudic Tractate Sanhedrin fol. 107. col. 2. and Sota fol. 47. col. 1., went to Egypt, of which mention has been made above, since that Jesus who went to Egypt lived in the times of Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, and of King Jannaeus, as well as of Rabbi Simeon, the son of Schetach; whereas the Christians' Jesus, however, lived in the times of Queen

Helena, and was thus 232 years earlier than the former, since from the time of the latter until the time when Rabbi Jechiel held the Disputation with the convert Nicolas, 1,472 years had elapsed, but from the time of the former until that point, according to Christian reckoning, only 1,240 years had passed. To this I reply that Rabbi Jechiel has acted deceptively in this matter, in that he stated that the one lived 232 years before the other, when in fact, according to Rabbi Salman Zevi's reckoning, as has been shown on pp. 254 and 235, no more than 130 years are supposed to have elapsed between the two, and Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, lived only 207 years before the destruction of the Second Temple. Furthermore, the Jews do not accept our system of chronology, as will be demonstrated below from Aben Esra and Isaac Arabenel: how then can Rabbi Jechiel appeal here to our chronology? But just as he, as noted above on p. 199, acted craftily in this matter and, against his better knowledge, claimed that the Jesus who is supposed to be tormented in hell in boiling filth is not Jesus of Nazareth but rather Jesus Gereda, according to Jewish teaching, when in fact there never existed anyone by the name of Jesus Gereda: so too has he here placed the time in which Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, lived far too late, and appealed to the Christian chronology, even though he knew full well that Rabbi Jehoscha did not live so long before, and that our chronology is held to be false among the Jews.

In order that one may clearly see that our Jesus, according to Jewish teaching, is the very same person who traveled to Egypt with the aforementioned Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, and was his disciple, I will demonstrate this thoroughly from their own books. One must consider what Rabbi Isaac writes in his book Chisuk emuna, p. 415, numero 46, concerning the words of John 7:15, "And the Jews marveled, saying, How does this man know letters, having never learned?" where those words read as follows: גמ זה הדבר אינו אמת כי ישוע הנוצרי היה תלמידו של יהושע בן פרחיה ועימו ברח לאלכסנדריא של מצרים בימי ינאי המלך : כאשר העידו עליו בחכמי דורו וראו אותו יחור כאשר ראוהו בעיניהם (namely, that Jesus is supposed not to have learned the scriptures) is also not true, for Jesus the Nazarene was the disciple of Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, and fled with him to Alexandria in Egypt on account of King Jannaeus, as the sages of that generation testified concerning him and saw him with their own eyes. Isaac Abarbenel also writes in his book Masene jeschua, fol. 67, col. 1, in the tenth Maian, in the eighth Tamar, as follows on this matter: וספק אחר יש לבני עמנו בדבר הזה במה שאמרו שישוע הנוצרי מת ס"ב שנה קודם חורבן הבית כי מצינו בתלמוד שהיה תלמידו של יהושע בן פרחיה שהיה מחזור הג' מאנשי כנסת הגדולה ואנטיגנוס איש סוכו דורו הראשון ואחריו יוסף בן יעזר ויוסף בן יוחנן ואחריו נתאי הארכלי ויהושע בן פרחיה והוא חיה בימי אלכסנדר בן הורקנוס בן שמעון בן מתתיהו הנקרא ינאי המלך ומפני שהנהגה עם הפרושים והרגם רבים מהם ברח יהושע בן פרחיה לאלכסנדריא

that is, Our people also have another doubt in this matter, in that they (the Christians) say that Jesus died 42 years before the destruction of the Temple; for we find in the Talmud that he was the disciple of Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, who lived in the third age. Among the men of the great Synagogue or Assembly, Antigonus of Succo had lived in the first age; after him came Joseph the son of Joëser, and Jose the son of Jochanan; after these came Nathai the Arbelit, and Jehoscha the son of Perachja; and this was in the time of Alexander, the son of Hyrcanus, the son of Simeon, the son of Mattathias, who is called King Jannaeus. Now because that same King Jannaeus had a quarrel with the Pharisees and had many of them put to death, Rabbi Jehoscha the son of Perachja fled with his disciple Jesus to Alexandria in Egypt; they afterwards returned to Jerusalem, and that same Jesus was hanged in the year 269 after the building of the Temple, which was 151 years before its destruction. The sages who lived at that time, as well as his friends and relatives, gave testimony to this effect: how then should we believe the contrary from the mouths of people (meaning the Christians) who did not know him and were not present there? In order that one might say that this belief was deliberately fabricated to prove that the Temple was destroyed on account of the sin of putting Jesus the Nazarene to death, they (namely the Christians) say that he was hanged shortly before the destruction of the Temple. We, however, will not depart from the truth and from the tradition, that is, the oral teaching of our fathers, who did not falsify the matter but recounted everything as it occurred, adding nothing and taking nothing away. All of this shows that this opinion (of the Christians, who say that he was crucified only 42 years before the destruction of the Temple) is not true. These are the words of Abarbenel, from which it is well worth noting that he writes that the Jews learned from their fathers that Jesus Christ was in Egypt with his teacher Rabbi Jehoscha the son of Perachja, and that the Christians are wrong when they say that Jesus was hanged only 42 years before the destruction of the Temple. Concerning the foregoing, the same author further writes as follows: אבל בעבור שיש לומר שהיה אותו תלמיד ישוע אחר לכן לא עשינו עקר that is, But since it can be said that that disciple of Rabbi Jehoscha the son of Perachja was a different Jesus, we have therefore not made a principal matter of this doubt, and have in this respect accepted their (the Christians') opinion as it stands. Abarbenel does not, however, intend by this to indicate that he has accepted the Christians' opinion as true, for in the foregoing he had indeed rejected it as false and untrue; otherwise he would have contradicted himself. Rather, he wished only to indicate by this that, even granting the Christians' assertion to be true, the calculation of Daniel's seventy weeks does not agree with it.

With the aforementioned Abarbenel, Rabbi Aben Ezra also agrees, who in his commentary on Dan 11:14 writes as follows: ובימיו היו הפריצים מִיִּשְׂרָאֵל וְאֵלֶּה הֵן: בימי דאדם שהוא אלהי הנוצרים ואל תסמוך על דבריהם שהיה בימי הורדוס והורדוס כי that is: And in those same times, apostates from Israel will arise; these existed at the time of that man (understand: Jesus Christ) who is the God of the uncircumcised; but give no credence to their words that he lived in the time of Herod, for our righteous (or truthful) sages have said that he lived in the time of Simeon, the son of Shetach, and this is the truth.

Rabbi Abraham Sachutus also agrees with this, writing in his book Juchasin fol. 16. col. 2. and fol. 17. col. 1. as follows: וקבלתם אמת: שאותו איש היה תלמידו: (וזאת היא הכת וכו' והאמת שנולד אותו האיש בשנת ד' למלכות ינאי השני הוא אלכסנדר הוא שנת רס"ג לבנין הבית ושנת נ"א לחשמונים שהיא שנת ג' אלפים תש"עא ליצירה: אף על פי שהם אומרים שנולד מזמן הורדוס עבד החשמונים שנת ח"ש ליצירה ושנחלה ל"ה שנים קודם החרבן בן ל"ב שנים כוונתם לבזותנו ולומר כי מיד במהרה קודם מ' שנה נחרב הבית בעון מה שעשינו לו: וזה אינו כן כי פ"ט שנים קדם זה היה לידתו מזמן הלידה שהם אומרים: והאמת שנולד שנת תר"עא וכשנת ר"צט לבנין הבית נתפש והוא בן ל"ו שנים בשנת שלש לאריסטובולוס בן ינאי ובעבור זה כתבו חכמי ישראל בויכוח שהיה להם כי בחלמד אינו כתוב אותו שהם אומרים וגם בדברי הימים שלהם יש מחלוקת בביאתם 'באיזה שנה נולד וכבר ידוע ענינו וכו' That is to say: Our (forefathers') tradition or teaching is true, that this man (Jesus) was a disciple of Rabbi Jehoshua, the son of Perachja; and this is the sect, etc. It is true that this man (Jesus) was born in the fourth year of the reign of Jannai the Second, who is also called Alexander, which is the two hundred and sixty-third year of the building of the Temple, and the fifty-first year of the Hasmoneans, but the three thousand six hundred and seventy-first year after the creation of the world. Although they (the Christians) say that he was born at the time of Herod, the servant of the Hasmoneans, in the year (three thousand) seven hundred and sixty after the creation of the world, and that he was hanged thirty-five years before the destruction, in the thirty-second year of his age. Their intention thereby is to hold us in contempt, and to be able to say that the Temple was destroyed on account of the sin which we committed against him, immediately forty years thereafter. But this is not the case, for he was born eighty-nine years earlier than they say; and it is certain that he was born in the year 671 (of the fourth thousand of years), and was taken captive in the year 299 after the building of the Temple, when he was 36 years old, in the third year of Aristobulus, the son of Jannai. For this reason the sages of Israel wrote in their disputation, which they held with them (namely the Christians), that the one of whom they (the Christians) make mention is not described in the Talmud. Likewise, in their Chronicles there is a disagreement among them as to in which year he was born; but the nature of the matter is already well known, etc.

Rabbi Naphtali Hirz likewise teaches in his book Emek hammelech, fol. 135. col. 3. that Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, was our Savior's teacher, and that all who were in the high council possessed the arts of sorcery, and were on that account held in favor with God and men, and he continues as follows: ולא כמו האיש חבליעל שכישף והסית והדיח את ישראל מאביהם שבשמים וגל זה קיבל מרבו רבי יהושע בן פרחיה שהיה גם כן אחד מן הסנהדרין ועל זה נאמר ונגע לא יקרב באהלך באהל של תורה. וכוננו זה הפסוק שלא יהיה לך תלמיד שאינו הגון הנקרא נגע שסקדיח את תבשילו ברבים כגון תלמידו של רבי יהושע בן פרחיה שכישף והסית והדיח את ישראל מאביהם 'שבשמים ולכן הוא נידן בצואה רותחת שהוא המדור התחתון של גיהנם וגו' That is: And not like that Isch habbelial, that is, worthless man (by which, as noted above, Jesus is meant in a blasphemous manner), who practiced sorcery and led Israel astray and turned them away from their Father in heaven. All of this he learned from his teacher, Rabbi Jehoscha the son of Perachja, who was also one of the high council. Concerning this man (Jesus), the words of Ps 91:10, "And no plague shall come near your dwelling," are also cited, whereby the dwelling of the Law is understood. The purpose of this verse, however, is that you should have no disciple who is not capable or legitimate, and such a one is called a plague, who burns his food publicly, like the disciple of Rabbi Jehoscha the son of Perachja, who practiced sorcery and led Israel astray and turned them away from their Father in heaven; for this reason he is punished in boiling filth, which is the lowest dwelling of hell. That our Savior is meant here, however, is shown by the words that follow shortly thereafter at columna 4., where He is referred to in a veiled manner through Athasch מ'כ'ה 'צ'פ'ת'ם mabaf tafbagam, that is, ישו הנוצרי Jeschu Nozeri, or Jesus Nazarenus.

Likewise, it is reported in the book Maggen Abraham by Rabbi Abraham Perizol, in the 59th chapter, that our Jesus was a disciple of the oft-mentioned Rabbi Jehoscha, as can be seen from what is to be cited at length from that chapter in the following and in this chapter. It is also stated in the little book Toledoth Jeschu that Christ lived in the time of Rabbi Simeon, the son of Schetachi, as is noted above in the second chapter, paginâ 107, and in the third chapter, p. 179. In the book Zemach David by Rabbi David Ganz, it is likewise reported in the first part, fol. 21, col. 1, under the year 580, that Rabbi Jehoscha fled to Egypt on account of King Jannai; and it follows thereupon: ובימיו אירע That is: And in his time the affair with Jesus the Nazarene came to pass, for he was a disciple of Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja. Likewise, in the book Cosri, under the title Maamar Schelishi numero 65, it is read that Joseph the son of Joezer came after Antigono of Succo, and it follows: ואחריו יהושע בן פרחיה דבנו מפורסם וישו הנוצרי That is: After him (Joseph the son of Joezer) came Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, whose matter or history is well known, and Jesus the Nazarener was his disciple. From this manifold counter-proof, it is to be judged reasonably that Rabbi Jechiel reported to the Queen of France in a brazen and shameless manner an untruth, when he said that what transpired between Rabbi Jehoscha and Jesus, according to the indication of the Talmud, does not concern our Savior, and that the Talmud makes no mention of Him; since so many rabbis, held in very high esteem among the Jews, unanimously teach the contrary.

Therefore, Rabbi Jechiel offers in his above-cited evasions the claim that what is read in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 43. col. 1. concerning the stoning of Jesus does not concern our Jesus either, even though in the little book Toledoth Jeschu, as may be read above on page 179, it is expressly stated that He was first stoned to death, and only afterward hanged. This is also taught in the old Nizzabon, on the words of Gen 1:26, "Let us make man," where the following is written mockingly: אומרים המינים נעשה שנים במשמע והן: אב ובן תדחהו והשב לו באמרו הדבר כדברך כן הוא אמר לבן בני הסייעני נעשה אדם אני ואתה ומרד הבן ולא רצה לעזור לאביו והאב עשה האדם לבדו בלי עזרת הבן דכתיב ויברא אלהים את האדם ולא כתוב ויבראו ויקצוף על בנו ויאמר אם יבא היום ויצטרך לעזרתי לא אעזור לך כשם שלא עזרתני. וכשבא יומו ונתקלו ונתלה אז צעק בקול מר אלי אלי למה עזבתני רחוק מישועתי וגו' ובקש לו לעזרה אז אמר לו האב כשבקשתך לעזרני לעשות אדם מרדת בי ולא באת לעזרתה 'חמש ע לי ימיני ועשיהן זור לא אעזורך, that is: The heretics say that the word Naase, that is, "let us make," signifies two, namely the Father and the Son; but refute them with this, and answer: it is true, as you say: the Father spoke to the Son, "My son, help me, and let us both make man"; but the Son was disobedient and would not help his father; therefore the Father made man alone, without the help of the Son, as it is written (Gen 1:27): "And God created man," and not "and they created him."

Therefore the Father became angry with the Son and said: when the day comes that you will have need of my help, I will not help you either, just as you did not help me. When that day then came, and he was stoned and hanged, he cried out at that time with a bitter voice (from Ps 22:2): "My God, why have you forsaken me? Why are you far from my salvation," etc., and he sought help from Him. But the Father answered him: when I had desired of you that you should help me to make man, you were disobedient to me and did not come to the Lord's aid; but my right hand sustained me, and I made him without you, so help yourself as well, for I will not help you. These are the mocking words of the old Nizzáchon. Beyond this, Rabbi Jechiel also denies that our Savior Jesus is meant in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 103, col. 1, where, concerning the passage Ps 91:10, "And no plague shall come near your dwelling," it is said that this indicates that you should have no son or disciple who publicly burns his food, as Jesus the Nazarene, the disciple of Rabbi Jehoshua, son of Peráchja, did; even though Rabbi Naphtali, in his words cited just previously from the book Emek hammelech, teaches the exact opposite.

Regarding that which has been adduced from Rabbi Lippmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, numero 347, the said Rabbi Lippmann had no other intention therein than to instruct the Jews as to what they should answer the Christians when they are challenged by them. What he puts forward, that one cannot write Jeschúa with the vowel Segol, and that our Savior is called not Jeschúa but JESus, contains no wit or sense whatsoever. The name Jeschúa is a Nomen proprium, or proper name, and is written not with a Segol, as Rabbi Lippmann falsely asserts, but with a Zére, as can be seen in 1 Chr 2:15 and Ezra 3:2. As for his claim that our Jesus lived in the time of Queen Helena, while the one of whom the Talmud speaks lived in the time of Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Peráchja, in this he contradicts himself; for in the said book at numero 332, where he has disclosed his true opinion, he writes the following concerning the words of Dan 9:24, "Seventy weeks are determined upon your people, etc.": ידוע וגם מפורש בפרק חלק שהמשיח נולד שנתי ד' לינאי המלך דנקרא: אלכסנדרוס רינב לבניין הבית זג 'אלפים ליצירה ובו ומלך י"א:ש' ושם ואשתו היליני שקורין לה אלינא י' 'שנים ובה פונבן - מונבו הנקיא הורקנוס ל"ח שנים שהרגו הורדוס בשנת ל"ח של אוגוסטוס מלך רומי והיה בימי אלינא ונחלה בימי ארקילוס המלך בן בנו של הורדוס ובימי יוליוס קיסר וזהו כמעט ק' שנים אחרי כן הלא זה סותר מתוכו כי הילני קודם הורדוס היתה: that is: It is known and clear from the chapter Chelek (that is, from the eleventh chapter of the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin) that the Nazarene (that is, Jesus Christ) lived in the time of Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, and was born in the fourth year of King Jannai, who is called Alexander, 252 years after the building of the Temple, and 3000 years after the creation (of the world); after which time he (Jannaeus) reigned seven years, and his consort Helena ten years, but his son Munbas, who is also called Hyrcanus (whom Herod put to death in the thirty-eighth year of the Roman Emperor Augustus), reigned thirty years; and the said one lived in the time of Helena. He is said, however, to have been hanged in the time of King Archelaus, the grandson of Herod, and in the time of Julius Caesar, which would have had to have occurred nearly a hundred years after this. But this contradicts itself, for Helena lived before King Herod, as I have explained. Beyond this, Rabbi

Regarding the ten proofs of Rabbi Salman Zevi, by which he wishes to maintain that our Jesus is not the one mentioned in the Talmud, they are all of absolutely no consequence. As for the first proof, by which he seeks to confirm that our Jesus cannot be the one mentioned in the Talmud, because ours was born, according to the Gospel, in the time of Herod, whereas that other one lived in the time of Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja, and thus some 130 years before our Jesus: it is well known that the Jews do not accept the New Testament as credible in this matter, but rather regard it as false, as is as clear as sunlight from what was cited shortly before on pp. 240 and 241 from Abarbanel's book Majene jeschua and from Aben Esra, and as will be set forth in detail from what shortly follows from the book Maggen Abraham. How then could Rabbi Salman Zevi have placed more credence in the New Testament in this matter than in his own rabbis? This cannot be the case; on the contrary, it is entirely certain that with all the proofs he has adduced he sought nothing other than to instruct the Jews as to what answer they should give to Christians when they might find themselves in a disputation with them. He has therefore not expressed his own genuine and earnest opinion in this, just as he has done in many other places in his aged little book, the Jewish Theriac, in which he has shamelessly denied many things whose opposite is more than sufficiently well known, as his false maneuvers are exposed here and there throughout this book. Moreover, it has been sufficiently demonstrated in the foregoing from many rabbis that, according to Jewish teaching, our Savior is said to have been a disciple of Rabbi Jehoschu ben Perachja and to have lived long before the time of King Herod, which Rabbi Abraham ben David also teaches in his little book called Kabbaláth (or Kabbolas) haraáfad, fol. 82, col. 2, under the title Sichron divre Rómi, where he writes of Emperor Constantine as follows: והוא חקק תורת הנוצרים ושב לעבודתם ולתורתם לאחרון 'מאות שנה לאמונתם לחשבוננו אבל לחשבוננו ליתר מארבע מאות ועשרים שנה, that is: he wrote the law of the Christians and, three hundred years after the beginning of their faith according to their reckoning, but more than four hundred and twenty years according to our reckoning, adopted their worship and religion. From this it can be seen that our Jesus is said to have lived more than 120 years earlier than the history of the New Testament indicates, which corresponds to the mag of the aforementioned Rabbi Perachja.

Concerning the second proof, which is written about in the Talmud: since that JESUS whom the Talmud mentions was first stoned and afterward hanged, whereas ours, according to the Gospel, was hanged alive, it is therefore claimed, according to the testimony of the little book Toledoth Jeschu, that our Savior was stoned to death and only afterward hanged, as has already been answered with respect to this very same objection of Rabbi Jechiel in the preceding section.

As for the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh proofs, by which he seeks to maintain that our JESUS cannot be the one intended, on the grounds that the history of the New Testament contradicts this: it is well known to everyone that the Jews place no stock in the New Testament, so how should they believe what is written therein more than their own traditions and rabbinical teachings? Especially since Abarbanel and Aben Ezra have earnestly warned them not to believe us, as can be seen from their words cited above at p. 240 and 241. Who then would believe that Rabbi Salman Zevi was genuinely in earnest in expecting that these proofs would be regarded by the Jews as conclusive and compelling?

The eighth proof is likewise of no importance, because the JESUS mentioned in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 67. col. 1. was stoned and hanged at Lud, a city that bore that name, whereas ours was arrested and tried at Jerusalem, so that they must necessarily have been two different persons. In the cited Talmudic passage it is reported that someone who had practiced idolatry and had not repented was brought before the court, tried, and stoned; and the following comes after it: וכן עשו לבן סטדה בלוד ותלאוהו בערב הפסח בן סטדה בן פנדירה הוא אמר רב חסדה בעל סטדה בעל פפוס בן יהודה אלא אימא אמו סטדה אמו מרים : מגדלא נשיא הואי כדאמרי בפומפדיה סתת דא מבעלה That is: Thus they did to the son of Stada in Lud, and hanged him on the eve of Passover. The son of Stada is the son of Pandira. Raf Chasda has said that the husband was called Stada, but he who lay with her was called Pandira, while the husband was Papus, the son of Jebuda. One must say, however, that his mother was called Stada and was that Mary who braided women's hair, as people are accustomed to say in Pumpedita: she strayed from her husband. These are the words of the Talmud. Now our Savior JESUS is called by the Jews the son of Stada, as well as the son of Pandira, and it is said of his mother that she strayed from her husband, on account of which she is called Stada, as was demonstrated above in the second chapter at pages 106 and 133; from which it follows irrefutably that he is the one meant thereby. As for the fact that the Talmud states he was stoned at Lud and afterward hanged, I hold that either the word Lud was deliberately inserted in place of Jerusalem in order to obscure the matter, so that it should not be known that it was directed against our Savior, or else it may perhaps be that there was a place in Jerusalem that also bore that name.

The ninth proof is that the Talmudic JESUS's father was called Papus, the son of Jehuda, while Mary's betrothed, according to the Gospel, was called Joseph; this too is of no account, for as already noted, the Jews do not believe the Gospel and therefore cannot cite it in earnest. Moreover, Rabbi Abraham Perizol writes in the 59th chapter of his book Maggon Abraham as follows: באותו זמן היו מכנים ליוסף פפוס That is, at that time Joseph was surnamed Papus. If this is true, then both names refer to one and the same person, and it does not follow that two different individuals are meant thereby.

The tenth proof is of the same kind, for the claim that our JESUS, according to Jewish teaching, erected a baked stone and bowed down before it has already been demonstrated above at pages 153 and 186. How could Rabbi Salman Zevi have said that the Jewish books contain nothing about the history of JESUS, when the accursed blasphemous little book Maase Talui (or Tolui), otherwise called Toledoth Jeschu, is so well known among the Jews that all converted Jews have at all times known enough to say about it, even before it was seen among Christians? To say nothing of other books besides, in which blasphemous things about Christ are written. Should Rabbi Salman then have heard nothing of this, or not have read books of that kind? Certainly, this is by no means to be believed.

Regarding what Rabbi Gedaliah writes in his cited book Shalshelet ha-Kabbalah, namely that our Jesus is not the same person who is said to have been a disciple of Rabbi Jehoshua, the son of Perachiah, I believe that he meant this in earnest, and that he was certainly of the opinion that it was a different person. However, this is a matter that is very rarely found among the Jews, and he, along with his book, is held in very little, or indeed no, regard by his fellow believers, both for this and for other reasons, because he wrote certain things that are favorable to Christians, as I myself have often heard from Jews, who informed me on this point that he is called, after the first two letters of the title of his book Shalshelet ha-Kabbalah, namely the letters Shin or Sch, and He or H, שקרן ש"ק Schakran haggadol, that is, the great liar.

But whatever he may have written, it is all too certain that by the Jesus mentioned in the Talmud, our Savior is to be understood; which is plainly evident from the fact that our Savior and the one mentioned in the Talmud are described in many respects in exactly the same way. For, first of all, the Jesus mentioned in the Talmud is called ישו Jeschu, without the letter Ayin, and not ישוע Jeshua, as is read twice in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 43, col. 1; it is also found in the tractate Pesachim fol. 25, col. 1 in the Tosephoth, which name is otherwise given to no other person in any Hebrew book. Our Savior, however, is called ישו Jeschu and not Jeshua ישוע by way of contempt, as was indicated above on page 64.

Second, the Talmudic Jesus is called ישו הנוצרי jeschā hannózári, that is, Jesus the Nazarene, as can be seen in the tractate Sanhédrin fol. 103. col. 1. and fol. 128. col. 4., and in the tractate Avóda sara fol. 17. col. 1. twice, as well as in the tractate Schabbath fol. 104. col. 2. in the text and in the Tosephoth. He is likewise called הנוצרי Hannózári, that is, the Nazarene, in the tractate Sota fol. 47. col. 1. Our Savior, however, is called not only Jeschu hannózári and Hannózári by the Jews, as has been noted in many places in the foregoing, but also in the New Testament Jesus of Nazareth (Matt 26:71, Mark 1:24, Mark 10:47, and Mark 16:6), and the Nazarene (Matt 2:23).

Third, the Talmudic Jesus is called בן סטדה Ben Stada, that is, the son of Stada, and בן פנדורה Ben Pandira, that is, the son of Pandira, as can be seen in Tractate Sanhedrin fol. 67, col. 1 and Shabbath fol. 104, col. 2. Our Savior, however, is called this by the Jews, as was shown above in the second chapter, p. 133. The name Ben Pandira is also found in Tractate Avoda Zara fol. 85, col. 1, in the commentary of Rabbi Asher, where it is recorded that the nephew of Rabbi Ishmael was bitten by a serpent, and it follows thereupon: ובא יעקב איש: כפר סכניא לרפאותו בשמו של ישו בן פנדירא ולא הניחו רבי ישמעאל: that is, Then came Jacob, who was from the village of Sechanja, to heal him in the name of Jesus, the son of Pandira, but Rabbi Ishmael did not permit him to do so. Now the holy Apostles performed great miracles in the name of Jesus, as may be read in Mark 16:17, Luke 10:17, Acts 3:6-7, and Rom 15:18-19; and this Jacob was an Apostle, of whom Rabbi Akiva speaks thus in the Talmudic Tractate Avoda Zara fol. 17, col. 1: פעם אחת הייתי מהלך בשוק העליון של ציפורי ומצאתי אחד מתלמידי: 'ישו הנוצרי ויעקב איש כפר סכניא שמו וגו': that is, I once went to the upper market in Zipporen, and there found one of the disciples of Jesus the Nazarene, who was called Jacob, the man from the village of Sechanja. By whom else, then, could the name Ben Pandira be understood, if not by our Jesus?

Fourth, the mother of the Talmudic Jesus is called Maria, as is read in the tractate Schábbath (or Schábbas) fol. 104. col. 2. and Chagíga fol. 4. col. 2.; and in the latter passage it is stated that Maria was to have been fetched by the Angel of Death, concerning which the Tosephóth (or Tó-sephos) contain the following written passage: האי עובדא דמרים מגדלא נשיא בבית שני הוה דהיתה אמו: that is, this affair with Maria, who braided the hair of women, took place at the time of the Second Temple, and this Maria was the mother of N. N., as is to be found in the tractate Schábbath (fol. 104. col. 2.). Now, the mother of our Savior was named Maria.

Fifth, it is written of the Talmudic Jesus that he was a Mamser, or son of a whore, as is to be found in the tractate Schábbath fol. 104. col. 3. in the commentary of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi. Our Savior, however, is called thus by the wicked Jews, as has been demonstrated above in the second chapter, pages 106 and 107.

Sixth, it is read of the Talmudic Jesus that he learned sorcery in Egypt, brought sorcery out of it, and thereafter also practiced it, as is to be read in the tractate Schábbath fol. 104. col. 2. and Sanhédrin fol. 43. col. 1. and fol. 107. col. 2. The Jews, however, write blasphemously of our Savior that he performed his miracles through sorcery, as may be seen in the second chapter, pp. 138 and 139; and of our Savior, that he did such a thing, as has been reported in the third chapter, pp. 151 and 185.

Seventh, it is reported of the Talmudic Jesus that he erected a baked stone, bowed before it, rendered idolatrous worship to it, and led people away from GOD and seduced them, as is stated in Tractate Shabbath fol. 104. col. 2. and Sota fol. 47. col. 1. The godless Jews, however, claim that our Savior committed such idolatry with a baked stone and led people away from GOD, as has been demonstrated above in the third chapter, p. 151, 153, and 186.

Eighth, it is said that the Talmudic Jesus was first stoned to death and afterward hanged, as is taught in Tractate Sanhedrin fol. 67. col. 1. In the little book Toledoth Jeschu, however, it is reported of our Jesus that he was first stoned to death and only afterward hanged, as was indicated above, p. 179.

Ninth, it is written of the Talmudic Jesus that he was hanged on the eve of Passover, as is taught in Tractate Sanhedrin fol. 43. col. 1. Our Savior, however, was crucified on the eve of Passover, as is to be found in the New Testament at Matt 26:1 &c., Luke 22:1 &c., and John 13:1. Finally, tenthly, it is said of the Talmudic Jesus that he is tormented in hell in boiling filth, as is reported in Tractate Gittin fol. 57. col. 1. The wicked Jews, however, claim that our Savior is thus punished in hell, as has been demonstrated above in the fourth chapter, p. 201. Who, upon considering all of this, would maintain that anyone other than our Jesus is meant in the Talmud?

So that one may have even more reason to believe that everything found in the Talmud concerning Jesus is said of our Savior, I will here present what Rabbi Abraham Perizol writes at length in his aforementioned book, Maggen Abraham, in chapter 59, where his words read as follows: והנה אלה האמתות נתאמתו במכתב משתבש לשנים בפ' מה שנראה ממאמרי רז"ל המפוזרים בתלמוד על מה שהוא מסכים עם מאמריהם כאן צריך ונראה כי זה שעובדי האתים אשד נקראים נוצרים בלשוננו הוא ישו הנוצרי שהזכירו רז"ל בתלמוד והוא היה שמו ישוע כמו שכתב הרמב"ם ז"ל

That one may have still more reason to believe that everything found in the Talmud concerning Jesus is said of our Savior, I will here present what Rabbi Abraham Perizol writes at length in his aforementioned book, Maggen Abraham, in chapter 59, where his words read as follows: והנה אלה האמתות נתאמתו במכתב משתבש לשנים בפ' מה שנראה ממאמרי רז"ל המפוזרים בתלמוד על מה שהוא מסכים עם מאמריהם כאן צריכן ונראה כי זה שעובדי' האתים אשד נקראים נוצרים בלשוננו הוא ישו הנוצרי שהזכירו ז"ל בתלמוד והוא היה שמו ישוע כמו שכתב הרמב"ם ז"ל בהלכות חנוכה ובהלכות מלכים ואע"פ שבכל התלמוד לא נמצא אלא ישו שמה בכונות' חיסרו העין והם קורין אותו יש"ו כי כן דרך הלועגים להוסיף שין בסוף משמם. והישמעאלים נשתבש עליהם זה השם וקורין אותו עיסא על שם ישו שנשתבו אמרו היונים המתיחסים לבני עשו ובחיבוריהם מצאתי שקורין אותו יסוס ופ' נקרא בלשונם צרידי' כפי שהוא ממדינת נצרת כי כן הוא בתרגום ירושלמי של המתרגמים והמחדשים והעובדי' אותו ומתגרים אותו קרישטו 'ועל שמו נקראים קריסטיאנוס והוא לשון משוח באן באבן גליון כתוב שהיה שמו ישוע די ענר'נו ובתלמוד מצינו בפרק בג 'פרקים שאנשי משמר לא היו מתעניין בשבת וכן אמרו בפרק לפני אדיהן לדברי רבי ישמעאל יום נוצרי לעולם אסור. כי היה אומר לשמור ולחוג עם הנוצרים ג 'ימים לפני אדיהן וג 'לאחריהן יום האחד עצמו. על כן היה אומר לכם דעתו לצאת ולתת עמהם לעולם. ויתברר כי זאת האומה נקראת נוצרים על שם יש"ו הנוצרי. וכן באבן גליון כתוב כי יש יום שקראו נוצרים בהר אפרים וזו 'הנרו על כן הם נוצרים. כי שמו יש"ו הנוצרי כמו שכתוב בתלמוד, והם נקראים נוצרים על שנתמשכו אחריו. ובפרק קמא דיין אמרו כי יש"ו נתלה בערב הפסח וכן הוא באבן גליון כי בערב הפסח נתלה אלא שנתחשב ביניהם קצת כי לילה אחד קודם תלייתו אכל עם תלמידיו וברך על הלחם ויין כמנהג ישראל ואמר להם הוא בשר ויין הוא דמו ועל דברים אלו נמשכה אצלם עבודת העוגה ויין נסכם. אלא שנפלה מחלוקת ביניהם. היוונים עושים העוגה וזמץ, והרומיים והנמשכים אחריהם עד סוף המערב ששם היתה אמונת האפיפיור ותחת ממשלתו עושים אותה מצה ועל מחלוקת זו הם שונאים אלו אלו. אלו כי כל אחד מהם מחזיק כושר לחלוק עליו. ודכרי היוונים נראים יותר לפי אמונתם כי לפני ערב הפסח אין ישראל אוכלים עדיין מצה אלא חמץ. וכבר כתבתי כי עושים כן כדי שלא ילמלו היהודים שאנו מקריבין המנחה מצה ולא חמץ. גם בענין טבילתם הם חולקים זה עם זה שהיוונים טובלים וגם הרומיים אינם טובלים כי אם ראשם. גם בפי צדוק היוונים לפי אמונתם כי יש"ו כשהטבילו יוחנן בירדן כל גופו הטביל כמו שכתב באין גליון. וכ"א לו בפרק נמר בארץ כי הכח יצא לפניו מ 'יום יש"ו יצא להסקל מי שיודע לו זכות יבא וילמד. ולמה יש ימי מכריהם שהם מתענים קודם הפסח מכל היוצא מבלי חיים שעל פני הארץ כגון בשר גבינה וביצים וענינם הוא משעה ש 'ביום כי תלייתו היתה באותו שעה ונקראים צלו הימים קוד'שמה ונשתמש פדם כיר'ל כמו מ. For this passage appears at the end of the Talmud, in the days of Rav Bibi bar Abaye, who was among the last of the Amoraim. And in the chapter "Ha-Mapelet" they said that in the days of Rav Yochanan, Rav Bibi bar Abaye was alive, and this was during the time of the Second Temple, in the days of the earliest Tannaim. It is possible that there were two women of the same name whose occupation was the same, for "Magdala Neshaya" means a braider of women's hair. In this matter, too, their scribes fell into error, for they say that a female relative of Jesus was named Mary Magdalene: they made "Magdala" into "Magdalena," and the confusion shifted from the relative to the mother, because both shared the common name of being called Mary. And the sages of blessed memory likewise said that the seducer's name was Pappos ben Yehudah. And although the Talmud states that Pappos ben Yehudah lived in the time of Akiva, close to the time of the destruction, perhaps he was a different person, or perhaps he lived to an advanced age. And they say in the Gospel that her betrothed was named Joseph, and perhaps it is all one and the same person, for in that era they used to call Joseph by the name Pappos. And whether his father's name was Yehudah or Jacob, as is written in the Gospel, or some other name, errors have fallen among them in this matter, for they do not agree regarding the days of his father, to the point that the later ones were compelled to emend the text to say that the father of Joseph was the brother-in-law of his brother's wife. Some of them attributed the son to the brother-in-law, and some to the deceased brother. And they said that great distress came upon those who sought to trace the lineage of Jesus, because King Herod prevented the people from recording their genealogies. And if this is true, it is because he was a slave, as they said in the first chapter of Yevamot, and it was a great disgrace to him when Israel traced their descent to their fathers while he himself had no Israelite lineage. And there in the Gemara it says that she became pregnant by Stada, and therefore they call the disciples "Stara," meaning this side, away from her husband. And they also say that Mary of Magdalene was a harlot who repented, and they deny that this is said of the mother of Jesus; but it is a distortion of the words of the sages of blessed memory, who make this claim about her. And the agreement between us would be that Mary Magdala Neshaya was carnally known through harlotry, and the dispute is whether she is the mother of Jesus or his relative. And they say that the mother of Jesus was never carnally known by any man, and that she was a virgin before the birth and remained a virgin after the birth. And it is a matter of wonder that Maimonides of blessed memory wrote that he was a gentile. And it is well known from the Talmudic laws that a gentile who lies with a daughter of Israel, even willingly, and even if she is married, the child is legitimate. And this woman was violated, for it was the custom in Israel that a betrothed man would be secluded with his betrothed, as is also mentioned in the first chapter of Ketubot. Therefore Joseph the bridegroom could not make a claim of virginity, for he was permitted to be secluded with her every night when they departed from the house of assembly. And one night Pandera came and she thought he was her betrothed, and she became pregnant by him. And Pandera was a carpenter. None of this is mentioned at all in the Gospel, for they denied that she was carnally known by any man; but in some of their books it is written that Jesus was a carpenter. And this Ben Stara, who is Ben Pandera, appears from their words of blessed memory to be Jesus the Nazarene, for they said in tractate Avodah Zarah, in approximately the second chapter, the incident of Ben Dama, the nephew of Rabbi Ishmael, because one may not engage in commerce with the heretics, nor be healed by them, even to preserve one's life for a brief moment, for heresy is different in that it draws one in. And this Jacob of Kefar Sekhanya was one of the disciples of Jesus, for so they said there in the first chapter, regarding the hire of a harlot: what is the law concerning making from it a privy for the High Priest? For Jacob of Kefar Sekhanya said: "From the hire of a harlot she gathered them, and to the hire of a harlot they shall return" (Mic 1:7), from a place of filth it came, and to a place of filth it shall return. And this Jesus in whose name Jacob of Kefar Sekhanya spoke is Jesus ben Pandera, for so they said in the Jerusalem Talmud: the incident of Yehoshua ben Dama who was bitten by a serpent, and Jacob of Kefar Sekhanya came to heal him in the name of Jesus ben Pandera. And likewise there is another incident in the Jerusalem Talmud where the heretic whispered an incantation in the name of Jesus ben Pandera. And this accords with what is written in the Gospel, that he told them that in his name they would cast out and repel harmful spirits, and they would take up serpents in their hands, and if they drank a deadly poisonous venom it would not harm them, and they would lay their hands upon the sick and they would be healed. And it appears that this Jacob of Kefar Sekhanya did not see Jesus himself, but acted on the basis of his faith. From all of this it is evident that Ben Stara, who is Ben Pandera, is Jesus the Nazarene, of whom the sages of blessed memory spoke in full agreement with the Gospel.

"That is: See, these religions (namely the Christian and the Turkish, which are mentioned in the preceding chapter) have, according to what one can see from the words of our Rabbis of blessed memory, scattered throughout the Talmud (and found here and there), and from what agrees with their statements in the Gospel, fallen from one error into another; and from this it is to be seen that he whom the Romans (who are called Christians in our language) venerate and worship is Jesus the Nazarene, of whom our Rabbis of blessed memory have made mention in the Talmud; and that same one was called ישו Jeschuá, as Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon of blessed memory wrote (in his book Jad chasaká) in the tractate on repentance, as well as in the tractate on kings; although throughout the entire Talmud only ישו Jéschu is found. Perhaps they deliberately omitted the letter Ajin, because he did not save himself. But it may also be that the heretics (meaning the Christians) omitted the Ajin, because they call him Jesus, for in foreign languages it is the custom to append the letter S at the end of names. Among the Ishmaelites (that is, the Turks), however, this name has been corrupted and altered, for they call him (in the Arabic language) Jes, instead of Jéschu, to whom the Romans adhere, who are counted among the children of Esau. In their writings, however, I have found that they call him Jesua; but in our language he is called Nozeri (that is, Nazarene), because he was from the city of Nazareth; for so it stands in the Hierosolymitan Targum, written concerning those who sanctify and purify themselves and serve him. He is also called by them Christus, which means an anointed one, and they are called Christians after his name; but in the Gospel it is written that he was called Jesus of Nazareth. We also find in the Talmud, in the fourth chapter of the tractate Taanith (or Táanis, fol. 27, col. 2), that those who were cautious did not fast on the first day of the week (that is, on Sunday). Likewise it is also said in the chapter Lifne Edeben (that is, in the first chapter of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 2, col. 1, in the Tosephóth or Tósephos) that, according to Rabbi Ishmael's statement, the Christian day (that is, Sunday) is always forbidden, because he forbade trading with the Gentiles for three days before their festivals and three days after them, as well as on the festival day itself; therefore, in his opinion, it has always been forbidden to associate with them and to conduct commerce. It is thus clear that this people is called Nózerim, that is, Nazarenes or Christians, from the name of Jesus the Nazarene; and in such a manner it is written in the Gospel that Jeremiah said of them (Jer 31:6): For there will be a day (that is, a time) when the Nozerim (that is, the watchmen) will cry out on Mount Ephraim. See, they thus confess that he is called Jesus the Nazarene, as is written in the Talmud, while they themselves are called Nozerim (that is, Nazarenes or Christians) because they adhere to him and follow him. It is also said in the chapter Nigmar haddin (that is, in the sixth chapter of the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 43, col. 1) that Jesus was hanged on the eve of Passover, and so it also stands in the Gospel that he was hanged on the eve of Passover; however, some things among them have been presented erroneously and confusedly. Since he ate with his disciples the night before he was hanged, and pronounced the blessing over the bread and wine according to the custom of the Israelites, and said to them that the bread was his body and the wine his blood, the service of the cake (meaning the bread, or the host in the Holy Supper) and of their sacrificial wine has its origin from this; yet a dispute has arisen among them over this. The Greeks make their cake leavened, but the Romans and others who follow them, to the ends of the West, who stand under the Pope's religion and authority, make it unleavened; and on account of this division they hate one another, for each of them regards the other party as a heretic. The opinion of the Greeks is, according to their faith, to be preferred over the others, for before the eve of Passover the Israelites customarily ate not unleavened but leavened bread; and I have already written that they do this so as not to follow our customs, since we offer unleavened and not leavened bread at the evening sacrifice. Beyond this, they also do not agree with one another in their baptism, since the Greeks baptize the whole body, but the Romans only the head; the Greeks are also right in this, according to their faith, for Jesus, whom John baptized in the Jordan, was baptized on his whole body, as is reported in the Gospel. Our Rabbis of blessed memory also say, in the aforementioned chapter Nigmar haddin (that is, in the sixth chapter of the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 43, col. 1), that someone went out forty days before him and cried out: Jesus will be stoned; whoever knows of his innocence, let him come and declare it; and an indication of this is found in their practice, for they fast before the Passover feast and abstain from everything that comes from living creatures that are on the earth, such as meat, cheese, and eggs, etc.; and their fast begins from the ninth hour of the day, for in that same hour he was hanged, and those days are called Caresme, that is, the fast; but the matter has been confused by them, since by this they mean to say as much as forty days. In exactly the same way they are also in error in this, in that they fast forty-nine days, whereas it was only forty days, just as they then make the said day into a feast day after Easter. Just as the Israelites are accustomed to do, they fast seven weeks beforehand before the Passover feast; but this is likewise an error according to their custom, in that they say that Jesus fasted forty days and thereafter was hungry to eat, and that Satan spoke to him: if you are the Son of God, command these stones to become bread. They also say in addition that they customarily fast six days before the forty days, in consideration of the six days of the feast, which amounts to as much as forty days. But there is one day on which they do not fast, and so they do not escape their error, for Jesus had fasted forty days in succession. Beyond this, our Rabbis of blessed memory also say, in the aforementioned sixth chapter (of the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 43, col. 1), that Jesus was condemned to death because he practiced sorcery and led Israel astray and turned them away from God, which is also mentioned in the chapter Chelek (that is, in the eleventh chapter of the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 107, col. 2) and in the chapter Egla arufa (that is, in the ninth chapter of the tractate Sota, fol. 47, col. 1); and so it also stands written in the Gospel (Matt 12:24) that Jesus was accused of having performed his deeds by the power of Beelzebub, which is a kind of sorcery. Likewise it stands written in the Gospel (John 10) that a division arose among the Jews in Jerusalem, and some said that Jesus was mad and possessed by the devil, while others said that he was not a mad man, as his works showed; as also, when Jesus walked in the temple in the hall or porch of Solomon, the Jews said to him: how long do you hold our souls in suspense? Tell us plainly whether you are the Messiah or not? But Jesus answered them: what I tell you, you do not believe; the works which I do in the name of my Father bear witness of me, but you do not believe; and therefore you do not believe, because you are not of my sheep. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I will give them eternal life; they shall never perish, and no one shall snatch them out of my hand; and I and the Father are one. Thus far are the words of Jesus. When they had heard his words and wanted to stone him, he said to them: for which of my works do you stone me? How many good works have I shown you from my Father? To this they answered: we do not stone you for your good works, but because you blaspheme God, for you are a man and make yourself God. Jesus answered in turn: does it not stand written in your law (Ps 82:6): I have said, you are gods? If he calls them gods to whom the word of God was spoken, do you then say to him whom the Father has sanctified and sent into the world that he blasphemes God, because he said that he is the Son of God? Thus far are the words of the Gospel. It is also written that when Jesus entered Jerusalem, many of Israel, small boys and girls, went out, honored him, and said to him: Hosanna. As also, when he fell into the hands of the Israelites, the high priest said to him: say whether you are the Son of God; but he answered them: truly I say to you that the Son of Man will sit at the right hand of God and come in the clouds of heaven; whereupon the high priest tore his garments. It is also written there that they said to the emperor's governor, who was called Pilate, that this man was, according to the law, guilty of death, because he said that he was the Son of God; therefore they also condemned him to death. See, in this they agree with what our sages of blessed memory have said, that he was condemned as a seducer and one who turned people away from God, because he led Israel to believe in him; although in this matter an error has occurred among them, for according to the statement of our sages, he did not present himself as a God, but rather he erected a baked stone and bowed before it, and led many of Israel astray into the service of Marcolis, as is mentioned in the chapter Chelek (that is, in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 107, col. 2) and in the chapter Egla arúfa (that is, in the tractate Sóta, fol. 47, col. 1); but in the Gospel nothing at all of this is mentioned, but only the suggestion that he said he was the Son of God. Nevertheless, the Israelites, even by their own account, condemned him to death on account of seduction into idolatry. In the chapter Nesikin (that is, in the fifth chapter of the tractate Gittin, fol. 57, col. 1) it is also said that Titus (he meant to say Onkélos) brought Jesus up through sorcery (from hell) and asked him about the condition of Israel, and he (Jesus) said to him: seek their good, but do not seek their misfortune, for whoever touches them touches the apple of his eye. It is also found written among them that Jesus said: whoever angers his companion is guilty before the court; whoever says to him réka is guilty before the council; but whoever calls him a fool is guilty of hell. He also asked him with what punishment he would be punished; and he answered him what he answered (namely, that he would be punished in boiling filth, as has already been indicated in several places above); for certainly his intention or meaning was not that they (namely the Christians) should serve him in that cake (the bread or the host) and bring him into it, and that the priests should also eat him, in which manner he is also, according to their error, punished in the boiling filth. From this it is thus to be seen that the sages spoke of him whom the Christians serve. Beyond this, it is said in the chapter Nigmar baddin (that is, in the sixth chapter of the tractate Sanhédrin, fol. 43, col. 1) that Jesus the Nazarene had five disciples, and all were put to death; on the other hand, they count twelve to him, but they divide them, for out of four of them they make Evangelists, because each of them wrote a Gospel concerning the account of his teachings, from the time of his birth until the time when he was hanged; the rest, however, they call Apostles, that is to say, as much as messengers. Those, however, who are mentioned in the Talmud, who are מתאי (Mattai), נקאי (Nákai), נצר (Nézer), בוני (Bónai), and תודה (Tóda), were all put to death on account of Jesus, as is reported there; and so it is also found written among them that his disciples were put to death; this thus agrees with some of the errors they have, for even in their Gospel a complete agreement is not to be found in all things concerning what pertains to his disciples, but rather a conviction of untruth and an alteration is to be seen therein, whether from forgetfulness or from deliberate intent to put a fair face on things. They also claim that he was born in Bethlehem Ephrata, and they erroneously interpret what is said in Mic 5:2: And you, Bethlehem Ephrata, are you too small to be among the thousands of Judah? Out of you shall come forth for me a ruler over Israel. It is indeed true that this passage was said of the King Messiah, but it is not stated that he shall be born in Bethlehem, but rather that he shall be of the seed of him who was born in Bethlehem, namely David the son of Jesse the Bethlehemite; and that is what is said (further in the said verse): And his goings forth are from of old, since his origin is from of old and from ancient days. But if one wanted to say it of Jesus, how could one say that he ruled over Israel, when on the contrary they ruled over him? Nor does the entire Parashah or section of the text apply to Jesus. Furthermore, they commit an error with a Haggadah (or Haggódo) which stands in the Midrash (or the allegorical commentary) on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, that the King Messiah was born in Bethlehem on the day of the destruction (of Jerusalem) and was called Menachem (that is, Comforter), and that winds and storm-winds came and took him away. But this is contrary to what they assert, for Jesus was born before the destruction and was not called Menachem; nor did winds and storm-winds take him away, but rather he was delivered into the hands of Israel. But in what our sages of blessed memory report, the place of his birth is not indicated; yet because they called him Jesus the Nazarene and not Jesus the Bethlehemite, and because it also stands written (in the Gospel) that he is called Jesus of Nazareth, it is to be concluded from this that he was born in Nazareth, as is written in the Hierosolymitan Targum. Furthermore, they say that his mother fled to Egypt out of fear, and they erroneously interpret what is written in Hos 11:1: Out of Egypt I called my son; whereas this verse was said of Israel, as the beginning of it indicates, for it is stated: When Israel was a child, I loved him. And so it also stands written in the law (Exod 4:23): Let my son go, that he may serve me. But there is an indication in the words of our sages of blessed memory that he was in Egypt and learned there how to perform his works, on account of which the Israelites accused him of having done them by the power of Beelzebub, as is reported in the Gospel. The indication, however, which is found from our sages concerning this, is the following: because they said in the chapter Habbône (that is, in the 12th chapter of the tractate Schábbath, fol. 104, col. 1): Rabbi Eliezer said to the sages: did not the son of Stada bring sorcery out of Egypt in an incision in his flesh? To this they answered him: he was mad. See, this agrees with what is reported in the Gospel in three points. The first is that he was in Egypt, and this agrees with what is said in the chapter Chélek (that is, in the eleventh chapter of the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 107, col. 2) that Jesus went to Egypt with his teacher, Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Perachja. The second is that they reproached him for having performed his deeds through sorcery, through the power of Beelzebub. The third, however, is that he was mad and possessed by the devil. It is thus to be seen from this that the son of Stada of whom they spoke is that Jesus who is mentioned in the Talmud and the Gospel, as has been cited. It is also said in the chapter Arba mithôth beth din (or arba misos bés din, that is, in the seventh chapter of Sanhedrin, fol. 67, col. 1) that the Stada, the braider of women's hair, is Mary; although there was also another Mary who braided the hair of women, as is to be seen in the Talmud in the tractate Chagiga (fol. 4, col. 2), who is not the same one who was the mother of Jesus and is called Stada, for that one (who is mentioned in the tractate Chagiga) lived at the end of the Talmud, in the times of Raf Bibi, the son of Abaje, who was the last among the Talmudic doctors or teachers of the Gemara. It is also said in the chapter Hammapéleth (or Hammaféles, which is the third chapter of the tractate Nidda) that Raf Bibi, the son of Abaje, lived in the times of Rabbi Jochanan. This one, however, lived around the end of the second Temple, in the times of the first doctors of the Mishnah; and it may be that there were two women who had the same name and performed the same work, for Megáddela nascháia means as much as one who braids the hair of women. In this matter, however, there is also an error in their historical accounts, for they say that the kinswoman of Jesus was called Mary Magdalene, and they made Magdalena out of Megaddela, so that her common name, which she had from her work, was confused with the kinswoman, because with respect to their nomen proprium or proper name they resembled one another, and both were called Mary. Our sages of blessed memory also said that the one who lay with her was called Papus the son of Jehuda; although it stands in the Talmud that

Papus the son of Jehuda lived in the time of Rabbi Akiva, near the time of the destruction; but perhaps it was another person, or he lived that long. They, however, say in the Gospel that her intimate was called Joseph; yet perhaps it is all one, for at that time one called Joseph by the surname Papus. But whether his father was called Jehuda or Jacob, as is written in the Gospel, or had another name, errors also arise among them in this regard, for they do not agree with one another concerning the days of his father, so that the later ones were compelled to posit that Joseph's father had taken his deceased brother's wife; and some described the son after the deceased father's brother, while others described him after the deceased brother. They also claim that those who wrote the genealogy of Jesus were in great distress, because King Herod prevented the people from writing their genealogies. If this is true, then it happened because he was a servant, as is said in the first chapter of the Talmudic tractate Bava bathra (or Bovo basro); and this was a great disgrace to him, in that while the Israelites were registered in their lineages according to their fathers, he had no Israelite genealogy. It is also said there (in the aforementioned tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 67, col. 1) by our sages of blessed memory that she became pregnant by Pandira; therefore they called Mary Stada, as if to say: this one has strayed from her husband. They also say that Mary Magdalene was a harlot and did penance, but they deny that this should be said of the mother of Jesus. This, however, confirms the statement of our sages of blessed memory, who accuse her of this. In this, however, we agree with one another, that Mary Magdalene was lain with through harlotry; the denial, however, consists in whether she was the mother of Jesus or his kinswoman. They claim that she (the mother of Jesus) was never lain with, and that she was a virgin before she was pregnant, and also remained a virgin after giving birth. Concerning this Pandira, Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon of blessed memory writes that he was a Gentile; and it is known from Talmudic law that when a Gentile lies with an Israelite daughter either by force and compulsion or with her consent, even if she were already married, the child is legitimate; but she was compelled. For it was the custom in Israel to leave the bridegroom alone with his bride, as is mentioned in the first chapter of the Talmudic tractate Kethuvóth (or *Kesuvo*s); therefore he also could not bring a complaint on account of the virginity. Now this Joseph had the custom that every night, when he went out from the synagogue or school, he was alone with her; but on one occasion Pandira came, and since she thought it was her bridegroom, she became pregnant by him; and Pandira was a carpenter. Of all this nothing at all is mentioned in the Gospel, for they deny that she was lain with by anyone; but in some of their books it is written that Jesus was a carpenter. It is thus to be seen from what our sages of blessed memory have said that Jesus the Nazarene is the son of Stada and the son of Pandira, for they tell a story in the second chapter of the tractate Avòda sára (fol. 27, col. 2) about the son of Dama, the sister's son of Rabbi Isbmael, that one should have nothing to do with heretics, nor allow oneself to be healed by them, even in matters that concern only temporal life; for with heresy it is a different matter, because it draws one in. That same Jacob, however, who was from the village of Sechanja and was a heretic, was one of the disciples of Jesus; for so they (our sages) say in the first chapter (of the aforementioned tractate Avòda sára, fol. 17, col. 1): What is to be made of the harlot's hire? A secret or private chamber for the high priest; because Jacob, who was from the village of Sechánja (and a disciple of Jesus the Nazarene), said: it was gathered from a place of filth, and shall return to a place of filth; it came from an unclean place, and shall return to an unclean place. That same Jesus, however, in whose name Jacob who was from the village of Sechánja said this, is Jesus the son of Pandira, for in the Hierosolymitan Talmud it is written thus: It came to pass that Jebóscha, the son of Dama, was bitten by a serpent, and Jacob, who was from the village of Sechánja, came to heal him in the name of Jesus, the son of Pandira; and this agrees with what is written in the Gospel, that he said to them that they would cast out devils in his name, and take up serpents in their hands; that if anyone drank poison, it should not harm him; and that if they laid their hands on the sick, they should be healed. It appears, however, that this Jacob from the village of Sechánja had not seen Jesus, but he had faith in him. From all of this it is to be seen that Jesus the Nazarene, of whom our sages of blessed memory have spoken in agreement with the Gospel, is the son of Stada, who is the son of Pandira. Thus far are the words of Rabbi Abraham Perizol, from which it is clearly to be seen that by the Jesus mentioned in the Talmud our Savior is to be understood, since he interprets all passages of the Talmud in which Jesus is treated as referring to our Savior Christ. Therefore, let the godless Jews, together with the frivolous, deceitful, and hypocritical Rabbi Jeziel, Rabbi Salman Zevi, Rabbi Lipmann, and other such villains, object to this whatever they will; no credence is to be given to them, for beneath their smooth words nothing but poison is concealed, and they seek by every means to cover up and keep secret their impious machinations."

Chapter VI.

In which it is shown in what manner GOD the Holy Spirit is blasphemed by the godless Jews, and against them it is proven that He is GOD.

Just as GOD the Father and GOD the Son are, by virtue of what has been shown in the preceding chapters, blasphemed and reviled in a terrible manner by the wicked Jews through the instigation of the wretched Devil, so also GOD the Holy Spirit is not left unassailed, but is called the unclean spirit, and indeed for the reason that we hold Him to be the third Person of the most holy Trinity; hence in the old Nizzachon p. 12, concerning the words of Gen 18:2, And behold, three men stood before him, the following is written: המינים אומרים ראה ג' "והתפלל לאחד הם האב והבן ורוח הטומאה ר"ל ורוח: המינים אומרים ראה ג' "והתפלל לאחד הם האב והבן ורוח הטומאה ר"ל ורוח: the heretics (namely the Christians) say he saw three and worshipped one, and these are the Father and the Son and the unclean spirit, whom they call the Holy Spirit; he saw all three of them in one form and worshipped him. And there follows on p. 13: ואם יחזיקו בטעותם: שאב ובן ורוח הטומאה ר"ל רוח הקדוש היו למה נתן לפניהם לאכול וכי יש אלוה אוכל ושותה, that is: But if they wish to persist in their error that it was the Father and the Son, as well as the unclean spirit, whom they call the Holy Spirit, (one may ask them) why then did he set food before them: does God then eat and drink as well? Furthermore, in the aforementioned book at p. 59, concerning the words of Josh 22:22, The mighty God, the LORD, the mighty God, the LORD knoweth, the following is written: כאן אומרים הגלחים ג' שמות הללו רמז: הם, על האב ובן ורוח הטומאה, that is: Here the tonsured ones (priests) say that these three names (El, that is, the mighty God; Elohim, that is, God; Jehova, that is, the LORD) carry a meaning referring to the Father, the Son, and the unclean spirit. Furthermore, the following is read in the same place at p. 142: כתיב להן בספר לוקש בעון גיליון מי שחטא לאב ימצא מחילה, לבן ימצא מחילה, לרוח הטומאה לא ימצא מחילה לא בעולם הזה ולא בעולם הבא. ואם שלשתן אחד למה לא ימצא מחילה לרוח הטומאה, that is: It is written among them in the Gospel of Luke: whoever sins against the Father will find forgiveness; whoever sins against the Son will also find forgiveness; but whoever sins against the unclean spirit will find no forgiveness, neither in this world nor in the world to come. But if all three of them are one, why should the one who sins against the unclean spirit find no forgiveness. Likewise, in the same place at p. 152, concerning the words of Ps 2:7, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee," the following appears: אתה אומר שוכן נוצד מטי 'הריא: that is: You (Christian) say that the Son was formed in the womb of Charja (that is, to speak with all due respect, of filth; and the mother of Christ is thus mockingly called instead of Mary, as has already been noted above in the second chapter); so inform me whether the Father and the unclean spirit were also in the womb together with the Son: is this not a terrible blasphemy?

Since now the third person of the most holy Trinity is being treated here, who is called in the Holy Scripture of the Old Testament רוח הקדש Ruach hakkodesch, that is, the Holy Spirit, and רוח אלהים Ruach Elohim, that is, the Spirit of God, and רוח יהוה Ruach Jehova, that is, the Spirit of Jehovah or the Lord, as well as רוח אל Ruach El, that is, the Spirit of the mighty God; and since the hardened and perverse Jews deny His divinity, I will here set forth what they understand by the Holy Spirit. It is to be known that they teach that the Holy Spirit is a kind of prophecy, wherefore in Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 83, col. 3, in the Parashab וארא Vaéra, the following is written: דע כי הנבואה נמשכה מן העטרה ומתחלק ל'ג 'חלקים: החלק הא' נקרא נבואה ואותו השיגו הנביאים ע"ה החלק ב' נקרא רוח הקדש ואותו השיגו דוד ושלמה ודניאל ויתר החסידים הוא למטה מן הנבואה. החלק הג' נקרא בת קול הוא למטה מרוח הקדש ואותו השיגו חכמי ישראל אחר שפסקה רוח הנבואה ולא היה נשמע כי אם למובחרים בחכמה ובחסידות. ובו צופים בנסתרות שנאמר והאנשים אשר היו נשמו כי לא ראו וגו'. That is: Know that prophecy is drawn from the Crown and is divided into three parts. The first part is called Nefua, that is, prophecy, and the prophets, upon whom be peace, attained it. The second part is called Ruach hakkodesch, that is, the Holy Spirit, which was attained by David, Solomon, Daniel, and the remaining pious ones, and it is below prophecy (and somewhat lesser). The third part is called Bath (or Bas) Kol, that is, the Daughter of the Voice, and it is below the Holy Spirit; the Sages of Israel became partakers of it after the spirit of prophecy had ceased, and it was heard by none except those who were crowned with wisdom and piety, through which they also saw hidden things, as it is said (Dan 10:7): And the men who were with me did not see it. In Rabbi Isaac Karo's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, which book is called Toledóth (or Tóledos) Jizchak, it stands at fol. 85, col. 2, in the Parashab Bamidbar, as follows: דע שבארון שלשה כסויים כנגד הנבואה שהיא שלשה: that is, Know that the Ark (of the Covenant) had three coverings, in correspondence to prophecy, which has three degrees or steps, namely the Holy Spirit, the mirror that does not shine, and the mirror that shines. Rabbi Isaac Abarbanel, however, writes about this in his commentary on the first chapter of the prophet Haggai, fol. 278, col. 1, in the following manner: רוח הקודש יהיה כפי דעת הרב המורה אותו הכה האלהי שגלה ה' אל דוד ואל שלמה לדבר דברי שירות ותשבחות ודברי חכמה עליונה וכפי דעת המקובלים הוא מין ממיני הנבואה: that is, By the Holy Spirit is understood, according to the opinion of Rabbi Moses bar Maimon in his book Moreh nevachim, that divine power which was imparted to David and to Solomon to speak songs, hymns of praise, and words of the highest wisdom; and according to the opinion of the Kabbalists, it is one of the kinds of prophecy. For this reason, the words of Gen 45:27, "Then the spirit of Jacob their father revived," are rendered in the Chaldean translation of Onkelos as follows: ושרת רוח קודשא על יעקב אבֹהֶון, that is, And the Holy Spirit dwelt upon Jacob their father. In the translation of Jonathan the son of Uziel, however, it stands thus: ושרת רוח נבואה דאסתלקת מניה בעידן וזבינו יוסף ותבת עלוי יעקב אבֹהֶון, that is, And the spirit of prophecy, which had departed from Jacob their father at the time when Joseph was sold, returned and dwelt upon him.

The obstinate Jews are greatly mistaken in supposing that the Holy Spirit is nothing other than a kind of prophetic gift; for since divine attributes and works are ascribed to Him in Holy Scripture, it necessarily follows that He must also be God. Regarding the divine attributes, it can be seen from Gen 1:2 that He is eternal, since it is said there: "And the Spirit of God hovered upon the waters"; for since creation is attributed to Him, He must necessarily have existed before it, and thus be eternal. He is also omnipresent, wherefore King David says in Ps 139:7-10: "Where shall I go from Your Spirit?" etc. He is also omniscient, for which reason it is said of Him in Isa 40:13-14: "Who has instructed the Spirit of the Lord (or directed Him), and what counselor has taught Him? With whom did He take counsel, who gave Him understanding and taught Him the path of justice, and taught Him knowledge, and showed Him the way of understanding?" Beyond this, He is also almighty, wherefore it is read in Mic 2:7: "Do you think the Spirit of the Lord is shortened?" meaning that He should not have the power to do what He wills, as can be seen by comparison with Num 11:23 and Isa 50:2.

Regarding the divine works, it stands in Ps 33:6 that He created the host of heaven, where one reads: "The heavens were made by the word of the Lord, and all their host by the breath of His mouth." Therefore, in the small Jalkut Rubeni, numero 1, under the title בריאה Beria, from the Midrash of Rabbi Nechunja ben hakkane, it is written thus: "בה נבראו שמים וארץ ומרוח קדשו נבראו כל צבא מעלה מן הרוח שנפח אל הוציא מרות קדשו לחלוה לאין קצבה, that is: Through the pure word of the holy and blessed God, heaven and earth were created. Through the breath that God breathed out, He brought forth moisture without end through His Holy Spirit. Thus we read in Ps 104:30 that King David says to God: "You send forth Your Spirit, and they are created" (namely all things, as can be seen from what precedes). So also Job says in his 33rd chapter, v. 4: "The Spirit of God has made me, and the breath of the Almighty has given me life." And in his 26th chapter, v. 13, he speaks of God: "By His Spirit He has adorned the heavens." From all of this it can be seen that creation is attributed to Him. The prophet Isaiah also reports in his 48th chapter, v. 16, that He sent Him, saying: "And now the Lord God and His Spirit have sent me." He also governs the righteous; therefore David prays in Ps 143:10: "Teach me to do according to Your good pleasure, for You are my God; let Your good Spirit lead me on level ground." He also protects the faithful, as can be seen from Hag 2:6 compared with Zech 4:6; and He led the Israelites, as is found in Isa 43:14, where it is said of Him: "As the cattle that go down into the field (or into the valley), so the Spirit of the Lord led them gently." Concerning these words, Rabbi Aben Ezra writes in his Commentary thereon as follows: ואחר צאתם מים חולית השם במדבר כבהמה שהיא יורדת בבקעה: לאט כן רוח השם נחה את ישראל, that is: After they had gone out from the sea, God let them go into the wilderness, just as cattle that descend gradually into a valley; in such a manner the Spirit of God led the Israelites. So also in the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the 39th chapter, it is written that Joseph was led by the Holy Spirit, and the words read as follows: רבי פנחס אומר שרתה רוח הקדש על יוסף מנעוריו ועד יום מותו והיתה מנהגת אותו בכל דבר חכמה כרועה שהוא מנהג את צאנו שנ' רועה ישראל האזינה נוהג כצאן יוסף, that is: Rabbi Pinchas says: The Holy Spirit dwelt upon Joseph from his childhood until the day of his death, and led him in all matters of wisdom, just as a shepherd who leads his sheep, as it is said (Ps 80:2): "Hear, O Shepherd of Israel, You who lead Joseph like sheep." It is also to be noted here that the Holy Spirit is called the Shepherd of Israel by Rabbi Eliezer; but the Shepherd of Israel is God the Lord, as can be read in Ps 23:1, Jer 31:10, and Mic 7:14. So it also stands in Isa 63:10 that the Israelites embittered the Holy Spirit, which is said of God in Ps 88:40.

Furthermore, it can be clearly demonstrated from the Jews' own books that the Holy Spirit is God; for He is called by them שכינה Schechina, which word signifies the Divine Indwelling and God Himself. Therefore, in the book Pärdes rimmonim, in the preface, in the first column, as also in the book Tikkune hasóhar fol. 6. col. 2., where the Law is treated, it is written thus: כל אליו דלא משתדלין בה לשמה דאיהו קדישא דאיהו שכינה לא שריה עליהן that is: Upon all those who do not diligently apply themselves to it (namely, the Law), and do not study it earnestly and observe it, for its own sake (that is, in honor of the Law), the Holy Spirit does not dwell or rest, He who is the Schechina. And in the little book of Rabbi Elijah, which is called Tischbi, it stands under the Radice, or root word שכן Schachán, thus: קראו רז"ל לרוח הקדש שכינה על שם שהוא שכן על: הנביאים that is: Our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have called the Holy Spirit Schechina, because He rests upon the prophets. It is also taught in the book

Neveh schalom fol. 97. col. 2., in the eighth chapter of the fourth Maámar, that He is called Schechiná.

That by the word Schechina, however, God is to be understood, is taught in the book Avodáth hakkódosh, in the first part, which is called Chelék hajichud, in the fifth chapter, fol. 11. col. 1., where the words read as follows: חס ושלום שיהיה הדבר הנקרא שכינה או כבוד דבר נברא חוץ מהשם הנכבד יתברך וגו' 'ודברי רז"ל ית' דברים רבים יורו על שם השכינה שהוא האל ית' that is: Far be it that what is called Schechiná, or Káfod, that is, the Glory, should be something created, apart from the glorious and blessed God, etc. For in the words of our Rabbis, of blessed memory, there are many things which demonstrate that the name Schechiná signifies the blessed God Himself.

So also is the Holy Spirit called, in the chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the thirty-third chapter, the Lord of the World and Jehova, who can raise the dead, where the following is written: רבי פנחס אומר לאחר כ' שנה שנהרגו כולם בבבל שורה רוח הקדש על יחזקאל והוציאו לבקעת דורא והראהו עצמות יבשות הרבה מאוד אמר לו בן אדם מה אתה רואה אמר לו אני רואה כאן עצמות יבשות אמר לו יש בי כח להחיות אותן היה לו לומר רבונו של עולם יש בכ' כח לעשות יותר מאלו אלא אמר יי' אלהים אתה ידעת כאילו לא (Rabbi Pinebas says: twenty years after they (the Israelites, as mentioned in the preceding, by King Nebuchadnezzar) had all been killed, the Holy Spirit rested upon Ezekiel and led him out into the valley of Dura (which is mentioned in Dan 3:1) and showed him very many dry bones (as is to be read in Ezek 37:1-2, etc.); whereupon He (namely the Holy Spirit) asked him: You son of man, what do you see? To which he answered Him: I see dry bones here. Now when He (the Holy Spirit) had said concerning this, I have the power to make them alive, he (Ezekiel) ought to have said: O You Lord of the World, You have the power to do more than this; but he spoke to Him: YOU, Jehova GOD, it is known to You; (and thereby gave to be understood as much as) if he had not believed it; for this reason his bones were also not buried in a pure land, as it is said: And you shall be buried in an unclean land.)

Because the Holy Spirit is called not only Jehova (which name belongs to GOD alone, as has been demonstrated above in the fourth chapter, pp. 213, 214, and 215) but also GOD and the Lord of the world, and because it is said of Him that He can not only raise the dead but also do all things besides, it follows necessarily that He is no particular category of prophecy, as the foolish Jews imagine; concerning which, God willing, I shall treat far more extensively in another book, and far more proofs shall be adduced. The malicious Jews can, however, sufficiently perceive from this what blasphemers they are when they wickedly call GOD the Holy Spirit the unclean spirit, for which they will one day render a heavy account before the judgment seat of GOD, and therefore, if they do not perform genuine repentance, must endure their deserved punishment in the fires of hell.

Chapter VII.

In which it is shown how the Jews wickedly despise and revile the Holy Scripture of the New Testament, as well as the holy Evangelists and Apostles.

We read in the prophet Jeremiah, in the 31st chapter, in the 31st, 32nd, and 33rd verses: "Behold, the time is coming, says the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah; not like the covenant that I made with their fathers when I took them by the hand to lead them out of Egypt, which covenant they did not keep, and I was compelled to constrain them, says the Lord: I will put my law in their hearts and write it in their minds, and they shall be my people, and I will be their God." From these words it is plainly to be seen that God the Lord, in place of that covenant which He made through Moses on Mount Sinai with the children of Israel after their exodus from Egypt through the proclamation of the Law, promised to establish a new and far more glorious covenant and to give another Law, which, as is to be seen in Isa 12:3 and Mic 4:2, as well as Ps 110:2, had to come forth from Mount Zion and the city of Jerusalem. This prophecy was fulfilled through our most precious Savior Jesus Christ, the true Messiah, as is to be read in the Epistle to the Romans in the 8th chapter, who abolished the old Mosaic Law insofar as its ceremonial and judicial ordinances are concerned, and taught the law of the new covenant, namely the covenant of grace, and also had the same set down in writing through His holy evangelists and apostles, so that men might learn the way to salvation through its reading and hearing, and be instructed in the mysteries of God.

The blinded Jews themselves must indeed confess that the Messiah is to give a new law; hence in their prayer book, which they call the thick Tephilla, fol. 8. col. 3. 4., under the title Józer leschabbath schel Chanukka, they pray as follows: אֱלֹהֵיכֶם יְבִיא מְשִׁיחוֹ אֲזוּר צֶדֶק וּמִשְׁפָּט גְּבִיד . הָרָשָׁע יָמִית בְּשִׁבְט פִּי . אֵיב יֵאָסֵד יְגוֹי דָּת אֱלֹהֵיכֶם יְבִיא מְשִׁיחוֹ אֲזוּר צֶדֶק וּמִשְׁפָּט גְּבִיד . הָרָשָׁע יָמִית בְּשִׁבְט פִּי . אֵיב יֵאָסֵד יְגוֹי דָּת, that is: May your GOD cause His Messiah to come, who will be clothed with the girdle of righteousness and of judgment. He will slay the wicked, and with the scepter of His mouth will destroy the enemy, etc., and will give a new law, etc. The like is also to be read in the aforementioned prayer book, fol. 40. col. 4., under the title Jozer leparaschath hachodesch, where they petition God that in the month of March, in which they hope to be redeemed, new things may come to pass: לברוא ארץ חדשה להנתן דת חדשה לכרות ברית חדשה

וכי, that is: That a new earth be created, a new law be given, and a new covenant be made, etc. So also in the Jalkut Schimoni on the prophet Isaiah, fol. 46. col. 1. numero 16., it is written on this matter as follows: עתיד הק"בה להיות יושב בגן עדן ודדש וכל הצדיקים יושבים לפניו וכל פמליא של מעלה עומדים על תליהם חמה ומזלות מימינו של הק"בה ולבנה וכוכבים משמאלו והק"בה יושב ודורש תורה חדשה שעתיד ליתן על משיח, that is: The holy and blessed GOD will sit in Paradise and preach, and all the righteous will sit before Him, the entire heavenly host will also stand at His feet, the sun and the planets will be at His right hand, and the moon together with the stars at His left side, but GOD will sit and preach the new law which He will give through the Messiah. The very same is also found, though somewhat altered, in the little book Othioth (or Osios) of Rabbi Akiva, fol. 15. col. 4., and it reads as follows: עתיד הק"בה להיות יושב בגן עדן ודורש וכל הצדיקים יושבים לפניו וכל פמליא של מעלה עומדים על רגליהם מימינו של הק"בה חמה עם מזלות ולבנה וכל הכוכבים משמאלו והק"בה דורש להם טעמי תורה חדשה שעתיד הק"בה ליתן להם על ידי משיח, that is: The holy and blessed GOD will sit in Paradise and preach, and all the righteous will sit before Him, the entire heavenly host will also stand at His feet. At the right hand of GOD will be the sun and the planets, but the moon and the stars at His left side; then the holy and blessed GOD will preach the reasons, or grounds, of the new law which He intends to give them through the Messiah. So also in Rabbi Isaac Abarbanel's commentary on verse 23 of chapter 2 of Joel, the following is read: ואסנתם אתם בני ציון בשוט מכל שאר האומות גילו ושמחו בה 'אלהיכם כי בו תהיה השמחה שלמה בזמן גאולתכם כי הוא יתן לכם את המורה לצדקה והוא מלך המשיח שיורה את הדרך אשר ילכו באותה, that is: You especially, children of Zion, rejoice and be glad in the LORD your GOD, more than all other peoples, for at the time of your redemption joy will be made perfect in Him; for He will give you the teacher of righteousness, who is the King Messiah, who will teach the way in which one must walk, and the works which are to be done. It therefore follows from these words of Abarbanel that, although the Jews possess the law of Moses, they nonetheless do not walk the right path and do not know what they ought to do, and that they must first learn this from the Messiah.

Furthermore, in the book Emek hammelech fol. 126. col. 1., in the 9th chapter, under the title Schaar rescha difer anpin, concerning the words of Isa 12:3, "You shall draw water with joy from the wells of salvation", the following is written: אין מים אלא תורה שנאמר הוי כל צמא לכו למים ואין מעיני הישועה אלא תורתו של משיח הם הרזין שסכה אותם עתיק יומיא וגזר עליהם שלא יתגלו עד ביאת הגואל הוא יחזיר העטרה ליושנה ואתן הרזין נקראים מעיני הישועה כי הוא יושע אותנו מסבות חושך העורון והמסכים המבדילים אשר עלינו בהון באורייתא ובאותן השמות יושע ויושע את ישראל that is: Water signifies nothing other than the Law, as it is said (Isa 55:1): "Ho, everyone who is thirsty, come to the water"; and the wells of salvation signify nothing other than the Law of the Messiah. These same wells are the mysteries which the Ancient One (of whom one reads in Deut 7:13) has hidden and sealed, so that they shall not be revealed until the time of the Redeemer (namely the Messiah), who will restore the crown to its former state. These same mysteries are called wells of salvation, because he will deliver us from the plagues of darkness, of blindness, and from the separating veils that are over us. Through the mysteries of the Law, and through those same names, he will help and redeem Israel. In the Chaldean translation, however, the words cited from Isa 12:3 are rendered thus: ותקבלון אולפן חדת בחדוּא מבחירי צדיקיא that is: And you shall receive a new teaching with joy from the chosen ones among the righteous, which can fittingly be understood as referring to the holy Evangelists and Apostles, who taught the new Law of the Messiah and spread it throughout the world.

Although the Messiah has long since come and consequently has given His law, which was prophesied, and which can be nothing other than the New Testament that His holy Evangelists and Apostles have left us in writing, and although it is known even to the Jews that no law can be compared to the law of the Messiah, as is expressly stated in the book Medrasch Kobeleth (or Kobeles) fol. 365. col. 3.: תורת שאדם למד בעולם הזה הבל היא לפני תורתו של משיח: that is: The law which a person learns in this world (that is, in this present age) is a vanity in comparison to the law of the Messiah. Yet they will not accept this excellent and consoling law, in which the way to salvation is shown in so glorious a manner, but rather despise and mock it; and the word of the cross is foolishness to them, since it will lead those who are lost to perdition, as is stated in 1 Cor 1:18 concerning unbelievers. They call it, first of all, תורת ישו Toráth (or Tóras) Jéschu or Jischu, that is, the law of Jesus, and this is found in the Sépher Ikkarím (or Ikkórim) of Rabbi Joseph Albo, fol. 92. col. 1., in the 25th chapter, under the title Máamar buschelischi, where it is written as follows: הרי בתורת ישו אין בה משפטים בין אדם לחברו וכל הנוצרים מתנהגים במשפטיהם על פי מה שסדרו חכמיהם אם במצות הקיסר או במצות האפיפיור, that is: Behold, in the law of Jesus there are no judicial laws by which to pronounce judgment between persons who are in dispute with one another, and the Christians are accustomed to judge in their courts according to what their wise men have ordained, either by command of the Emperor or by decree of the Pope. It is likewise called by this name in the old Nizzáchon, p. 79., where, concerning the above-mentioned words of Isa 2:3, "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," the following is read: ואומרים המינים כי על זאת שיבאו האומות לשוב לתורת ישו נבואה זו נאמרה (namely, the Christians) say that this prophecy was spoken concerning the conversion of the nations to the law of Jesus. As for why our most beloved

Second, they call it תורת אדום Toráth (or Tóras) Edom, that is, the Edomite Law. This is found in Rabbi Aben Esrae's commentary on the words of Obad 1:1, "Who is this that comes from Edom?" in the Venetian printed edition in folio, from the year 285 according to the Jewish calendar, that is, from the year 1525 according to our calendar, where it is written: ודע כי מלכות רומא וקונסטנטינא נקראו אדומיים בעבור שנכנסו בתורת אדום והיא התורה נקראה על שם אדום : that is, This (word Edom) signifies the Roman and Constantinopolitan Empire; they (the Christians), however, are called Edomites because they have adopted the Edomite Law. This Law, moreover, is called by the name of Edom because the Edomites were the first who believed in the Law of the well-known man (namely, Jesus).

Third, it is called דת התלוי Dach battalúi (or Das batrólui), that is, the Law of the Hanged One. This is found in the old Nizzáchon, p. 79, where, after the Christians are confronted with Matt 5:17, that Jesus did not come to dissolve the Law but to fulfill it, it is written as follows: אתם עוברים על דת התלוי כי אינכם : שומרים את השבת : that is, You (Christians) transgress the Law of the Hanged One, because you do not observe the Sabbath.

Fourth, it is called תורת הערלים toráth (or tóras) haarélim, that is, the Law of the Uncircumcised. This is what Rabbi Aben Ezra calls it in his commentary on the second verse of the twelfth chapter of Daniel, where he interprets the words "And the king shall do according to his will" as referring to the Emperor Constantine the Great, and writes as follows: זה קוסטנטינן שהיה מלך גדול על בבל ופרס ומצרים ואפריקא ורומיניא ורומי ומערב הוא שבנה קוסטנטינא ברמות רומי ונקראה על שמו. בעת שהאמין בדת החברים לא היו בכל העולם מאמינים בו רק שלש מאות ועשרים גם הערלים כן זה המלך חדש וקיים תורת הערלים והכריח כל אנשי מלכותו להשיבם אל תורתו : that is, This is Constantine, who was a great king over Babylon, Persia, Egypt, Africa, Romania, Rome, and the West. This is he who built Constantinople after the likeness of the city of Rome, and it is named after him. At the time when he believed in the law of the Associates (that is, of the Christians, as this is explained in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 65, col. 2 by Rabbi Solomon), there were no more than three hundred and twenty, and indeed all of them uncircumcised, who believed in him (namely, Jesus). But this king renewed and confirmed the Law of the Uncircumcised, and compelled all the subjects of his realm, so that they were brought to his law (or his religion).

Fifth, it is called תורת הפסולה Tóra happesúla, that is, the unlawful, or unholy, or worthless Law; and it is called thus in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon, p. 44, where, concerning the words of Lev 26:10, "And you shall eat of the old store, and when the new comes, you shall put away the old," the following is written: מכאן פוקרין המינים על תורתם הפסולה שהיא חדשה ויציאו אותה מפני הישנה that is, From this the heretics bring forward a false teaching and interpret these words as referring to their unholy or worthless Law, claiming that it is new and is to be preferred over the old.

Sixth, it is called ספר פסול Sépfer pasúl, or pósul, that is, the unholy or worthless Book; and this appears in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon, p. 240, where the homeland of Christ is mentioned and it is said: וגם בסוף ספר פסול: that is, And thus it is said at the end of the unholy or worthless Book concerning Jesus, that he was in the land of Nazareth. From this it is also as clear as day that what the converted Jew Dieterich Schwabe states about the Jews in his little book, which he called the Jewish Cloak, in the seventh chapter of the first part, is true, where he writes: The books of the Holy Scripture of the New Testament are called by them ספרים פסולים Sephârim pesulim (or Sephôrim pesulim), that is, books that are worthless.

Seventh, it is called ספר טעות Sepher tiúth (or tiús), that is, a Book of Error. This name is likewise found in the aforementioned old Nizzāchon, in which at p. 25 the following is written: כתוב בספר טעותם שישו היה אומר לתלמידו בשביל החוטאים באתי ולא בשביל הצדיקים, that is, In the book of their error it is written that Jesus said to his disciples: I have come for the sake of sinners, and not for the sake of the righteous. And at p. 60, the frivolous Auctor writes: ובספר טעותם כתוב כי גבריאֵל בִּישַׁר למרים שולד אלוה, that is, So too it is written in their Book of Error that (the angel) Gabriel announced to Mary that she was to give birth to God. The like is also to be found at p. 71, 72, and 116 in the same book.

Concerning the word Evangelium: it is a Greek word, and means ευαγγέλιον Evangelíon (which derives from ἐν eu, that is, "good," and ἀγγέλλω angéllo, that is, "I proclaim"), a good and joyful message, because it contains the glad tidings that the true Messiah and Savior has come into the world to save sinners. And although it is, as may be read in Rom 1:16, a power of God that saves all who believe in it, the hardened Jews nonetheless, out of malice and in the utmost contempt of it, call it by two words, און גליון Avon gillájon, that is, "vanity" or "sin of the book." In the Hebrew Lexicon, or dictionary, which is called Máarich maarachótb (or maaróchos), it is explained as meaning as much as שבוש מה מארעא או זיוף שנעשה תוך כתב מה: that is, a confusion, or an error, or a falsification, which occurs in a writing or a book. Rabbi Nathan (or Nóson) states in his Aruch, or Lexicon, that it means as much as נכתב און על הגליון שהוא בייאר, that is, a vanity or sin written upon the book or paper. On this matter one may also consult the prayer book printed at Amsterdam in the year of Christ

1681 with a commentary, which the Jews call the Polish Siddúrim, fol. 42, col. 2, in a prayer that begins שננו לשונם Schanenù leschonám, under the title Abáva lopharascháth Vajésh, where in the prayer and the commentary upon it such blasphemy is likewise to be found. Rabbi Elias, however, writes in his Tischbi under the word גליון Gillájon on this matter as follows: הנוצרים קורין לתורתם חדשה שלום אונגליון והוא בלשון יון בשורה טובה ורבותינו ז"ל הפכו שמי 'און גליון' שהוא נקי, that is: The Christians call their new law Evangelium, that is, in the Greek language, a good message; but our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have inverted its name and made Avon gillajon out of it, which is not right.

But they also call it גליון Avon gillajon, that is, a sin of the book, or a book in which sinful things are written. This is what it is called in the old Sepher Nizzächon, p. 186, where it is written: כתוב בעון גליון שלהם שהם קורין אותו און: גליון, that is, In their (namely the Christians') Avon gillajon, which they call the Gospel, it is written, where the genealogy of JESUS is recounted, that He was descended from kings. And on p. 15, in the aforementioned old Nizzächon, over the words of Gen 18:2, "And behold, three men stood before him," the following is read: 'אומרים בעון גליון ד"ל באון גליון ג: that is, In the Avon gillajon, I mean to say, the Gospel, it is said that he saw three and worshipped one. Likewise Rabbi Lipmann calls it this in his Sepher Nizzächon, no. 347, p. 192, where he writes: והלא כתיב לכם: בעון גליון שוטה לא באתי להפך התורה אלא למלאותה, that is, Does it not stand written in your Avon gillajon that JESUS did not come to overturn the Law, but to fulfill it? And it is likewise called this by Rabbi Abraham Sachut in his Sepher Juchasin, fol. 148.

This godless contempt for the glorious and consoling Gospel, which is entirely common among all Jews, they have learned from their great book of lies and blasphemy, the Talmud, where in the tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas) fol. 116. col. 1., after mention is made that one should not rescue the books of heretics from fire, the following is read: רבי מאיר קרי ליה און גליון רבי יוחנן קרי: that is, Rabbi Meir calls it (namely the Gospel or New Testament) Aven gillajon; but Rabbi Jochanan calls it Avon gillajon. And Rabbi Salomon writes in his commentary on this passage as follows: רבי מאיר קרי לספרי המינין: That is, Rabbi Meir calls the books of the heretics Aven gillajon, because they call them Evangelia.

Regarding the holy disciples and apostles of Christ, and other saints, these are also greatly despised and dragged through the mire. The Apostle James is called מין Min, that is, a heretic, in the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara fol. 27. col. 2., as has already been noted above in the fifth chapter, p. 262. And likewise, in the tractate Chagiga fol. 5. col. 2., in the commentary of Rabbi Solomon, all the disciples of Christ are called heretics, where the words read as follows: מניא תלמידי ישו שאינן מודים לדברי חכמים that is, the disciples of Jesus are heretics, because they do not acknowledge the words of the sages. In the same way they are also titled in the tractate bava bathra (or Bovo basro) fol. 25. col. 1., where the aforementioned Rabbi Solomon writes concerning the word מינים Minim, that is, heretics, as follows: תלמידי ישו שהיו מלמדים להשתחות לחמה that is, the disciples of Jesus teach that one should pray toward the rising of the sun. The Apostle Peter is shamefully called פטר חמור Peter Chamor, that is, the firstborn of a donkey (of which one may read in Exod 34:20), or a donkey that breaks open the womb, through an allusion or reference to the name Peter or Petrus; of which the following is read in the old Nizzachon p. 235: כתוב להט שישו אמר לפטר חמור פטר יש בינינו שימסור אותי בזה הלילה ואני אהיה תפוש ויעשו בי דנים: אמר לו פטר כיון שאתה יודע עתידות א"כ אלהים אתה ולמה לא הגדת לי עד עתה. אמר לו ישו אל תאמר לשום אדם שאני אלוה כי מאז שיצאתי סחורה ומלמדי מריתי נגד בוראי ונגד תורתו: that is, it stands written among them that Jesus said to Peter Chamor: Peter, there is one among us who will betray me this night, and I will be captured and judged. Thereupon Peter spoke to him: since future things are known to you, you are GOD; but why have you not told me this until now? To this Jesus said to him: tell no man that I am GOD, for from that same time when I abandoned the law of my people, I have been rebellious against my Creator and His law. Here one can see how the wretched devil, through the Jews, perverts the Holy Scripture and attributes to it unheard-of, palpable lies, in order to make Jesus hateful; for not the slightest trace of any of this is to be found in the entire New Testament. Furthermore, the following stands there at p. 240: כתוב בספר שמעון בן כיפא הוא פטר שאמר ישו לפטר חמור השטן מתעסק ומבקש להמיתך: that is, it stands written in the book of Simeon the son of Kepha, who is called Peter, that Jesus said to Peter Chamor: the Satan seeks with all diligence to kill you, etc. Further, the following is read there at p. 164: ואם תאמר מפני: האותות שעשה ישו לעיני העם נאמר כי הוא אלהות: והלא עשה גם כן משה אותות מרובים וכן אליהו עלה בסער השמימה לעין כל מה שלא עשה ישו. כי בעלייתו לא ראה אדם אלא שהם אומרים כי חוויא ומדלנא ופטר חמור (כאן הם מזכירים את שם הקדוש פטר בלשון גנאי וקוראין אותו חמור (ראו והעידו עליו שעלה Jesus is GOD on account of the miracles which He performed before the people (then I say in reply): did Moses not also perform many miracles? And likewise Elijah ascended to heaven in a whirlwind in the sight of all, which Jesus did not do, for at His ascension no man saw Him; except that they (the Christians) say that the Charja Magdalena (here again appears the shameful word Charja in place of Maria, which has already been mentioned above in the second chapter, p. 141, and which means filth) and Peter Chamor (here they call, namely the Christians, the name of the holy Peter shamefully, and call him a donkey) saw it and bore witness thereto. In the same manner, a converted Jew who was named Petrus is also called Peter Chamor פיטיר חמור in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, numero 348. p. 193. The holy Apostle Paul is called, in the old Nizzáchon p. 225., instead of קדוש Kadosch, which means holy, by a perversion of this word קדש Kadesch, that is, a fornicator or scoundrel, where the words read as follows: ועוד ראה לדבר שאין הבשר יודע כלום מזה שאמר פאולוש קדש שלהם: הגוף באזון גיליון: אשר הנפש מזהרת כל שעה להחטיא את הגוף: that is, the matter that the flesh knows nothing can also be proven from this, that Paul their Kadesch, that is, fornicator or scoundrel, says in the Gospel that the soul incites the body to sin at every hour. Likewise, the departed saints are called, instead of קדושים kedoschim, that is, saints, contemptuously קדשים kedeschim, that is, fornicators or scoundrels, as may be read in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon p. 128., where it is written as follows: מה שאומרים שמטילים חאנה ובקשה לפני הקדשים פגרים: מתים כדי שיתפללו עליהם לפני האלהים: תשובה הלא כתיב לא המתים יהללו יה: that is, that the heretics say they offer their prayer and petition to the Kedeschim, that is, fornicators or scoundrels, and Pegarim methim (or Pegórim methim), that is, dead carcasses, so that these may pray to GOD on their behalf: O answer them, for it stands written (Ps 115:17): the dead will not praise the LORD. And at p. 130 of the said book it stands as follows: המינים שואלים אותנו ואומרים מדוע אינכם מבקשין פני גדול כמו שאנו עושין שחם מבקשין לפני לקדשים: תשיב להם שוטים כל ימינו שואלים אותנו ואומרים מדוע: 'מה שאתם מבקשים ועושים להקצין הקב"ה הוא וגו' that is, the heretics (that is, Christians) ask us and say: why do you not seek the face of a great one (to intercede for you), as we do? For they petition the kedeschim, that is, fornicators or scoundrels. Answer them: you fools, everything you ask and do serves only to provoke the holy and blessed GOD to anger, &c.

Furthermore, in the aforementioned book, p. 141, concerning the words of Ps 146:3, "Put not your trust in the willing; they are men who cannot help," it is written in the following manner: פירוש הקדשים שהתנדבו את עצמם למות על: יראת ישו אל תבטחו בהם שיתפללו בעדכם כי אין תפילה לאחר מיתה בן אדם שאין לו גוף: that is: The meaning of these words is, put not your trust in the Kedeschim, that is, whoremongers or scoundrels, who voluntarily gave themselves over to death on account of the religion of Jesus, that they might pray for you; for after death, no prayer avails for a man who cannot help. Put not your trust either in Jesus, who is a man. In this manner they are also called in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 63. col. 2. in the Tokepkóth, where it reads as follows: בזמן הזה כולן נשבעין בקדשים שלהם ואין תופסין בהם אלהות: that is: In this time they (the Christians) all swear by their Kedeschim or whoremongers, and do not regard them as gods. And in the second part of the Prague Machsor fol. 31. col. 1., under the title Józer lepharascháth bachódesh, in the prayer which begins מה טובו אהליך or osch bachódesh, the Jews pray: קדשים that is: Let the Kedeschim or whoremongers fall therein (understand: in the month of Nisan or March); the word Kedeschim, however, is explained in the commentary upon it by האומות וגלוליהם, that is: The nations and their idols or false gods. The saints are likewise called Kedeschim in the little book Schévet Jebúda fol. 84. col. 1. Just as the holy male persons are called Kedeschim, so too they call the holy female persons קדשות, Kedeschóth or Kedeschos, that is, whores. We see from this, therefore, that the converted Hieronymus de sancta fide, in his second book, fifth chapter, wrote the plain truth when he reports that the Jews call the holy apostles and martyrs of Christ whoremongers, and the holy female persons whores.

Therefore, it is also easy to believe that they call the disciples of Christ, who in Hebrew are called תלמידים Talmidim, that is, disciples, by the most contemptuous name תשמידים Taschmidim, which derives from the root word *Schamá*d and means to destroy, to devastate, and to exterminate, signifying as much as "the destroyed ones": as indeed the converted Jews, such as Antonius Margarita in his work on the entire Jewish faith, concerning the prayer Ulemalschinim al tebi tikva, p. 242, and Jobann Adrian in his epistle, p. 29, and Dieterich Schwabe in his Jewish Cloak, at the end of the 6th chapter of the first part, as well as Friederich Samuel Brentz in his Jewish Serpent's Skin, in the second chapter, unanimously attest.

One need not be surprised that they give such mocking names to the holy Apostles, who were born Jews and had accepted the teaching of Jesus Christ, for they are commanded to do so. Thus it is written in Sepher chasidim, numero 191: יהודי שהמיר והלך לעבוד עבודת אלילים סובגין לו שם שגא' כמהם יהיו עשיהם : במוהם יש לבזות לו כגון אם שמו אברהם אברהם נקרא אפרם וכן כיצא בזה, that is: When a Jew changes his religion and goes off to practice idolatry, one gives him a (contemptuous) surname, as it is said (Ps 115:8 and 135:18): Those who make such things (namely the idols) are like unto them. One must give such (apostates) surnames after them (namely after the idols, which are called גלולים Gillulim, that is, with all due reverence, dung-gods; אלילים Elilim, that is, gods worth nothing; etc.). For example, if his name is Abraham (which signifies a high father of a multitude of people), one shall call him Afram (that is, a dust, for עפר afar means dust), or give him another name fashioned in the same manner. From this we thus learn the reason why Peter is called Perer chamor, Paul is called kadésch instead of kadósch, and the converted Friedrich Samuel Brentz is called Sammael (which is the name of the chief devil) instead of Samuel by Rabbi Salman Zevi in his Jewish Theriac; and why the holy Kedeschim and Kedeschóth are used instead of kedoschim and Kedoschóth, and the disciples of Christ are called Taschmidim instead of Talmidim. The aforementioned

Friedrich Samuel Brentz also reports in his Snakeskin, in the second chapter, that instead of סופר Sopher, which means a scribe, they call a district, city, or chancery scribe כופר Kofer, that is, a denier of God or a heretic; and I can bear witness that he has reported the truth in this matter, for I have found this myself in their handwritten letters that were delivered to me to read.

The holy John the Baptist must also serve as a target, and he is called רשע raschá, or róscho, that is, a godless man, in the old Nizzáchon p. 58, where it is written: המינים שואלים מה רמז הוא שמשא לא הכניס את ישראל לארץ כנען עד שבא יהושע העבירים את הירדן ואומרים שזה רמז על התורה שנתן משה לא הועילה להכניסם לגן עדן עד שבא ישו ששמו יהושע העבירים בירדן כלומר שנטבלו ביד יוחנן רשע: that is, the heretics ask what it signifies that Moses did not bring the Israelites into the land of Canaan until Joshua came and led them across the Jordan; and they say that this is an allusion to the Law which Moses gave, but which was not useful or adequate to bring them into Paradise, until Jesus, who is called Joshua, led them across the Jordan, that is, until baptism was performed by the godless Johannes. It is to be noted here that he is not called יהונן הקדוש Jochanan hakadóscha, that is, the holy Johannes, but rather יוחנן רשע Jochanan raschá or róscho, which words appear in Isa 26:10 and mean as much as "should the godless man obtain grace," and this is set down for his greater disgrace through the inversion of his name.

The Jewish historian Josephus, however, gives a different testimony concerning him in the 18th book of the ancient Jewish history, in the seventh chapter, where he writes of him as follows: There was a common report among the Jews that Herod's army had been destroyed by the righteous judgment of God on account of John, who is called the Baptist. For Herod the Tetrarch had caused this pious man to be put to death, who had exhorted the Jews to all manner of virtues, and especially to the fear of God and righteousness, had led them to baptism, and had said that their baptism would only then be pleasing to GOD when they not merely abstained from one or two sins, but first purified the heart through righteousness, and thereafter also the body. These are the words of Josephus. How then could the godless villain who wrote the old Nizzachon have called the pious John a godless man?

The holy Apostles are also frivolously called בני פריצים Bene parizim, that is, transgressors who are said to have broken through the laws and statutes and acted against them, and the words of Dan 11:14, "And the transgressors of your people shall rise up," are interpreted as referring to them. Therefore Rabbi Aben Esra writes concerning these words as follows: ובימים ההם יקומו פריצים, מישראל ואלה היו בימי האדם שהוא אלהי הערלים, that is: "And in those days transgressors from Israel shall rise up; but these were in the days of that man (namely Jesus) who is the God of the uncircumcised." In Abarbanel's book Majene jeschua, at fol. 73, col. 2, in the eleventh Majan, in the fifth Tamar, it is likewise written: כיון בו על תלמידי ישו אשר שתו בשמים פיהם להעמיד חזון ונבואות, שקר ונכשלו כולם ומתו בחרב ובתליה, that is: "He (the prophet Daniel) had his intention directed here at the disciples of Jesus, who opened their mouths against heaven to confirm a false vision and prophecy; but they all fell and perished by the sword and the rope."

Because the hardened Jews falsely claim that the New Testament is not the Word of God, but was invented and composed by ignorant men, we also wish to examine what is written about this in their own books. In the book Chissuk emuna, on p. 14, where mention is made of the books of the New Testament, the following is read: אשר הסדר המסודר מאנשים בוערים חרשי משחית אשר: that is, These were written, according to the order in which they are arranged, by ignorant people and smiths of destruction, each of whom has corrupted his own way. And on p. 25, the following is read in the same place: ההצעה היא להודיע שהא"ג אינו תורת ישו כאשר אמרו הנוצרים וכ"ש שאינו תורת אלהים כדבריהם אלא הוא שחיחא מאנשים ריקים ופוחזים שלא היו בקיאים בספרי קדש בכונת הפסוקים ולפיכך דבריהם אינם מסכימים זה עם זה בהרבה ענינים ואינם מתפרשין בכוונת הפסוקים אלא הם שחיחא מאנשים ריקים ומתפרשין גם כן על דברי הנביאים that is: The preface is directed toward making it known that the Gospel is not the law of Jesus, as the Christians assert; still less is it the law of God, as they claim; rather, it is a corrupted work originating from loose and frivolous men who were not versed in Holy Scripture and did not understand the meaning of the verses; for this reason their words do not agree with one another in many points, and cannot in many places be explained and elucidated by what the prophets have said. Likewise, on p. 357 and 358 of the same work, instruction is given to the Jews as to what they should say to the Christians on this matter, where the words read as follows: אם תרצו לדעת: אם האמת אתכם אם לאו צריכים אתם לעיין באותן המקומות אשר כותבי הא"ג מביאים ראיה לדבריהם ממאמרי הנביאים ע"ה אם מאמרי הנבואה מודים על ראייתם אם לאו וכאשר תעינו בעיון שכלי אי תראו ותבינו מהמאמרים הקודמים והמאוחרים שמאמרי הנבואה אשר הביאום כותבי הא"ג לראיית אמתתם אינם מורים על ראייתם כלל וכלל והם להם לא לעזר ולא להועיל כי הנביאים ע"ה באותן המאמרים אשר הנוצרים מביאים ראיה מהן לאמונתם לא כוונו למדתם הנעבדת ולא עלה על לבם לעולם מה שהם מודים מלכם: וכן לפעמים כותבי הא"ג מביאים ראיה ומביאים המאמרים הנבואיים בחילוף ושנוי גדול ומהפכים דברי אלהים חיים לדעתם ולאמונתם ולפעמים מוסיפים לראיה להם על דברי הנביאים ולפעמים גורעים ממאמרי הנבואה דברים שהם כנגדם ולפעמים כותבים דבר לראיה לאמונתם באמרם שהוא דבר נבואי והדבר ההוא אינו נמצא בספרי נבואות וכלל. וכן לפעמים אפילו בדברי ספרים ר"ל בדברים שאין לראייה לאמונתם הם טועים בכתבם מאמרים נבואיים בחילוף מה שנכתבו בספרי הנבואה וכל זה ממה שזורה שתורתם אינה אלהית אבל היא הנחית מאנשים ריקים ופוחזים טופלי שקר that is, אשר לו היו בקיאים כלל בדברי התורה והנביאים וכל שכן בדיעת כוונת מאמרים

If you (Christians) wish to know whether you are right or wrong, you must carefully examine those passages which those who wrote the Gospel adduce from the words of the prophets, upon whom be peace, as proof of their assertions, and consider whether the words of prophecy are suited to their proof or not. When you now attend to this through rational reflection, you will see and understand from what precedes and follows that the words of prophecy which those who wrote the Gospel cite as proof of their faith do not in the least teach what they wish to prove, and are therefore of no help or benefit to them; for the prophets, upon whom be peace, in those very words which the Christians cite as proof of their faith, had no intention of supporting their irrational opinion, and what these men have invented out of their own hearts never once entered the prophets' minds. Thus the writers of the Gospel sometimes adduce a proof and cite the prophetic utterances with great alteration and distortion, and pervert the words of the living God according to their own opinion and their faith; sometimes they add something to the words of the prophets so that it may serve them as proof; sometimes they remove from the prophetic utterances things that are contrary to them; and sometimes they write something as proof of their faith, claiming it to be a prophetic word, when in fact it is nowhere to be found in the prophetic books. They also err at times in matters consisting of mere narrations, that is, in things that do not serve as proof of their faith, and present these differently from how they are written in the prophetic books; and all of this shows that their law is not divine, but was made by loose, frivolous, and mendacious men who were not at all versed in the Law and the Prophets, still less in the knowledge of the meaning of the words. Something very similar is likewise found in the same work on p. 388 and 389.

In the old Nizzachon, on pages 256 and 257, the following is also written: אומרים המינים על אורך גלותנו שאינו אלא לפי שאינכם מאמינים בתורתו ישו ; כך תשיב להם והלא ישמעאלים שאינם מאמינים בתורתכם ובאמונתכם ואין להם שום גלות, ועוד למה היה לנו גלות קודם שנולד ישו : ואת תורתנו שניתנה לנו על ידי משה בקולות וברקים לעין כל חי לא נניח לעזוב עבור תורתכם שניתנה לכם בסתר ובחשאי בלא ידיעת בשום אדם רק אותה של ישו לבדה : ואנחנו נוכל לומר אנשים חטאים בידו אותה מלכם לפרוק מהם עול מלכות שמים ועול מצות ולשתות יין נסך ולנאוף וכל הנאות הגוף האסורים בתורתנו מותרים : that is: The heretics say, regarding our so long-enduring exile or misery, that it comes about because we do not believe in the law of JESUS. Answer them thus: The Ishmaelites, who do not believe in your law and give no assent to your religion, are in no exile or misery whatsoever. Why, moreover, were we already in misery before JESUS was born? We will therefore not abandon our law, which was given to us through Moses with thunder and lightning, before all that lives, on account of your law, which was given to you secretly and in concealment, so that no person knew of it except the Christian people alone. We can also say that sinful people invented it out of their own minds, so that they might cast off the yoke of the commandments of the heavenly kingdom, as well as the yoke of the commandments, in order to eat pork and to drink jen nesech, that is, sacrificial wine (or pagan wine), and also to commit adultery; for all the bodily pleasures that are forbidden in our law are permitted in your law.

Here I must also set down what follows upon the blasphemy cited above in the fourth chapter, p. 190, from the accursed little book Toledóth or Tóledos Jeschu, and the words from p. 21 to the end of this little book read as follows: ויהי אחרי הדברים האלה ויגדל מריבה בין הנצרים ובין היהודים ובין היחידים להבדיל: כי כאשר ראה הנוצרי את יהודי הרג אותו והצרה היתה הולכת וחזקת עד שלשים שנה ויתאספו הנצרים לאלפים ולרבבות וימנעו את ישראל מלעלות לרגל והיתה צרה גדולה בישראל ביום שנעשה בו העגל ולא היו יודעים מה לעשות אך אמונתם בהחזקת והולכת ויצאו שנים עשר רשעים בני פריצים ויחוללכו בשנים עשר מלכיות ויתנבאו בתוך הכהנה נבואות שקר ויטעו ישראל אחריהם והם היו אנשי שם ויחזקו את אמונת ישו כי אמרו שהם שלוחי התלוי ויתלקטו אחריהם עם רב מבני ישראל. ויראו החכמים את הדבר הרע הזה וירע להם מאוד כי נבלה נעשתה בישראל ויאמר איש אל רעהו אוי לנו כי חטאנו שבימינו נהיתה הרעה זאת בישראל אשר לא שמעו אבותנו וזכותינו ויצר להם מאוד וישבו ויבכו וישאו עיניהם אל השמים ויאמרו אנה ה' אלהי השמים תן לנו עצה מה לעשות כי אנחנו לא נדע מה לעשות ועליך ענינו כי נשפך דם נקי בקרב עמך ישראל על אדות הממזר בן הנדה עד מתי יהיה זה לנו למוקש שתחזק יד הנצרים עלינו ויהידום אותנו כמה זכמות ואנחנו נשארים מעט ובעוון מוקש עמך בית ישראל נעשה זאת ואתה למען שמך תן לנו עצה מה לעשות להיות נבדלים מעדת רשעים הגנוזים ויהי ככלותם לדבר ויקם זקן אחד מן הזקנים ושמו שמעון כיפא והיה משתמש בכת קול ויאמר להם שמעון אחי ועמי אם טוב בעיניכם דברי אבדל את הרשעים אלו מעדת בני ישראל ולא יהיה להם חלק ונחלה בקרב ישראל אך אם תקבלו עליכם את העון: ויענו כולם ויאמרו נקבל עלינו העון אך כאשר דברת עשה. וילך שמעון בן כיפא בתוך ההיכל ויכתוב את השם הגדול ויקרע בשרו וישם הכתב בתוכו ויצא מן המקדש ויוציא את הכתב וילמוד את השם וילך אל עיר מטרופולין של הנוצרים ויצעק בקול גדול ויאמר כל מי שיאמין בישו יבא אלי כי אני שלוחו ויבאו אליו לרוב כחול שעל שפת הים ויאמרו לו תן לנו אות שאתה שלוחו ויאמר להם מה אתם מבקשים. סמני ויאמרו האותות אשר עשה ישו בחייו עשה לנו גם אתה ויאמר הביאו לי מצורע ויביאו לו וישם ידיו עליו ותחה נרפא ויאמר להם עוד הביאו לי מת אחד ויביאו לפניו וישם ידו עליו ויחי ויעמוד על רגליו ויראו הרשעים האלו ויפלו לפניו ארצה ויאמרו לו באמת אתה שלוחו של ישו כי הוא עשה לנו כך בחייו ויאמר להם שמעון כיפא אני שלוחו של ישו והוא צוה עלי ללכת אליכם והשבטו לי אם תעשו ככל אשר אני מצוה אתכם ויענו כולם ויאמרו כל אשר תצוונו נעשה ויאמר להם שמעון קיפא דעו כי התלוי היה שונא של ישראל ותורתם כמו שניבא ישעיה חדישיכם ומועדיכם שנאה נפשי ועוד דעו לכם שאינו חפץ בישראל כמו שניבא הושע כי אתם לא עמי ואף שיש בידו לעקור אותם מן העולם ברגע אחד מכל מקום אינו רוצה לכלותם אך היא רוצה להגיה אותם כדי שיהיה חליתו וסקילתו לזכרון לדורו דורות ענני הגדול שהיה סובל כל הייסורים כדי לפדות אתכם מן הגיהגום ועתה הוא מזהירכם ומצוה לכם שלא תעשו עוד רעה לשום יהודי ואם יאמר יהודי לנוצרי לך עמי פרסה לך עמי שני פרסאות ואפ יבנו יהודי על לחי השמאל יטה לו גם לחי הימין כדי שיאכלו שכרם

that is: Now it came to pass after these things that the strife between the Christians and the Jews (between whom a distinction is to be made) greatly increased; for whenever a Christian caught sight of a Jew, he killed him, and the misery grew ever greater for thirty years. The Christians also gathered in their thousands and tens of thousands, and prevented the Israelites from going up to the feast (to Jerusalem), so that there was great lamentation in Israel, just as there had been on that day when the calf (of which mention is made in Exod 32) was made, and they did not know what they should do. Their (the Christians') religion also increased continually, and twelve godless apostates (understand: the twelve Apostles) went out and betook themselves into twelve kingdoms, and prophesied false prophecies in the midst of the multitude of the people, and led the Israelites astray so that they followed after them; for they were men of great repute, and they confirmed the faith in Jesus, saying that they had been sent by the Hanged One, and a great multitude from among the children of Israel followed after them. When the Sages saw this evil matter, it displeased them greatly that such a folly had been committed in Israel, and one said to another: Woe unto us! for we have sinned, in that in our days this evil has come upon Israel, the like of which neither we nor our fathers have heard. It grieved them so greatly that they sat down and wept, and lifted up their eyes toward heaven, and said: O Lord, heavenly God! give us counsel as to what we should do, for we do not know what we should do; our eyes are turned toward You, for innocent blood is being shed in the midst of Your people Israel on account of the bastard son of the unclean woman. How long shall this be a snare unto us, that the hand of the Christians has power over us and they kill so many of us, so that only a few of us remain? This is done on account of the sins of Your people, the house of Israel, in which it is entangled. But give us, for Your name's sake, counsel as to what we should do, that we may be separated from the assembly of the godless Christians. When they had finished speaking, an old man arose from among the elders, whose name was Simon Kepha, who made use of the Bath or Bas Kol, that is, the daughter of the voice (which is supposed to be a kind of prophecy, as was indicated above in the sixth chapter, p. 265), and said to them: my brothers and my people, if my words seem good to you, I will separate these godless ones from the congregation of Israel, and they shall have no portion nor inheritance among Israel; but on the condition that you take the sin (which I thereby commit) upon yourselves. Thereupon they all answered and said: we will take the sin upon ourselves; only do as you have said. After this, Simon, the son of Kepha, went into the Temple and wrote down the great Name (that is, the Schem hammphorasch), cut open his flesh, and placed the writing therein, and went out of the Temple, took out the writing, learned the Name, and then betook himself to the capital city of the Christians (to Rome), cried out with a loud voice, and said: let everyone who believes in Jesus come to me, for I am his Apostle or messenger. Then they came to him in great multitude, like the sand that is on the shore of the sea, and said to him: give us a sign that you are his messenger. He then asked them: what kind of sign do you require of me? But they answered: the same signs which Jesus performed during his lifetime, do you also for us. Thereupon he said to them: bring me a leper; and they brought him one, and he laid his hand upon him, and behold, he was healed. Further he said to them: bring me a dead man; and when they had brought one before him, he laid his hand upon him, and he came back to life and stood upon his feet. When those same godless ones had seen this, they fell down before him upon the ground and said to him: you are truly sent by Jesus, for he did such things for us during his lifetime. But Simon Kepha then said to them: I am sent by Jesus, and he has commanded me to come to you; so swear to me that you will do everything that I command you. Then they all answered and said: we will do everything that you command us. Thereupon Simon Kepha said to them: know that the Hanged One (that is, Jesus) hated the Israelites and their Law, as Isaiah prophesied (Isa 1:14): "Your new moons and your annual feasts my soul hates." Know also that he has no pleasure in Israel, as Hosea prophesied (Hos 1:9): "For you are not my people." And although he has the power to root them out from the world in a single moment, he nevertheless does not wish to destroy them, but to let them go on, so that from generation to generation men may remember that he was hanged and stoned, and may think upon the great pain and torments which he endured to redeem you from hell; therefore he now lets you be warned, and commands you that you do no more evil to any Jew. And if a Jew says to a Christian: go with me one mile, he shall go two miles with him; and if a Jew strikes him on the left cheek, he shall also offer him the right cheek, so that they (the Jews) may receive their reward in this world, but in the world to come may be punished in hell. If you do this, you will be worthy to sit with him in his dwelling. Behold, he also commands you that you shall not celebrate the feast of unleavened bread, but shall solemnly observe the day of his death. And in place of the feast of Pentecost, you shall celebrate the fortieth day, reckoning from the time when he was stoned until he ascended into heaven. But in place of the feast of Tabernacles, you shall celebrate the day of his birth; and on the eighth day after his birth, you shall hold the feast of his circumcision. Then they all answered and said: everything that you have spoken we will do, if only you remain with us. Thereupon he said to them: I will remain among you, if you do for me that which he (namely Jesus) has commanded me, namely that I shall eat no other food than bread of affliction and drink water of distress; and you shall build me a tower in the midst of the city, in which I will remain until my death. Then they said: as you have spoken, so will we do; and they built him a tower and gave him the same as a dwelling, and provided him daily with his appointed portion of bread and water, and he dwelt therein until he died. But during the time that he resided there, he had served the God of our fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and had composed a very great many poetic pieces, which he sent into all the borders of Israel, so that this might serve as a memorial to him in all generations and times. All the poetic pieces that he had composed he also sent to his rabbis. And Simon dwelt six years in that same tower, and when he was about to die, he commanded that he should be buried in the tower, which they also did. After this, a בנין מכוער Binjan mecuar, that is, a shameful building (understand: a church), was built over him, and that same tower still stands in Rome and is called Peter, which is the name of the stone upon which he sat until the day of his death (for Petra in the Latin, and Kepha in the Chaldean and Syriac languages, means a stone). But after Rabbi Simon Kepha had died, a man arose whose name was Elias, and who was clever; he went according to the inclination of his own heart, came to Rome, and said to them (the Romans): know that Simon Kepha has deceived you, for Jesus commanded me and said: go and say to them, let no one entertain the thought that I despise the Law; whoever wishes to be circumcised, let him be circumcised; but whoever does not wish to be circumcised, let him be baptized with the stinking water (this is how the baptismal water is mockingly called here); but if he is not baptized, he has no danger on that account to fear in the world. He also commanded that you shall not celebrate the seventh day, but the first day, on which heaven and earth were created. He also gave them very many evil laws; and they said to him: give us a true sign that Jesus has sent you; but he asked them: what kind of sign do you require? While he had not yet finished speaking, a great stone fell down from an abomination (that is, a temple or church) and shattered his skull. Thus, O Lord, must all Your enemies perish; but those who love You shall be as the sun when it rises in its might. These are the words and the conclusion of the little book Toledoth Jeschu, which was inspired by the devil.

We can see, then, from what has been reported in the foregoing, how in a godless manner the hardened and malicious Jews despise and mock the New Testament, and in what fashion they slander and disparage the holy Evangelists and Apostles in a defamatory way, and thereby presume most audaciously to assert and declare that these were foolish and incompetent men who did not understand the holy Scripture of the Old Testament at all, who cited it here and there incorrectly and perversely, and who paid no attention to what precedes or follows; likewise that they do not agree with one another at all: and that, beyond this, they added something to it or took something away according to their own pleasure, and even produced proof from the Prophets which cannot be found therein. But since God the Lord promised through the Prophet Joel, in chapter 2, verse 28, that in the last times He would pour out His Holy Spirit upon all flesh, when He speaks thus: "And after this" (that is, in the last days, as can be seen in Acts 2:17) "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your elders shall have dreams, and your young men shall see visions"; and since by "the last times" the times of the Messiah are to be understood, as Rabbi David Kimchi teaches in his commentary on Isa 2:2, where he writes as follows: כל מקום שנהגה המשיח. That is: Wherever mention is made of the last days, the days of the Messiah are to be understood. With which Rabbi Aben Ezra, in his commentary thereon, also agrees, when he says: והנה אמר באחרית הימים הם ימי המשיח שהם אחרית ימי עולם: that is, "Behold, he" (the Prophet Isaiah) "says: In the last times, which signify the times of the Messiah, which are the last times of the world." The said prophecy was also fulfilled in a special manner in the holy Evangelists and Apostles (who above all others must have been adorned with particular gifts, so that through the saving proclamation of the holy Gospel they might bring to the right path of true salvation those poor people who had gone entirely astray in the way of sin and were stripped of all comfort for the soul), with a rich outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the distribution of His glorious gifts, as can be read in Acts 2:4, where it is written: "And they" (namely the Apostles) "were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." In addition, it is taught in the Second Epistle of Peter, chapter 1, verse 21, that those who proclaimed the Gospel did so through the Holy Spirit. How then could such highly enlightened men, with any foundation in truth, be regarded as foolish, incompetent, corrupters of the holy Scripture of the Old Testament, and liars, seeing that they were governed by the Holy Spirit, who, as can be read in John 16:13, leads into all truth?

That the Jews find certain proofs drawn from the prophets in the New Testament to be absurd is to be attributed to their lack of understanding, or rather to their stubbornness, and not to any error that the holy Evangelists and Apostles are supposed to have committed; for these holy men did not always look to the precise words of the Old Testament, but rather to its meaning and purpose. Nor is it always necessary to pay attention to what precedes and follows in the prophets, since in them one sometimes passes in a wholly unexpected manner from one subject to another, as Abarbenel acknowledges in his commentary on Cap. 2, v. 3 of the prophet Nabum, fol. 269, col. 1, where he writes as follows: לא יקשה עליך איך יבא ענין ישראל בתוך נבואת ניונה כי פעמים דברת ראו הנביאים בראותם חזון אחד אב שדא דבר אחד (that is: Do not let it seem difficult, or strange, to you how the subject of Israel comes in the midst of the prophecy concerning Nineveh; for when the prophets see a vision, it often happens that by occasion another matter presents itself to them). How then can a Jew demand that one should always pay attention to what precedes or follows, when the subject does not hang together and a single topic is not being treated throughout?

Beyond that, it also means nothing when the holy Evangelists and Apostles appear in certain places not to agree with one another, for even in the Old Testament many things occur which seem to contradict each other. For example, in Gen 2:2 it is written that God completed His work on the seventh day; whereas in Exod 20:11 one reads that the Lord made heaven and earth in six days. And in Gen 6:6 it is said that God repented that He had made mankind; whereas in 1 Sam 15:29 it stands that He repents of nothing. And in Gen 6:19 it is reported that God commanded Noah to bring a pair of every kind of animal into the ark; whereas in Gen 7:2 it is read that he was to take seven of every kind of clean cattle, but of the unclean only a pair. And in Gen 8:13 it is found that on the first day of the first month the waters of the flood had dried up on the earth; whereas in the fourteenth verse immediately following it stands that the earth became dry on the twenty-seventh day of the second month. A great many such discrepancies of this kind could still be brought forward from the Old Testament. But just as the Jews will never concede that Moses and others who wrote the books of the Old Testament were foolish and ignorant people who erred, because such things are found therein, but will rather say that their rabbis have reconciled, or harmonized with one another, those things that appear to contradict each other: so too must they not judge the New Testament in so rash and foolish a manner, but must know that by our theologians, or divines, that which likewise occurs in the New Testament in such a way as if it ran contrary to itself has also been reconciled and all doubt removed.

The accusations of the Jews are nothing but wanton slanders, just as what was mentioned above on page 284 from the old Nizzachon is a malicious lie, namely that all bodily pleasures which are forbidden in their law are permitted in our law. Equally diabolical an untruth is also what stands in the old Nizzachon on page 247 in these words: כתיב להם בעון-גיליון אמר ישו אל: "That is: האפוסטולוס שלו אני ישו נולד מן חרייא האשה גם בן יוסף הרוצה להאמין יאמין" It is written in their Avon gillajon (the Gospel) that Jesus said to his Apostles: I, Jesus, am born of Chärja (Mary) the woman; I am also the son of Joseph; let whoever wishes to believe it believe it." And on page 248, the following is read in the same place: כתוב להם בעון גיליון שישו קרא לעצמו גמל כי כאשר אמר אי לכם הגמל והגמל ואני הפרושים והצדוקים החנפים שאתם מסננים את הזוב ובולעים את הגמל ואני that is, "In their Avon gillajon it is written that Jesus called himself a camel, in that he spoke thus: Woe unto you Pharisees and Sadducees, you hypocrites, who strain out the gnats and swallow a camel; but I am the camel." Equally crude fabricated untruths are also to be found there on pages 235 and 236.

Regarding what has been reported from the little book Toledoth Jeschu, namely that the Apostle Petrus wrote down the Schem hammephorasch in the Temple, inserted it into his flesh, and then, upon leaving the Temple again, removed it, learned it, and traveled with it to Rome, where he supposedly did this and that and presented himself as an apostle of Jesus, yet is said to have remained a devout Jew until his death: this too is a falsehood inspired by the hellish dragon. For from the time he was called to be an apostle, he was a zealous follower of Christ, for whose sake he also, as can be seen in John 18:10, cut off the ear of the high priest's servant. And although he soon afterward denied Him out of weakness, he nevertheless showed heartfelt remorse and repentance for those sins he had committed, as can be read in Matt 26:75 and Mark 14:72. How then could he have made his way to Rome in the manner alleged and lived there as a Jew? And even if it were the case that he is supposed to have remained a devout Jew, why is he then in the old Nizzáchon, to his utmost disgrace, so often called Péter chámor, that is, the firstborn of a donkey, instead of Petrus? For it is only the name of an apostate Jew that is supposed

Since the Jews, as mentioned above, hold the Gospel and the entire New Testament in such great contempt, far more weight must be placed on the Turks in this regard than on them, even though the Turks are avowed enemies of Christians; for the Turks hold the Gospel to be a holy book given by God from Heaven. This is attested in their Alcoran, in the third chapter, which is called Súrat oláli Imrána, where it is written at the beginning as follows: *الله الا هو الحي القيوم نزل عليك الكتاب بالحق مصدقا لما بين يديه وانزل التوراة والانجيل من قبل هدي للناس وانزل الفرقان that is: There is no God but the living and eternal God. He has caused the Scripture to come down upon you (from Heaven) in truth, confirming that which was before it; and He gave the Law (of Moses) as well as the Gospel beforehand to mankind for guidance (and instruction). So too has He sent down the Alcoran. And in the fifth chapter, which is called Surat al-maidahi, that is, the chapter of the Table, God is introduced speaking thus: وقفينا علي اثارهم بعيسي ابن مريم مصدقا لما بين يديه من التوراة واتينا الانجيل فيه هدي ونور that is: And We caused Jesus, the Son of Mary, to follow in their footsteps, who confirmed that which was before him; and We gave him the Gospel, in which there is guidance (or instruction) and light. Furthermore, it is written in the last-mentioned chapter: قل يا اهل الكتاب لستم علي شيء حتي تقيموا that is: Say, O people of the Scripture! (that is, you to whom the Holy Scripture has been given:) you will be nothing until you uphold the Law (of Moses) and the Gospel, and that which has been sent down to you from your Lord from Heaven. Further material on this subject is also to be found in what was presented above on pp. 222 and 225.

Chapter VIII.

What the Jews teach concerning their Talmud, and what is to be made of it.

Since in the preceding chapter it was shown in what manner the godless Jews wickedly despise and slander the New Testament, and regard the holy Evangelists and Apostles as mute and ignorant men who are supposed to have falsely cited the holy Scripture of the Old Testament in order to prove this or that point: I have therefore deemed it necessary to write, immediately following, this chapter concerning their Talmud (namely the Babylonian Talmud; for the Hierosolymitanische is used very little by the Jews and is a small work compared to the Babylonian one), which they foolishly presume to put forward as the Word of God, even though many horrible blasphemies, insipid fables, and coarse palpable lies, ridiculous and irrational citations and interpretations of holy Scripture, and many things that run directly contrary to the Word of God are found therein; and furthermore, some of the Talmudic teachers were godless and dissolute persons who led a wicked and scandalous life: so that from this one may perceive the great blindness and obduracy of this people, which so greatly despises the pure and holy teaching of the New Testament, and yet in contrast acknowledges the senseless and false teaching of the Talmud as the Word of God.

Proceeding to the matter itself, it should be known that the Jews teach that they have two kinds of law: namely, a Written one, which consists of the five books of Moses and was set down in writing by Moses, and which is therefore called by them תורה שבכתב Tora schebbichrâf; and then an Oral one, which is the Talmud, and is called תורה שבעל פה Tôrâ Schebbeal-peh: concerning both of these laws, the following is read in the Talmudic Tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas) fol. 31. col. 1.: תנו רבנן מעשה בנכרי אחד שבא לפני שמאי אמר לו כמה תורות יש לכם אמר לו שנים תורה שבכתב ותורה שבעל פה אמר לו שבכתב אני מאמינך ושבעל פה איני מאמינך גיירני ע"מ שתלמדני תורה שבכתב גער בו והוציאו בנזיפה בא לפני הלל גייריה יומא קמא אמר לו א"ב ג"ד למחר אפיך ליה אמר ליה והא אתמול לא אמרת לי הכי אמר ליה לאו עלי דידי קא סמכת דעל פה נמי סמוך עלי (that is: Our rabbis teach that it came to pass that a gentile came before Shámmai and asked him how many laws do you have? Whereupon he answered him: we have two, the Written and the Oral. The gentile then let it be known to him that, as regards the Written one, he believed him; but as regards the Oral one, he did not believe him: make me a companion of the Jews, so that you may teach me the written law. He (that is, Shámmái) however rebuked him and sent him away with a reprimand. When he came before Hillel, the latter accepted him as a companion of the Jews, and on the first day taught him Aleph, Beth, Gimel, Daleth (that is, A, B, C, D); but on the following day he reversed it; whereupon the newly accepted one said to him: you did not say it to me that way yesterday. He (Hillel) however answered him: do you not trust me in what I tell you? Then trust me likewise with regard to the oral law.)

The entire Talmud consists of two parts, namely the משנה Mischna and the גמרא Gemará (or Gemóro). The Mischna is the text of the Talmud, while the Gemará is the commentary upon it. The Mischna was first composed in writing during the time of Emperor Antoninus Pius, and thus three hundred and fifty years after the birth of Christ, by Rabbi Jehuda Hannasí, that is, the Prince, who, on account of his pious and holy manner of life, is called רבינו הקדוש Rabbénu hakkadósch, that is, our holy Rabbi. He compiled it from all manner of notes that had been written down and gathered together from every place, arranged it in order, and divided it into six סדרים Sedarím (or Sedórim), that is, Orders. These six Sedarím were in turn divided into sixty מסכתות Massichtóth (or Massichtos), that is, individual Tractates. This entire book is called Mischna, or משניות Mischnajóth (or Mischnájos), because it is supposed to be a repeated law; for Mischna derives from שנה Schana, which means to repeat. Or, as Rabbi Bechai reports in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Paruscha Jislá, fol. 115, col. 4: לפי שהיא שנה לתורה שבכתב ורובה לשון הקדש צה כתורה שבכתב (that is, because it is Torá Schenia, that is, because it is the second law, written after the written law, and for the most part in pure Hebrew, like the written law); and no blasphemies or other improper things are to be found therein. Concerning these Mischnajóth, Rabbi David Gans writes in his chronicle Zémach David, at the year 978 of the fourth millennium, in the first part, fol. 30, col. 2, as follows: רבי יהודה הנשיא הנזכר לעיל כי ראה ארץ הגלות ושהתלמידים והלכות היו מתמעטים ואזלת יד התקמה והקבלה והולך עד מאד תורה שבעל פה. הנה אף על פי שדברים ששעל פה אי אתה רשאי לאמרו בכתב כדיתא בפרק הנזקין מכל מקום סמך רבי על העת לעשות ליהנה הפרו תורתך ואספך וקבץ כל ההלכות והדינים ודברי התקמים שכתבו כל אחד לעצמו ממה שקלמו בית דין בכל דור דור מימי הזקנים והנביאים ואנשי כנסת הגדולה וסכמי המשנה עד זמנו וכתבם בשפה סדרים והם זרעים. מועד. נשים. גזיקין. טהרות. That is: Rabbi Jehuda the Prince, mentioned above, seeing that the exile or misery was lasting long, that the disciples as well as hearts were diminishing, that wisdom and the Kabbalah (or oral tradition and teaching) were perishing, and that the oral law was also greatly declining, this Rabbi (although it is not permitted, as may be read in the fifth chapter of the Talmudic tractate Gittin, fol. 60, col. 2) undertook to set down in writing those things which had been learned orally, and, notwithstanding this prohibition, held to that which is written (Ps 119:126): "It is time for the Lord to act; they have made void Your law." And he gathered and collected all the Halachôth (or decisions), judicial ordinances, and sayings of the sages, which each one had recorded for himself, and which the courts had taught in every generation (or age) from the times of the elders and the prophets and the men of the great synagogue, as well as the sages of the Mishna, down to his own time, and wrote them down in six Sedarim or Orders, which are: Zeraim, concerning seeds and the fruits of the earth; Moéd, concerning the feast days; Nesikin, concerning damages; Naschim, concerning women; Kodaschim, concerning the holy things; and Tohorôth or Tōhoros, concerning purities. This is also recorded, though with some variation, in the book Júchasin, fol. 160, col. 1, which Rabbi Abraham Sachuth composed. This book of the Mischnajoth was accepted by all Jews immediately after it was completed, as the aforementioned Rabbi David Gans reports in his book Zemach David, in the first part, at the year 979 of the fourth millennium of years since the creation of the world.

Regarding the Gemara (or Gemoro), it contains the Disputationes of the Jewish doctors concerning the aforementioned Mishnayoth, which were held over them in the Promised Land as well as in Babylonia, together with their Decisiones, or decisions, that were issued on account of them; among which are contained many foolish fables, shameless gross lies, false interpretations, and perversions of the Word of God, as well as those blasphemies which were cited above from the Talmud in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth chapters. This same work was not brought to completion until the year of Christ 500, after Raf Aschi had begun to set it down in writing 133 years prior, concerning which the aforementioned book Zemach David, in the first part, at the year number 127 of the fifth thousand years after the Creation, fol. 33. col. 4., reads as follows: הוא התחיל לכתוב כל התלמוד על הסדר וקבץ כל הדברים הקדומים מימות רבי עד זמנו ולמד כל שנה ב' מסכתות והשלים כל התלמוד בשלשים שנה וכן עשה פעם שנית that is: He (Raf Aschi) began to write the entire Talmud in an orderly arrangement, and collected all the ancient materials from the time of the Rabbi up to his own time, and taught two Masichtos or two tractates every year, and brought the entire Talmud to completion within thirty years; and thus he did it a second time. Thereafter follows in the said book, at the year number 487 of the fifth thousand years after the Creation, fol. 33. col. 2.: רב אשי נפטר בשנת תש"ח לשטרות שהיא שנת קס"ו לאלף חמישי הוא התחיל לכתוב פירוש המשנה הוא התלמוד that is: Raf Aschi died in the year 738 of the Contracts or agreements (which reckoning begins from the time when King Alexander the Great intended to destroy the city of Jerusalem, but was dissuaded from doing so by the High Priest Simeon through moving entreaties and petitions); that is, in the year 486 of the fifth thousand years after the Creation; and he had begun to write the commentary on the Mishna, that is, the Talmud (meaning the Gemara, which is also sometimes called the Talmud by the Jews on its own, even though it is only a part thereof) in the year 127, but was unable to bring it to completion, until his disciples finished it seventy-three years after his death. And at the year number 260 of the said fifth thousand years, fol. 34. col. 1., the following is further written on this matter in the said book: תלמוד בבלי נחתם בשנת תת"יב לשטרות והיא שנת ד' אלפים ור"ס לבי"ע בימי רבי יוסי ע"ג שנים אחרי מות רב אשי ונתפשט בכל ישראל וקיימו וקבלו אותו עליהם והסכימו עליו כל ישראל ועליו אין להוסיף וממנו אין לגרוע נמצא מעתה חתימת המשנה עד שעת חתימת התלמוד יש ש"א שנה that is: The Babylonian Talmud was brought to completion in the year 812 of the Contracts, that is in the year 4260 after the Creation of the world, in the time of Rabbi Jose, seventy-three years after the death of Raf Aschi, and was disseminated throughout all Israel; and all Israelites confirmed it and received it with unanimous agreement, to which nothing further is to be added and from which nothing is to be taken away. It is thus found that from the time in which the Mishna was brought to completion until the time of the completion of the Talmud, three hundred and eleven years had elapsed.

That there are six Sedarim, or orders, in the Talmud is demonstrated in the Talmudic tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas) fol. 31, col. 1, in a most ingeniously subtle manner, from the words of Isa 33:6: "And it shall be: emunath, faith; ittecha, of your times; chosen, strength; yeshuoth, of salvations; chochmath, wisdom; vadaath, and knowledge, etc." in the following way: אמנות זה סדר זרעים עתך זה סדר מועד חוסן זה סדר נשים ישועות זה סדר נזיקין חכמת זה סדר קדשים ודעת זה סדר טהרות ואפילו הכי יראה יי' ה'יא אוצרו That is, the word emunath, that is, faith, signifies the Order of Zeraim, or of Seeds. The word ittecha, that is, of your times, signifies the Order of Moed, or of the Festival Days. The word chosen, that is, strength, signifies the Order of Nashim, or of Women. The word yeshuoth, that is, of salvations, signifies the Order of Nezikin, or of Damages. The word chochmath, that is, wisdom, signifies the Order of Kodashim, or of Holy Things. And the word daath, that is, knowledge, signifies the Order of Tohoroth, or of Purifications. Is this not a splendid proof? Not even the most learned and subtle Christian would have been clever enough to draw such a hidden meaning from the words of Isaiah and bring it to light. Likewise, in the Yalkut Chadash fol. 173, col. 1, numero 117, under the heading Torah, it is demonstrated from Pss 19:8-10 in precisely the same insipid manner that the said six orders exist.

In precisely the same senseless manner, the highly enlightened rabbis also prove from the Holy Scripture of the Old Testament that there is not only a written law but also an oral law. Thus, in the commentary of Rabbi Menáchem of Rekanat on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 77, col. 1, in the Parashah Vajtschma Jethro, from the book Habbábir, on the words of Prov 6:23, "For the commandment is a lamp, and the law is a light," the following is written: נר תורה שבכתב ואור זו תורה שבעל פה, that is: the word "lamp" signifies the commandment, but signifies the oral law; the word "light," however, indicates the written law. And at fol. 119, col. 2, in the Parashah ki tissa, the following is read there on the words of Isa 28:9, "Whom shall he then teach knowledge, and to whom shall he make the heard thing understood?": את מי יורה דעה דא: תורה שבכתב ואת מי יבין שמועה דא תורה שבעל פה, that is: the words "Whom shall he then teach knowledge?" signify the written law, but the words "And to whom shall he make the heard thing understood?" indicate the oral law. In the same manner, in the small Jalkut Rubéni, under the title Tóra numero 18, on the words of Gen 49:15, "And he saw the rest, and the land, that it was pleasant," the following is written: וירא מנוחה כי טוב זו תורה שבכתב ואת הארץ כי נעמה, that is: the words "And he saw the rest" signify the written law, and the words "And the land, that it was pleasant" indicate the oral law. And in the Jalkut Shimóni on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, at fol. 165, col. 2, on the words of Isa 5:24, "For they have despised the law of the LORD of hosts, and scorned the word of the Holy One of Israel," the following is read: כי מאסו את תורת ה' צבאות זו התורה שבכתב ואת אמרת קדוש ישראל נאצו זו: תורה שבעל פה, that is: the words "For they have despised the law of the LORD of hosts" signify the written law, and the words "And scorned the word of the Holy One of Israel" signify the oral law.

In the preface of the book Menoráth (or Menôras) hammâôr, over the words of Deut 8:3, "That He might make you know that man does not live by bread alone, but by everything that proceeds from the mouth of the Lord," the following is written: בספרי פרשת עקב תשמעון דרשו כי לא על הלחם לבדו זה מקרא: כי על כל מוצא פי יי' אלו הלכות ואגדות. ושם נאמר רצונך להכיר את מי שאמר והיה העולם למוד אגדה שמתוך כך אתה מכירו ותדבק בדרכיו; that is: In the book Siphre, in the Parascha Ekeftishmeûn (which begins at Deut 7:12), these words are expounded as follows: (The words) "that he does not live by bread alone" signify the Bible. (And the words) "but by everything that proceeds from the mouth of the Lord" signify the Halachóth, or legal decisions, and the Aggadóth, that is, the entertaining narratives (and fables that stand in the Talmud). There it is also said: If you wish to know Him who said that the world should exist (that is, GOD), then learn the Aggáda, or merry narratives, for through them you learn to know Him and will cleave to His ways. Furthermore, immediately following the foregoing passage, over the words of Deut 32:13-14, "He made him ride over the heights of the earth, and he ate the produce of the fields, and He made him suck honey from the rock and oil from the flinty stone: butter from the cows and milk from the sheep, with the fat of lambs, with the fat of the kidneys of wheat. And you drank the pure blood of the grape," the following is read: בספרי פרשת האזינו ירכיבהו על במותי ארץ זו תורה שנאמר ה' קנני ראשית וגם דרכו וגו'. ו'ואכל תנובות שדי זו מקרא. ויניקהו דבש מסלע זו משנה. ושמן מחלמיש צור זו תלמוד. חמאת בקר וחלב צאן על חלב כרים אלו קל וחומר וגזירה שוה היקין ותשובות. עם חלב כליות חטה אלו הלכות שהם גופי מקרא. ודם ענב תשתה חמר אלו הגדות שמושכין לבו חין; של אדם כיון; that is: It also stands written in the book Siphre, in the Parascha Haazinu, as follows: (the words) "He made him ride over the heights of the earth" signify the Law (namely, the five books of Moses), as it is said (Prov 8:22): "The Lord possessed me at the beginning of His ways, etc." (The words) "And he ate the produce of the fields" signify the Bible. (The words) "And He made him suck honey from the rock" signify the Mishnah. (The words) "And oil from the flinty stone" signify the Talmud (that is, the Gemara). (The words) "Butter from the cows and milk from the sheep, with the fat of lambs" signify the argumenta à minori ad majus, vel à majori ad minus, & à pari, that is, the proofs from the lesser to the greater, or from the greater to the lesser and from the equal, as well as the legal rulings and the responses. (The words) "With the fat of the kidneys of wheat" signify the Halachóth, or Decisiones, and legal decisions, which are the principal substance of the Bible. (The words) "And you drank the pure blood of the grape" signify the Haggadóth, or merry narratives, which draw a person's heart to them as wine does. That the Haggadóth also belong to the Law of Moses is likewise to be found in the little book Othióth Rabbi Akkiva, at the end of the letter Samech.

In the Talmudic tractate Berachoth (or Berachos), the following is also found at fol. 5. col. 1.: מאי דכתיב ואתנה לך את לוחות האבן והתורה והמצוה זו משנה אשר כתבתי אלו נביאים וכתובים עשרת הדברות תורה זה מקרא והמצוה זו משנה אשר כתבתי אלו נביאים וכתובים מסיני that is: What is the meaning of that which is written (Exod 24:12): "That I will give you the tablets of stone, and the law, and the commandments, which I have written, that you shall teach them"? The tablets signify the Ten Commandments; the law points to the Bible; the commandments signify the Mishnah; (the words) "which I have written" bear a meaning pointing to the Prophets and the Hagiographa (that is, the holy written books, namely the Psalms, the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon, the Book of Ruth, the Lamentations of Jeremiah, the Book of Job, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and the two Books of Chronicles, all of which are called Kethuvim, or Hagiographa); the words "that you shall teach them" signify the Gemara; and this teaches us that all these books were given to Moses on Mount Sinai.

Since now the Talmud is called the oral law, I must also explain here the reason why it was not given in written form just as well as the Law of Moses, and concerning this, the following is written in the Rabboth (or Rabbos) in the forty-seventh Parascha, in Shemoth (or Shemos) rabba, fol. 131. col. 2., on the words of Exod 34:27, "Write these words, for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with you and with Israel":

that is: At the time when the holy blessed God had revealed Himself on Mount Sinai to give the law to the Israelites, He communicated it to Moses in the order of the Bible, the Mishna, the Talmud (that is, the Gemara, which, as already noted, is sometimes called the Talmud by itself), and the Aggada (that is, the entertaining narratives and fables), just as it is written (Exod 20:1): "And God spoke all these words"; even that which a disciple asks his master, God communicated to Moses at that same time. After Moses had learned it from the mouth of God, and God had commanded him to teach it to the Israelites, Moses said to Him: "O Lord of the world, I will write it down for them." But God answered him: "I do not wish to give it to them in written form, because I know full well that the idolaters will rule over them and take it away from them, and they will also be despised among the idolaters. The Bible I will give them in writing, but the Mishna, the Talmud, and the Aggada they shall receive from Me orally, so that when the nations of the world come and make them subject to them, they may be distinguished from them." He said to the prophet: "If I commit My greater part of the law to writing for him (namely, for the people of Israel), they will be regarded as strangers. What then shall I do with them: I will give them the Bible in writing, but the Mishna, the Talmud, and the Aggada orally." The words "Write these words" signify the Bible, and the words "for after the tenor of these words" signify the Mishna and the Talmud, which make a distinction between Israel and the idolaters. Something quite similar is also to be found in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, number 405, though in fewer words, and further material on this subject can also be found in the book called Sepher maor hakkaton, fol. 48. col. 3. 4., in the Parascha Vajakbel.

It is, however, a thoroughly absurd matter that the Jews wish to prove from this that an oral law exists, because it is written in Exod 34:27: "Write these words"; datin al pi haddevarim haëlle caratti ittechâ berith (or beris), that is, as the Jews interpret it, "According to the mouth of these words I have made a covenant with you," from which they wish to force the conclusion that an oral law must be understood here, since al pi means "according to the mouth" or "through the mouth." I answer them, however, that al pi does indeed mean "according to the mouth" or "through the mouth" where mention is made of something that has a mouth, literally or figuratively: thus it stands in Gen 45:21, Al pi Pharo, that is, "According to the mouth (that is, the command) of Pharaoh"; and in Num 4:27, Al pi Abaron, that is, "According to the mouth of Aaron"; and in Deut 17:6, Al pi schenaim edim, that is, "According to the mouth of two witnesses": and there are many such passages in Scripture. Where, however, the discussion concerns something that has no mouth, al pi means simply "according to," as it is taken in Lev 27:18, where Al pi baschanim hannottharoth is read, which means "According to the remaining years," and not "According to the mouth of the remaining years," for the years have no mouth. In this sense al pi is also used in Lev 27:8 and Num 26:56 and Deut 17:10 and Prov 22:6, as well as in Amos 6:5. Since words have no mouth, the interpretation of the Jews is not only false but also utterly foolish.

To return to the reason why the Talmud was also not given in written form: in the Sepher Juchasin fol. 160, col. 1, the following is read concerning this: לא נכתבה התורה שבעל פה להיות כי ארוכה מארץ מדה לכן כתב הקב"ה זכרון המצות בקצור בתורה שבכתב ופירושהו בעל פה. ועוד טעם אחר אמרו בפרקי רבי אליעזר מפני שראה הקב"ה שעתידין האומות להעתיק התורה שנכתב לכן מסר למשה סימנים בעל פה: that is, the Oral Law was not written down because its measure is longer than the earth; therefore the holy and blessed GOD described the reminder of the commandments briefly (and in few words), but gave the interpretation of them orally. In the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer yet another reason is mentioned, namely, that GOD saw that the nations of the world would translate the written Law (into their languages), and therefore He gave Moses oral signs. Rabbi Isaac also writes about this in his book Ammude Haggola fol. 39 as follows: אל תחשוב כי עיקר התורה בכתב כי ארכה עיקרה אותה שבעל פה ועל תורה שבעל פה נכרת ברית דכתיב כי על פי הדברים האלה כרתי אתך ברית והן איברי של הקב"ה כי היה גלוי לפניו: שהיו ישראל עתידין להיות גולין בין האומות ויעתיקו הגוים ספריהם לפיכך לא רצה שיכתב: that is, do not think that the written Law is the foundation or the principal work; on the contrary, the Oral Law is the foundation, and the covenant (with GOD) was made on account of the oral, as it is written (Exod 34:27): "For according to the mouth of these words I have made a covenant with you"; and these are the treasure of the holy and blessed God, for it was known to Him that the Israelites would go into exile among the nations and that the Gentiles would translate their books, and therefore He did not wish that it should be written down. Concerning this, the book Ma'or katon fol. 48, col. 3, 4 in the Parascha Vajakhel may also be consulted.

The obstinate Jews are greatly mistaken with their oral law, in their claim that it was given by GOD alongside the written law on Mount Sinai, for this runs directly contrary to the Law of Moses, in which it is written as follows in Exod 24:3-4: "And Moses came and told the people all the words of the LORD and all the ordinances; and all the people answered with one voice and said: all the words which the LORD has spoken we will do. And Moses wrote down all the words of the LORD." From these words it is as clear as the sun that Moses, when he came down from Mount Sinai, presented to the people of Israel the entire Law which he had received from God there, and thereafter wrote down all the words that God had spoken with him. Now if he recorded everything that he had heard, how then can there be an oral law that was not supposed to have been written down? The Talmud is therefore nothing other than a work invented by the rabbis and consisting entirely of human ordinances, in which express violation has been committed against the commandment of Deut 4:2: "You shall not add anything to what I command you, nor shall you take anything away from it."

Even during the time of the Old Testament, whenever a dispute arose or certain abuses crept in, the controversy was settled and the abuse addressed solely from the written Law. For when Jehoshaphat restored the decayed religion, which had been defiled with superstition, he commanded the princes, priests, and Levites to go throughout the whole land of Judah and around all the cities, to teach the people from the book of the Law, which they carried with them. Likewise, when during the reign of King Ahaz many godless things were in full swing and soothsayers and interpreters of signs were consulted for counsel, though one ought to have held fast to God, the prophet Isaiah, as is to be read in his eighth chapter, vv. 19-20, directed them to the Law of Moses. Similarly, when during the godless reign of King Manasseh and his son Amon the book of the Law was no longer heeded and was entirely lost, the pious King Josiah, who had entered into the reign after his father Amon, in order to bring the fallen and strayed people back onto the right path, had the book of the Law publicly read aloud, the very book which the high priest Hilkiah had found in the temple, as is to be read in 2 Kgs 22:8, whereof 2 Kgs 23:2-3 thus stands written: And the king went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, priests and prophets, and all the people both small and great. And one read before their ears all the words of the book of the covenant, which was found in the house of the Lord. And the king stood by a pillar, and made a covenant before the Lord, that they should walk after the Lord, and keep His commandments, testimonies, and statutes, with all their heart and with all their soul, that they might confirm the words of this covenant, which were written in this book; and all the people entered into the covenant. Here it is plainly to be seen that this covenant was made in such a manner that only that which stood written in the book of the Law was to be observed and kept. Now, if only the written Law was to be heeded, I rightly ask: where, then, had the oral Law, so highly praised at all times by the rabbis, remained at that point, that no thought whatsoever was given to it? Certainly, if one had previously existed, the pious King Josiah would also have made mention of it; but since this did not happen, it is undeniable that at that time, and before it, none existed, and that the Jewish church held solely to the written Law and knew of no other.

It is also read in the eleventh verse of the cited 22nd chapter of the second book of Kings that King Josiah tore his garments when he heard the words of the book of the law, which happened because he perceived the terrible and grievous sins that had been committed, which he had not properly understood before. Now if the written law was entirely forgotten and lost during the time of the godless kings Manasseh and Amon, so that afterward, during the reign of King Josiah, only a single copy of it was found again in the temple, as is recorded in 2 Kgs 22:11, then what must have become of the oral law, if there ever was one, which was supposed to have been preserved only in memory? It must surely have been forgotten far sooner than the written law. But if it was forgotten, who then restored it? And since it would have had to be revealed anew, let a Jew tell me to whom such a revelation was made. If it was not disclosed to anyone at that time, I would very much like to know where they got it from.

But we also read in the 8th chapter of the book of Joshua, vv. 34-35, that Joshua had all the words of the law, the blessing and the curse, proclaimed just as they were written in the book of the law, and that there was not a single word that Moses had commanded which he did not have proclaimed before the entire congregation of Israel; from which it may reasonably be concluded that at that time as well there was no oral law, since it is stated here that Joshua had all the words of the law proclaimed just as they were written in the book of the law, and it follows from this that not a single word that Moses had commanded was left unproclaimed; by which it is made clear that the written law was entirely complete, since everything that was proclaimed was contained therein. What need, then, would anyone have had for an oral one?

Furthermore, it is read in Deut 31:9-12 that Moses, after he had written the law, gave it to the priests and commanded that it should be proclaimed every seven years, at the Feast of Tabernacles, before all Israel, so that they might learn and keep it, fear their God, and do all the words of this law: from which it follows that they were to be instructed solely from such written law; and that it was sufficiently complete to instruct them in true fear of God: and no mention is made therein of any oral law. Beyond this, it is read in Deut 30:10: "For the Lord will turn and rejoice over you for your good, as He rejoiced over your fathers, because you obey the voice of your God, to keep His commandments and statutes which are written in the book of this law." And in 2 Kgs 17:36-37 it is written that it was said to the children of Israel: "The Lord, who brought you out of the land of Egypt with great power and an outstretched arm, Him you shall fear, Him you shall worship, and to Him you shall sacrifice. And the ordinances, statutes, laws, and commandments which He has written for you, these you shall keep." Now if God rejoiced over those who kept His commandments and statutes written in the law of Moses, and commanded that only the written commandments should be observed, then surely no oral law can have been given by Him: for if He had given one, and indeed one which, according to the teaching of the Jews, would be held in higher regard than the written one, He would certainly also have commanded that it be kept. In addition, it is also well worth noting that the written law of Moses was sufficiently complete and clear for the Israelite people, to which nothing was to be added, as can be seen in Deut 4:1-2, 8 and 12:32: therefore it is read in Ps 19:8: "The law of the Lord is perfect." And in v. 9 it is taught there: "The commandments of the Lord are pure and enlighten the eyes." If this is indeed the case, then no oral law was necessary.

For this reason, those Jews who are called קראים Karrait, that is, Karaites, from קרא Kara, which means Scripture, because they recognize the written Law alone as God's Word, are to be regarded as far better and more rational than the other sort of Jews, who are called רבנים Rabbanim, or Rabbanites, because they accept not only the written Law but also the Talmud and the Rabbinic teachings as God's Word. For the Karaites, of whom there are none in Germany but many to be found in Turkey, reject all Rabbinic ordinances and teachings, as is fitting, and mock them. They are, however, regarded by the Rabbanites as heretics on this account, hated in the most extreme manner, and not tolerated at all in their company. An example of this occurred here in Frankfurt am Main in the past year 1696, when an Oriental Karaite, with whom I myself spoke, came into the Jewish quarter in a wretched state; the Jews had contributed something to him out of pity, believing him to be a Rabbanite. But as soon as they had learned from him that he was a Karaite, he was forced to leave the quarter amid the greatest humiliation, and not one of them would have looked at him again.

The Rabbis also teach that God the Lord made a covenant with the Israelites solely on account of the oral law; for this reason it is written in the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 60. col. 2. as follows: אמר רבי יוחנן לא כרת הק"ה ברית עם ישראל אלא בשביל דברים שבעל פה שנאמר כי על פי הדברים האלה כרתי אתך ברית ואת ישראל: That is, Rabbi Jochanan said that the holy blessed God made the covenant with Israel for no other reason than on account of the oral words (that is, on account of the oral law), as it is said (Exod 34:27): For according to the mouth (that is, according to the content) of these words I have made a covenant with you and with Israel. This can also be read in the book Cad bakkemach fol. 77. col. 3. and in the book Ammude baggola fol. 39. However, He is said to have had to compel them to accept the law, for in the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara fol. 2. col. 2., concerning the words of Exod 19:17, "And they (the Israelites) stood at the foot of the mountain," it is written as follows: אמר רב דימי בר חמא מלמד שכפה הקדוש ברוך הוא הר כגיגית על ישראל ואמר להם אם אתם מקבלין את התורה מוטב ואם לאו שם תהא קבורתכם: That is, Raf Dimi, son of Chama, said: this passage teaches that the holy blessed God covered the mountain over Israel like a tub, and said to them: if you accept the law, it is well; but if not, your grave shall be beneath it. This is also read in the Talmudic tractate Schabbath fol. 88. col. 1. and in the Jalkut Schimoni on the five books of Moses, numero 283. fol. 89. col. 1., as well as on Isaiah, numero 416. fol. 50. col. 4. And in Jonathan's Chaldean translation, the aforementioned seventeenth verse of Exod 19 is rendered as follows: ואפק משה ית עמא לקדמות שכינתא דיי 'מן משריתא ומן יד תלש מארי עלמא ית טורא ואקפה באוירה הוה זיג הי כאספקלריא ואתעתדו תחותי טורא: that is, And Moses led the people out of the camp to meet the majesty of the Lord; and immediately the Lord of the world tore the mountain out and lifted it up into the air, and it (the mountain) shone like a mirror; but they stood beneath the mountain.

Rabbi Bechai writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parascha Vajischma Jethro, fol. 87. col. 1. 2., on the words of Exod 19:8, "All that the LORD has spoken, we will do": that God had to compel the Israelites to accept the oral law, but not the written law, in the manner described, where his words read as follows: הינו וקבלו עליהם עול התורה והמצות ועשו כן ברצונם ומה שדרשו רבותינו ז"ל כפה עליהם הר כגיגית ואמר להם אם אתם מקבלים את התורה מוטב ואם לאו שם תהא קבורתכם על התורה שבעל פה היה שיש בה אזהרות ועונשים וכמה סייגים וגדרים אבל התורה שבכתב קבלו הודו מרענם בחפץ גדול בשמחה וטוב לבב ולא הוצרכו כפה that is, they made their confession and took upon themselves the yoke of the law and the commandments, and did so willingly. But the fact that our rabbis, of blessed memory, report that He (namely God) covered the mountain over them like a tub and said to them: "If you accept the law, it is well; but if not, your grave shall be beneath it"; this occurred on account of the oral law, which contains warnings and punishments within it, and has many hedges and fences around it (that is, many burdensome commandments which surround the commandments found in the written law like fences, so that one does not transgress them); but as for the written law, all knowingly confessed it with great eagerness, with joy, and with good courage, and had no need of any covering (or of any compulsion, for כפה, Cafa, also means to compel).

Regarding the place where Moses is said to have received the Law, the highly rational rabbis teach that this occurred in heaven, but that Moses had a difficult time getting up there. Concerning this, the following is written in the great Jalkut Rubeni, in the Parascha Mischpa-(tim), fol. 107. col. 2. 3., from the book Pirke bechaloth, and in the book Pesikta rabbetha fol. 39. col. 2. 3. 4.: בשעה שעלה משה למרום בא ענן ורבץ כנגדו ולא היה מדעיה יודע אם לרכוב עליו אם לאחוז בו מיד פתח הענן פי ונכנס משה בתוכו והיה מהלך ברקיע כאדם שמהלך בארץ שכן כתוב בתורתו ויבא משה בתוך הענן פגע בן קמואל שעורך המלאך הממונה על י"ב אלף מלאכי חבלה שהם עומדים על שערי רקיע גער בו משה ואמר לו מה לך בן עמרם לבוא למקום מלאכי אש אמר לו משה אני לא בעצמי באתי אלא ברשותו של הק"ב לקבל התורה ולהורידה לישראל כיון שלא הניחו לילך המחזי משה פצע א' לאבדו מן העולם והיה משה מהלך ברקיע עד שפגע בו הדרניאל המלאך אמר עליו על הדרניאל המלאך שהוא גבוה מחכמי ס' רבוא פרסאות וכל דבור ודבור שיוצא מפיו י"ב אלפים ברקים של אש יוצאים בדבור אחד וכיון שראה למשה גער בו אמר לו מה לך בן עמרם במקום קדושים עליונים כיון ששמע משה הקול נבהל משה מפניו וזלגו עיניו דמעות ובקש ליפול מן הענן מיד נתגלגלו רחמיו של הקב"ה ואמר להדרניאל מיום שבראתי אתכם בעלי מריבה אתם בתחלה כשבקשתי למברות את האדם עשיתם קטיגוריא לפני ואמרתם לי מה אנוש כי תזכרנו וגוי אנו בכס ושרפתי אתכם כיתות כתות באצבע קטנה ועכשיו בריכים אתם עם נאמן ביתי שהעליתיו אתו הנה לקבל התורה להוריד לבני בחיי שאלמלא הם שאר ישראל מקבלים אין לכם דירה ברקיע כיון ששמע הדרניאל כך מיד חרד עמדו לפני הקב"ה ואמר לפניו רב"ש גלוי וידוע לפניך שלא ידעתי שבא ברשותך הנה עכשיו אהיה לו שלוחו ואלך לפניו כתלמיד לפני רבו מיד רץ וכפף הדרניאל את עצמו והלך לפני משה כתלמיד לפני רבו עד שהגיע אצל אשו של סנדלפון ואמר ליה הדרניאל למשה לך שוב שאיני יכול לעכב עצמי מפני אשו של סנדלפון שלא ישרפני כיון שראה משה סנדלפון מיד נבהל ונחפו ליפול מן הענן וזלגו עיניו דמעות ובקש רחמים לפני הקב"ה ונעהו מהב חיתתן של ישראל ירד הקב"ה בעצמו מכסא הכבוד ועמד לפני משה עד שעבר מלפני אשו של סנדלפון ועל אותו שעה כתיב ויעבור ה' על פניו ויקרא וגו' כיון שעבר משה מסנדלפון פגע בו ריגזון נהר של אש הנחלים שלן שורפים מלאכי השרת ובו טובלים כלם ויתרו מתחת כסא הכבוד מזיעות החיות וכו' מיד הקב"ה העבירו ופגע בו גלג"וד המכונה חי"אל ופו' וכיון שואוואג

That is: At the time when Moses was to ascend on high (that is, into heaven), a cloud came and lay down before him; but Moses our teacher, upon whom be peace, did not know whether he should ride upon it or hold fast to it. Immediately the cloud opened its mouth, and Moses stepped inside it and walked through the firmament just as a man walks upon the earth; for thus it is written in the Law (Exod 24:18): And Moses went into the midst of the cloud. But when the gatekeeper Kemuel, the angel who is set over twelve thousand angels of destruction that stand at the gates of the firmament, encountered him, he addressed him with harsh words and said to him: What business do you, son of Amram, have going to the place of the angels of fire? Moses answered him: I have not come of my own accord, but with the permission of the Holy and Blessed God, to receive the Law and to bring it down to the Israelites. But when he would not let him pass, Moses struck him so that he received a wound, thereby destroying him from the world; and Moses continued through the firmament until the angel Hadarniel encountered him. Of this angel Hadarniel it is said that he is sixty times ten thousand (or six hundred thousand) miles taller than his companion, and that with every single word that goes forth from his mouth, twelve thousand fiery lightning bolts flash. Now when he had seen Moses, he addressed him with rough words and said to him: What business do you, son of Amram, have at the place of the higher holy ones? When Moses heard the voice, he was terrified before him, and tears flowed from his eyes, and he was about to fall down from the cloud. But the Holy and Blessed God had compassion on him and said to Hadarniel: From the day that I created you, you have been quarrelsome. When I first wished to create man, you brought a complaint before Me and said to Me: What is man, that You are mindful of him? For that reason I was angered at you and burned you in heaps with My little finger; and now you quarrel with him who is faithful in My house, whom I have caused to come here to receive the Law and to bring it down to My chosen children, for if it were not for the Law that the Israelites receive, you would have no dwelling in the firmament. When Hadarniel heard this, he immediately presented himself before the Holy and Blessed God and said to Him: Lord of the world, it is known and manifest before You that I did not know he had come here with Your permission; now I will be his messenger and go before him, just as a disciple goes before his master. Thereupon Hadarniel ran straightway and bowed himself and went before Moses, just as a disciple goes before his master, until he came to the fire of the angel Sandalfon; and there he said to Moses: Go back, for I cannot remain on account of the fire of Sandalfon, lest he burn me. When Moses caught sight of Sandalfon, he was immediately terrified and trembled, so that he was about to fall from the cloud, and tears flowed from his eyes; and when he had prayed to God for mercy, He heard him, on account of the great love He bears toward Israel, and descended Himself from the throne of glory and stood before Moses until he had passed by the fire of Sandalfon; and of that very hour it is written (Exod 34:6): And the Lord passed before his face and called. Now when Moses had passed by Sandalfon, he came to the Rigjon, the river of fire, whose coals burn the ministering angels and in which they all bathe, which flows from beneath the throne of glory from the sweat of the living creatures, etc.; but God led him straight past it. After that, Galzur encountered him, who is surnamed Rasiel, etc., and Moses trembled when he caught sight of him. And when God had taken him and led him past, a great host of the angels of terror encountered him, who surround the throne of glory and are the strongest and mightiest of all the angels, and they wished to burn him with the hot breath of their mouths (because he sought to fetch the Law, which they had wished to keep for themselves in heaven, and against which they set themselves); but God immediately spread the radiance of His glory over him and said to him: Give them an answer (since they want the Law). Then he said to them: It is written (in the Law): I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt (Exod 20:2): have you then served in Egypt and gone out free, that you have need of the Law? It is written: You shall have no other gods (Exod 20:3): have you then any idolatry among you, that you stand in need of the Law? It is written: You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain (Exod 20:7): have you then any commerce among you, that you have need to swear an oath? It is written: Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy (Exod 20:8): is there then any labor among you, that you must rest on the Sabbath? It is written: Honor your father and your mother (Exod 20:12): have you then a father and a mother, that you are bound to honor them? It is written: You shall not kill (Exod 20:13): is there then any bloodshed among you, that you have need of the Law, etc.? It is written: You shall not commit adultery (Exod 20:14): are there then wives among you, that you stand in need of the Law? It is written: You shall not steal (Exod 20:15): are there then any goods in the firmament, that you have need of the Law? It is written: You shall not bear false witness (Exod 20:16): is there then false testimony among you, that you must necessarily have the Law? It is written: You shall not covet (Exod 20:17): are there then houses, fields, and vineyards among you, that you must necessarily have the Law? Thereupon all the ministering angels drew back from the opinion they had formed and gave their assent to the words of the Holy and Blessed God and said: O Lord our Ruler, how excellent is Your name in all the earth, You who have set Your majesty above the heavens (Ps 8:2); and God taught Moses the entire Law in forty days. But when he was descending again and saw how terrible the angels were, and beheld the angels of fear, the angels of sweat, the angels of trembling, and the angels of shaking, a fear immediately came upon him and he forgot it all again within an hour. But God straightway called Jefifja, the angel of the Law, who gave him (namely Moses) the Law, well ordered and preserved in every respect; and all the ministering angels became his friends, and each one gave him something of medicinal matters, as well as the secret of the names that come forth from each and every Parascha (or division of the Law), together with all their usages (how one should employ and make use of them); and thus it is said (Ps 68:19): You have ascended on high, You have led captivity captive, You have received gifts. The angel of death also communicated something to him, for it is written (Num 16:47, or according to some editions, Num 17:12): And he offered the incense and made atonement for the people. That same distinguished usage (that is, the burning of incense with the names that, as mentioned, come from the Law), which the angels had given him through Jefifja, the angel of the Law, and through Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, he had passed on to Eliezer, and Eliezer to his son Phinehas, who was a great and excellent priest. These are the words from the great Jalkut Rubeni, and this fable also appears in the Talmudic tractate Shabbath, fol. 88. col. 2. and fol. 89. col. 1., and in the Maase Book in the third chapter, though with fewer words. Hence in Midrash Mishle fol. 73. col. 1. one reads: מי עלה שמים וירד, that is: Who has ascended into heaven and come down again? (which words stand at Prov 30:4): This is Moses (who did such a thing). And in the Sepher Minbagim one reads at fol. 4. col. 2. the following: המנהג הזה דבספריא ודרש מן המעמד יום: שני וחמישי דעני אלה רבנין ורוז חס דתולסמנהו וזאל לוס דהוא גגנו ותא דיה חדות השכינה וואי מם חיק רהענגן וזהרן וזיי זויר דו ישראל התבנן גיוונשט דס עלו זוהי חי חיו פח חומנס וחיר הראב קוון. That is: On Monday and Thursday one prays more than on other days, for Moses our teacher ascended into heaven on Thursday and received the tablets, and the sin that Israel made the calf was forgiven him; but on Monday he came back down again. That Moses is said to have learned the entire Law in forty days and then forgotten it again, and thereafter to have learned it once more, is also recorded in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 107. col. 1., in the Parascha Mischpatim, where it is reported that Rabbi Ishmael said: סח לי מטטרון שר הפנים בשעה שעלה משה למרום וכו' למד משה התורה כשבעים פנים של ע' לשון וכן נביאים וכתובים ובארבעים יום למד משה הכל וכשהיה אחת שכינה שלח לו במתנה: that is: Metatron, the Prince of the Presence, told me that at the time when Moses ascended on high, etc., he learned the Law in seventy modes of the seventy languages, and likewise the Prophets and the Hagiographa (by which the remaining books of the Holy Scripture of the Old Testament are understood), and grasped everything in forty days, but forgot it again within an hour; and God sent Jelfifa, the Prince of the Law, to him, with whom he learned it again, so that it was given to him as a gift.

The impertinent rabbis also raise the question of how Moses, during those forty days that he spent with God in heaven, knew when it was day or night. On this matter, the following is written in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 116, col. 1, in the Parashah Tissa: ויהי שם עם יי' ארבעים יום וארבעים לילה מנין היה משה יודע אימתי יום ואימתי לילה כשהיה הק"ב מלמדו תורה שבכתב היה יודע שהוא יום וכשלמדו תורה שבעל פה היה יודע שהוא לילה שבוהו הלילה שיוין לפני הק"ב שנאמר ונהורא עמיה שרי ובתוב גם חשך לא יחשיך וגו' ועוד דרשו בשניה רואה הבוכבים המזלות בורעים ומשתחווים לפני הק"ב היה יודע שהוא יום וכשהיה רואה גלגל חמה בורע ומשתחוה לפני הק"ב היה יודע שהוא לילה שנ' וצבא השמים לך משתחווים: that is, in the Midrash (the following stands over the words of Exod 34:28): And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights. From where did Moses know when it was day and when it was night? When the Holy One, blessed be He, taught him the Written Law, he knew that it was day; but when He instructed him in the Oral Law, he knew that it was night. For day and night are equal before God, as it is said (Dan 2:22): And the light dwells with Him. So it is also written (Ps 139:12): The darkness does not darken before You either. Furthermore, it is read in the Midrash: when he saw that the stars and the planets had bowed and worshipped before God, he knew that it was day; but when he saw that the orb of the sun had bowed and worshipped before God, he knew that it was night, as it is said (Neh 9:6): And the host of heaven worships You. This is also found in the Yalkut Shimoni on the Psalms, numero 672, fol. 96, col. 2, and on the Five Books of Moses, numero 406, fol. 111, col. 1; in which latter place, however, the following is additionally included: כשהיה רואה למלאכים מקלסין אותו בקדוש היה יודע שהוא יום ובשעה שהיה רואה אותן מקלסין בברוך היה יודע שהוא לילה. דבר אחר כשהיה רואה אותן ששוחקין מן להזכיר לישראל דהיה יודע שהוא יום וכשהיה יורד להם היה יודע שהוא לילה: that is, when he saw that the angels praised God with the word "Holy," he knew that it was day; but when he saw that they praised Him with the word "Blessed," he knew that it was night. In another manner (this also came to pass): when he saw that they (namely, the angels) were grinding the manna in order to send it down to the Israelites, he knew that it was day; but when the manna had come down, he knew that it was night. All of this is also to be found in the Midrash Tillim, fol. 18, col. 3, on Ps 19.

Regarding Mount Sinai, upon which the Law was given to Moses, Rabbi Eliezer teaches in his chapters, in the forty-first chapter, that this mountain ascended into heaven, where his words read as follows: ירידה השישית שירד לפני סיני שנאמר וירד יי 'על הר סיני ופי המדבר נפתח ועלה עליון ופתח השמים ועלה ההר למרום ונתלה על ישראל כמו סוכה ומקומו נתלש מהר סיני וכסא הכבוד הונח על ההר that is: The sixth time that God came down from heaven was when He descended upon Mount Sinai, as it is said (Exod 19:20): "And the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai." On the sixth day of the month of May, God had revealed Himself to Israel upon Mount Sinai, and the mountain was torn from its place, and after the heavens had opened, the peak of the mountain entered into heaven, and a darkness (or a dark and thick cloud) covered the mountain, but God sat upon His throne, and His feet stood upon the darkness, as it is said (2 Sam 22:10): "He bowed the heavens and came down, and darkness was under His feet." On the other hand, it is reported in the book Pesikta sotarta, in the Parashah Vaëthchannán, fol. 67, col. 4, that heaven came down upon Mount Sinai, where, concerning the words of Deut 4:36, "From heaven He made you hear His voice, that He might instruct you, and upon earth, etc.," the following is written: מלמד שהרכין הקב"ה שמי השמים העליונים על הר סיני ודבר עם ישראל: that is: This teaches us that the holy and blessed God caused the highest heaven to come down upon Mount Sinai, and spoke with Israel from heaven. Thus it is also said (2 Sam 22:10): "He bowed the heavens and came down."

Regarding the nature of the Jewish oral law, the Talmud, it is apparent almost everywhere therein how much the Talmudic doctors and teachers disagreed among themselves, in that one would hold a thing to be clean while another held it unclean, one permitted while another forbade, one considered it right while another considered it wrong. The cause of such contention is said to derive from the fact that Moses, as may be read in Num 20:11, struck the rock with his staff so that the water flowed out. Concerning this, the following is read in the book Les arjeh, fol. 100, col. 4: אלמלא לא חכה משה רבינו עליו השלום: that is: Had Moses our teacher, upon whom be peace, not struck the rock, there would be no contention in Israel, and everything would have a clear and settled ruling. And at fol. 101, col. 1, the following is written there concerning the words of Jer 23:29, "Is not my word like a hammer that shatters rock?": ד"ל שעכשו נדב': חותה הם הכל ניצוצות שבאים במו פטיש שיש הרבה פירושים לתורה זה גרם סלע ד"ל הכאה הסלע, that is, "This signifies that the words of the law are now all sparks that come, as it were, from a hammer; but that the law has many interpretations is the fault of the rock, that is, the striking of the rock is responsible for the fact that the disagreements and interpretations concerning the law have been so greatly multiplied." After this, the following continues there: ועקר מריבה הנה מר"ע הה הכה הסלע ובעבור הכאת הסלע נעשה מחלוקת בישראל בפירוש התורה זה מתיר וזה אוסר זה טהור וזה טמא, that is, "On account of the water of strife, Moses our teacher (upon whom be peace) struck the rock, and on account of this striking of the rock, a contention arose in Israel concerning the interpretation of the law, so that one permits a thing while another forbids it; one holds something to be unclean while another holds it to be clean." And in the Jalkut chadasch, under the title Torah, fol. 169, col. 4, numero 33, the following is written on this subject from the book Tikkune Sohar: את משה את הסלע היו לומדים את התורה בלי עמל בלא קושיות ובלא מחלוקת אבל משום דכתיב ויד את הסלע ולא ירדו דק טיפין טיפין לכך לומדי התורה הם בפטיש יפוצץ סלע ואין הלכה פסוקה דק טיפין טיפין, that is, "Had Moses not struck the rock, one would have learned the law without toil, without objections, and without contention; but because it is written (Num 20:11): 'And he struck the rock,' and the water ran down only drop by drop, those who study the law are therefore like a hammer that shatters a rock, and there is no clear and settled ruling, but it proceeds only drop by drop." The same is also to be found in the book Megalle amykkoth (or amykkos), fol. 20, col. 2, in the seventy-fourth Ofan. Concerning such contentions, the following is likewise read in the Talmudic tractate Sora, fol. 47, col. 2, and in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 88, col. 2: משרבו תלמידי שמאי והלל שלא שימשו כל צרכן רבו מחלוקות בישראל ונעשית תורה לשתי תורות, that is, "After the disciples of Shammai and Hillel multiplied, who did not serve as they necessarily ought to have done, the contentions in Israel increased, and the law was made, as it were, into a twofold law." But in the Talmudic tractate Cholin, fol. 7, col. 1, these disagreements are attributed to pride, where it is read: משרבו וזחיחי לבב

Notwithstanding the fact that such disputes run directly contrary to one another, and thus one party must necessarily be in the wrong, the rabbis nevertheless teach that they are all the Word of God, as can be seen in the Talmudic tractate Erúvin, fol. 13. col. 2., where it is written: אמר רבי אבא אמר שמואל שלש שנים נחלקו בית שמאי ובית הלל הללו אומרים הלכה כמותנו והללו אומרים הלכה כמותינו יצתה בת קול ואמרה אלו ואלו דברי אלהים חיים הן והלכה כבית הלל:

That is: Rabbi Abba says that Samuel said: For three years the house of Shammai and the house of Hillel were in dispute with one another, and when the one side had said that the ruling follows us, and the other side made it known that the ruling follows us, a voice came down from heaven and spoke: both (what Shammai and Hillel teach) are the Word of God, but the ruling follows the house of Hillel. Concerning this, the following is also to be found in the Rabboth (or Rabbos), in Bamidbar Rabba, in the fourteenth Parascha, fol. 210. col. 4., from the Talmudic tractate Chagiga, fol. 3. col. 2.: בעלי אסופות אלו: תלמידי חכמים שיושבין אסופות אסופות ועוסקין בתורה: הללו מטמאין והללו מטהרין הללו אוסרין והללו מתירין הללו פוסלין והללו מכשירין: שמא יאמר אדם היאך אני למד תורה מעתה ת"ל נתנו מרעה אחד אל אחד נתנן פרנס אחד אמרן מפי אדון כל המעשים ברוך הוא שנ' וידבר אלהים את כל הדברים האלה אף אתה עשה אזנך כאפרכסת וקנה לך לב שומע את דברי המטמאים ואת דברי המטהרים את דברי האוסרין ואת דברי המתירים את דברי הפוסלין ואת דברי המכשירין: That is: The men of the assemblies are the disciples of the wise, who stand assembled and study the Law: these declare a thing unclean, those declare it clean; these forbid it, those permit it; these hold it to be unlawful, those hold it to be lawful. But someone might say: since these hold a thing to be unclean while those hold it to be clean, these forbid it while those permit it, these declare it unlawful while those declare it lawful, how then am I to learn the Law? The text means to say this: these teachings are given by one Shepherd; one God gave them, one Sustainer or Ruler spoke them; they come from the mouth of the Lord of all works, the blessed God, as it is said (Exod 20:1): And God spoke all these words. So let your ears be like a funnel, and acquire for yourself a heart that is able to hear the words of those who declare a thing unclean and of those who declare it clean, the words of those who forbid and the words of those who permit, the words of those who declare something unlawful and the words of those who declare it lawful. So too it is written in the book Ammudé haSchifa, fol. 42. col. 1., under the title Ammud barevi'i, as follows: אף על פי שזה אוסר וזה מתיר אלו ואלו דברי אלהים חיים ויכולים שניהם להתקיים לעתיד that is: Although this one forbids something and that one permits the same thing, both are nevertheless the Word of God, and both can be confirmed in due time.

Indeed, they go so far as to claim that Moses received all the disputes found in the Talmud from God on Mount Sinai, as is reported in the Jalkut chadasch under the title Luchóth (or Luchos), number 74, fol. 114, col. 1, from the book Megillé amykkóth (or amykkos), fol. 20, col. 1, in the seventy-fourth Ofan, where the words read as follows: משה קבל תורה מסיני אפילו מחלוקת שמאי והלל גרמו קמלת: משה מסיני that is, Moses received the Law from (Mount) Sinai, including even the dispute between Schámmai and Hillel, which is indicated by the word משה Mósche (that is, Moses, namely through the letters M., Sch., and H., for when read backwards and forwards by Notárikon it yields Machalóket Schámmai, Hillel, haccól schámëü miSsinái, that is, the dispute of Schámmai and Hillel: all of this one has heard from Mount Sinai).

Further, they teach that the Law existed before the creation, and that Adam and some of his descendants knew it before it was given on Mount Sinai. That it existed before the creation of the world is taught by Rabbi Eliezer in his Chapters, in the 3rd chapter, with these words: שלא נברא עד שבעה דברים נבראו ואלו הן והתורה הגיהנם וגן עדן וכסא הכבוד ובית המקדש והתשובה ושמו של משיח. תורה מנין שנאמר יי' קנני ראשית דרכו קדם מפעליו מאז קדם דל קודם שלא נברא העולם. גיהנם מנין שנ' כי ערוך מאתמול תפתה מאתמול עד שלא נברא העולם. גן עדן מנין שנא' ויטע יי' אלהים גן בעדן מקדם עד שלא נברא העולם. כסא הכבוד מנין שנ' לכון כסאך מאז מאז עד שלא נברא העולם. בית המקדש מנין שנ' כסא כבוד מרום מראשון מראשון עד שלא נברא העולם. תשובה מנין שנ' בטרם הרים ילדו ותשב אנוש עד דכא עד שלא נברא העולם. שמו של משיח מנין שנ' לפני שמש ינון שמו וכתב אחד אומר ואתה בית לחם אפרתה צעיר להיות that is: Seven things were created before the world was created; and these are: the Law, Hell, Paradise, the Throne of Glory, the Temple, Repentance, and the Name of the Messiah. From where is the Law proven? Because it is said (Prov 8:22): "The Lord possessed me at the beginning of His ways, before His works, from that time" (when nothing yet existed), and the little word "before" signifies: before the world was created. From where is Hell proven? Because it is said (Isa 30:33): "For Tophet" (which signifies the hellish fire) "was prepared yesterday," and the word meithemol, that is, "yesterday," signifies as much as: before the world was created. From where is Paradise proven? Because it is said (Gen 2:8): "And God the Lord planted a garden in Eden, mikkedem," that is, "from eternity" (as Rabbi Eliezer wishes to understand it here, and as the word mikkedem is also taken in Hab 1:12, where it actually means "toward the east"), and the word mikkedem signifies: before the world was created. From where is the Throne of Glory proven? Because it is said (Ps 93:2): "From that time your throne stands firm," and "from that time" signifies: before the world was created. From where is the Temple proven? Because it is said (Jer 17:12): "A throne of glory, an eminence from the beginning," and the words "from the beginning" signify as much as: before the world was created. From where is Repentance proven? Because it is said (Ps 90:2-3): "Before the mountains were born" (that is, created) "etc., taschef enosch," that is (as it is here incorrectly understood): "You cause man to do repentance," and the word "before" signifies: before the world was created. From where is the Name of the Messiah proven? Because it is said (Ps 72:17): "His name was begotten before the sun." And another passage (Mic 5:2) states: "And you, Bethlehem Ephrata, are you too small to be among the thousands of Judah? And his goings forth are from the beginning, from eternity," before the world was created. This same thing is also read in the Talmudic tractate Pesachim fol. 54. col. 1. and in the tractate Nedarim fol. 39. col. 2., though with some variation.

How long it had existed before the creation of the world is taught by the Talmud in the tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas, fol. 88, col. 2), where it is reported that the angels addressed God the Lord, when He had wished to give the Law to Moses in heaven, in the following manner: מה לילוד אשה בינינו אמרו להן לקבל תורה בא. אמרו לפניו חמודה גנוזה ושבעים וארבעה דורות קודם שנברא העולם אתה מבקש ליתנה לבשר ודם מה אנושי כי תזכרנו that is: What does one born of a woman have to do among us? But when God had answered them that he had come to receive the Law, they said to Him: Do You wish to give to flesh and blood that beloved and preserved (Law) which, nine hundred and seventy-four ages before the six days of creation, before the world was created, had been preserved with You: what is man, that You are mindful of him?

That Adam knew the entire Law is written in the book Les arje fol. 96. col. 4. as follows: מוחמת האור הגדול שנברא עם אדם הראשון היה לו שכל מהיר והיה מבין את כל התורה כולה ולא היה צריך לחזרה שבעל פה that is: On account of the great light which was created together with the first man, he possessed a clear understanding, and comprehended the entire Law, and had no need of the oral Law. And in the book Mikrae kodesch, in the fourteenth chapter of the first part, fol. 42. col. 1., Rabbi Samiga teaches as follows: הסתכל היטב וראה שמכל המאמרים שהזכרתי יש לך ראיה גמורה שאדם הראשון קודם חטאו היה מקיים כל התורה כולה ואין צריך להאריך בביאורם. ואין ספק שהמצוה שגטצוה בה אדם הראשון שכה היו that is: Consider carefully and observe that from all the statements which I have mentioned you have complete proof that the first man, before he committed his sin, observed and kept the entire Law, and it is not necessary to dwell at length on the explanation thereof. Likewise there is no doubt that in that which was commanded to the first man, namely: "I am the LORD your God, etc. You shall have no other gods before Me," all the commandments were most certainly comprehended.

From Adam, however, Seth is said to have learned the Law; from Seth, Enoch; from Enoch, Shem; and from Shem, Abraham: concerning which the following is read in the book Avodath (or Avodas) bakkodesch, in the 3rd part, chapter 20, fol. 80. col. 4.: ומדרשו רבי יוחנן בן גורי נטל הקב"ה את שם בנה ונפרישו לכהן עולין. לשרתו חשוד. שכנינו עמו וקרא שמו מליצדק כהן עליון מלך שלם והיה יפה אחין לומר תורה היכני במדרשו עד שבא אברהם ולמד תורה במדרשו של שם ונתעסק הקב"ה בציבותם שפקדן כל האחרים. בא אברהם והתפלל לפני הקב"ה שישירה שכנינו תמיד בביתו של שם והודה לו שנאמר אתה כהן לעולם על דברתי מלכי צדק. אמר רבי יוחנן והלא יפת היה הגדול למה נטל שם הכהונה. בשביל שהיה מתעסק תמיד בתורה. ופרש מדרכי העולם ומאין היה לו תורה אלא אדם הראשון ידע התורה. והגיהה בקבלה לשח בנו. ואחר כך באה לידי חנוך עד שבאה לשם והיה מתעסק בה. א"ל ר' יוסי אם התורה היתה במדרשו של שם למה הוצרך הקב"ה לצוות לבני נח אותם שבע מצוות שנוצטו. שהיה התורה נכתבה קודם לכן אלא אמר ר' צחק בשעה שהמבול בא לעולם נכוסו לתיבה מרוב צערם נשתכחו התורם ממנו. אלא אמר הקב"ה אם אומר להם שישמרו את תורתי - יפרקו כל העול מהם כאמרים שאמרו ודעת דרכיך לא חפצנו אלא אתן להם דבנים מועטים וישמרון אותם עד שיבא מי שישמור כולה וזה היה אברהם שנ' עקב אשר שמע אברהם בקולי וגו' וכיון שלבד משם התורה קבל that is: I have found in the Midrash that Rabbi Jochanan, the son of Nuri, said: the holy and blessed God took Shem, the son of Noah, and set him apart as priest of the Most High, that he should serve Him; He also caused His Majesty to dwell with him, and called his name Melchizedek, a priest of the Most High and king of Salem. His brother Japheth, however, learned the Law from him in his school, until Abraham came and learned the Law in the school of Shem, whereupon God dealt with Abraham alone, so that all others were forgotten. Thereafter Abraham came forward and besought God that He would cause His Majesty to dwell continually in the house of Shem, which He also promised him, as it is said (Ps 110:4): "You are a priest forever, after the manner of Melchizedek." Rabbi Jochanan said: was not Japheth the eldest? Why then did Shem receive the priesthood? Because he studied in the Law at all times and separated himself from the ways of the world. But where did he obtain the Law? The first man, Adam, knew the Law and transmitted it to Seth, his son, by a tradition, or oral teaching; thereafter it came to Enoch, until Shem received it and studied therein. Rabbi José said to him: if the Law was in the school of Shem, why then did God find it necessary to command those seven commandments which were enjoined upon the children of Noah, seeing that the Law had already been written beforehand? To this Rabbi Isaac replied: at the time when the Flood came upon the world and they entered the ark, they forgot the Law on account of their great distress. And God also said: if I command them to keep My Law, they will cast off the entire yoke from themselves, as others did who said (Job 21:14): "We have no desire for the knowledge of Your ways"; therefore I will give them few words (that is, commandments), that they may keep these until he comes who will keep it entirely, and this was Abraham, as it is said (Gen 26:5): "Because Abraham obeyed My voice, etc." And after he likewise learned the Law from Shem, he took it upon himself to keep it entirely.

In the book Schalscheleth hakkabbála, fol. 1. col. 1., the following is also written on this matter: אין ספק שלהיות אדם הראשון יציר כפיו של הק"ה היה שלם בכל החכמות הטבעיות ואלהיות הנכללות בתורת משה אשר נבראת קודם העולם כמו שדרשו חז"ל על פסוק ואהיה אצלו אמן וגו' ולכן נפל לומר שהיה בקי ורואה וצופה בכל מה שעתיד. וגם אין ספק שהדרך טבע כל האבות שנכשים ששלמם בניהם כמותם יותר כפי האפשרות כי האב המלמד שינם מקנאים בבנו ותלמידו. אם כן אדם מסר כל חכמתו אל שני בנים ושני לחנוך וחנוך עשרהשל נשתלשל לנו לאברהם וליצחק ולעקב וכו' עד מתן תורה שבו השם יתברך מסרה. בגלוי אל מר"ע ולכל ישראל ומהם נשתלשל אל דוד ודוד עד היום הזה, that is: It is not to be doubted that, since the first man was a creature of the hands of God, he must have been perfect in all natural and divine wisdoms that are contained in the Law of Moses, which was created before the world, just as our Sages, of blessed memory, have taught concerning the verse (Prov 8:30): "Then I was beside him as a nursling," etc. We may therefore say that he was on the level of our teacher Moses, upon whom be peace, as well as of Solomon, in all possible things. Nor is it to be doubted that all fathers by nature desire that their children become as perfect as they themselves are, and even more so, to the fullest extent possible; for a father and a teacher does not envy his son and his disciple. This being so, Adam taught all his wisdom to his son Seth, who was born in his image and his likeness; and from him it passed to Noah, and to Abraham, and to their generations, etc., until the Law was given (on Mount Sinai), for at that time the blessed God gave it openly to our teacher Moses, upon whom be peace, and to all Israel, and from him it was transmitted from one generation to the next, down to this very day.

In Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the five books of Moses, at fol. 33, col. 1, in the Parashah Bereshit, on the words of Gen 4:8, "And Cain spoke with his brother Abel," the following is taught: אמרו קצת בעלי הקבלה כי, that is, some of the Kabbalists say that Cain spoke with Abel about the Parashah (or section of the Law of Moses) in which the zizis, or zizis, that is, fringes or hems, are treated (namely, the words of Num 15:38-41). The dispute between Cain and Abel is thus said to have arisen on account of the zizis. In the book called Ammudeha Shiva, however, there stands at fol. 48, col. 2, under the title Ammud Harevii, another cause of that same dispute, described in these words: קין והבל אמרו רז"ל היו מחלקין את העולם ביניהם הבל לקח מטלטלין וקין קרקעות ואחר כך באו למחלוקת הבל אמר שלוף המדים חלוקה (מחלוקת עד דכתיב) בראשית ד (ויקם קין ויהרג את הבל that is, our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have said that Cain and Abel divided this world between themselves, and that Abel received the movable goods while Cain received the immovable goods. Thereafter they fell into a quarrel, and Abel said (to Cain): take off the clothes you are wearing on your body, for they belong to me and are a part of the movables, or movable goods; but Cain said to Abel: fly through the air, for you have no share whatsoever in the earth. Thereupon Cain rose up and killed Abel. In the Targum Yerushalmi, however, on the words of Gen 4:8, "And Cain spoke with his brother Abel," yet another cause of this quarrel that arose is given, where it is reported that Cain, out of anger that God had not regarded his offering, said to Abel that there is no Last Judgment and no Judge, and likewise no eternal life; but Abel maintained the contrary, by which they came into such conflict with one another that Cain struck Abel dead.

But to return to Abraham: in the Jalkut Shimoni on the Psalms, the opposite is taught, namely that he had no master who taught him the Law, but rather that his kidneys instructed him in it. There, at numero 667, fol. 95, col. 2, on the words of Ps 26:7, "I praise the LORD, who has counseled me," the following is written: רבי שמואל בר נחמני פותר קרא באברהם אב לא למדו רב לא היה לו ומי למדו חכמה תני רש"בי אמר מלמד שזמן לו הק"ב שני כליות היו נובעות חכמה ודעת that is: Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmani, interprets this passage as referring to Abraham. His father did not teach him, nor did he have any teacher; who then taught him wisdom? We learn that Rabbi Simeon, the son of Jochai, said:
 this teaches us that God prepared two kidneys for him, which caused wisdom and knowledge to flow forth from them. This is also taught in Beresbit Rabbah in the ninety-fifth Parashah, fol. 87, col. 1, in these words: בכל מקום שהיה יעקב יושב היה עוסק בתורה כשם שהיו אבותיו ועד עכשיו לא נתנה תורה וכתוב באברהם וישמור
 משמרתי ומהיכן למד אברהם את התורה רבן שמעון אומר נעשו שתי כליותיו כשתי כדית של
 מים היו נובעות תורה ומנין שכן הוא שנ' אף לילות יסרוני כליותי that is: In every place where Jacob dwelt, he studied the Law, just as his fathers had done. Yet until that time the Law had not yet been given, and yet it is written of Abraham (Gen 26:5): "And he kept my commandments." From where, then, did Abraham learn the Law? Rabbi Simeon says that his two kidneys were made like two water-vessels, and caused the Law to flow forth from them. But from where is it proven that this is so? Because it is said (Ps 16:7): "My kidneys instruct me in the night."

Furthermore, concerning Abraham, the following is read in the Talmudic tractate Kiddúschim fol. 82. col. 1: מצינו שעשה אברהם אבינו את כל התורה כולה עד שלא נתנה שנ' יעקב אשר שמע אברהם בקולי וישמור משמרתי מצותי חקותי ותורת
 We find that Abraham kept the entire Law before it was given, as it is said

(Gen 26:5): "Because Abraham obeyed my voice and kept my ordinance" (that is, what I commanded him to keep), "my commandments, my statutes, and my laws." And in the tractate Jóma, it is reported of him at fol. 28. col. 2. that he observed and kept not only the written but also the oral Law, where the words read as follows: אמר רב ואיתימא רב אשי קיים אברהם אבינו אפילו עירובי תבשילין that is: Raf said, and if you will, Raf Aschi said: Our father Abraham kept even the commandment concerning the mixing of foods, for it is said (in the aforementioned passage, Gen 26:5): "My laws," by which both the written and the oral Law are understood. The very same is also read in Bereschíth rábba, fol. 17. col. 4., in the sixty-fourth Paraschá, though with a slight variation. Concerning the law of the mixing of foods, about which information is given in Chapter 16 of Buxtorff's expanded Judenschul, the following is also written in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 21. col. 3., in the Paraschá Lech lechá: אברהם אבינו ע"ה רצה לקיים ענין התורה והעבודה וכמו שדרשו רבותינו ז"ל קיים אברהם אבינו אפילו עירובי תבשילין that is: Our father Abraham, upon whom be peace, kept the Law and the service of God, and indeed even the mixing of foods. However, since it is read in Abarbanel's little book Rosch amaná, fol. 6. col. 1.: אמרו שלמה תקן עירובין that is: They (namely, our sages) say that Solomon instituted or established the mixing of foods, I would very much like to know how it can be reconciled that Abraham observed this practice, and yet Solomon was the first to have devised and established it.

Regarding the patriarch Isaac, Rabbi Bechai teaches in his aforementioned commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 29. col. 3., in the Parascha Vajéira, that Isaac was set to learning the Law in the third year of his age, where he speaks thus: מה שאיחר אברהם לעשות משתה יצחק עד יום הגמל אותו יתכן לפרש שביום גמלו הטיי לתלמוד תורה ואין לתמוה שהרי בן ג' שנים הכיר אברהם את בוראו על כן לא רצה לעשות הסעודה לא ביום המילה והניח הדבר עד יום הגמלו אותו כדי שישמח בבנו בשמחת התורה שכתוב בה פקודי י"י ישרים משמחי לב ובענין זה נאמר דעה וזאת כי יבין שמועה גמולי מחלב: that is, that Abraham's postponement of the feast on account of Isaac until the day on which he was weaned must be interpreted to mean that from the day on which he weaned him, he delivered him over to the learning of the Law; and one need not wonder at this, for behold, when Abraham was only three years old, he recognized his Creator, and for this reason Abraham wished to hold the feast neither on the day of Isaac's birth nor on the day of his circumcision, but let the matter stand until he was weaned, so that he might rejoice over his son through the joy of the Law, of which it is written (Ps 19:9): "The commandments of the Lord are right, and rejoice the heart"; and just as it is written (Isa 28:9): "Whom shall he then teach knowledge, and to whom shall he make the thing heard to be understood? Those who are weaned from milk." That Abraham recognized his Creator in the third year of his age is also stated in the Talmudic tractate Nedarim, fol. 32. col. 1., and in Bereschith Rabba, in the ninety-fifth Parascha, fol. 87. col. 1. And among the foolish Jews this is an entirely settled matter, that he was so intelligent in his third year. Indeed, it is read of Ben Sira in the little book Ben Sira, fol. 2. col. 2. and fol. 3. col. 1. 2., that he not only spoke while still in his mother's womb, but also, as soon as he was born, was very intelligent and spoke rationally about many things.

There is no cause for wonder at this, since Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes in his commentary on Gen 25:20 that Rebecca, when Isaac married her, was only three years old, where he states: כשבא אברהם מהר המוריה נתבשר שנולדה רבקה ויצחק היה בן ל"ז שנים שהרי או בפרק מתה שרה ומשנולד יצחק עד עקדה שנה ל"ז היו ובם צ' היתה כשנולד יצחק ובת ק"כ כשמתה שנ' ויהיו חיי שרה וגו' הרי ליצחק ל"ז שנים ובו that is: when Abraham came from Mount Moriah, he received the joyful news that Rebecca had been born, and Isaac was at that time thirty-seven years old, and Sara died at that very same time. And from the time that Isaac was born until Sara died, thirty-seven years had passed, and Sara was ninety years old when Isaac was born, and one hundred and twenty-seven years old when she died, as it is said (Gen 23:1): Sara was one hundred and twenty-seven years old. Behold, thirty-seven years, which was Isaac's age. At that very same time Rebecca was born, and after he had waited three years for her, until she became fit for marital cohabitation, he took her as his wife. Rebecca must therefore, according to this account, have already been of understanding in her third year. That a daughter who is three years old is fit for sexual intercourse is taught in the book Emek hammelech fol. 103, col. 4, cap. 95, under the title Schaär Kirjath arba, in these words: אמרו חז"ל אין האשה ראויה לביאה עד שתהא בת שלש שנים ויום אחד that is: our Sages, of blessed memory, say that a woman is not fit for marital cohabitation until she is three years and one day old, which is also confirmed in the Talmud in the tractate Avoda sara fol. 37, col. 1. And in the tractate Sanhedrin it is read at fol. 55, col. 2: בת שלש שנים ויום אחד מתקדשת בביאה that is: a daughter who is three years and one day old is betrothed through sexual intercourse.

But returning to the subject of the patriarchs' study of the Law, it is reported of Jacob in the Jalkut Shimoni on the first book of Moses, numero 110, fol. 32, col. 3: ויעקב איש תם יושב אהלים שני אהלים בית מדרשו של שם ובית מדרשו של עבר, that is: And Jacob was an upright man and dwelt in tents (as may be seen in Gen 25:27); he dwelt in two tents, in the school of Shem and in the school of Eber. Upon this follows: יעקב הלך בדרך החיים שהיה יושב אהלים ועוסק בתורה כל

ימי, that is: Jacob walked the path of life, inasmuch as he dwelt in the tents and studied the Law as long as he lived. And in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the five books of Moses, in the Parashah Vajechi, fol. 58, col. 3, on the words of Gen 48:22, "With my sword," after he has explained them, it is written as follows: או יהיה בחרבי בזכות התורה שהיו האבות דעצה בשכלם וקיימו אותה עד שלא נתנה, that is: Or the words "with a sword" signify as much as "through the merit of the Law," for behold, the fathers knew it from their own understanding and observed it before it was given. And thus the words (Gen 32:4), "I have sojourned with Laban as a stranger," are interpreted of Jacob to mean that under his dominion he observed the six hundred and thirteen commandments. In the lesser Jalkut Reuven, under the title Sachuch, num. 15, the following is also read: מפני מה זכה יעקב לחיים שלא בצער ושלא ביצר הרע כזמה שעתיד הק"ה ליתן לצדיקים לעתיד לבוא מפני שהיה בבית המדרש מקטנותו ועד זקנותו בקיא במקרא במשנה הלכות ואגדות שמואל בר נחמן אמר כל ספר תהלים חזקיה אמר שנ 'ואתה קדוש יושב תהלות ישראל, that is: Rabbi Samuel bar Nachman has said that he recited the entire book of Psalms, as it is stated (Ps 22:4): But thou art holy, O thou that dwellest amid the praises of Israel.

How does all of this agree with what the aforementioned Rabbi Bechai teaches in his mentioned commentary on the Parascha Vajischlach Jethro, fol. 92, col. 1? There he was of an entirely different opinion when he says: בא נח כשנברא אדם הראשון נצטוו על ו' מצות כדי שיתקים העולם בשש קצוות. וכשבא נח נצטוו על השביעית זו אבר מן החי אברהם על השמינית זו המילה יעקב על התשיעית זוהי גיד הנשה כשבאו ישראל נתן להם י' הדברות שהן כללות תרי"ג מצות ועל זה אמר הכתוב בקרבנות: הנשיאים כף אחת עשרה זהב מלאה קט"רת מלאה תרי"ג גי' הקו"ף מתחלפת בדל"ת After the first man was created, six commandments were enjoined upon him, so that the world might subsist in its six extremities. When Noah came, the seventh commandment was enjoined upon him, namely that he should not eat a limb from a living animal. Abraham received the eighth, namely circumcision, and Jacob the ninth, namely concerning the displaced sinew (Gen 32:32, that one should not eat it). But after the Israelites came, the ten commandments were given to them, which contain the six hundred and thirteen commandments within themselves. Therefore Scripture says (Num 7) concerning the offerings of the twelve princes: one bowl worth ten shekels of gold, full of קטורת Ketóreth, that is, incense, where the word Ketóreth yields six hundred and thirteen by Gematria, since the letter Koph is exchanged with the Daleth through the alphabet Atbasch. The same is also found in the book Cad hakkémach, fol. 21, col. 3. If, then, Jacob had only 9 commandments, how could he have observed the six hundred and thirteen, which are supposed to have first been given on Mount Sinai? Furthermore, it also stands in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 9, col. 1: תנא דבי אליהו ששת אלפים שנה והאעולם שני אלפים תוהו שני אלפים ימות המשיח: that is, those of the house of Elia teach: the world will stand for six thousand years; two thousand will be the days of the wilderness, two thousand the days of the Law, and two thousand the days of the Messiah. And Rabbi Solomon Jarchi writes in his commentary thereon: ששת אלפים גזר על העולם להתקיים כמנין ימי השבוע וביום השביעי השביעי שבת ותשבנה אלפים נח לעולם שני אלפים ראשונים נגד עליו להיות תוהו כלא תורה: ושני אלפים תורה כלא ימות המשיח: That is: six thousand years are appointed for the world to endure, according to the number of the days of the week; but on the seventh day is the Sabbath, and the world will rest in the seventh thousand. Over the first two thousand it is appointed that they should be empty or desolate, and without the Law; and two thousand should be the time of the Law, without the days of the Messiah; but the last two thousand years should be the days of the Messiah. This is also read in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 97, col. 1. If, then, the first two thousand years of the world were supposed to be without the Law, how could it have been known and observed from Adam and others onward?

Since this matter concerns the Law, I must also point out how the irrational rabbis claim that children learn the Law while still in their mother's womb, but that as soon as they are born, they are supposed to forget it again. This is written in the Jalkut Shimoni on the first book of Moses, fol. 10. col. 4. numero 38, as follows: עד שהולד במעי אמו מלמדין אותו כל התורה כולה: שנאמר ויורני ויאמר לי יתמד דברי לבך וגו' וכיון שיצא לאויר העולם בא מלאך וסטר על פיו ומשכה כל התורה לי יתמד דברי לבך וגו' That is: So long as the child is in its mother's womb, it is taught the entire Law, as it is said (Prov 4:4): "And he taught me, and said to me: let your heart receive my words." But when it comes out into the air of the world, an angel comes and strikes it upon its mouth, and causes it to forget the entire Law again, as it is said (Gen 4:7): "Sin lies at the door." This fable is taken from the great book of lies, the Talmud, in which, in the tractate Nidda, fol. 30. col. 2., it is described how the child lies in its mother's womb, and the following passage comes after that: ונר דלוק לו על ראשו וצופה ומביט מסוף העולם ועד סופו שני בהלו נרו עלי ראשי לאורו אלך חשך ואל תתמה שהרי אדם ישן כאן

ורואה חלום באספמ'א ואין לך ימים שאדם שרוי בטובה יותר מאותן הימים שני' מי יתנני כירחי קדם כימי אלוה ישמרני ואיזה ימים שיש בהם ירחים ואין בהם שנים הוי אומר אלו ירחי לידה ומלמדין אותו כל התורה שני' ויורני ויאמר לי יתמוך דברי לך שמר מצותי וחיה ואומר בסוד אלוה עלי אהלי מאי ואומר וכי תימא נביא הוא דקאמר תא שמע בסוד אלוה עלי אהלי וכיון שבא לאויר העולם בא מלאך וסטרו על פיו ומשכחו כל התורה כולה שני' לפתח חטאת רובץ ואינו יוצא משם עד שמשביעין אותו שני' כי לך תכרע כל ברך תשבע כל לשון כי לך תכרע כל ברך זה יום המיתה שני' לפניו יכרעו כל יודעי עפר תשבע כל לשון זה יום הלידה שני' נקי כפים ובר לבב אשר לא נשא לשוא נפשו ולא נשבע למרמה: ומה היא השבועה שמשביעין אותו הוי צדיק ואל תהי רשע ואפילו כל העולם כולו אומרים לך צדיק אתה היה בעיניך כרשע הוי יודע שהקב"ה טהור ומשרתו טהורים ונשמה שנתן בך טהורה היא אם אתה that is: And upon his head a light burns for him, and he gazes and sees from one end of the world to the other, as it is said (Job 29:3): "When His lamp shone upon my head, and by His light I walked through darkness." But you must not wonder at this, for a man sleeps here and sees a dream in Spain. There are also no days in which it goes better for a person than in those same days (when he is in his mother's womb), as it is said (Job 29:2): "Oh, that I were as in months past, in the days when God watched over me!" What kind of days are those, then, in which there are months but no years? Say: those are the months of birth. It (namely, the child) is also taught the entire Law, as it is said (Prov 4:4): "And he taught me, and said to me: let your heart receive my words, keep my commandments, and live." And he (Job) says (Job 29:4): "When the secret of God was upon my tent." What does this mean, that (Job) says this? If you would say that he was a prophet and spoke it thus, then come and hear: (I answer this, for it is indeed written that he said:) "When the secret of God was upon my tent." But after the child comes into the air of the world (and is born), an angel comes and strikes it upon its mouth, and causes it to forget the entire Law, as it is said (Gen 4:7): "Sin lies at the door." It does not go forth, however, until it has been made to swear, as it is said (Isa 45:23): "For to you (though it should read: to me) shall every knee bow, and every tongue swear." (The words) "For to you shall every knee bow" signify the day of death, as it is said (Ps 22:30): "Before me (though it should read: before Him) shall bow all who go down to the dust." (And the words:) "And every tongue swear" signify the day of birth, as it is said (Ps 24:4): "He who has clean hands and a pure heart, who has not lifted up his soul to vanity, and has not sworn deceitfully." What kind of oath is it, then, with which it is made to swear? (One says to it:) Be righteous (or pious) and not wicked, and even if the whole world were to say to you, "You are righteous," still regard yourself as though you were wicked; and know that the holy and blessed God is pure, and His servants are pure, and the soul that He has placed within you is pure. If you preserve it in purity, it is well; but if not, behold, I will take it from you again.

In Rabbi Aharon Shmuel's book Nischmárth ádam, the following is also read concerning this matter at fol. 26, col. 1, in the 6th chapter: ונוכל עוד לומר על דרך מאר"ל שבבטן אמו לומד האדם כל התורה כולה וכשיצא לאור העולם בא מלאך וסטר על פיו ומשכח ממנו כל התורה כולה ואחר כך כשיגדל ובעל אבידה מחזר על אבידתו וגע לחפש אחר האבידה לאור הנר השכלי אז ימצא חכמה ודעת מה שסובב ממנו ועל כן אמר הכתוב אשרי אדם מצא חכמה וגו' בל' 'מציאה עד"ש אם תבקשנה ככסף וכמטמונים תחפשנה אז תבין יראת ה' ודעת אלהים תמצא ונודע שהעיון בתורה היא דעת אלהים וזהו שאמרנו על פסוק כי חיים הם למוצאייהם ולכל בשרו מרפא והכוונה כי מציאת התורה שאבדה ממנו משכבר יצא לאור העולם הוא חיים בעולם הבא חיים נצחיים ולכל בשרו מרפא שנתרפא ממכתו שסטר המלאך על פיו ושכח התורה ועל ידי זה נרפא ממכתו כי חזר לכמות שהיה That is: We can also speak further, according to what our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have said, namely that a person learns the entire Law in his mother's womb, but when he comes out into the air of the world, an angel comes and strikes him upon his mouth, causing him to forget the entire Law. Afterwards, however, when he grows up and, like one who has lost something, goes in search of what he has lost and endeavors to seek the lost thing by the light of the lantern of reason, he then finds the wisdom and knowledge which he had lost. For this reason Scripture says (Prov 3:13): "Blessed is the man who finds wisdom," etc., and uses the word "find," in accordance with what is written (Prov 2:4-5): "If you seek her (namely, wisdom) like silver, and search for her like treasures, then you will understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God." Now it is well known that the contemplation of the Law is the knowledge of God, and this is what we say concerning the words (Prov 4:22): "For they (namely, the words of God) are life to those who find them, and a medicine to all his flesh," the meaning and sense of which is this: that the finding of the Law, which he lost when he came out into the air of the world, is life, and in the world to come eternal life, and likewise a medicine to all his flesh, in that he is healed of the blow which the angel struck upon his mouth, through which he forgot the Law, and thereby is healed of his wound, for he returns to what he was before. On this matter one may also consult the book Avodáth hakkódesh, fol. 42, col. 1, in the 23rd chapter, under the title Chelek haavóda, as well as the book Ben dáath (or dáas), fol. 10, col. 1, on the eighth Psalm.

The Jews furthermore teach that the written Law cannot be understood without the oral Law, but must be explained by means of it, and they hold their Talmud in far higher esteem than the Bible, imagining also that everything their rabbis have taught and still teach is necessarily to be believed and followed. That the written Law cannot be understood without the oral Law is written in the book Cad hakkémach, fol. 77, col. 3, as follows: חמשה סדרים אלו הם תורה שבעל פה כי עקר התורה היא תורה שבעל פה שאין תורה שבכתב יכולה

להתבאר כי אם על ידי תורה שבעל פה: that is, The six Sedarim, or orders (of the Talmud), are the oral Law, for the foundation or chief work of the Law is the oral Law, since the written Law cannot be explained except through the oral Law. And in the book Misbe'ach hassabaf by Rabbi Schlómo ben Mórdechai, the following is read in the fifth chapter: תורה שבעל פה אי אפשר לעמוד על עיקר תורתנו הקדושה שהיא: that is, It is impossible for us to stand upon the foundation of our holy Law, which is the written Law, otherwise than through the oral Law, which is its interpretation. Rabbi Joseph Gekatilia also writes in his book Scháare órah, fol. 11, col. 2, concerning this as follows: תורה שבעל פה נדרשת וגו' וישתי התורות מתדבקות כשני עפרים תאומי צביה ומפריד ביניהם עליו נאמר ונרגן מפריד אלוף והונה כמי שאין לו אלוה כלל: that is, The written Law is explained through the oral Law, etc., and these two Laws cleave to one another like two young twin roes; and whoever separates them from one another, of such a one it is said (from Prov 16:28): A whisperer separates the teacher, and such a person is as one who has no God at all.

That the Talmud is held in higher esteem by the Jews than the Bible, I prove from the fact that in the Talmudic tractate Báva mezia, fol. 33, col. 1, the following is written: תנו רבנן העוסקין במקרא מדה ואינה מדה במשנה מדה ונוטלין עליה: that is, Our rabbis teach: those who study the Bible do something that is a virtue, or also not a virtue; those who study the Mishnah do something that is a virtue, and receive a reward for it; but those who study the Gemara do something that is the greatest virtue. This is also found in the fifteenth chapter of Massecheth Sopherim, fol. 13, col. 2, and in Massecheth dérech érez síta, fol. 20, col. 4, as well as in the book Cad hakkémach, fol. 77, col. 3. And in the aforementioned Massecheth Sopherim, in the said fifteenth chapter, fol. 13, col. 2, one reads further: משל המקרא כמים המשנה כין והששה סדרים כקונדיטון. אי אפשר לעולם בלא מים ואי אפשר לעולם בלא קונדיטון ואיש עשיר מתכלכל בשלשתן כך אי אפשר לעולם בלא מקרא ובלא משנה: that is, The Bible is like water, the Mishnah like wine, and the six orders (that is, the Gemara, which is so called here) like spiced wine. The world cannot exist without water, the world cannot exist without wine, the world cannot exist without spiced wine, and a rich man is sustained by all three. Likewise, the world can never exist without the Bible, without the Mishnah, and without the six orders (that is, as mentioned, the Gemara). Upon this, the following is added there: ועוד נמשלה התורה כמלה המשנה כפילפלין והששה סדרים כבשמים ואי אפשר לעולם בלא מלה ואי אפשר לעולם בלא פילפלין וא"א לעולם בלא בשמים ואיש עשיר מתכלכל בשלשתן כך אי אפשר לעולם בלא למקרא ואי אפשר לעולם בלא משנה ואי אפשר לעולם בלא הששה סדרים: that is: Furthermore, the (written) Law is like salt, and the Mishnah like pepper, and the Gemara like spice: the world cannot exist without salt, the world cannot exist without pepper, the world cannot exist without spice, and a rich man is sustained by all three; likewise, the world cannot exist without the Bible, without the Mishnah, and without the Gemara. So too is it stated in the aforementioned book Cad hakkémach, fol. 77, col. 3: כל מי שבדו מקרא ומשנה ואין בידו תלמוד אסור להתערב: that is, Whoever has the Bible and the Mishnah in hand but does not engage with the Talmud (that is, the Gemara), with such a person one should not associate, as it is said (Prov 24:21): Do not associate with those who change. In the book Scháare Zédek, however, it is said at fol. 9, col. 3: מי שקורא מקרא בלא משנה ותלמוד דומה כמי שאין לו אלוה: that is, One who reads the Bible without the Mishnah and the Talmud (that is, the Gemara) is like one who has no God. And in the Talmudic tractate Eruvin, fol. 21, col. 2, as well as in the tractate Gittin, in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary, fol. 57, col. 1: בני הזהר בדברי סופרים יותר מדברי תורה: that is, My son, pay more heed to the words of the scribes (that is, of the rabbis, who wrote down the oral law) than to the words of the Law (of Moses). In the same manner, one reads in the book Caphtor uphérah, fol. 121, col. 1: רבא אמר תדע לך שדברי סופרים חביבים: that is, The Rabbi said: the words of the scribes are more pleasing than the words of the prophets. In Médrasch mischle, however, it is taught in a godless manner at fol. 1, col. 3: אפילו שיחת חולין שלהן שקולה כנגד כל התורה: that is, Even their (namely, the sages') ordinary conversation is to be considered equal to the entire Law.

No one who has devoted himself to the study of the Talmud should turn back and study the Bible, as is indicated in the Talmudic tractate Chagiga fol. 10. col. 1. with these words: וליכא דא פלגא וליכא ואין שלום אמר רב כיון שיוצא אדם: that is, he who goes out and comes in has no peace (or no good fortune, as is written in Zech 8:10). The Rav has said: When a man goes from the Halacha (that is, the Talmudic statutes and teachings) to the Bible, he has no more good fortune. From all of this it is sufficiently evident how highly the hardened Jews esteem their Talmud and the statutes of their rabbis, and how little they regard the Bible.

The Jews are also obligated to give credence to everything the rabbis teach and to live accordingly, for in Rabbi Bechai's aforementioned commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parashah Vebajacekef, fol. 201. col. 4., it is taught thus: דברי חכמים דברי אלהים חיים הן: That is: The words of the wise are the words of the living God. Likewise, Rabbi Solomon Jarchi comments on the words of Deut 17:11, "According to the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do; thou shalt not decline from the word which they shall show thee, to the right hand, nor to the left," in the following manner: אפילו אומר לך על ימין שהוא שמאל ועל:

That is: Even if he (namely the judge, who among the Jews must be a rabbi) tells you that the right hand is the left and the left is the right (you must still do what he tells you), and how much more so when he tells you that the right is the right and the left is the left. The very same thing is also taught by Rabbi Bechai in his commentary on the aforementioned words of Deut 17:11, fol. 207. col. 2., in the Parashah Schophetim, where he additionally states: כשאר השופטים שהיו לפניו צריך אתה לשמוע לו That is: Even if he is not as wise as other judges who came before him, you are nonetheless obligated to obey him.

No one is permitted to contradict his rabbi or oppose him, as can be seen in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 110. col. 1., where it is written: אמר רב חסדא כל החולק על רבו כחולק על השכינה שנאמר בהצותם על יי 'אמר רב אמר בר חנינא כל העושה מריבה עם רבו כעושה עם שכינה שנאמר המה מי מריבה אשר רבו בני ישראל על יי 'אמר רבי חנינא בר פפא כל המתרעם על רבו כאלו מתרעם על שכינה שנאמר לא עלינו יי 'אמר רבי חסדא: That is: Rav Chasda has said, whoever contradicts his rabbi or teacher does just as much as if he were contradicting the Divine Majesty, as it is said (Num 26:9): when they rose up against the Lord. Rav has said, reporting what the son of Channina said: whoever quarrels with his rabbi does just as much as if he were quarreling with the Divine Majesty, as it is said (Num 20:13): This is the water of strife, over which the children of Israel strove with the Lord. Rabbi Channina, the son of Papa, has said: whoever murmurs against his rabbi does just as much as if he were murmuring against God, as it is said (Exod 16:8): Your murmuring is not against us, but against the Lord. This is also found in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, numero 258, fol. 74, col. 2, and in the book Menorath hammaor, fol. 20, col. 1, under the title Ner scheni, perek scheni, kelal schevii, chelek scheni. In the last-mentioned book, however, the Menorath hammaor, the following words precede it: אף על פי שהחולק עם כל אדם גורם כל הרעות שבעולם החולק עם רבו הוא עון פלילי ודבק עולם ונחשב לו כאלו חולק עם השכינה: that is, Although the one who quarrels with any person whatsoever causes all the evil in the world, yet the one who quarrels with his rabbi commits a transgression that must be brought before the judges, and destroys the world, and it is reckoned to him as though he were quarreling with God.

What punishment those deserve who transgress the sayings of the Rabbis is taught by the Talmud in the tractate Erúvin, fol. 21, col. 2, in these words: העובר על דברי סופרים חייב מיתה, that is, Whoever transgresses the words of the scribes is guilty of death. By these words of the scribes, however, Rabbi Salomon Jarchi understands, in his commentary thereon, everything that the Rabbis newly devised and commanded, and he calls them there: דברי סופרים

גזר וסייג, that is, The new words of the scribes, which have been newly introduced in every generation, in order to make a fence and hedge around the Law. So too is it read in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the five books of Moses, in the Parascha Tásria, fol. 105, col. 2: עובר על דברי חכמים חייב מיתה שנאמר כה אמר יי' אלהי ישראל ארור האיש אשר לא ישמע את דברי חכמים, that is, Whoever transgresses the words of the sages is worthy of death, as it is said (Jer 11:3): Thus speaks the Lord, the God of Israel, cursed be he who does not obey the words of this covenant. This is also to be found in the tractate Avóda sára, fol. 27, col. 2, in the Tosephóth. And in the book Schylchán áruch, in Part II, Jóre Déa, number 334, §. 43, fol. 306, col. 1, it is taught: על כ"ד דברים מנדין את האדם ואלו הם א' המבזה את החכם אפילו לאחר מותו. ב' המבזה שליח בית דין. ג' הקורא לחבירו עבד. ד' המזלזל בדבר אחד מדברי סופרים ואין צריך לו, that is, For twenty-four things (or causes) a person is placed under the ban, and they are as follows. First, one who despises a sage, even if it occurs after that person's death. Second, one who despises a person sent by the court. Third, one who calls his fellow a slave. Fourth, one who scorns a single word of what the scribes have said (and it is not necessary to mention the words of the Law), etc. From this it is therefore evident how highly the Rabbis' teachings and interpretations are to be esteemed, and how carefully they are to be observed.

Since the teaching of the Rabbis is held in such high esteem, it is easy to conclude that they must also be greatly honored and feared. On this subject, the book Menoráth hammaór, fol. 68. col. 1., in the first chapter, under the title Ner revii, kelál revii, chélek schéni, teaches as follows: אף על פי שחייב אדם לכבד ולתלמידי חכמים ולירא מהם גדול הוא חייבו ב'שניכבד את רבותיו וירא מהם השוו רבותינו מורא רבו של אדם כמורא שמים כמו ששנינו בפרק שני מאבות ר' אליעזר אומר יהי כבוד מלמדיה חביב עליה פשלה וקבוד חבריה כמורא רבה ומורא רבה כמורא שמים that is: Although a person is obligated to honor the disciples of the sages (that is, the wise and learned men; and in former times not only those who were disciples of the sages were so called, but also those who had attained the name of sages and were the most learned were, out of humility, called disciples of the sages) and to fear them, he is nonetheless especially obligated to honor his Rabbis or teachers and to stand in fear of them; and our Rabbis have equated the fear of a person's Rabbi with the fear of God, as we learn in the second chapter of the tractate Avóth (or óvos), where Rabbi Eliezer is said to have stated: Let the honor of your disciple be as dear to you as your own honor, and the honor of your companion as the fear of your Rabbi, but the fear of your Rabbi as the fear of God. And in the book Nevé schatóm, under the second chapter of the fifth Maamar, fol. 63. col. 1., one reads: ידוע שהאב הוא המוליד והמציר החלק הנכבד והחשוב והמשבח הוא הראוי ליקרא אב אמת מאותו שלא יוליד רק החלק הקטן ולכן ראוי

שִׁיתַּכְבְּדוּ הַחֲכָמִים הַמּוֹלִידִים אוֹתָם הַעֲצָמוֹת שֶׁהוּא הַצִּוְרָה הַשְּׁלֵמָה כִּי הֵם הָאֲבוֹת בְּאֶמֶת כְּמוֹ שֶׁאָמְרוּ רַבּוֹתֵינוּ ז"ל מוֹרָא רַבָּךְ כְּמוֹרָא שְׁמַיָּם וְאָמְרוּ עַל רַבִּי מֵאִיר שֶׁהִיָּה דוֹרָשׁ כָּל אֲתִין שְׁבִתוֹרָה וּכְשֶׁהִגִּיעַ לְסוּסָא אֶת יִי אֱלֹהֶיךָ תִּירָא גֵרַע לְאַחֲרָיו עַד שֶׁנֶּרַשׁ וְאָמַר אֶת יִי תִירָא that is: It is well known that the father who begets and forms the most excellent and praiseworthy part of a person is more worthy to be called a true father than the one who begets only the deficient part. It is therefore fitting that the sages be honored, since they beget the true essence, namely the rational form or nature; for they are the fathers in truth, as our Rabbis, of blessed memory, say: the fear of your teacher is equal to the fear of God. It is also said of Rabbi Meir that he expounded all the Eth (which is for the most part a marker of the accusative) that occur in the Law, and that when he came to the verse (Deut 6:13) Eth Jehova Elohecha tira, that is, "You shall fear the Lord your God," he went back and gave his exposition of it, saying: you shall fear the Lord, and the disciples of the sages are likewise included (in this commandment).

On this topic, Rabbi Moses bar Maimon also writes in his book Jad chasaka, in the first part, in the Tractate Talmud Torah, that is, On the Study of the Law, in the fifth chapter, numero 1, as follows: כַּשֶּׁם שֶׁאָדָם מְצוּוֹה בְּכָבוֹד אָבִיו וּבִירָאָתוֹ כֵּךְ הוּא חַיִּיב בְּכָבוֹד רַבּוֹ וּבִירָאָתוֹ יֵתֵר מֵאָבִיו שֶׁאָבִיו מְבִיאוֹ לַחַי הָעוֹלָם הַזֶּה וּרְבוֹ שְׁלִמְדוֹ חֲכָמָה מְבִיאוֹ לַחַי הָעוֹלָם הַבָּא. רָאָה אֲבִידַת אָבִיו וְאֲבִידַת רַבּוֹ שֶׁל רַבּוֹ קוֹדֶמֶת לְשֶׁל אָבִיו. אָבִיו וּרְבוֹ נִשְׁוֹאִים בְּמִשְׁא מְנִיחַ אֶת שֶׁל רַבּוֹ וְאַחֵר כֵּךְ שֶׁל אָבִיו. אָבִיו וּרְבוֹ שְׁבוּיִים בְּשִׁבְיָה פוֹדֶה אֶת רַבּוֹ וְאַחֵר כֵּךְ פוֹדֶה אֶת אָבִיו. וְאִם הִיָּה אָבִיו תַּלְמִיד חֲכָם פוֹדֶה אֶת אָבִיו תַּחֲלָה וְכֵן אִם הִיָּה אָבִיו תַּלְמִיד חֲכָם אַף עַל פִּי שֶׁאִינוֹ שְׁקוֹל כְּנֶגֶד רַבּוֹ מְשִׁיב אֲבִידָתוֹ וְאַחֵר כֵּךְ מְשִׁיב אֲבִידַת רַבּוֹ. וְאִין לֶךְ כְּבוֹד גָּדוֹל מְכַבֵּד הָרֵב וְלֹא מוֹרָא מְמוֹרָא הָרֵב. אָמְרוּ חֲכָמִים מוֹרָא רַבָּךְ כְּמוֹרָא שְׁמַיָּם that is: Just as a man is commanded to honor and fear his father, so too is he obligated to honor and fear his teacher more than his father; for his father brought him into the life of this world, but his teacher, who taught him wisdom, brings him to the life to come (that is, eternal life). If a man has seen something that his father has lost, and also something that his teacher has lost, that which his teacher has lost takes precedence over that which his father has lost (in that he should restore it to him). If his father and his teacher are both laden with a burden, he first helps his teacher to unload it, and afterward his father. If his father and his teacher are sitting in captivity, he first ransoms his teacher, and afterward ransoms his father. But if his father is a disciple of a wise man (that is, a scholar or learned man), he ransoms his father first. Likewise, if his father is a disciple of a wise man (that is, a scholar), even if he is not equal to his teacher, he nonetheless returns his lost property to him first, and afterward restores his teacher's lost property as well. There is no greater honor than that which is owed to the teacher, nor any greater fear than that with which the teacher is to be feared. The sages say: the fear of your teacher shall be equal to the fear of God. The same is also found in the book Shulchan Aruch, in the part Yoreh Deah, fol. 214, col. 1, numero 242, and in the last-mentioned passage of the first chapter of the book Menorath Hamaor, fol. 68, col. 1. And in the second column, in the second chapter of the same work, it is taught that one must rise before a teacher in his honor, where the words read as follows: תלמיד לרבו מובהק חייב לקום מפניו משראהו כמלוא עיניו כדגרסינן פרק קמא דקדושין דף ל"ג תנא אי זו היא קימה שיש בה הדור הוי אומר זה ארבע אמות. אמר אביי that is: A disciple is obligated to rise before his teacher, who is an eminent man, as soon as he sees him, as far as he can see him, as we read in the first chapter of the tractate Kiddushin (fol. 36, col. 1). We learn: what kind of rising is it in which an act of honor is present? Say: when it occurs at a distance of four cubits from him. Abaye says: we say this only of a teacher who is not an eminent man; but as for a teacher who is an eminent man, one must rise before him as far as one can see him. Immediately thereafter follows: כל תלמיד חכם שאינו עומד מפני רבו נקרא רשע ואינו מאריך ימים ואינו משתכח תלמודו משתכח שנ' טוב לא יהיה לרשע ולא יאריך ימים כצל אשר אינו ירא מלפני אלהים: ימרא זו איני יודע מה היא כשהוא אומר ויראת that is: Every wise disciple who does not rise before his teacher is called wicked, and does not live long, and forgets what he has learned, as it is said (Eccl 8:13): It will not go well with the wicked, and he will not lengthen his days like a shadow, because he does not fear before God. I do not understand what kind of fear is meant when it is said (Lev 19:14): You shall fear your God. Say that by such fear, rising is meant. Finally, it is noted there: על בן יהא מזהר כל אדם לקום מפני רבו ולשמשו והוא חשוב לו כעובד לשכינה: that is: Therefore, every person should be warned (or diligent) to rise before his teacher and to serve him, and this will be reckoned to him as though he were serving the Divine Majesty. And in the Talmudic tractate Makkot (or Makkos), it is read at fol. 24, col. 1, that King Jehoshaphat observed this practice, where it is written: ואת יראי יי' יכבד זה יהושפט מלך יהודה שבשעה שהיה רואה תלמיד חכם ואת יראי יי' היה עומד מכסאו ומחבקו ומנשקו וקורא לו אבי אבי מרי מרי that is (what do the words of Ps 15:4 mean): Who honors those who fear the Lord? These words refer to Jehoshaphat, the king of Judah, who, whenever he saw a wise man, rose from his throne, embraced him, kissed him, and called him my father, my lord.

Concerning the honor that one ought to show to one's teacher, the following is further taught in the Pirke avóth (or Ovos), in the 6th chapter, fol. 31, col. 2, in the Talmud printed at Amsterdam: ולומד מחבירו פרק אחד או הלכה אחת או פסוק אחד או אפילו אות אחת צריך לנהוג בו כבוד שכן מצינו בדוד מלך ישראל שלא למד מאחיתופל אלא שני דברים בלבד עשאו רבו אלופו ומיודעו שנאמר ואתה אנוש כערכי אלופי ומיודעי. והלא דברים קל וחומר ומה דוד מלך ישראל שלא למד מאחיתופל אלא שני דברים בלבד עשאו רבו אלופו ומיודעו. הלומד מחבירו פרק אחד או הלכה אחת או פסוק אחד או

That is: Whoever learns from his companion a chapter, or a Halacha (that is, an ordinance), or a verse, or even a single letter, must honor that person; for so we find it with David, the king of Israel, who learned only two things from Ahithophel, and yet acknowledged him as his teacher, his guide, and his acquaintance, as it is said (Ps 55:14): "But you are a man according to my estimation" (that is, my equal, whom I esteem as my peer), "my guide and my acquaintance." Can one not draw from this an argument or conclusion from the lesser to the greater: if David, the king of Israel, who learned only two things from Ahithophel, acknowledged him as his teacher, guide, and acquaintance, should not then the one who learns from his companion a chapter, or a Halacha or ordinance, or a verse, or even a single letter, be all the more obligated to show that person honor? As for which two things King David is said to have learned from Ahithophel, this is indicated in the Commentario thereon with the following words: לפי שמצאו אחיתופל לדוד שהיה יושב ועוסק יחידי בתורה אמר לו למה אתה עוסק בתורה יחידי והלא כבר נאמר חרב על הבדים ונאלו. שוב פעם אחרת מצאו שהיה נכנס לבית מדרשו בקומה זקופה אמר לו והלא כבר נאמר שצריך לו לאדם ליכנס שם במורא כדי שתהא אימה שמים עליו. ויש אומרים שהיה נכנס לבית המדרש יחידי ואמר לו בבית אלהים נהלך : That is: Since Ahithophel found David sitting and studying the Law alone, he said to him: "Why do you study the Law alone? Has it not already been said" (Jer 50:36): "The sword shall come upon the liars" (or soothsayers), "so that they become fools"? On another occasion he found him again entering his school with an upright or straight posture, and said to him: "Has it not already been said that a man must enter there with fear, so that the fear of God may be upon him?" Others, however, report that he went into the school alone, and that Ahithophel said to him: "It is written" (Ps 55:15): "We will walk into the house of God in a throng"; for a man is obligated to enter there together with the assembly of the people, as it is said (Prov 14:28): "In the multitude of the people is the king's glory."

The Talmud also forbids anyone from teaching in the presence of his master, as is indicated in the Tractate Eruvin fol. 63. col. 1. with these words: כל המורה, that is, whoever teaches a Talmudic ordinance in the presence of his master is guilty of death. And shortly thereafter it follows: כל המורה, that is, whoever teaches a Talmudic ordinance before his master is worthy of being bitten by a snake. Furthermore, it forbids in the Tractate Sanbedrin fol. 131. col. 4. calling one's master by his name, where the following is read: מי שקורא לרבו בשמו הוי אפיקורוס ואין לו חלק : לעולם הבא, that is, whoever calls his master by his name is an Epicurean and has no share in eternal life.

The rabbis are also regarded as veritable kings, concerning which the following stands in the Tractate Gittin fol. 62. col. 1.: רב הונא ורב חסדא הווי יתבי חליף ואזיל גניבא אמר ליה חד לחבריה ניקום מקמיה דבר אוריין הוא אמר לו ומקמי פלגא ניקום אדהכי אתא איהו לגביהון אמר להו שלמא עלייכו מלכי שלמא עלייכו מלכי אמרו ליה מנא לך דרבנן איקרו מלכים אמר להו דכתיב בי מלכים ימלוכו, that is, Raf Hona and Raf Chasda were once sitting together when Geniva came and was about to pass by; one said to the other, we should rise before him, since he has studied the Law well. The other, however, said to him, should we rise before a quarrelsome man? In the meantime, the same (Geniva) came to them and said to them, peace be upon you, my kings; peace be upon you, my kings; and when they asked him, from where do you prove that the rabbis are called kings, he gave them the answer that it is written (Prov 8:15), "Through me kings reign." What a splendid proof that the filthy rabbis are kings!

One is also supposed to derive a special benefit from being present at a meal with a rabbi, and Tractate Berachoth (or Berochos) fol. 64. col. 1. indicates this with the following words: אמר רבי אבין הלוי כל הנהנה מסעודה שתלמיד חכם שרוי בתוכה כאילו נהנה מזיו השכינה שנאמר ויבא אהרן וכל זקני ישראל לאכול לחם עם חותן משה לפני האלהים וכי לפני אלהים אכלו והלא לפני משה אכלו אלא לומר לך כל הנהנה מסעודה שתלמיד חכם שרוי בתוכה כאילו נהנה מזיו שכינה, that is: Rabbi Abbin the Levite has said: whoever enjoys anything at a meal at which a sage is present receives as much benefit as if he were enjoying the radiance of the Divine Majesty, as it is said (Exod 18:12): "Then Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread with Moses' father-in-law before God." What! Did they then eat before God? Did they not eat before Moses? But you must say: everyone who enjoys anything at a meal at which a sage is present does as much as if he were enjoying the radiance of the Divine Majesty. So also in the book Neveh shalom fol. 156. col. 1., at the beginning of the third chapter of the ninth Maamar, one reads: כל המכניס תלמיד חכם בתוך ביתו ומאכילהו ומשקהו ומהנהו מנכסיו מעלה עליו הכתוב כאלו מקריב תמיד בכל יום דכתיב הוא עובר עלינו תמיד, that is: concerning everyone who allows a disciple of a sage (that is, a rabbi) to enter his house, and gives him food and drink, and allows him to enjoy something from his possessions, Scripture counts it as though he were offering sacrifices daily, as it is written (2 Kgs 4:9, concerning Elisha): "He passes by us continually." And in the Talmudic Tractate Kethuvoth, fol. 111. col. 2., it is written: במשיא בתו לתלמיד חכם והעושה פרקמטיא לתלמידי חכמים והמהנה תלמידי חכמים מעלה עליו הכתוב כאלו מדבק בשכינה, that is: whoever gives his daughter in marriage to a disciple of a sage (that is, to a rabbi), and conducts business on behalf of the disciples of the sages, and allows them to enjoy something from his possessions, cleaves, as it were, to the Divine Majesty. Without doubt, however, the sponging rabbis have put forward this teaching for the purpose of ensuring that people will eagerly invite them as guests and fill their bellies handsomely, and also so that they might obtain wealthy wives and gifts.

Just as a scholar among the Jews is held in very high esteem and honored, so on the contrary one who has learned nothing at all, and is called Am baarez, is held by them in the utmost contempt, as is evident from the Talmudic tractate Pesachim fol. 49. col. 2., where it is written as follows: תנו רבנן לעולם ימכור אדם כל מה שיש לו וישא בת תלמיד חכם לא מצא בת תלמיד חכם לא מצא בת גדול הדור. לא מצא בת גדול הדור ישא בת ראשי כנסיות. לא מצא בת ראשי כנסיות ישא בת גבאי צדקה. לא מצא בת גבאי צדקה ישא בת מלמדי תינוקות ולא ישא בת עם הארץ מפני שהן שקץ ונשותיהן שרץ ועל בנותיהם הוא אומר ארור שוכב עם כל בהמה תניא רבי אומר עם הארץ אסור לאכול בשר בהמה שנ' זאת תורת הבהמה והעוף. כל העוסק בתורה מותר לאכול בשר בהמה ועוף וכל שאינו עוסק בתורה אסור לאכול בשר בהמה ועוף. אמר רבי אליעזר עם הארץ מותר לנחרו ביום הכיפורים שחל להיות בשבת אמרו לו תלמידיו רבי אמור לשוחטו אמר להן זה טעון ברכה וזה אינו טעון ברכה. אמר רבי אלעזר עם הארץ אסור להתלוות עמו בדרך שנ' כי היא חייך ואורך ימך על חייו לא חס על חיי חבריו לא כל שכן. אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמני אמר רבי יוחנן עם הארץ מותר לקורעו כדג אמר רבי שמואל ומגבו. תניא אמר רבי עקיבא כשהייתי עם הארץ אמרתי מי יתן לי תלמיד חכם ואנשכנו כחמור אמרו לו תלמידיו רבי אמור ככלב אמר להן זה נושך ושובר עצם וזה נושך ואינו שובר עצם. תניא היה רבי מאיר אומר כל המשיא בתו לעם הארץ כאלו כופתה ומניחה לפני ארי מה ארי דורס ואוכל ואף לו בושת פנים אף עם הארץ מכה ובועל ואין לו בושת פנים. תניא רבי אליעזר אומר אלמלא אנו צריכין להם למשא ומתן היו הורגין אותנו. תני רבי חייא כל העוסק בתורה לפני עם הארץ כאילו בועל ארוסתו בפניו שנ' תורה צוה לנו משה מורשה אל תקרי מורשה אלא מאורסה. גדולה שנאה ששונאים עמי הארץ לתלמיד חכם יותר משנאה ששונאים עכו"ם את ישראל ונשותיהן ייתר מהן:

that is: Our Rabbis teach that a man should always sell everything he has and marry the daughter of a scholar; if he cannot find the daughter of a scholar, he should take the daughter of the most eminent men of that time; if he cannot find the daughter of the most eminent men of that time, he should marry the daughter of the heads of the synagogues; if he cannot find the daughter of the heads of the synagogues, he should take the daughter of an alms-collector; if he cannot find the daughter of an alms-collector, he should take the daughter of a schoolmaster who teaches boys; and he should not take the daughter of the am me-baárez, that is, of the idiots, or of those who have studied nothing, for they are an abomination, and their wives are vermin, and of their daughters it is said (Deut 27:21): Cursed be he who lies with any beast. It is taught that the Rabbi says: it is forbidden for an am baárez, that is, an idiot or unlearned person, to eat the flesh of cattle, as it is said (Lev 11:46): This is the law of the animals and the birds. To everyone who studies in the Law it is permitted to eat the flesh of animals and birds; but whoever does not study in the Law, it is forbidden for him to eat the flesh of animals and birds. Rabbi Eliezer said: it is permitted to cut the throat of one who has learned nothing on the Day of Atonement when it falls on the Sabbath. Thereupon his disciples said to him: Rabbi, say rather that it is permitted to slaughter or butcher him. But he answered them: the latter (namely, slaughtering) requires that a blessing be spoken over it, whereas the former (namely, cutting the throat) requires no blessing. Rabbi Eliezer said: it is forbidden to join oneself to an unlearned person on the road and to accompany him as a traveling companion, as it is said (Deut 30:20): For that is your life and the length of your days. He does not spare his own life (in that he does not take care to study, in order to live long); how much less then will he spare the life of his companion. Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmani, said that Rabbi Jòchanan had declared: it is permitted to split open an am baárez, that is, an idiot or unlearned person, like a fish. Rabbi Samuel said: one must begin from his back. It is taught that Rabbi Akkiva said that when he was an am báarez or idiot, he said: Would to God I had a scholar, I would bite him like a donkey. But when his disciples said to him: Rabbi, say rather like a dog; he answered them: the latter (namely the dog) bites and breaks the bone, but the former (namely the donkey) bites and does not break the bone. It is taught that Rabbi Meir said: whoever gives his daughter in marriage to an idiot or unlearned person does as much as if he bound her and threw her before a lion; just as a lion tramples (or tears apart) and devours, and is not ashamed, so too an idiot beats and lies with his wife, and is not ashamed. It is taught that Rabbi Elieser said: if we did not need them (the unlearned) in business and commerce (that is, for their food and assistance, as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi explains), they would kill us. Rabbi Chija teaches: whoever studies the Law before an idiot does as much as if he lay with his betrothed bride before that person's face, as it is said (Deut 33:4): Moses commanded us the Law. מורשה moráscha, that is, as an inheritance; read not moráscha, that is, as an inheritance, but מאורסה meorása, that is, betrothed. The hatred that idiots bear toward scholars is greater than the hatred that idolaters bear toward Israel, and their wives hate them even more than they do. Further, it follows in the same place: תנו רבנן ששה דברים נאמרו בעמי הארץ אין מוסרין להן (that is: Our Rabbis teach that six things are said concerning the ámme huárez, that is, idiots. One gives them no testimony, and likewise accepts no testimony from any one of them; one also reveals no secret to them; one also appoints them as guardians over no orphans; one also does not place them over the alms-chest; one also does not join their company on the road. There are also some who say that one should not have their lost property publicly proclaimed, so that they may not thereby recover it.)

Since the Jews are so foolish as to hold that everything their rabbis do is done very well and in accordance with the Law, and therefore pay close attention to their deeds so that they may follow them like apes, I must also bring forward here something from the Talmud on this subject, where in the tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos) fol. 62. col. 1. it is written as follows: ותניא אמר רבי עקיבא פעם אחת נכנסתי אחר רבי יהושע לבית הכסא ולמדתי ממנו ג' דברים למדתי שאין נפנין מזרה ומערב אלא צפון ודרום ולמדתי שאין נפרעין מיושב ולמדתי שאין מקנחין בימין אלא בשמאל אמר לו בן עזאי עד כאן העזת פניך ברבך א"ל ותורה היא וללמד אני צריך. תניא בן עזאי אומר פעם אחת נכנסתי אחר רבי עקיבא לבית הכסא ולמדתי ממנו ג' דברים למדתי שאין נפנין מזרה ומערב אלא צפון ודרום ולמדתי שאין נפרעין מעומד אלא מיושב ולמדתי שאין מקנחין בימין אלא בשמאל אמר לו רבי יהודה עד כאן העזת פניך ברבך אמר לו תורה היא וללמד אני צריך *that is: It is taught that Rabbi Akkiva said: I once followed Rabbi Jehoscha into the privy, and learned three things from him. I learned that one (with all due respect) relieves oneself not facing east and west, but rather facing north and south; and I learned that one does not expose oneself standing, but rather sitting; and I also learned that one wipes oneself not with the right hand, but with the left. When the son of Asai then said to him, "Have you dared to be so shameless and impudent toward your teacher?", he answered him: "It is the Law, and I have need to learn." It is taught that the son of Asai said: I once followed Rabbi Akkiva into the privy, and learned three things from him. I learned that one relieves oneself not facing east and west, but rather facing north and south; and I learned that one does not expose oneself standing, but rather sitting; and I also learned that one wipes oneself not with the right hand, but with the left. When Rabbi Jehuda then said to him, "Have you dared to be so impudent toward your teacher?", he answered him: "It is the Law, and I must learn." Were not these two meddlesome fools? Yet Raf Cahana was still more meddlesome than either of them, of whom the following is read immediately thereafter: רב כהנא על גגא זתתי פורייה דרב שמעיה דשתה ושחק ועשה צרכיו א"ל דמי פומיה דאבא כדלא שריף תבשילא אמר ליה כהנא הכא את פוק ולא ארה צרכיו א"ל דמי פומיה דאבא כדלא שריף תבשילא אמר ליה ארעא that is: Raf Cabana once went into the Raf's chamber and lay down beneath his bedstead, and when he heard him conversing with his wife, amusing himself, and attending to his business, he said to him: "The mouth of my father" (that is, of my teacher) "is like one whose food has not been scorched." Thereupon the Raf said to him: "Cabana, are you here? Go out, for it is not the custom of the world" (to enter one's chamber in such a manner and to listen in); but he answered him: "It is the Law, and I have need to learn." The very same thing is also found in the Talmudic tractate Chagiga fol. 5. col. 2. From all this, however, it is sufficiently evident how senseless the Jews are, in that they receive everything done by their rabbis as though it had been commanded by* the Law to do all of it; and therefore it is also no wonder that so many erroneous human ordinances have crept in among them, all of which they now regard as the Law. But let this be enough said concerning the rabbis.

To return now to the Talmud, or the oral law of the Jews: it is known from the foregoing that they firmly believe everything contained therein to be the Word of God, which Moses learned on Mount Sinai, or even in heaven itself, and brought down with him. But these hardened people are greatly mistaken in their imagination, as I shall demonstrate to them with the following weighty grounds and substantial reasons.

The first reason is this: because there are many things contained therein that are diminishing, mocking, and contemptuous toward the Divine Majesty, indeed outright blasphemous against it, as has been shown at length above in the first chapter. How, then, can such a book have come from God? Would God have taught Moses such unseemly things, things that run directly contrary to His divine nature? This can certainly be said by no one other than one who is utterly deprived of all sound reason and does not know what God is and wherein His attributes consist.

The second reason why the Talmud is not the Word of God is this: because many things are taught therein which do not at all agree with what stands in the Holy Scripture of the Old Testament, but rather directly contradict it. For it is taught therein that there have been people who kept the entire Law, concerning which the tractate Shabbath (or Shabbas) fol. 55. col. 1. writes the following over the words of Ezek 9:6, Umimmikdaschi tachellu, that is, "But begin at my sanctuary": אל תקרי מקדש אלא מקדשי אלו בני אדם שקיימו את התורה, כולה מאלף ועד תיו, that is, "Read not mikdaschi, that is, 'my sanctuary' or 'temple,' but rather mekuddaschai, that is, 'my sanctified ones,' and these are those who have kept the entire Law from Aleph to Tau (that is, from the first letter to the last)." And in the second column of the same place one reads: ולא מתו משה ואהרן שקיימו כל התורה כולה מתו, that is, "Did not Moses and Aaron, who fulfilled the entire Law, also die?" With this Rabbi Bechai likewise agrees in the book Cad hakkemach, fol. 1. col. 4, and says: אף הצדיקים הגמורים שלא חטאו מעולם הם בכלל עונש המיתה, that is, "Even the perfectly righteous, who have never sinned, are subject to the punishment of death." And in the Yalkut Shimoni, over the Five Books of Moses, numero 258. fol. 74. col. 2., it is taught: מה מדבר קיים אברהם כל התורה כולה שנאמר עקב אשר שמע אברהם בקולי, that is, "Just as a wilderness has no transgression nor sin, so too in the first patriarchs there was no transgression nor sin." Likewise it stands written in the Talmudic tractate Yoma fol. 28. col. 2.: קיים אברהם כל התורה כולה שנאמר עקב אשר שמע אברהם בקולי, that is, "Abraham kept the entire Law completely, as it is said (Gen 26:5):

'Because Abraham obeyed my voice.'" In the tractate Chagiga, fol. 4. col. 2., it is likewise said of Samuel that when he was brought up by the sorceress at Saul's request, as may be read in 1 Sam 28:8 etc., he took Moses with him and said to him: מילתא דכתבת באורייתא: דלא קיימתה, that is, "Perhaps I will be summoned before the court: stand by me, for there is no word in the Law that you wrote which I have not kept." In the same manner it is also said in the tractate Ketubot (or Kesuvoths) of Rabbi Channina that when the Angel of Death came to him, he said to him: אייתי ספר תורה וחזי מי איכא מידי דכתיב ביה ולא קיימתיה, that is, "Bring the book of the Law and see whether there is anything written therein that I have not kept." As if he wished to say: I have kept everything and have not sinned.

On the contrary, Holy Scripture teaches that all people sin, for it is written in 1 Kgs 8:46 and 2 Chr 6:36: There is no man who does not sin; which is also confirmed in Eccl 7:21, Prov 20:9, Isa 64:6, Ps 14:2-3, and Ps 53:4. This is likewise acknowledged by Rabbi Joseph Albo in his Sèpher Jkkarim, in the seventh chapter of the fourth part, fol. 114, col. 1, where he says: אין צדיק בארץ, that is, There is no righteous man upon the earth who does good and does not sin, either little or much. So too writes Aben Ezra on Prov 20:9: אין אדם שילך תמיד בתומו ולא יחטא, that is, There is no man who walks at all times in his uprightness and does not sin. And Rabbi Jeshaiiah agrees with this in his book Schené luchóth habberíth (or lúchos hábberis), fol. 170, col. 1. It is therefore likewise a great untruth, what is reported in the Talmudic book Báva báthra (or Bóvo básro), fol. 17, col. 1, in these words: שלשה שלא שלט בהן יצר הרע אלו הן אברהם יצחק ויעקב, that is, There are three over whom the Jézer bará, that is, the evil inclination and nature, did not hold sway, namely Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; for it is plainly written in Gen 8:21: The Jezer, that is, the nature or the imagination of the human heart, is evil from his youth. Which Rabbi David Kimchi also confesses in his commentary on Isa 43:27 in these words: האדם מטבעו בחטא כי יצר לב האדם רע, that is, Man is by his nature in sin, for the imagination of the human heart is evil from youth onward.

Concerning the sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, it is written in 1 Sam 2:22 that they sinned against God by lying with the women who served at the entrance of the tent of meeting. In the Talmudic tractate Shabbat, however, one reads at fol. 55, col. 2: אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמני א"ר יוחנן כל האומר בני עלי חטאו אינו אלא טועה, that is, Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmani, said that Rabbi Jonathan had declared that whoever says the sons of Eli sinned is simply mistaken. And this is proved there in a foolish manner, with the following statement: מתוך ששהו את קניניהן שלא הלכו אצל בעליהן מעלה עליהן הכתוב כאילו שכבום: that is, because they (the women) delayed with their turtledoves and did not go to their husbands, Scripture regards them (namely, the sons of Eli) as though they had lain with them. Furthermore, it is written in Gen 35:22 that Reuben lay with his father's concubine Bilhah, and thus committed incest, which was a great sin. In the aforementioned Talmudic passage, however, it is taught: אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמני אמר רבי יוחנן כל האומר ראובן חטא אינו אלא טועה: that is, Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmani, reports that Rabbi Jonathan said that whoever says Reuben sinned is simply mistaken. And it is then stated: וישכב את בלהה פילגש אביו מלמד שבלבל מצעו של אביו ומעלה עליו הכתוב כאילו שכב עמה: that is, the words "and he lay with Bilhah, his father's concubine" teach that he disturbed (or brought into disorder) his father's bed, which Scripture regards as highly as if he had actually lain with her. But how does this foolish interpretation agree with what is written in Gen 49:4 and 1 Chr 5:1, where it is said that he defiled his father's bed? Furthermore, it is written in 1 Sam 8:3 that Samuel's sons turned after dishonest gain, accepted bribes, and perverted justice, which was a transgression against the law of Moses in Exod 18:21 and Deut 16:19. In the last-mentioned tractate, fol. 56, col. 1, however, it is taught: א"ר שמואל בר נחמני אמר ר' יוחנן כל האומר בני שמואל חטאו אינו אלא טועה: that is, Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmani, reports that Rabbi Jonathan said that whoever says Samuel's sons sinned is simply mistaken.

But this is read of King David in 2 Sam 11:3-4, that he committed adultery with Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, and in v. 15 it is recounted how he had Uriah killed, and in the following chapter, 2 Sam 12:9, it is to be seen that he despised the word of the Lord and had Uriah the Hittite slain by the sword of the children of Ammon, which sin the prophet Nathan laid before him by God's command. Thereupon, in the thirteenth verse, it is noted that David confessed his sin and said: I have sinned against the Lord. In the last-cited passage of the Talmud, however, it is written: אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמני אמר ר' יוחנן כל האומר דוד חטא אינו אלא טועה: that is, Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmani, says that Rabbi Jonathan said, whoever says that David sinned is mistaken. And it is put forward there that every man who went to war gave his wife a bill of divorce. The words there read as follows: אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמני אמר רבי יוחנן כל היוצא למלחמת בית דוד כותב גט כריתות לאשתו שנאמר ואת עשרת חריצי החלב האלה תביא לשר האלף ואת אחיך תפקוד לשלום ואת ערובתם תקח מאי ערובתם: that is, Rabbi Samuel says that Rabbi Jonathan said, every man who went to war in the house of David gave his wife a bill of divorce, as it is said in 1 Sam 17:18, And (take) these ten fresh cheeses and bring them to the commander (or captain) of the thousands, and visit your brothers, whether it goes well with them, and bring ערובם arybbathām, that is, their mingling (as it is wrongly understood in the Talmud, whereas it actually means: their pledge, that is, the token by which I may recognize that they are still alive). What does arybbatham mean? Rab Joseph teaches that it signifies things mingled together that were between him and her. Concerning this, Rabbi Solomon writes in his commentary the following words: דברים המעורבים ביניהם היו קידושין תקח חבלל על ידי גט שתביא להם מן המלחמה : that is, by the things mingled between them, understand the marriage bond; but the word bring means as much as: you shall annul and render void the marriage bond by means of the bill of divorce that you bring them from the war. The aforementioned Rabbi Solomon also mentions this in his commentary on 1 Sam 17:18: רבותינו אמרו גט כריתות יקה מאתם ויביא לנשותיהם : להפריד עירוב שבינו לבניה : that is, our rabbis say, he (David) was to bring a bill of divorce from them (namely his brothers) and deliver it to their wives, so that the mingling (and bond) that was between them might be dissolved. For this reason, Rabbi Lipmann also writes in his Sepher Nizzáchon, numero 182: כבשבע : לא חטא דוד כי פנויה היתה כי כל היוצא למלחמת בית וד גט כריתות כתב לאשתו וגו : that is, David did not sin with Bathsheba, for she was a free woman (or widow), since every man who went out to war in the house of David wrote his wife a bill of divorce, etc.; David did not sin, since she was free, for every man who went to war in the house of David wrote his wife a bill of divorce.

We also read in 1 Kgs 11:4-7 that King Solomon, when he had grown old, was led astray into heathen idolatry through the enticement of his foreign wives, by which sin God was provoked to anger against him, as is indicated in the following ninth verse. In the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Shabbath, however, it is denied at fol. 56, col. 2 that he sinned; where the words read as follows: אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמני אמר רבי יונתן כל האומר שלמה חטא אינו אלא טועה : that is: Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmani, says that Rabbi Jonathan said, whoever says that Solomon sinned is mistaken. And it follows shortly thereafter: נשיו הטו את לבבו ללכת אחרי אלהים אחרים ולא הלך וכתוב אז יבנה שלמה : that is: His wives did indeed seek to incline his heart to follow after other gods, but he did not follow them. How so? For it is written (v. 7): "And Solomon built a high place for Chemosh, the abomination of the Moabites!" (This is to be understood as follows:) He wished to build it, but did not build it. Likewise, in the book Siphre jeschenim, fol. 32, col. 4, numero 27, mention is made of a written book called זכות אדם (Sachuth Adam), that is, the Innocence of Adam, in which it is maintained that Adam did not sin when he ate of the forbidden fruit.

Further, in the Talmudic tractate báva báthra (or Bóvo básro) fol. 15. col. 2., it reads as follows: אמר ר' שמואל בר נחמני אמר ר' יונתן כל האומר מלכת שבא אשה : that is: Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachmání, says that Rabbi Jonathan said that whoever claims Malcáth Schebbá (which we Christians rightly interpret as the Queen of Sheba) was a woman is simply mistaken. What, then, does Malcáth Schebbá mean? It means the kingdom (that is, the king) of Sheba. On the contrary, 1 Kgs 10:1 etc. expressly states that it was a queen, and consequently a woman, and nowhere in all of Holy Scripture, nor indeed anywhere else in any Rabbinic book, is the word Málca found to mean a kingdom; rather, it always means a queen. We see from this, however, how the devil, through the Rabbis in the Talmud, perverts Scripture and strives to twist that which is entirely clear and plain in God's Word into a false meaning.

The Holy Scripture teaches that God asks no one for counsel, for in Isa 40:13-14 it is said: "Who has instructed the Spirit of the Lord, and who has taught Him as a counselor? With whom has He taken counsel?" In the Talmud, however, in tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 38, col. 2, it is written thus: אמר ר' יוחנן אין הק"ב עושה דבר אלא אם כן נמלך בפמליא של מעלה שנ' בגזירת עירין פתגמא ובמאמר קדישין שאילתא, that is: Rabbi Jonathan has said, the holy and blessed God does nothing unless He first takes counsel with the heavenly household (that is, with the angels), as it is said (Dan 4:17): "This matter is decreed by the watchers, and this request has been confirmed by the word of the holy ones." Concerning this, however, Rabbi Bechai writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the parashah Bereschith, fol. 8, col. 2, as follows: אין הק"ב עושה דבר עד שמסתכל בפמליא של מעלה; וביאור הענין שהבורא ית' פועל כל פעולותיו על ידי אמצעיים. ומצינו גם כן בפשטי התורה מסייעין אל זה הענין ועל זה אמר בפסוק: בלשון רבים להורות על אמצעיים. that is: The holy and blessed God does nothing unless He first looks to the heavenly household (namely, the angels). This, however, is to be interpreted as meaning that the blessed Creator performs all His works through intermediaries. We also find in the literal (or plain) interpretations of the Law proofs that confirm this; for this reason (God) speaks here in the plural number: "Let us make man," in order thereby to indicate the intermediaries (that is, the angels, through whose mediation He acts).

That wisdom comes from God and is given by Him to mankind, we read in Ps 51:8 and 94:10, Job 32:8 and 38:36, Dan 1:17, and Eccl 2:26. For this reason Solomon also desired wisdom from Him and received it, as can be seen in 1 Kgs 3:9, 11, 12. Likewise it stands in 1 Sam 2:7 that the LORD God makes poor and rich. In the Talmudic tractate Shabbath, however, it is read at fol. 156, col. 1: רבי חנינא אומר מזל מחכים מזל מעשיר, that is, Rabbi Channina says that the stars make one wise and rich. Yet the Talmud itself, in the tractate Kiddushin fol. 82, col. 2, also teaches the opposite and contradicts itself, for it states therein: רבי מאיר אומר לעולם ילמד אדם לבנו ואומנות נקייה וקלה ויבקש רחמים למי שהעושר והנכסים שלו שאין עניות מן האומנות ואין עשירות מן האומנות אלא למי שהעושר שלו שנ' לי הכסף ולי הזהב אמר י"י צבאות that is, Rabbi Meir says that a man should always have his son learn a clean and easy trade, and should beg for mercy from the one who possesses wealth and goods. For poverty does not come from one's trade, nor does wealth, but rather from the one who holds wealth, as it is said (Hag 2:9): Mine is both the silver and the gold, says the LORD of hosts. Likewise it is read in Ps 127:4 that children are an inheritance or gift from God; but in the Talmudic tractate Moed Katon at fol. 28, col. 1, and in the aforementioned tractate Shabbath at fol. 156, col. 1, in the Tosephoth, it is stated: אמר רבא בני חיי ומזוני לאו בזכותא תליא מילתא אלא במזלא תליא מילתא, that is, Rabba says that children, life, and sustenance do not depend on righteousness, but on the stars.

Usury is also forbidden in Exod 22:25 and Lev 25:35-37; in the Talmud, however, it is permitted in the tractate Báva mezia, fol. 75, col. 1, where the following is taught: אמר רב יהודה אמר שמואל תלמידי חכמים מותרים ללוות זה מזה ברבית מאי טעמא מידע ידעי דרבית אסורה ומתנה הוא דיהבי אהדי. אמר רב יהודה אמר רב that is: Raf Jebuda has said that Samuel declared it is permitted for the wise to borrow from one another at usury. What is the reason? They know full well that usury is forbidden, and it is merely a gift that they give to one another. Raf Jebuda has said that Raf declared it is permitted for a man to lend to his children and his household members at usury, so that one may let them taste the flavor of usury. Drunkenness is forbidden in Isa v. 20, where it is said: "Woe to those who are heroes at drinking wine." In the Talmudic tractate Megilla, by contrast, one reads at fol. 7, col. 2: אמר רבא מיהייב איניש לבסומי בפוריא עד דלא ידע בין ארור המן that is: Rabba has said, a man is obligated to drink himself so drunk on the feast of Purim that he no longer knows the difference between the words "cursed be Haman" and "blessed be Mordecai." God has forbidden in Lev 18:21 and 20:2-3 giving any of one's seed, that is, one's children, to the idol Molech, so that they should be burned for it or led through between two fires; in the Talmud, however, it is written in the tractate Sanhédrin, fol. 67, col. 2: אמר רב אחא בריה דרבא העביר כל זרעו פטור שנ' ומזרעך ולא כל זרעך that is: Raf Acha, the son of Rabba, has said: if someone causes all of his seed (or all of his children) to pass through, he is free (namely, from punishment), because (in the aforementioned passage, Lev 14:21) it says "and of your seed," but not "all of your seed." Is this not yet again a perverse interpretation of the Word of God? The foolish Raf Acha ought rather to have concluded that, since it is forbidden to cause any of one's seed to pass through fire in honor of Molech, it is all the less permissible to lead all of one's children through it.

That one cannot praise God enough, and that He ought always to be extolled and glorified, this is what Holy Scripture teaches; therefore David speaks in Ps 96:4: "The LORD is great and greatly to be praised." And Ps 34:2: "I will bless the LORD at all times; His praise shall continually be in my mouth." And Ps 145:2-3: "Every day I will bless You, and praise Your name forever and ever. Great is the LORD and greatly to be praised." The Talmud, however, teaches the opposite, as is read in its tractate Megilla fol. 18, col. 1: אסור לספר בשבחו של הק"ב דאמר רבי אלעזר מאי דכתיב מי ימלל גבורות ה' ישמיע כל תהלתו למי נאה למלל גבורות ה' למי שיכול להשמיע כל תהלתו. אמר רבה בר בר חנא אמר רבי יוחנן המספר בשבחו של הק"ב יותר מדאי נעקר מן העולם שנאמר היסופר לו כי אדבר אם אמר איש כי יבלע: That is: It is forbidden to recount the praise of the Holy and Blessed God (beyond that which is found in the customary prayers, as the preceding words indicate), for Rabbi Eliezer has said: What is that which is written (Ps 106:2): "Who can utter the mighty acts of the LORD, or declare all His praise?" To whom is it fitting to utter the mighty acts of the LORD? To him who is able to declare all His praise. Rabba, the grandson of Channa, has said that Rabbi Jochanan declared: whoever recounts the praise of the Holy and Blessed God more than is fitting shall be rooted out from the world, as it is said (Job 37:20): "Shall it be told Him that I speak? If a man speaks, surely he shall be swallowed up."

God the Lord forbids, in Lev 19:31, going to diviners or divining spirits (for the word Ofoth or Ofos signifies both) and consulting them, when He says: You shall not turn to the Ofoth, that is, to diviners or divining spirits; and He does not wish that any such diviner should be found, as may be read in Lev 20:27 and Deut 18:11. The Talmud, however, permits in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 101. col. 1. that one may consult the devils, where the words read as follows: אין שואלין בדבר שדים בשבת ר' יוסי אומר אף בהול אסור אמר רב הונא אין הלכה כרבי יוסי ואף ר' יוסי לא אמרה אלא משום סכנה כי הא דרב יצחק בר יוסף דאיבלע בארזא ואתעביד ליה ניסא פקע ארזא ופלטיה: that is, one does not consult the devils on the Sabbath. Rabbi Jose says it is likewise forbidden on weekdays. Rabbi Hona says the ruling does not follow Rabbi Jose; and indeed Rabbi Jose said this only on account of the danger (which one must fear from the devils when one consults them), and specifically in accordance with what befell Raf Isaac, the son of Joseph, who was swallowed up into a cedar tree: but a miraculous sign was wrought for him, for the cedar tree split open and cast him out.

Therefore, according to this, it is permitted to consult the devils on weekdays, although Rabbi Jose did not wish to allow it on account of the danger, but not because it should be forbidden by the Law. After this, the following passage occurs in the same place: תנו רבנן שרי שמן ושרי ביצים מותרין that is: Our Rabbis teach that the princes of oil and the princes of eggs are permitted. What these words mean, however, Rabbi Solomon Jarchi explains in his commentary on this passage with the following words: מעשה שדים ששאלין בשפופרת של ביצה וקרי להו שרי ביצים על ידי שמן וקרי להו שרי שמן ויש ששאלין בשפופרת של ביצה וקרי להו שרי ביצים, that is: It is a work of the devils, whereby one consults them through oil, and these (devils) are called princes of oil; but some consult them through an eggshell, and those (devils who are thus consulted) are called princes of eggs. According to this teaching, it is therefore permitted for Jews to consult the devils through oil or eggshells. Concerning this, there is also written in the book Lef tof, in the third chapter, fol. 39, col. 1 of the Wilmersdorf edition, as follows: וואו פֿירשטין דען גלאזען אודר פֿירשטין דער הענד אן בעלאנגט קענין זיכא אונד ווען איין גנבה גשעהן איזט דען גנב ברענגן אין איין גלאז אודר אין דער הענט טוהר אן דאז מען א פֿילו אם שבת דען וואו זעלכי זאכן מותר זיין דער וואוכן דאז זיין זיך אם שבת אוך מותר, that is: As for the princes of the glass (in which there is oil) or the princes of the hand, some are able, when a theft has occurred, to bring the thief into a glass or into the hand, and one may well do this even on the Sabbath, for such things as are permitted during the week are also permitted on the Sabbath.

It is also read in the Talmudic tractate Gittin, fol. 68, col. 1–2, that King Solomon had certain devils, and in particular the king of the devils, brought before him, and asked where the Schamir (which is said to have been a certain small worm, by whose power one could split the hardest stones) might be found, so that the stones for the Temple might be split by means of it, since it was forbidden, as can be seen in 1 Kgs 6:7, to use any hammer or any iron implement for that purpose. The words of the Talmud, however, read as follows: אמר (המלך שלמה (לרבנן היכי אעביד אמרו ליה איכא שמירא דאיתי משה לאבני אפוד אמר להו היכא אשתכח אמרו ליה אייתי שידה ושידתין כבשינהו אהדדי איפשר ידידי ומגלו לך אייתי שידה ושידתין כבשינהו אהדדי אמרי לא ידיענן דילמא אשמדאי מלכא דשידי ידע אמר להו היכא איתיה אמרי ליה איתיה בטורא פלן כריא ליה בירא ומליא ליה מיא ומיכסאי בטינרא וחתמא בגושפנקיה וכל יומא סליק לרקיעא וגמר מתיבתא דרקיעא ונחית לארעא וגמר מתיבתא דארעא ואתי סייר לגושפנקיה ומגלי ליה ושתי ומכסי ליה וחתים ליה ואזל שדריה לבניהו בן יהוידע יתב ליה שושילתא דחקיק עלה שם ועזקתא דחקיק עלה שם וגבבי דעמרא ויקי דחמרא אזל כרה בירא מתתאי ושפנהו למיא וסתמינהו בגבבי דעמרא וכרה בירא מעילאי ושפכינהו לחמרא וסתמינהו סליק ויתב באילנא כי אתא סייריה לגושפנקא גלייה אשכחה חמרא אמר כתיב לך היין הומה שכר כל שונה בו אל יחכם וכתוב זנות ויין ותירוש יקח לב לא אשתי כי צחי לא סגי ליה אישתי דוא וגו'

He descended, came, and cast a chain upon him and sealed him. When he awoke, he was shaking off iron. He said to him: The name of your master is upon you, the name of your master is upon you. When he took hold of him and they went along, they came to a palm tree; he rubbed against it and knocked it down. They came to a house and he knocked it down. Then he came to the hut of a certain widow; she came out and pleaded with him, and he bent his stature away from her, and a bone was broken in him. He said: This is what is written, "and a soft tongue breaks a bone," etc. When he arrived there, they did not bring him before Solomon until three days had passed. On the first day he said to them: Why does the king not wish to see me? They said to him: He has been overcome by drink. He took bricks and placed one upon another. They came and told Solomon. He said to them: This is what he said to you; go back and give him more to drink. On the next day he said to them: Why does the king not wish to see me? They said to him: He has been overcome by eating. He took the bricks from one another and set them on the ground. They came and told Solomon. He said to them: This is what he said to you; withhold his food from him. At the beginning of the third day he came before him; he took a reed and measured four cubits and cast it before him. He said: When that man dies, he has in this world nothing but four cubits. Now you have conquered the whole world and were not satisfied until you had conquered me as well. He said to him: I want nothing from you; I want to build the Temple and I need the Shamir. He said to him: It is not given to me but to the Prince of the Sea, and he gives it to none but the wild rooster, who is faithful to him by his oath. And what does he do with it? He carries it to mountains where there is no settlement and places it on the rock of the mountain, and the mountain splits, and he brings seeds from trees and casts them there, and it becomes a settled place. And this is why we translate it: Naggār tura, that is, a mountain-craftsman. They searched for the nest of the wild rooster that had chicks; they covered it with white glass. When he came and wished to enter but could not, he went and brought the Shamir and placed it upon it. Then Benaiah cried out loudly at him, he dropped the Shamir, and Benaiah took it. The rooster went and strangled itself on account of its oath.

(That is: He (namely King Solomon) spoke to the Rabbis: How shall I accomplish it (that the stones for the Temple be split without iron tools)? They said to him: The Shamir can be obtained, which Moses had brought to the stones of the breastplate. He asked them: Where is it to be found? They answered him: Have a demon and a demoness come, and compel them together; perhaps they know and will reveal it to you. Thereupon he had a demon and a demoness come and compelled them together (so that they should disclose it to him); but they said: We do not know; perhaps Ashmadai, the king of the demons, knows it. He asked them: Where then is he? They answered: He is on such-and-such a mountain, and has dug himself a pit there and filled it with water and covered it with a stone, and sealed it with his signet ring. He also ascends every day into the firmament (or heaven) and studies in the heavenly academy of the firmament; thereafter he descends to the earth and studies in the earthly academy. Then he comes and inspects his seal and opens the pit and drinks;

and when he has covered it again, he seals it and goes on his way. Thereupon (King Solomon) sent Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, and gave him a chain upon which the Name (that is, the Shem ha-Mephorash) was written (or engraved), as well as a ring upon which the Name was likewise engraved, together with some locks (or bundles) of wool and several skins of wine. When he had gone there (to Ashmadai's pit), he dug a pit beneath it and let the water run out, and stopped the hole again with the wool locks; then he dug a pit above (Ashmadai's pit) and poured the wine into it and closed it again (so that the demon could not see that anyone had been there), and climbed up a tree and seated himself upon it. When Ashmadai came and had inspected his seal and opened the pit and found wine in it, he said: It is written (Prov 20:1): Wine is a mocker and strong drink is riotous; whoever errs therein will never be wise. And it is further written (Hos 4:11): Whoredom, wine, and new wine take away the heart (or understanding); and he did not drink (because he did not trust the wine). But since he had great thirst, he could not restrain himself for long, and drank and became drunk, and lay down and fell asleep. In the meantime (Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, descended from the tree), went to him, and cast the chain upon him and fastened it (firmly around his neck so that he could not pull his head out, as Rabbi Solomon notes concerning this). When he awoke, he behaved as though completely mad (and wanted to tear the chain from himself); but he (Benaiah) said to him: The name of your master is upon you, the name of your master is upon you (for it was written upon the chain). When Benaiah had held him by the chain and they had gone on together, he (Ashmadai) came to a palm tree and rubbed himself against it and knocked it to the ground. Then he came to a house and knocked it down as well. Thereupon he came to the small hut of a widow; she came out and begged him earnestly (that he might do no harm to her hut), and when he wanted to turn to the other side, he broke a bone, and said: This is what is written (Prov 25:15): A gentle tongue (or soft-spoken word) breaks the bone, etc. (meaning thereby that because he had given ear to the woman's flattering words, this had befallen him). After he had arrived there (at the king's palace), he was not brought before Solomon until after three days. On the first day he said to them (Solomon's servants): Why does the king not let me come before him? They said to him: He has drunk too much. Then he took a baked brick and set it upon another. They went to Solomon and told him what he had done. He said to them: He meant to say (or give to understand) this: go and give him more to drink. On the second day he said to them again: Why does the king not let me come before him? They answered him: He has eaten too much. Then he took the baked brick from the other and set it on the ground. Thereupon they went to Solomon and told him. He said to them: He meant to say (or signify) this: give him only a little to eat. At the beginning of the third day he (Ashmadai) came before him (the king), and took a measuring rod and measured four cubits with it and cast it before him, and said to him: When you die, you have in this world nothing more than four cubits (namely in the grave); now you have conquered the whole world and were still not satisfied until you had conquered me as well and subjected me to yourself. He (Solomon) however said to him: I desire nothing from you; I wish to build the Temple, and for that I need the Shamir. He answered him: It is not entrusted to me but to the Prince of the Sea, and he gives it to no one but the wild rooster, who is faithful to him by virtue of the oath he has sworn to him (that he would keep it safely). What then does he do with it? He takes it with him to the mountains where no one can dwell (and upon which there are no plants or trees), and holds it against the rocks of the mountain and splits the mountain, and carries it away again. Thereafter he takes seeds from trees and casts them there, so that it becomes a place to dwell (where trees and other things grow); for this reason he is called Naggar tura, that is, a mountain-craftsman. After they had found the nest of the wild rooster in which there were young, they covered it with a white glass. When he came and wished to enter (to reach his young), he could not; therefore he went and brought the Shamir and placed it upon it. When Benaiah cried out loudly at him, he let the Shamir fall, and Benaiah took it; but the wild rooster went and strangled itself on account of its oath (which it had sworn to the Prince of the Sea, that it had not kept it and had let the Shamir fall). These are the words of the Talmud. Nothing more foolish could occur to a person in a raging fever: for how should the demon, being a spirit, feel thirst and drink water, or drink himself full of wine, or be able to have a chain bound around his neck when he has no body, or have a bone broken? And how can a wild rooster, being an irrational animal, swear an oath, make rocky mountains fruitful, and sow them? Indeed, how should such gross lies be the Word of God?)

Since the mention of the little worm Schamir has been made here, we also wish to examine when it was created, how large it was, and how it was preserved. Concerning this, the Talmud teaches the following in the tractate Sóta, fol. 48. col. 2.: תנו רבנן שמיר זה בריה מששת ימי בראשית נברא ואין כל דבר קשה יכול לעמוד בפניו. כמה משמרין אותו כורכין אותו בספוגין של צמר ומניחין אותו בארגז של עשרת דברים נבראו בערב שבת בין השמשות ואלו הן פי הארץ ופי הבאר ופי האתון הקשת והמן והמטה והשמיר וגוי. That is: Our rabbis teach that this Schamir is a creature as large as a barleycorn, and that it was created during the six days of creation; moreover, no hard thing can withstand it. In what is it kept? It is wrapped in a woolen sponge and placed in a leaden box filled with barley bran. As for the time of its creation, the following is written concerning it in Pirke avoth (or óvos), in the fifth chapter, fol. 30. col. 1. of the Talmud printed in Amsterdam: עשרת דברים נבראו בערב שבת בין השמשות ואלו הן פי הארץ ופי הבאר ופי האתון הקשת והמן והמטה והשמיר וגוי. That is: Ten things were created on the (first) Sabbath eve at twilight, and they are the following: the mouth of the earth (which swallowed Korah and his assembly, as may be read in Num 16:30-32), the mouth or opening of the well (which is mentioned in Gen 29:2), and the mouth of the she-ass (of Balaam), and the rainbow, and the manna, and the staff (of Aaron, which is mentioned in Exod 7:12), and the Schamir, etc. It is said, however, that it has no longer existed since the time of the destruction of the Second Temple; hence it is written thus in the aforementioned tractate Sôta, fol. 48. col. 2.: ר"ר שמיר שבו בנה שלמה את: המקדש: That is: From the time in which the Temple was destroyed, the Schamir is no more, etc. Our rabbis teach that Solomon built the Temple by means of this Schamir.

The rabbis, according to the content of the Talmud, required the king of the devils to assist in the construction of the Temple and to indicate where the Schamir could be obtained. We therefore wish to examine further what foolish dreams the senseless rabbis have concerning the assistance of the devils, of which one is said to have made use for this purpose. On this matter, the following is to be read in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 147. col. 1.: דרשו רז"ל: על פסוק וישב שלמה על כסא יי' למלך מה הקב"ה מלך על העליונים ועל התחתונים אף שלמה המלך ע"ה מלך על העליונים ועל התחתונים ואפילו שדים ורוחין ולילין היו משועבדים לו כי בזמנו היתה הסטרא קיסנא באשתמותא והטוב גבר על הרע ונתקנו האבנים גדולות והביאו הרוחות לבנין בית המקדש וגם הם היו מסייעים.

We must now also see how the captive Aschmedai deceived King Solomon and got the better of him, and it is reported in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Gittin, fol. 68. col. 2. that after Solomon had built the Temple, the following occurred:

יומא חד הוה קאי לחודיה א"ל כתיב כתועפות ראם לו ואמרינן כתועפות אלו מלאכי השרת ראם אלו השדים מאי רבותייכו מינן א"ל שקול שושילתא מנאי והב לי עיזקתך ואחוי לך רבותאי שקליה לשושילתא מיניה ויהב ליה עיזקתיה בלעיה אותביה לחד גפיה ברקיע ולחד גפיה בארעא פתקיה ד' מאה פרסי על ההיא שעתא אמר שלמה מה יתרון לאדם בכל עמלו שיעמול תחת השמש וזה היה חלקי מכל עמלי מאי וזה רב ושמואל חד אמר מקלו וחד אמר גונדו היה מחזור על הפתחים כל היכא דמטא אמר אני קהלת הייתי מלך על ישראל בירושלים כי מטא גבי סנהדרין אמרו אמרו רבנן מכדי שיטה חזא מילתא לא סריך מאי האי אמרו ליה לבניהו קא בעי לך מלכא לגביה אמר להו לא שלחו להו למלכותא קאתי מלכא לגבייכו שלחו להו אין קאתי שלחו להו בדקו בכרעיה שלחו להו במוקיא קאתי דקא תבע להו בנדותיהו וקא תבע להו נמי לבת שבע אימיה אייתוה לשלמה ויהבו ליה עיזקתא ושושילתא דחקוק עליה שם כי עייל חזייה פרח ואפילו הכי ה"ל ביעתותא מיניה והיינו דכתיב הנה מטתו של שלמה ששים גבורים סביב לה מגבורי ישראל כלם אחזי חרב מלומדי מלחמה איש חרבו על ירכו מפחד בלילות

That is: One day he (namely Solomon) stood alone (with Aschmedai) and said to him: it is written (Num 23:22): His strength is like that of a unicorn. The word "strength" signifies the ministering spirits, but by the unicorn the devils are understood. In what respect are you (devils) more excellent and superior to us? Then Aschmedai answered him: take the chain from me and give me your ring, and I will show you my excellence. When Solomon thereupon removed the chain from him and gave him his ring, he (Aschmedai) swallowed him (Solomon), and set one of his wings (or feet, as it is translated in the Maase-Book) against the firmament of heaven, and his other wing (or foot) upon the earth, and hurled him four hundred miles away (so that no one knew anything of it, and thereafter seated himself on the royal throne in Solomon's form, as is reported in the Maase-Book in the hundred and fifth chapter, where this entire fable also appears). From that hour Solomon said (from Eccl 1:3): What advantage does a man have from all his toil which he endures under the sun? And this is my portion from all my labor. What does the little word "this" signify? Raf and Samuel were of differing opinions on this point: the one said it signifies his staff, but the other said it signifies his garment. Solomon thereupon went begging from door to door, and wherever he came he spoke (the words from Eccl 1:12): I, the Preacher, was king over Israel in Jerusalem. When he came to the high council (and let the same words be heard from him, and said nothing further besides), the rabbis said: what can this be, for a fool does not remain consistent in one speech; and they said to Benaja: does the king also let himself be brought before him? But he answered them: no. Then they sent to the queens (and had them asked): does the king also come to you? But they sent word back: yes, he comes. They (the rabbis and sages) sent word back again: pay attention to his feet (for the feet of devils are like the feet of roosters). The queens thereupon reported back that he came in slippers, and that he had desired them during the time of their womanly impurity (for intercourse), and that he had also wished to lie with his mother Bathsheba. Thereupon they brought Solomon (who had gone begging) forward, and gave him the ring and the chain upon which the name (of God, that is, the Schem hammephorasch) was written. When he then went in (understand: into the chamber in which Aschmedai sat upon the throne as the supposed king) and Aschmedai saw him, he flew away. Although this occurred (that he had flown away before him), Solomon was nonetheless afraid of him; and this is what is written (Song 3:7): Behold, around the bed of Solomon stand sixty mighty men, from among the mighty men of Israel. They all hold swords and are trained for war; every man has his sword at his side, because of the terror of the night.

This fable is also read, with some variation, in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 14, col. 4, and fol. 15, col. 1, in the twelfth chapter of the author's preface, where the words run as follows: מעשה בשלמה המלך ע"ה אשר היה שח בכל יום לרקיע לשמוע סודות מפי עזא ועזאל ולא היה לו פחד ואימה וכל צבא מעלה היו כורעים ומשתחוים לפני הקב"ה והיו משבחים אותו שהעמיד מלך כזה בישראל והיו שמאלים לו כל רצון 'שנ

such a king over Israel, and (all the spirits) fulfilled for him, (namely for Solomon) his every wish, as it is said (1 Chr 29:23): And Solomon sat upon the throne of the Lord as king, and ruled over the upper and lower (creatures). At his command they (namely the spirits) brought the stones and the necessities for the building of the Temple; and when he had desired the Shamir, he caused Ashmedai, the king of the devils, to be brought to him by iron chains and a ring upon which the Schem hammphorásch was engraved, and the same was kept prisoner with him for a long time, even after the building of the Temple. But when Solomon's sin had brought it about, Ashmedai demanded of him that he should set him free, and then he would reveal to him a secret concerning a great and very terrible matter. When he had now set him free, and the same had also demanded of him that he should give him his ring, upon which the Schem hammphorásch was engraved, he trusted him (and gave it to him): for it was so ordained by the Lord that He might repay him according to his works, because he had transgressed three prohibitions, so that he should go into exile for three years. When Ashmedai had now received the ring, he threw it into the sea, and a fish came and swallowed it. Thereupon Ashmedai hurled Solomon four hundred miles away into the land of the peoples (or heathens), and drove him out of his kingdom: there his glory was lost, for he had thrown him very far away; and he begged at doors, and said: I, Solomon, was a king in Jerusalem. But the people mocked him on account of his words, and said: Should such a one beg at doors as a king? And he remained in such a painful condition for three years, because he had transgressed three commandments of the Law (which are written in Deut 17:16-17, and read): He shall not take many wives, and shall not keep many horses, and shall not amass much silver and gold. In all of which he had offended. But at the end of such a time, when the three years had passed, God wished to have mercy upon him for the sake of His servant David, and so that Naama, the daughter of the king of the Ammonites, might be justified, and the Messiah the son of David might come forth from him, and he might join himself to her (and wed her), and bring her with him into the land of Israel; so God caused him to go into the land of the Ammonites. And when he came to the royal residence city, which was called Maschkemem, and stood in the street of the city Maschkemem, the king's steward came, the chief cook, who prepared and cooked the food for the king, to purchase what he needed for the performance of his duties, and found Solomon standing there, and took him away by force so that he had to carry what had been purchased, and led him into the kitchen, and watched what he did. But Solomon spoke to him, saying he wished to stay with him and serve him, and desired nothing but his keep; and when the steward was content with this, he stayed with him and served him and helped him. Some days later he said to him (the steward) that he wished to cook some dishes for the king in his own manner, for he had been an excellent master in the preparation of such dishes; and when the steward was content with this, he prepared the royal delicate and savory dishes. Now when the king had eaten of those splendid dishes which the steward had set before him, and had tasted that cooked food, he asked the steward who had prepared these dishes, since he had never set the like before him; and he told him everything that had occurred, that that man (namely Solomon) had cooked them. Thereupon the king commanded his servants to call him; and when he came before the king, the king asked him: wilt thou be my steward? And he answered: yes. Thereafter the king dismissed his steward and put him in his place, so that he should prepare all his dishes for him. But it came to pass after all this that the daughter of the king of the Ammonites, whose name was Naama, saw him, and she said to her mother that she was minded to marry this man, the steward; whereupon her mother rebuked her and said to her: there are indeed many excellent princes in your father's kingdom, so that you can take whichever of them pleases you; but she replied: I desire none other than this steward; and although her mother reasoned with her at great length, it would avail nothing, for she said: I desire by no means any other man than this one; so that her mother was compelled to disclose the matter to her husband the king, that his daughter wished to take the steward as her husband. When the king heard this, he became very angry and wished to put them both to death; but it was not God's will, and it came to pass that the king took pity on them and did not wish to shed innocent blood; therefore he called one of his servants and commanded him to lead them into a desolate wilderness, so that they might die there of themselves. And the court servant did as the king had commanded him, and left them in the wilderness, and went his way to the king to serve him as before. But they departed from there to find food to sustain their lives, and came to a city which lay on the shore of the sea; and as he went about seeking food for their sustenance, he found fishermen who were selling fish, and bought one of them, and brought that fish to his wife to cook. When she had opened it, she found a ring inside it, upon which the Schem hammphorásch שם המפורש was engraved, and gave that ring to her husband; and he recognized the ring at once and put it on his finger. Then his spirit returned to him immediately (that is, he was joyful again), and his mind was settled, and he went to Jerusalem and drove away Ashmedai (who had sat upon his throne during his absence and had pretended to be the king), seated himself upon his royal throne, and placed the royal crown upon his head. Thereafter he sent to summon her father, the king of the Ammonites, and (when he had come) said to him: thou hast put two souls to death without permission and without fear. But he answered him: God forbid, I did not put them to death, but drove them into a desolate wilderness, and I do not know what has become of them. Thereupon King Solomon, upon whom be peace, asked him: if thou wert to see them, wouldst thou be able to recognize them? Know that I am the steward, and thy daughter is my wife; and he sent for her, and she came and kissed his hands, and he rejoiced greatly and returned to his own land. This tale is also found in the cited book Emek hammelech, fol. 108, col. 4, and

fol. 109, col. 1, in the 112th chapter, under the title Schäar kirjáth arba; in connection with which it is to be noted that the Talmud and the book Emek hammélech do not agree with one another, in that the former teaches that the sages of the high council returned the ring to Solomon in Jerusalem, whereas in the latter it is reported that his wife found it in a fish and handed it to him. That Solomon went begging, however, is also to be read in the Jalkut Chádasch, fol. 45, col. 1, number 71, under the title David, from the Sohar, and in the Jalkut Rubéni gadól, fol. 176, col. 3-4, in the Parashah Schophetim.

Returning now to the subject of consulting devils and obtaining instruction from them, the Jews also teach that Solomon traveled every day on an eagle into the dark mountains to the two devils Asa and Asaël, and learned wisdom and arts from them. This is found in the book Avodáth (or Avódas) hakkódesch, in the third part, which is called Chélek battáchlith, in chapter 19, fol. 109, col. 1, where it reads as follows: that is: Solomon, upon whom be peace, rode upon an eagle and traveled there (namely into the mountains toward the east, which are mentioned in Num 23:7) to Asa and Asaël, to learn their wisdom. And in the aforementioned book Emek hammélech, fol. 5, col. 4, in the preface, the following is written on this subject: that is: King Solomon, upon whom be peace, possessed deeper knowledge than all who came before him, after the generation of Moses our teacher, upon whom be peace, etc. He also performed terrible deeds; indeed (he also made it his concern) to learn foreign wisdoms, and traveled every day on a throne that stood upon an eagle to Asa and Asaël, and looked into the dark mountains, according to the mystery of that which is said (2 Chr 8:4): And he built Tadmor in the wilderness, upon the mountains. On this subject there is considerably more to be found in the last-mentioned book Emek hammélech, fol. 108, col. 1, 2, 3, in chapter 111, under the title Schäar kirjáth arba; and regarding the eagle, something is to be found in the Jalkut Schimóni on Ecclesiastes, fol. 183, col. 4.

שלמה המלך ע"ה העמיק לדעת מכל אשר היו לפניו אחר דורו של משה רבינו ע"ה וגו' והיה פועל פעולות נוראות אפילו לדעת חכמתן נוכראין והיה שט בכל יום אצל עזא ועזאל על כסא שיהיה עומד על נשר ונפה בהרי חושך כמו שנאמר ויכן את תדמר במדבר בהרים.

Balaam is also said to have learned his wisdom from the aforementioned two devils, as is read in the said book Emek hammélech, in the 111th chapter, under the said title Schäar kirjáth arba, fol. 107. col. 4.; and they are said to have been cast down from Heaven and bound with chains, as is indicated in the more frequently mentioned book Emek hammelech fol. 68. col. 1., in the 22nd chapter, under the title Schäar dikoa kaddischa, with these words: וראו בני האלהים את בנות האדם חשקו בהן וקב"ה אפיל לן לתתא בשלשללאן ואינן עזא ועזאל דמינייהו נשמתהון דערב רב that is: When the sons of God saw the daughters of men (as is read in Gen 6:2), they desired them; and the holy blessed God cast them down in chains, and these are Asa and Asael, from whom the souls of the great mixed multitude (which is mentioned in Exod 12:38) are descended.

Rabbi Jehuda also teaches that, according to some opinion, one ought to prostrate oneself before the devil when one fears him and cannot adjure him, as may be seen in his Sépher Chasidim numero 236. fol. 25. col. 3., where the following stands: ואם אדם אין בו לב להשביעו יבקש לו להקב"ה שלא יזק לו ויש אומרים that is: When a person does not have the heart to adjure him, he should pray to God that he cause him no harm. There are also some who say he should fall down upon the ground before him: when he humbles himself before him, the devil will do him no harm. But enough has been said on this matter, and we must return to the proof that the Talmud is contrary to Holy Scripture.

That the Talmud is not the Word of God is further proven by the fact that one reads therein that God swore by the life of men. Thus one reads in Tractate Sota fol. 10. col. 2. that God said to Judah: מן 'מבניך ג' הי העד שאני מציל מבניך ג' that is: "I swear by your life that I, on account of your righteousness, will deliver three of your children from the fire." Many such examples occur therein, and for this reason the same is often found in other books as well; and it stands in Beresbit (or Bereishis) Rabba, in the 98th Parashah, fol. 90. col. 4., that God addressed Joseph in the following manner: אמר לו הקב"ה אתה לא חלית את עיניך הבאת בהן חייך שאתה נותן לבנותי צידה במדה מהו צידה פרשה that is: "The Holy Blessed God said to him: you did not lift up your eyes and did not look upon them (namely, the royal daughters who are mentioned there); I swear by your life that you shall give my daughters a Zeida in the Law. What is Zeida? A Parashah, or portion of the Law." By contrast, God swears in Holy Scripture either by Himself, as can be seen in Gen 22:16, Isa 45:22, and 62:8, Ezek 33:27, and 34:8; or by His right hand, Isa 62:8; or by His soul, which likewise amounts to swearing by Himself, Jer 51:14, Amos 6:8; or by His holiness, Amos 4:2 and Ps 89:36; or else by His great name, Jer 44:26; and nowhere therein is it to be found that He swore by the life of a human being.

Further, it is taught in the Talmud in the tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos) fol. 33, col. 2, as well as in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 194, col. 4, and fol. 195, col. 1, in the Parascha Vaëthchannán: הכל בידי שמים חוץ מיראת שמים, that is: all things are in the hand or power of God, except the fear of God. In Holy Scripture, however, we learn that the fear of God is a gift of God; therefore God says in Jer 32:39: "I will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear me all the days of their life." And in the following verse 40, He continues: "And I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me." For this reason King David also prays to God the Lord in Ps 86:11: "Unite my heart to fear your name," or to fear your name.

Further, it is written in the Talmud in the tractate Chagiga, fol. 16, col. 1, and in the tractate Kiddúschin, fol. 40, col. 1, as follows: א"ר אילעא הזקן אם רואה אדם שיצרו מתגבר עליו ילך למקום שאין מכירין אותו וילבש שחורים ויתכסה שחורים that is: Rabbi Ila has said: when the evil nature (or sinful desire) of a man overpowers him, he should go to a place where no one knows him, and put on black garments, and cover himself with black garments, and do what his heart desires, and not desecrate the name of God publicly. But God's Word commands that one should be holy, as can be seen in Lev 19:2 and 20:7, 26, by which it is made clear that one should walk in God's commandments and ordinances, and guard oneself against all sins, and commit none, whether in secret or openly. Likewise, the Talmud in the tractate Sanhédrin, fol. 74, col. 1, permits that in order to preserve one's life, one may commit all sins that are forbidden in the Law, except for idolatry, fornication, and bloodshed, where the words read as follows: כל עבירות שבתורה אם אומרים לאדם עבור ואל תהרג יעבור ואל יהרג חוץ מעבודה זרה וגילוי עריות ושפיכות דמים that is: when it is said to a man, transgress all transgressions that stand in the Law (or sin against all the commandments of the Law), and then you shall not be put to death, he shall transgress them so that he not be put to death, except for idolatry, fornication, and bloodshed (which he shall not commit). Holy Scripture, on the other hand, requires that the entire Law be observed; therefore it stands in Deut 27:26: Cursed be he who does not fulfill all the words of this Law, to do them. We see, therefore, from the foregoing, that Aben Ezra wrote a plain untruth when he states in his preface to the Five Books of Moses: אין הפרש בין שתי התורות ומדי אבותינו שניהן לנו מסורות that is: there is no difference between the two Laws (the written and the oral), and both have been handed down to us by our forefathers. For if there is no difference in this matter, I do not know what a difference is supposed to be.

The third reason why the Talmud is not the Word of God is that it contains a great many crude, palpable lies and foolish, ridiculous fables, whereas God does not lie, as may be read in Num 23:19. That many tasteless falsehoods are to be found therein can easily be gathered from that tale of Solomon and Ashmedai which was mentioned in the preceding section. In order to demonstrate this more thoroughly, however, I will point out a portion of the Talmudic lies, so that one may clearly see that this book does not originate from God out of Heaven, or from Mount Sinai, as the senseless Jews teach, but rather from the Devil, as the father of lies, out of Hell, or from the dark mountains mentioned in the preceding section, from the two unclean spirits Asa and Asael.

Regarding the first man, Adam, there are found therein many fables and foolish applications of Holy Scripture. Concerning the dust, or the earth, from which he was created, the following stands in the tractate Sanhedrin fol. 38. col. I. 2.: רבי מאיר אומר אדם הראשון מכל העולם כולו הוצבר עפרו שנ' גלמי ראו עיניך וכתיב עיני ה' המה משוטטות בכל הארץ. אמר רב הושעיה משמיה דרב אדם הראשון גופו מבבל וראשו מארץ ישראל ואבריו משאר ארצות עגבויותיו אמר רבי אחא מאקרא דאגמא That is: Rabbi Meir says, the dust of the first man (from which he was created) was gathered together from the entire world, as it is said in Ps 139:16: "Your eyes saw my unformed mass (when I was still unprepared)." And it is written (2 Chr 16:9): "The eyes of the LORD run throughout all lands." Rabbi Oshaya said in the name of Rav: the body of the first man was taken from Babylon, and his head from the Land of Israel, but his limbs were taken from the remaining lands. Rabbi Acha said his buttocks were from Akra of Agma, which is said to be a place in Babylon, as Rabbi Solomon reports concerning this. In the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, however, it is taught in the eleventh chapter that God took the earth from the four corners of the world, from which Adam was created.

He is also said to have been created with two faces, as is indicated in Tractate Berachoth fol. 61. col. 1. with these words: א"ר ירמיה בן אלעזר דו פרצופין ברא, that is: Rabbi Jeremias, the son of Eliezer, has said: God created the first man with two faces, as it is said (Ps 139:5): "Behind and before You have formed me." Concerning which Rabbi Solomon writes as follows: שני פרצופין בראו תחלה אחד מלפניו ואחד מאחוריו וחלקו, that is: He created him with two countenances, one in front and the other behind, and cut him into two parts, and made Eve from the one. It is likewise stated in Tractate Erúvin fol. 18. col. 1. that he was created with two faces, and the words there read as follows: דו פרצוף פנים היה לו לאדם, that is: The first man had a twofold form of face, as it is said (Ps 139:5): "Behind and before You have formed me." And Rabbi Solomon writes concerning this as follows: חילקו לשנים שהיה זכר מכאן ונקבה, that is: He divided him into two parts, for on the one side he was a man, and on the other side a woman. On this subject the following is also found in Bereschith Rabba, the eighth Parashah, fol. 7. col. 2.: א"ר שמואל בר נחמן בשעה שברא הק"ב את אדם הראשון דו פרצופין בראו. ונסרו ועשאו גביים גב לכאן וגב לכאן, that is: Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachman, has said: At the very hour in which

God created the first man, He created him with two faces, and sawed him apart, and also made two backs for him, one on this side and the other on that side. The like is also to be read in Midrash Tillim fol. 56. col. 2. on Ps 139, and in the Yalkut Shimoni on the first book of Moses, fol. 6. col. 4. numero 20.

How great Adam was created to be is indicated in the Talmudic Tractate Chagiga fol. 12. col. 1. with these words: אמר רבי אלעזר אדם הראשון מן הארץ עד לרקיע שנ' למן היום אשר ברא אלהים על הארץ וכיון כיון שסרח הניח הק"ה ידו עליו ומיעטו שנ' אחור וקדם צרתני ותשת עלי כפך. אמר רב יהודה אמר רב אדם הראשון מסוף העולם ועד סופו היה שנ' למן היום אשר ברא אלהים אדם על הארץ ולמקצה השמים ועד קצה השמים כיון שסרח הניח הק"ה ידו עליו ומיעטו שנ' ותשת עלי כפך : that is, Rabbi Elieser said: the first man reached from the earth up to the firmament of heaven, as it is said (Deut 4:32): From the day that God created man upon the earth (from one end of heaven to the other). But after he had sinned, God laid His hands upon him and made him small, as it is said (Ps 139:5): Behind and before You have formed me, and You have laid Your hand upon me. Rabbi Jebuda said that Raf had said: the first man reached from one end of the world to the other, as it is said (Deut 4:32): From the day that God created man upon the earth, from one end of heaven to the other. But when he had sinned, God laid His hands upon him and made him small, as it is said (Ps 139:5): And You have laid Your hand upon me. Concerning the words "from one end of the world to the other," Rabbi Salomon writes as follows: כשהיה שוכב היה ראשו : that is, when he lay down, his head was in the east and his feet were in the west. This is also found in the Tractate Sanbedrin fol. 38. col. 2. and in the Medrasch Tillim, fol. 56. col. 2. on Ps 139, as well as in Bereschith rabba, in the twenty-first Parascha, fol. 20. col. 4. In the book Sepher gilgulim, it is indicated in the sixteenth chapter, at the end, fol. 14. col. 3., where the body of Adam was when he was created, where it is written: בעת שנברא היה : that is, at the time when he was created, his head, his throat, and his neck were in the midst of Paradise, but his body was in the remaining part of the world. Furthermore, in the book Reschith chochma fol. 102. col. 2. in the 6th chapter, under the title Schuar haabava, the following is taught concerning the greatness of that same heel: תפוח עקבו של אדם הראשון היה מכה גלגל חמה that is, the roundness of the heel of the first man eclipsed the orb of the sun. And this is taken from Vajikra rabba. Beyond this, in the Jalkut Shimoni on the first book of Moses, fol. 6. col. 4. numero 20, the following is read concerning his size: מתחלה נברא מן הארץ עד לרקיע וכשראו אותו מלאכי השרת נודעו ונתייראו מלפניו מה עשו עליו כולן לפני הק"ה למעלה אמרו לפניו רש"ע שתי רשויות יש בעולם הניח ידו על ראשו ומיעטו והעמידו על אלף אמה : that is, in the beginning he (namely the first man) was created from the earth up to the firmament, but when the ministering angels saw him, they trembled and were afraid before him. What did they do? They all went up before God and said to Him: O Lord of the world, there are two dominions, that is, there are two gods in the world. Thereupon God laid His hand upon his head and made him smaller, and set him at one thousand cubits in height. This is also read in the little book Othioth (or Otios) Rabbi Akkiva fol. 6. col. 1. In the Sépher Gilgúlim, however, it is reported at fol. 13. col. 1. in the 14th chapter that He left him only one hundred cubits in height, and it stands there as follows: 'אדם הראשון היה מסוף העולם ועד סופו ועד כופי ארכו ונתמעט אחד כך על ק: כי הוא אמה that is, the first man reached from one end of the world to the other in his length, but afterwards he was made small down to one hundred cubits. Understand this to mean that he was as long as the world itself, through which one must travel five hundred years (from one end to the other). That he was made small down to one hundred cubits is also read in Bereschith rabba, in the twelfth Parascha fol. 11. col. 2.

Concerning the angels: in the little book Pirke Rabbi Eliezer, in the 11th chapter, it is read that all creatures wanted to worship him, in these words: היתה קומתו מסוף העולם ועד סופו שנ' אחור וקדם צרתי אחור זה מערב וקדם זה מזרח וראה את כל הבריות שברא הקב"ה התחיל מפאר לשם בוראו ואמר מה רבו מעשיך יי' עמד על רגליו היה מתואר בדמות אלהים ראו אותו הבריות ונתייראו ונתייראו בסבורן שהוא בורא ובאו כל להשתחוות לו אמר להם בואם להשתחוות לי בואו אני ואתם נלך ונלביש גאות ועוז ונמלך עלינו מי שבראנו לפי שהעם ממליכין את המלך ואין המלך ממלך את עצמו אם אין העם ממליכין אותו הלך אדם לעצמו המליך אותו ראשון וכל הבריות. אחריו ואמר יי' מלך גאות לבש וגו' that is: His (Adam's) height extended from one end of the world to the other, as it is said (Ps 139:5): "Behind and before you have formed me." The word "behind" signifies the west, and the word "before" signifies the east. And when he saw the creatures that God had created, he began to praise God his Creator and said: "O Lord, how great and manifold are your works!" He stood upon his feet and was formed in the image of God. But when the creatures saw him, they were afraid and supposed that he was the Creator, and they all came to worship him. He, however, spoke to them: "You have come to worship me, but come, let us clothe ourselves and me with glory and strength, and let us accept as King over us the one who created us; for it is the people who make someone reign as king, but the king does not make himself king if the people do not accept him as such." Adam therefore went forth and was the first to accept Him as King for himself, and all creatures followed him, and he said (Ps 93:1): "The Lord is clothed with glory." Concerning the angels who wanted to worship him, it is written in the book Nishmath adam (or Nishmas odom) in the sixth chapter, fol. 24, col. 1, as well as in the book Avodath (or Avodas) bakkodesh in the 33rd chapter, fol. 49, col. 1, under the title Chelek haavoda, as follows: בשעה שברא הקב"ה את אדם הראשון טעו בו מלאכי השרת ובקשו

 וגו' that is: At the very time when God had created the first man, the ministering angels were mistaken about him and desired to say before him (the words of Isa 6:3) "Holy," etc. (for they supposed that he was a God). What did God do: He caused a deep sleep to fall upon him, and then they all knew that he was a man; this is what is written (Isa 2:22):
 "Cease from the man who has breath in his nostrils, for of what account is he?"
 Immediately thereafter it follows in the same place: ודאי האדם בכללו הוא רוחני
 כי תפוח עקבו של אדם הראשון היה מכהה גלגל חמה קלסתר פניו לא כל שכן. וזהו הענין שטעו בו מלאכי השרת על כן הפיל הק"ה עליו תרדמה שהוא ענין גשמי להורות שהוא גשמי that is: Certainly Adam had been entirely spiritual, for the ball of his heel had eclipsed the sun (which is also stated in the Sepher gilgulim, at the end of the sixteenth chapter, fol. 14, col. 3), and how much more so the radiance of his face; and this was the reason why the ministering angels were mistaken about him. Therefore God caused a deep sleep to fall upon him, which is a bodily thing, in order to demonstrate that he was bodily.

In the book called Sépher chasidim, however, the following is read concerning אדם הראשון היה מסוף העולם ועד סופו ובקשו מלאכי השרת לומר לפניו: 500:
 קדוש קדוש כי היה מלא כל הארץ בא הק"ה בה ומעטו ונטל מאבריו קצת והיו מונחים חתיכות
 בשר סביבותיו אמר אדם להק"ה רבש"ע למה אתה גולני הטוב לך כי תמאס יגיע כפך וכתוב
 ותשת עלי כפך. אמר אני אחזיר לך פרו ורבו ומלאו את הארץ כבראשיתה והיינו דאמרינן אין
 בן דוד בא עד שיכלו כל הנשמות שבגוף. א"ל הק"ה טול אלו החתיכות ותפורם בכל הארץ
 ובכל מקום שתזרוק ותשליך אותם שם ישוט לעפר כשיהיה מתישב המקום מיושב ובמקום שתגזור לזרעך לישראל שם יהיו ולגוים שם יהיו והיינו שנאמר ארץ לא עבר בה איש ולא that is, the first man reached from one end of the world to the other, and the ministering angels wished to say before him (the words of Isa 6:3) "Holy," since he had filled the entire world; but God came and made him smaller, and took some parts from his limbs, and pieces of flesh (from the flesh removed from him) were laid around him in a circle.
 Then Adam said to God: "Oh Lord of the world! Why do you rob me? Is it fitting that you despise the work of your hands? For this reason it is written (Ps 139:5): You lay your hand upon me." Then God said to him: "I will indeed give it back to you. Be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth, as before." And this is what we are accustomed to say: the Son of David does not come until all the souls in the body have come to an end. And God said (further) to him:
 "Take these pieces and scatter them over the whole earth, and in all the places where you go and cast them, there they shall be turned to dust, so that the place may be inhabited by your seed. And in that place which you shall appoint for your seed, the Israelites, there shall they also be." And this is what is said in Jer 2:6: "In the land through which no one walked or passed, and in which no man dwelt" (understand: there was no place) where he had not sown of his flesh.

Further, it is set forth in the Talmudic tractate Chagiga fol. 12. col. 1. that God created a light at the beginning through which Adam was able to see from one end of the world to the other, and the words read as follows: אמר רבי אלעזר that is, Rabbi Eliezer has said that Adam saw through the light which God created on the first day from one end of the world to the other. Concerning this light, it is also written in the great Jalkut Reubeni, in the Parashah Ki tissa fol. 117. col. 1., from the Zohar, as follows: נהורא דברא הקב"ה בקדמיתא אחזי הקב"ה לאדם קדמא וחוזי ביה מסוף עולם ועד סופו והוא נהורא אחזי לדוד והוא משבח ואמר מה רב טובך אשר צפנת ליראיך. סההוא נהורא אחזי למשה וחמא ביה מגילעד עד דן. ובשעתא דחמא קב"ה שיקומן תלת דרי חייבין דור אנוש ודור המבול ודור הפלגה גניז ליה נתן למשה בחלה דחים וכו' 'עאל קמיה פרעה נטל הקב"ה מיניה עד קאים על טורא דסיני אהדר ליה ההוא אורא ואשתמש ביה that is, God caused the first man to see that light which He had created at the beginning, and the latter saw thereby from one end of the world to the other. He also showed that same light to David, on account of which David praised Him and said (Ps 31:20): How great is Thy goodness, which Thou hast hidden for those who fear Thee. Likewise He caused Moses to see that same light, and Moses thereby saw from Gilead as far as Dan. But at that time, when God had seen that three ungodly generations would come, namely the generation of Enos, the generation of the Flood, and the generation of the Division (at the building of the Babylonian tower), He concealed it. He gave it to Moses for three months; but when Moses had gone before Pharaoh, He took it from him again, until Moses stood upon Mount Sinai, whereupon He gave it back to him, and Moses made use of it daily. The children of Israel, however, were no longer able to come near him until he had placed a veil over his face.

We must now also examine how long Adam is supposed to have remained in Paradise before he was driven out of it. The Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 38, col. 2 instructs us on this matter with the following words: אמר רבי יוחנן that is, Rabbi Yochanan bar Chanina has said: the day has twelve hours; in the first hour, the dust (from which God created him) was gathered together; in the second, he was made into a shapeless lump; in the third, his limbs were stretched out; in the fourth, the soul was cast into him; in the fifth, he stood upon his feet; in the sixth, he named the names (giving each thing its name); in the seventh, Eve was joined to him; in the eighth, two went up into the bed and four came down (in that two children, namely Cain and his sister, were conceived and born in that time); in the ninth, he was commanded that he should not eat from the tree (of the forbidden fruit); in the tenth, he sinned; in the eleventh, judgment was held over him; and in the twelfth, he was driven out (of Paradise) and went away, as it is said (Ps 49:13): "Man does not remain overnight in his honor." This fable also appears in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parascha Bereschith, fol. 10, col. 4 and fol. 11, col. 1, and in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 21, col. 3, in the aforementioned Parascha Bereschith, as well as in the Avoth (or Avos) of Rabbi Nathan (or Noson), fol. 2, col. 3, in the Talmud printed at Amsterdam, and in the eleventh chapter of the chapters of Rabbi Eliezer. Concerning the children who were conceived at the very beginning, the following is read in Bereschith Rabba, in the twenty-second Parascha, fol. 21, col. 1: א"ר אלעזר בן עזריה ג' פלאים נעשו באותו היום. בו ביום נבראו ביום נבראו. בו ביום שמשו. בו ביום הולידו אמר רבי יהושע בן קרחה על אותה היום שזמעת קרן והיאמר הבל חזיר ותשתחה, that is: Rabbi Eliezer, the son of Azaria, has said: three wonders occurred on that very same day. On that same day they were created; on that same day they slept together; and on that same day they also brought children into the world. Rabbi Jehoshua, the son of Korcha, has said: two went up into the bed and seven came back down, namely Cain and his twin (that is, his sister, who was born together with him), and Abel with his two twins (who were his two sisters).

How it came about with the eating of the forbidden fruit, and how Satan seduced Eve into doing so, is indicated in the book Emek hammelech fol. 23. col. 3. in the 41st chapter, under the title Schaar olam hattóhu with the following words: מתקנא הנחש באדם בסיבת חוה וחטיל בה זוהמת דנדה ואח"כ כך השיאה לאכול דאת וכשראתה שהיא נפלה ברשת יצר הרע בקשה להפיל גם לאדם תתנה לו ואכל דכתיב ותתן גם לאישה עמה ויאכל פחא שאכלו בלתי ידיעתו חזר ואכל עם ידיעה מפני כי תכף שלט בו יצה"ר פחא שאכל אותו ה' גבורות שהיו ממותקים בה' חסדים חזרו לתקפם וכשנכנס הארי that is: The serpent was jealous of Adam on account of Eve, and cast into her the impurity of the monthly uncleanness; thereafter he seduced her into eating of the (forbidden) fruit. Now when she had seen that she had fallen into the net of the Jézer hará, that is, of the evil and corrupt nature, she sought also to bring Adam down, and gave him some of it as well, and he ate, as it is written (Gen 3:6): And she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate. Now when he had eaten of it without his knowledge, he went again and ate of it knowingly, because the Jézer hará, or the evil nature, had immediately taken hold of him; and when he had eaten of it, the five Powers, which had been sweetened by the five Mercies, returned to their full strength. And after the fruit (which he had eaten) had entered into his belly, the Jézer hará arose in him. But she (Eve) also gave of it to all the animals to eat, and they all fell into her net, except for one bird which is called Chol, as it is written (Job 29:18): And I will multiply my days like the Chol, that is, like the bird Phoenix, as it is understood here. These are the words of the book Emek hammélech. The word Chol in this saying of Job, however, signifies sand, and he meant to say that he had supposed he would make his days many, like the sand of the sea, that is, that he would live long.

Among the Scripture-corrupters, the Jews, however, it must signify a bird, which is supposed to be the Phoenix. This fable about such a bird also appears in Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parashah Bereschith, fol. 13, col. 2, and in the small Jalkut Rubeni, under the title min Chajoth, num. 1 and 3, as well as in Abkath Rochel, in the 1st, fol. 4, col. 2, in which last book the following is read: ותקח אשה מפירות האילן ותאכל ותתן לבעלה והיא נתנה לכל החיה that is: And she (Eve) gave to all wild and tame animals, and to the birds as well, to eat of the apple. Rabbi Joden says in the name of Rabbi Simeon: the bird Chol lives a thousand years; and after a thousand years its body decays, and its feathers fall out, and there remains of it something no larger than an egg; whereupon it grows again and becomes young.

Regarding the aforementioned monthly impurity of Eve, it is written in the said book Emek hammélech fol. 23. col. 3. that this impurity is the unclean seed of the serpent, that is, of the chief devil Sammael, who had lain with Eve before the act; and the words read as follows: נדתה היא הזוהמא וזורע הטמא של הנחש שבא that is, Her (i.e., Eve's) monthly impurity is the filth and the unclean seed of the serpent, which lay with Eve before Adam had lain with her. If this were so, then Eve would have already sinned before she had eaten of the forbidden fruit. For if the serpent lay with her before Adam, this must, according to what was cited above from the tractate Sanhedrin fol. 38. col. 2., have occurred in the seventh hour, since it was not until the tenth hour that the forbidden fruit was eaten. It is also read in the last-cited passage that Eve was afflicted with her impurity when Adam lay with her, for it stands there: נדה אשתו נדה that is, The first man lay with his wife when she was afflicted with her impurity.

Further, in the Talmudic tractate Jevamoth (or Jevomos) fol. 63. col. 1., it is written concerning Adam that he lay with all the animals and mingled with them in a shameful manner before Eve was joined to him, where the words read as follows: אמר רבי אלעזר מאי דכתיב זאת הפעם עצם מעצמי ובשר מבשרי מלמד that is, Rabbi Eliezer has said: what is that which is written (Gen 2:23): "This is now bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh"? This teaches us that he lay with all cattle and wild animals, but his mind was not satisfied until he lay with Eve. Now although these words are interpreted quite differently not only by some Christians (among whom is the learned Buxtorf, as may be seen in his Lexico Chaldaico-Talmudico-Rabbinico under the root word קרר Karar) but also by Jews, as may be read in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzachon, num. 9, who would have it that this passage conveys only that Adam went to all the animals and sought a wife but did not find one, and that therefore his mind was not satisfied, and not that he had carnally mingled with them: I am nonetheless of an entirely different opinion from these others in this matter, and hold that the proper sense of the Hebrew words is that which I have translated; just as the convert Hieronymus de Sancta Fide understood them in his second book, cap. 1, p. 134, and likewise the convert Victor von Carben in his little Jewish book in the seventh chapter; and I demonstrate this from the following reasons. First, because Rabbi Solomon Jarchi himself interpreted it thus in his Commentary on the passage, where he states: זאת הפעם מכלל דפעמים אחרים שמש ולא עלו בדעתו that is, the words "this is now" he said after he had lain with others on previous occasions, but those (acts of lying) had not been to his liking (and had not satisfied him); and he explains the word בא by the word שמש schimmesch in the aforementioned Talmudic passage Jevamoth, which among the Rabbis means to lie with someone. Likewise it stands in the book Ze'ena urre'ena, fol. 3. col. 4.: פשלי חכמים דא זאגן דר ערשטה מנש איז קייני האט מיט אללו that is, some of the wise men say the first man lay with all creatures, and none of them pleased him enough to take as a wife.

The second reason is that the rabbis teach that Adam committed fornication. Concerning this, the following is written in the Jalkut chadrasch, fol. 4, col. 2, numero 28, under the title Adam: שלשה חטאים היו באדם הראשון גלוי עריות ושפיכות דמים וע"ז that is, Three sins were in the first man: fornication, bloodshed, and idolatry. And at fol. 6, col. 2, numero 7, the following is read there under the aforementioned title: אדם הראשון עבר שלש עבירות עבודה זרה ושביכות דמים וגלוי עריות that is, The first man committed three sins: idolatry, bloodshed, and fornication. This also appears there at fol. 8, col. 2, numero 121, under the aforementioned title, from the book Megalle amukkoth. And in the smaller Jalkut Rubeni, under the title Mitha (or Misa), numer. 8, from the book Asara maamaroth (or Asoro maamaros), it is reported: דוד חטא בע"ז ג"ע ש"ד כמו שחטא that is, David sinned with idolatry, fornication, and bloodshed, just as the first man sinned. Now, Adam had no human beings with whom he could have committed fornication; therefore it must have occurred, as Rabbi Solomon has interpreted it, with animals.

The third reason is that the senseless Jews actually teach that Adam separated himself from Eve for one hundred and thirty years, and during that time lay with female devils, and that Eve was lain with by devils. Concerning this, the following is written in Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parascha Bereschith, fol. 16, col. 1, 2: כל אותן ק"ל שנה שפרש אדם מן האשה רוחות נקבות היו מתחממות מאדם ויולדות זכרים ורוחות זכרים היו מתחממין מן האשה ויולדים, that is: In all those one hundred and thirty years during which Adam separated himself from his wife, the female spirits were inflamed by him and lay with him, and bore males; but the male spirits were inflamed by the woman (Eve) and begot females. And in the Yalkut Shimoni on the first book of Moses, one reads at fol. 11, col. 4, number 42: כל אותן השנים שהיה אדם הראשון בנדוי הוליד שידין ורוחין ויליין שנאמר ויחי אדם ק"ל שנה ויולד בדמותו כצלמו מכלל דעד האידינא לא כצלמותיה אוליד, that is: In all those years during which the first man was under the ban, he begot devils, spirits, and night-phantoms, as it is said (Gen 5:3): And Adam was one hundred and thirty years old and begot one in his likeness, after his image; for until that time he had not begotten after his image, since he had begotten nothing but devils and evil spirits, and no human beings. This Rabbinical madness will be treated at greater length below in the eighth chapter of the second part. Now, if Adam, according to the teaching of the Jews, is supposed to have committed fornication with the unclean spirits, the female devils, one can easily judge from this that it is not too much when the Talmud shamefully and mendaciously reports that he also lay with animals, which without doubt is understood there not of all animals, but only of the large ones. Since, however, in the book Emek HaMelech, fol. 125, col. 2, under the title Schaar rescha diser anpin, one reads: אמר רמי שמעון אין לך דבר שעומד בפני התשובה כלל ואדם הראשון יוכיח שעבר על שלש עבירות על עבודת זרה ועל גילוי עריות ועל שפיכת דמים והק"בה קבל תשובתו כנודע כי עשה תשובה ותמחה וקשה מאד שעמד בנהר גיחון ועשה תענית ק"ל שנה, that is: Rabban Shimeon has said, there is no matter that can withstand repentance: this is proven by the first man, who committed three sins, namely idolatry, fornication, and the shedding of blood, and yet GOD accepted his repentance, as is known; for he performed a very severe penance, standing in the river Gihon for one hundred and thirty years and fasting. From these words it cannot be seen that Adam, during those one hundred and thirty years, had dealings with the female devils and lay with them, but rather that he performed severe penance and fasted. As for how such matters are to be reconciled with one another, I shall leave that for the Jews to worry about.

It is also written in a ridiculous manner about Adam in the Talmud, in the tractate Avoth (or Avos) of Rabbi Nathan, fol. 1, col. 3, that he wanted to eat grass from the manger together with his donkey. The words there read as follows: כיון ששמע אדם הראשון שאמר לו הק"ב ואכלת את עשב השדה מיד נודעו: אבריו אמר לפניו רבונו של עולם אני ובהמתי נאכל באבוס אחד אמר ליה הק"ב והואיל חם ונתדעו אבריו בזעת אפיו תאכל לחם, that is: When the first man had heard that God had said to him (the words of Gen 3:18), "And you shall eat the herb of the field," his limbs immediately trembled, and he spoke before Him: "O Lord of the world! I and my animal (that is, my donkey) want to eat from one manger." But God said to him: "Since your limbs have trembled, you shall eat bread in the sweat of your face." This is also found in the Talmudic tractate Pesachim, fol. 118, col. 1, in these words: אמר רבי יהושע בן לוי בשעה שאמר הק"ב: לאדם קוץ ודרדר תצמיח לך ולם עיניו דמעות אמר לפניו רבונו של עולם אני וחמורי נאכל לחם, באבוס אחד כיון שאמר בזעת אפיו תאכל לחם נתקררה דעתו, that is: Rabbi Jehoshua, the son of Levi, said: At the time when God said to Adam, "Thorns and thistles shall it bear for you" (as is to be read in Gen 3:18), tears flowed from his eyes, and he said to Him: "O Lord of the world! I and my donkey want to eat from one manger." But after God had said to him, "In the sweat of your face you shall eat your bread," he was content again.

Since Adam is mentioned here, I also want to show who his teacher in Paradise was, and from where he obtained his wisdom. This is written in the third part of the book Avodath hakkodesch, in the 21st chapter, fol. 80, col. 3, as follows: חכמי האמת אמרו כי רבו היה רזיאל ובספר תולעת יעקב בפתיחתו כתבתי בהיותו בגן עדן הוריד לו ספר על יד רזיאל ועל ידו השיג השגה עצומה בעולמות העליונים מה שלא השיגו מלאכי עליון והיו העליונים מתקבצים ובאים לשמוע סתרי סתרים גודאים וגלויי' בספר ההוא והיו אומרים רומה על השמים אלהים ותו' דבנו של שם והיו יראו that is, the theologians, or divines, say that Rasiel was his (namely Adam's) teacher. I have also written in the preface to my book Tolaath (or Tolaas) Jaacob that, when he was in Paradise, a book was brought down to him through the (angel) Rasiel (from Heaven), through which he comprehended mighty things concerning the upper world, which the angels of the Most High were not able to grasp; and that the Upper Ones (understand: the angels who dwell above in Heaven) gathered themselves to him and came to hear the wondrously hidden things of the mysteries which were revealed in that book, and said (from Ps 57:6): "Exalt Yourself, O God, above the heavens, etc." The teacher of Seth, however, was the (angel) Jophiel. Concerning this book, the following is also read in the Sohar, in the Parascha Bereschith, in the 171st column: עד דהנה אדם בגן עדן נסת ליה קודשא בריך הוא ספרא על ידי דרזיאל מלאכא קדישא ממנא על רזי עלאין קדישין וביה גליפין וחקמתא קדישא וע"ב זיניו דחקמתא הוו מתפרשין מניה לשית מאה ושבין גליפין דרזי באמצעותא דספרא גלייא חקמתא למנדע אלה וחקמתא מאה מפתחן דלא אתקסרו

That is: When Adam was in Paradise, God gave him, through Rasiel, the holy angel who is appointed over the mysteries of the Upper Ones, a book in which the writings of the Upper Ones and the holy wisdoms were inscribed; and the seventy-two kinds of wisdom were divided from it into six hundred and seventy writings of the upper wisdoms, so that through the medium of that book, the writing of wisdom, the one thousand and five hundred keys might be known, which were not given to the upper holy ones, and all of which were concealed in that book until Adam received it. After it had come into Adam's hands, the upper angels gathered themselves to know and to hear its contents, and said: "Exalt Yourself, O God, above the heavens, and Your glory above all the earth." In that same hour, Hadarniel, the holy angel, came to him and said to him: "Adam, the glory of your Lord was hidden, for the Upper Ones are not given permission to know the glory of your Lord, except for you (for to you it is permitted)." That book was also concealed and kept with Adam until he went out of Paradise, and he made use every day of the treasures of his Lord (that is, he read and studied diligently in that book), and the highest mysteries were made known to him, which the upper servants (of God, namely the angels) did not know. But after he had sinned and transgressed the commandment of his Lord, that book flew away from him, and he struck his head and wept, and went into the water of the river Gihon up to his neck; and the water made his body rusty, and his radiance changed. At that same time, God signaled to Raphael and had the book returned to him; and Adam applied himself to reading it, and left it to his son Seth, and thus all those generations did likewise, until it came to Abraham, who through it knew how to behold the glory of his Lord. Likewise it was also given to Enoch, to contemplate from it the glory of his Lord. Thus far are the words of the Sohar. It is, however, to be observed here that it is stated that Adam read in this book every day in Paradise; but how does this accord with what was reported above on p. 370, from the Talmud and other books, that he was in Paradise for only a few hours? How then could he have spent whole days reading in such a book therein?

On account of what has been reported up to this point concerning Adam, I must also indicate what kind of staff he is said to have possessed. In the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the 40th chapter, the following is found concerning this: רבי לוי אומר המטה שנברא בין השמשות נמסר לאדם הראשון מגן עדן ואדם מסרו לחנוך וחנוך מסרו למתושלח ומתושלח מסרו לנח ונח מסרו לשם ושם מסרו לאברהם ואברהם מסרו ליצחק ויצחק מסרו ליעקב ויעקב הורידו למצרים ויوسف בגו וקשמת יוסף נשלל כל ביתו ונתן בפלטרין של פרעה והיה פרעה אחד משרטומי פרעה מצרים וראה את המטה ואת האותות אשר עליו ותמד אותם בלבו ולקחו והביאו ונטעו בתוך גן ביתו של יתרו וראה את המטה ולא היה אדם יכול לקרוב אליו עוד. וכשבא משה לביתו ונכנס לגן ביתו של יתרו וראה את המטה וקרא את האותות אשר עליו ושלח ידו ולקחו וראה יתרו את משה אמר זה עתיד לגאול את ישראל ממצרים לפיכך נתן לו את צפורה בתו לאשה שגאמר that is: Rabbi Levi says, the staff that was created between the two suns (that is, at the time when night was drawing on) was given to the first man out of Paradise. Adam then gave it to Enoch, Enoch to Noah, Noah to Shem, Shem to Abraham, Abraham to Isaac, and Isaac to Jacob. Jacob, however, brought it with him into Egypt and handed it over to his son Joseph. After Joseph died, his entire household was plundered, and the staff was brought into Pharaoh's palace. Pharaoh was one of the Egyptian sorcerers, and after he had read the staff and the letters that were written upon it, he conceived a desire for it in his mind, took it, and brought it into the middle of the garden of Jethro's house, where he planted it. He looked upon the staff, and no man was able to approach it any further. But when Moses came into his (that is, Pharaoh's) house and entered the garden of Jethro's house, and saw the staff, he read the letters that were written upon it, laid his hands upon it, and took it away. When Jethro then saw Moses, he said: this man will redeem Israel out of Egypt; and for this reason he also gave him his daughter Zipporah as a wife, as it is said (Exod 2:21): "And Moses was content to dwell with the man," etc. In the little book Medrasch Vajoscha it is recorded that Moses spoke as follows: ויצאתי לראות בצער אחי וראיתי איש מצרי מכה איש עברי מאחי והרגתי אותו והטמנתי בחול וכששמע פרעה כה בקש להרוג אותי והביא חרב שנגנדה בכל העולם לא היה כמוה והכני עשר פעמים ועשה לי הקב"ה גס ונעשה צנארי כעמוד של שיש ולא שלטה בי החרב וברחתי אצל יתרו גם הוא חבשני בבור שבע שנים. וכשיצאתי ממצרים גן ארבעים שנה הייתי ועמדתי על הבאר ומצאתי צפורה בת יתרו וראיתי אותה צנועה ביותר אמרתי לה ששואגה היא ספרה לי מנהג אביה ואמרה לי כל אדם שבקש לישא את בנומיו של אבי מנסה אותו באילן אחד שיש לו בגנו וכשמגיעו לאילן מיד בולען אמרתי אילן זה מאין הוא. אמרה לי משל שמרא הקב"ה בערב שבת שבברא את עולמו הפקידו לאדם הראשון ואדם הראשון הפקידו לחנוך וחנוך הפקידו לנח ונח הפקידו לשם ושם הפקידו לאברהם ואברהם הפקידו ליצחק ויצחק הפקידו ליעקב ויעקב הורידו למצרים והפקידו ליוסף בגו וקשמת יוסף שללו המצרים את ביתו והביאו אותו מטה בפלטרין של פרעה ויתרו היה מגדולי שרטי מצרים וראה אותו מטה ותמד בלבו וגנבו והביאו לביתו ובאותו מטה חקוק שם המפורש עליו ואותו עשר מפות שהביא הקב"ה על המצרים היה כתוב בו והיה כתוב דצ"ף עד"ש

 went out to see the suffering of my brothers, and I saw an Egyptian man striking a Hebrew man, one of my brothers, and I struck him dead and hid him in the sand. But when Pharaoh heard of this, he sought to kill me and had a sharp sword brought, the like of which there was none in the whole world, and struck me with it ten times. But the holy and blessed God performed a miracle for me, so that my neck became as hard as a marble pillar, and the sword had no power over me. And when I thereupon fled to Jethro, he had me kept bound in prison for seven years. When I departed from Egypt, I was forty years old, and I stood by a well and found Zipporah, the daughter of Jethro. And when I saw that she was exceedingly modest, I spoke to her that I wished to marry her. She then told me of her father's custom and said to me: my father tests everyone who desires to marry one of his daughters by means of a tree that he has in his garden, and when they approach the tree, it immediately swallows them. I then asked her where such a tree had come from, and she answered me that the holy and blessed God had given that staff, which He had created on the eve of the Sabbath when He created His world, to the first man to keep; the first man, however, had given it to Enoch, Enoch to Noah, Noah to Shem, Shem to Abraham, Abraham to Isaac, and Isaac to Jacob;
 Jacob, however, had brought it down into Egypt and entrusted it to his son Joseph. But after Joseph died, the Egyptians plundered his house and brought that staff into Pharaoh's palace. Jethro, however, was one of the greatest sorcerers in Egypt, and he saw that staff and conceived a desire for it in his heart, and stole it and brought it into his house. And upon that same staff the Schem hammephoräsch was engraved, and the ten plagues that the holy and blessed God brought upon the Egyptians were written upon it (with ten letters that are the initial letters of the words denoting them, namely) דָּז"ךְ עַד"ש בֵּאָה"ב Dázach ádasch beáchab (and these signify dam, blood; zephárdeüm, frogs; kinnim, lice; arób, mixed vermin; déber, pestilence; schechin, boils; barad, hail; arbeh, locusts; chóschech, darkness; and bechór, the firstborn, which were the Egyptian plagues). The staff had also lain many days and years in the house of my father Jethro, until he once went and took it in his hand and entered the garden and stuck it into the ground. But when he came back into the garden to take it again, he found that it had sprouted, blossomed, and borne ripe almonds; so he left it standing there, and with it he tested everyone who wished to marry one of his daughters, etc. These are the words of the little book Médrasch Vajóscha, and from them it can be seen that the staff must have been from an almond tree, since it is said to have borne almonds. However, in the Jalkut chádascb, fol. 10, col. 1, numero 73, under the title Adam, it is reported concerning the staff of Moses that it was from the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, in these words: מטה משה היה מעץ הדעת טוב ורע שוהטיה מטטרון מטתא וסמאל לכך חטא משה הכה את הסלע וכששב בתשובה ניתן לו מטה אחר מעץ החיים that is: The staff of Moses was from the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, the common property of Metatron and Samael; for this reason Moses sinned and struck the rock. But after he had done penance, another staff from the Tree of Life was given to him. The same is also to be found in the aforementioned Jalkut chádascb, fol. 130, col. 1, under the title Mosche, numero 73.

Having now seen what great lies stand in the Talmud and other Rabbinical books concerning the first man Adam, we will proceed further in the examination of such Talmudic and Rabbinical fooleries, and take up the fables concerning Og, the former king of Bashan, who is mentioned in Num 21:33. As regards his birth, the devil שמחאל Schämchiel is said to have fathered him, concerning which the following is read in the book Zeéna ureéna, fol. 81, col. 1, in the Parascha Chykkæth, at the end: דד עוג איז הער קומן פון דיא מלאכים דיא זיין הראב גיפלן פון דעם הימל און 'דיזעלביגי מלאכים הבן זונת גיטריבן מיט דען ווייברן פון דענער צייט און 'עוג איז גיבורן גיווארדן פער דעם מבול וגו' און 'דער זעלביג מלאך היס שמחאל עוג זיין פטר. דער זעלביג מלאך לאג ביא זיינע ווייב פון חם פון כח גלייך דו זעלביג אלס זי זולטן גין אין דיא אר. 'און 'דיא ווייב פון חם וורד שרואגן פון דען מלאך און 'גיבארן that is, Og descended from those angels who had fallen from heaven, and those same angels committed fornication with the women in Noah's time, and Og was born before the Flood, etc. The angel, however, who was Og's father was called Schämchiel. That same angel also lay with Ham's wife, the son of Noah, at the very moment when they were to go into the ark; and she became pregnant and bore Sihon (who became the king of the Amorites, of whom one may read in Num 21:21) in the ark, and he was Og's brother.

The giants, too, are said to derive their origin from the angels who were cast out of heaven. Concerning this, it is written in the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the 22nd chapter, as follows: רבי אומר ראו המלאכים שנפלו ממקום קדושתן מן השמים את בנות קין מהלכות גלויות בשר ערוה ומכחלות עיניהן כזונות ותעו אחריהן ולקחו מהן נשים שנ 'ויראו בני אלהים את בנות האדם וגו' רבי צדוק אומר מהם נולדו הענקים קומה that is, the Rabbi says: the angels who had fallen from the place of their holiness out of heaven saw the daughters of Cain walking about with their shame uncovered, and painting their eyes like harlots, and they went astray after them and took wives from among them, as it is said (Gen 6:2): "And the sons of God saw the daughters of men," etc. Rabbi Zadok says: from these were begotten the giants who walk about in great stature of body. In the aforementioned book Ze'ena ure'ena, however, at fol. 76, col. 2, in the Parascha Schelách lechá, one reads as follows: פֹּון דען הימל הר אוב גיפֿלין פֿון סמת ימי בראשית חוג 'זיא הייסן דחרום הנפֿילים דער זיא חומבט דעם פֿחלט זיין הערץ חרויסן מורה: that is, the giants fell down from heaven from the time of the six days of creation, and they are therefore called Neflim, that is, giants (from Nafal, which means "to fall"), because whoever looks upon them has his heart sink down and become faint with great fear.

Regarding the name of Og: it is said to derive from the word עוגה, Uga or Igga, which means a cake, as is indicated in the Talmudic tractate Nidda, fol. 61, col. 1, in the Tosephoth, with these words: עוג מצאו לאברהם אבינו שהיה עומד בגרנות לתקן עוגות לפסח ועל שם זה נקרא עוג: that is, Og found our father Abraham standing on the threshing floors as he was preparing cakes for the Passover feast, and he is called Og on account of this name (meaning cake). So too it stands in the Midrash Tillim, on Ps 136, fol. 55, col. 2, as follows: למה נקרא שמו: עוג שבא ומצא אברהם שעוסק בעוגות הפסח: that is, Why is his name called Og? Because he came and found Abraham occupied with the Passover cakes. He is also said to have been one of Abraham's household servants, and his servant who was called Eliezer; concerning which, in the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the 16th chapter, the following is read: אברהם היה עבד ואליעזר ומהין היה עבדו: אלא כיון שיצא מאור כשדים עמדו כל גדולי הדור ונתנו לו מתנות ועמד נמרוד ונתן את עבדו אליעזר לאברהם וכשגמל חסד עם יצחק בנו הוציאו לחירות ונתן לו הק"ב שכו בעולם הזה: בשביל שלא יהא שכו לרשעים בעולם הבא והקימו למלך הוא מלך הבשן: that is, Eliezer was Abraham's servant. How then did he become his servant? When he (Abraham) had gone out from the fire of the Chaldeans, all the nobles who lived at that time rose up and gave him gifts; then Nimrod also rose up and gave his servant Eliezer to Abraham. And after he had shown kindness to his son Isaac, he freed him from servitude, and God gave him his reward in this world, so that the wicked might have no reward in the world to come, and He made him a king, who was the king of Bashan. Concerning this there is also something in the Jalkut Chadash, fol. 16, col. 2, numero 102, under the title Abraham. And at fol. 131, col. 1, numero 90, under the title Mosche, it is reported: הענק עוג היה מבני ביתו של אברהם ונשמוס אברהם עמולו אתו כל בני ביתו: that is, Behold, Og was one of Abraham's household, and when Abraham was circumcised, all his household were circumcised along with him, and Og was also circumcised. That Nimrod gave him as a gift to Abraham is also found in the Talmud, in the tractate Sopherim, fol. 14, col. 4, in the eleventh chapter.

This Og is also said to have been the fugitive mentioned in Gen 14:13, who told Abraham that Lot had been taken captive, as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi reports in his commentary on that passage, and as can be read in Caphtor upherach, fol. 29, col. 1. The reason why he informed Abraham of Lot's captivity is reported in Devarim rabba, fol. 235, col. 8, in these words: אמר ריש לקיש משום בר קפריא פליט היה שמו ולמה נקרא שמו עוג שבא ומצא את אברהם עסוק במצות בעוגות הפסח ולא בא לשם שמים אלא לשם נוייה של שרה אמר בלבו הריני מבשר אשתו that is: Resch Lakisch said in the name of Bar Kapra: His name was Palit (that is, a fugitive). But why was he called Og? Because he came and found Abraham occupied with the Passover cakes. He did not come for God's sake, however, but on account of Sarah's beauty, and thought to himself: See, I will bring him the news (that his brother Lot has been taken captive), and that same company will kill him (when he tries to help him), and then I will take his wife Sarah as my own. Beyond this, it is read in Jalkut chadâsch, fol. 82, col. 4, number 49, under the title Jizchak, that he went along with Isaac when he married Rebecca, of which mention is made in Gen 24, and the words read as follows: כשהלך אליעזר עבד אברהם בשביל רבקה כשראה לבן את הנזם מיד הלך להמים את אליעזר הבין בו שמריצתו לרעה מיד הזכיר אלו השם והעמיד הגמלים על העין באויר והוא עומד על הגמלים באויר ויהי כראותו כן הכיר that is: When Eliezer (the servant of Abraham) traveled to fetch Rebecca (in Mesopotamia, to Bethuel), and Laban saw the ear ornament, he (Laban) immediately went to kill Eliezer. But Eliezer took note that Laban's running was directed toward evil, and immediately pronounced the Schem hamnyphorasch, and caused the camels to stand in the air above the well, while he himself stood upon the camels in the air. When he (Laban) saw this, he recognized that the man was righteous, and said: Come here, you blessed of the Lord, and supposed that it was Abraham, because the radiance of his countenance was like unto his. But in what follows, fol. 83, col. 1, number 50, it is reported: בקש להרוג את אליעזר וראה שהיה נוטל ב' גמלים בב' ידיו ומעביר את הנחל כיון שראו כך אמרו אין אנו יכולין להורגו הניחו לפניו קערה וסם המות בתוכה ובזכות אברהם נתחלפה הקערה ואכל בתואל ממנה ומת שנאמר וישם לפניו אין משים אלא לשון סם: ומפני מה מת בתואל שהיה דרכו לבעול כל בתולה שנכנסה לחופה וכשכנסים את רבקה נתכנסו כל השרים ואמרו נראה אם יעשה כן לבתו ואם לאו נהרגו לכך מת שינצל אליעזר ורבקה: that is: He (Laban) sought to kill Eliezer, but saw that he took two camels in his two hands and carried them across the river. When they (Laban and those who were with him) saw this, they said: We cannot kill him, and so they set before him a dish in which there was poison. But on account of the merit of Abraham, the dishes were exchanged, and Bethuel ate from it and died, as it is said (Gen 24:32): Vajusam lefanav leechol, that is: And food was set before him. The word Musam (which means "set before") signifies nothing other than sam, that is, poison. But why did Bethuel die? Because it was his custom to lie with every virgin who was married: and when he held his daughter's wedding, all the princes assembled and said: We shall see whether he will deal thus with his own daughter, and if he does not, we will kill him. Therefore he died, so that Eliezer and Rebecca might be saved. Is this not a wanton perversion of Scripture, that one would force from the word vajusam, which means "and he set before," the claim that someone intended to place poison before Eliezer, merely because it ends in Sam, which means poison?

We read in Gen 7:19-22 that through the waters of the Flood all the high mountains under the entire heavens were covered, and that the waters rose fifteen cubits above them, and that everything which had the breath of life in dry land and was not in the ark, both humans and other creatures, perished. The Talmud, however, teaches in the tractate Nidda, fol. 61, col. 1, that Og also remained alive at that time, where, over the words of Gen 14:13, "Then came one who had escaped and told it to Abraham the Hebrew," the following is written: זה עוג שפלט מור המבול: that is, Rabbi Jochanan has said: this is Og, who escaped from the generation of the Flood (and was kept alive by the waters). Rabbi Solomon Jarchi also cites this in his commentary on the first book of Moses, on the aforementioned verse, but adds the following alongside it: לפי שמשחק זה עוג שפלט מן המלחמה: הפליטה הוא שכתוב כי רק עוג נשאר that is, according to the literal sense, this fôr (fugitive) is Og, who escaped from the war (and was not killed in it); and this is what is written in Deut 3:11: "For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of the giants." He remained, in that Amraphel and his companions did not kill him at Ashtaroth Karnaim. All of this is likewise taught by Rabbi Bechai in his commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 191, col. 4, and fol. 192, col. 1, in the parashah Devarim.

What manner of monstrous giants this Og and his brother Sichon were is found in the Jalkut Shimoni on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parashah Vayelech, fol. 304, col. 4, numero 940, where Moses spoke to the Angel of Death, who had wanted to take his life, among other things as follows: עשיתי מלחמה עם סיחון ועוג שני גבורי אומות העולם שבשעת המבול לא הגיעו מים לקרסוליהם that is: I have waged war against Sichon and Og, the two heroes of the nations of the world, for whom at the time of the Flood the water, on account of their height, reached only to their heels. Concerning the size of Sichon, it is written in the Midrash Tillim, fol. 55, col. 2, on Ps 136 as follows: אמרו רבותינו קשה היה סיחון כמגדל וחומא והיה קשה מכל הבריות וארוך מכל המגדל ורגליו מגיעות לארץ ואין כל בריה בעולם יכולה לעמוד לפניו מה עשה הק"ב כפת שר שלו שנאמר that is: Our rabbis say, Sichon was harder than a tower and a wall, and was harder than any creature, and taller than all towers, and his feet reached down to the earth; likewise, no creature in the world was able to stand before him. What did GOD do? He bound his prince (who had ruled over him in the air and had protected him), as it is said (Amos 2:9): And I destroyed his fruit from above; He cast him down from his place and delivered him to the Israelites.

What terrible giants are supposed to have existed at the time of the Flood can be seen in the Jalkut Shimoni on Job, fol. 121, col. 2, numero 913, where the following is set forth: נותן על התהום וסותמו ונותן ידו על המלון וסותמה היה בא ליכנס לתיבה that is: Among the generation of those who lived at the time of the Flood, there was one who placed his foot over the abyss and stopped it up with it (so that no water could flow out), and placed his hand over the window or opening (of the heavens) and stopped that up as well, and even wanted to enter the ark. And in the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, the following is read in the 22nd chapter: אמרו אם מי המבול יבאו עלינו אינו גבוה קומת יותר מן הסוס פשוטים עד צוארנו ואם מי התהומות מעלים עלינו הרי פרסות רגלינו לסתום את התהומות מה היו עושין פשטו כפות רגליהם וסותמו את כל התהומות מה עשה הק"ב הרתיח מי תהום והן שולקים את בשרם ופשטין את עורן מעליהם שנ' בעת יורבו that is: They (the giants) said: when the waters of the Flood come upon us, we are tall enough in bodily stature that the water will not reach our necks. But if He (namely, GOD) brings the waters of the abyss up against us, behold, we can stop up the abysses with the soles of our feet. What did they do? They stretched out the soles of their feet and stopped up all the abysses. But what did GOD do? He made the waters of the abyss boiling hot, so that it boiled their flesh and stripped their skin from them, as it is said (Job 6:17): At the time when they are scorched by the heat, they are destroyed, and when it grows hot, they perish from their place. Read not bechymmo, that is, when it grows hot, but bechammemo, that is, when He makes it hot.

Regarding where Og stayed during the Flood, two different opinions are found. According to the Talmud in the tractate Sevachim, fol. 113, col. 2, he is said to have walked in the water alongside a unicorn at the side of the ark, since the water around the ark was supposed to have been cold, but everywhere else boiling hot. The words of the Talmud read as follows: אמר רב חסדא בדור המבול לא נגזרה גזרה על דגים שבים שנ' מכל אשר בחרבה מתו ולא דגים שבים בשלמא למ"ד לא ירד מבול לארץ ישראל היינו דקם הימא התם אלא למ"ד ירד רמא היכא קם א"ד ינאי גורייטא הכניס תיבות הא אמר רבה בר בר חנה לדידי חזי לי אורזילא דרימא בת יומא והוי כהר תבור ותור הכור כמה הוי ארבעין פרסי משכא דצואריה תלתא פרסי מרבעתא דרישא פרסה ופלגא דקא ככא וסכר ירדנא א"ר יוחנן ראשו הכניסו לתיבה והאמר מר מרבעתא דרישא פרסה ופלגא אלא ראש חוטמו הכניסו לתיבה. והא"ר יוחנן לא ירד מבול לארץ ישראל

לדבריו לל קאמר והא קטני תיבה. אמר ריש לקיש קרנו קשר בתיבה והאמר רב חסדא אנשי דור המבול ברותחין קלקלו וברותחין נידונו וליטעמין תיבה היכא סגיא ועוד עוג מלך הבשן היכא קאי אלא נס נעשה להם וברותחין נידונו דנשתכך כצדי התיבה, that is: Rav Chasda has said, at the time of the Flood no judgment was passed against the fish in the sea, as it is said (Gen 7:22): Everything that was on dry land died, but not the fish in the sea. I grant what that one said, that the Flood did not come into the land of Israel; this therefore indicates that the unicorn (which in Hebrew is called Reem, though according to the Jews' interpretation it is supposed to mean a weasel-like creature here) stood there. But if one accepts the opinion of him who says that the Flood also came into the land of Israel, where then was it supposed to have stood? Rabbi Jannai has said: they put young ones (unicorns) into the ark. How can that be? For Rabba, the grandson of Channa, has said: I myself have seen a young unicorn that was only one day old, and it was (as large) as Mount Tabor. How large then is Mount Tabor? Forty miles. The length of its neck was three miles; the resting-place of its head (that is, the space its head occupied when it lay down) was one and a half miles. It cast forth dung and stopped up the Jordan with it (so that the water could not flow on; quite a considerable heap for a young unicorn!). Rabbi Jochanan has said: they took its head into the ark (but left the rest of its terrible body outside). How could that be? For the Master (it should read: the fool, Rabba the grandson of Channa) has said that the resting-place of its head was one and a half miles; so then they put the front part of its nose into the ark. How so? For Rabbi Jochanan has said that the Flood did not come down into the land of Israel. He said this according to the words of Resch Lakisch. How so? For the ark was moving along (and was driven here and there by the water, so that through such motion the nose could have been torn out of the ark and it would have drowned). Resch Lakisch has said: he (Noah) bound it to the ark by its horns (so that it walked alongside the ark). How can that be? For Rav Chasda says that the people of the generation of the Flood acted wrongly through hot things (namely through the emission of their seed, which was hot), and therefore they were also punished through hot water (so it could not have remained in the hot water). Where then, in your opinion, did the ark go? And furthermore, where did King Og stand? A miracle was performed for them, in that the water at the sides of the ark was cold (so that neither Og nor the unicorn, both of whom had walked alongside the ark, were burned by it). These are the words of the Talmud. The lie about the great unicorn also appears in the Talmudic tractate Bava Bathra (or Basra) fol. 73, col. 2, as well as in the book Ze'ena ureenna fol. 6, col. 3, in the Parascha Noach, where mention is also made of Og, that he walked in the water alongside the ark.

Since the young unicorn has now been quite thoroughly dissected here, I must also point out, concerning another unicorn, what is written in the book Medrasch Tillim, fol. 21. col. 2. on the words of Ps 22:22, "Help me out of the mouth of the lion, and save me from the unicorn," and the words there read as follows: אמר רב הונא בר אידי בשעה שהיה דוד רועה את צאן הלך ומצא את הראם ויהי רכוב עליו במדבר והיה סבור שהוא הר ועלה עליו והיה רועה עקר הראם ועמד והיה דוד רכוב עליו חוזה מגיע עד לשמים באותה השעה. אמר דוד אנו אתה מוציאני מן הראם חזה אני בונה לך היכל של מאה אמה כקרן הראם ומהו. יש אומר לאורכו מדדו ויש אומרים לרוחבו מדדו מה עשה הק"ב זימן לו אריה אחד כיון שראה הראם את האריה נתירא ממנו ורבץ לו מפני שהוא מלך עליו וירד דוד לארץ וכיון שראה דוד את האריה נתירא ממנו. לכך נאמר הושיעני מפי that is, Rab Hona, the son of Idi, said: at the time when David was pasturing the sheep, he went out and found a unicorn sleeping in the wilderness, and he supposed it was a mountain, and climbed up onto it, and grazed his flock. But when the unicorn awoke and stood up, David rode upon it and reached up to the heavens. At that same moment David spoke (to GOD): if you help me down from this unicorn, I will build you a temple of one hundred cubits, like the horn of this unicorn. There is one who says that he measured it (namely the horn) by its length, but others say he measured it by its breadth. What did GOD do: He caused a lion to come to him, and when the unicorn saw the lion, it was afraid of him and lay down before him, since he was the king over it, and David climbed down to the ground. But when David saw the lion, he was afraid of it; therefore it is said: Save me from the mouth of the lion, as you have heard (and saved) me from the horns of the unicorns. This nonsense also appears in the Jalkut Schimoni on the aforementioned Ps 22, fol. 97. col. 4. num. 688. We must, however, return to the subject of where King Og of Bashan stayed during the time of the Flood.

The second opinion holds that he sat upon the ark, as written in the Chaldean translation of Jonathan on the words of Gen 14:13, "Then came one who had escaped," as follows: ואתא עוג דאישתזיב מן טביעא דמינו דור המבול כרכב : that is, Then came Og, who had remained as a survivor from among the men who perished in the Flood, and who rode upon the ark, and was like a covering upon the top of it, and was sustained by Noah's provisions. In the Yalkut Shimoni, however, on the first book of Moses, it is reported at fol. 14, col. 3, num. 95, 96, that he sat upon a piece of wood beneath the ladder of the ark, and the words there read as follows: ויש אומרים ויבא הפליט זה עוג שפלט מדור המבול שנאמר וישאר אך נח : וחוץ מעוג מלך הבשן כי ישב לו על סולם : עץ אחד תחת סולמו של תיבה ונשבע לנח ולבניו שיהיה להם עבד לעולם מה עשו נח נקב חור אחד בתיבה והיה מושיט לו מזונו בכל יום ויום : that is, When the water had gained the upper hand, all creatures (that lived on dry land) were destroyed, except for Noah, as it is said (Gen 7:23): "And only Noah remained"; and likewise excepted was Og, the King of Bashan; for he sat upon a piece of wood beneath the ladder of the ark, and swore to Noah and his sons that he would be their servant forever. What did Noah do: he bored a hole in the ark and handed him his food daily, and so that one also remained, as it is said (Deut 3:11): "For only Og the King of Bashan remained of the giants." These are the words from the Yalkut Shimoni. I would very much like to know, however, how such a monstrous giant could have sat upon a piece of wood beneath the ladder, when the exceedingly deep water is supposed to have reached only up to his heels. What an enormous piece of wood and how long a ladder that would have had to be! For the ark was only three hundred cubits long, fifty cubits wide, and thirty cubits high, as may be read in Gen 6:15: how then could such a great giant have been upon it, or at the side of it? I would likewise very much like to know where Noah was supposed to have obtained all the food necessary to sustain such a great man throughout the duration of the Flood. For concerning his eating and drinking, it is written in the Talmud, in the tractate Sopherim, fol. 14, col. 4, in the 21st chapter, as follows: כל ומה היה אכלתו אלף שורים וכן כל That is, What then was his food? A thousand oxen, and likewise just as many of every kind of game; and his drink was a thousand measures. How heavy then was a single drop of his seed? Thirty-six pounds.

Regarding his size, the following is further recorded in the Talmud, in the Tractate Nidda fol. 24. col. 2.: תניא אבא שאול אומר ואיתימא רבי יוחנן קובר מתים ג' פרסאות וצבי לא הגעתי הייתי פעם אחת רצתי אחר צבי ונכנסתי בקולת של מת ורצתי ג' פרסאות וצבי לא הגעתי that is: We learn that Abba Schaul, or, if you prefer, Rabbi Jochanan, said: I had been a gravedigger, and once ran after a deer, and entered into the shinbone of a dead man, and ran three miles along it, yet could not catch the deer, and the shinbone had still not come to an end. When I had turned back again, they told me that it had belonged to Og, the King of Bashan. Now if he had such large shinbones, he must also have had large soles of the feet and large teeth, concerning which the following is read in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 16, col. 2, num. 102, under the title Abraham: אליעזר עבד אברהם הוא עוג מלך הבשן ופרסות: רגליו ארבעים מיל ואברהם היה טומנו בכף ידו פעם אחד גער בו ומיראתו נפל שינו ממנו that is: Eliezer, the servant of Abraham, was Og, the King of Bashan; his soles of the feet were forty miles long, and he concealed Abraham in the hollow of his hand. Once he (Abraham) rebuked him, and out of fright a tooth fell from him; and Abraham took it and made a bedstead from it and slept therein. Some, however, say that he made a chair from it and sat upon it for as long as he lived. This is also found in the Talmudic Tractate Sopherim fol. 14. col. 4., in the 21st chapter, and in the smaller Jalkut Rubeni under the title Gevúra, numero 5. In Devarim rabba, however, he is already described as somewhat smaller, where at fol. 255. col. 2. in the Parascha Devarim it is reported that when the Israelites had come before the city of Edrei, which is mentioned in Num 21:33 and Deut 3:1, 10, Moses said to them: we will pitch our camp here and be in the city tomorrow; after which follows: באו ליכנס לאדרי ועדיין לא היתה העין רואה חלה משה את עיניו וראה את עוג יושב על החומה ורגליו מגיעות לארץ אמר משה אני יודע מה אני רואה חומה אחרת בנו אלה בלילה אמר לו הקב"ה משה מה שאתה רואה: that is: When they now came to enter into (the city of) Edrei, and one could not yet see clearly, Moses lifted up his eyes and saw Og sitting upon the city wall with his feet reaching down to the ground, and said: I do not know what I see; these people have built another wall during this night. Then God said to him: Moses, this is Og whom you see. Rabbi Jochanan said: the length of his feet was eighteen cubits. He is also said to have built sixty great cities, concerning which the following is written in the aforementioned Tractate Sopherim fol. 14. col. 4., in the 21st chapter: הלך עוג ובנה ששים עיירות והקטן שבהם היה גובהו ששים מיל שנאמר ששים: that is: Og went and built sixty cities, and the smallest of them was sixty miles high, as it is said (Deut 3:4): sixty cities, the whole region of Argob.

How this terrible giant met his death is described in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos), fol. 54, col. 2, in the following words: אבן שבקש עוג מלך הבשן לזרוק על ישראל גמרא גמירי לה אמר מחנה ישראל כמה הוי תלתא פרסי איזיל ואיעקר טורא בר תלתא פרסי ואישדי עלייה ואיקטלהו אזל עקר טורא בר תלתא פרסי ואיתי על רישיה ואיתי קודשא בריך הוא עליה קמצי ונקבוה ונחתה בצואריה הון בעי למשלפה משכו שיניה לנהא: גופא ולחזי ניסא ולא מצי למשלפיה היינו דכתיב שיני רשעים שברת וכדרכי שמעון בן לקיש דאמר רבי שמעון בן לקיש מאי דכתיב שיני רשעים שברת אל תקרי שברת אלא שרבבת פשיטא כמה וחדה עשר אמה שקיל נרגא בר עשר אמה שוור עשר אמין שברת: that is: Regarding the stone which Og, the King of Bashan, intended to throw upon the Israelites, I have learned through the Cabbalam, or Tradition, that he said: how large is the Israelite camp? Three miles. I will go and uproot a mountain three miles in size, and throw it upon them, and kill them. He therefore went and uprooted a mountain three miles in size, and placed it upon his head. But God caused ants to come upon that stone, which bored a hole through it, and it fell down around his neck (for the hole had sunk precisely over his head into the rock, so that it had to fall around his neck). When he tried to pull it off, however, his teeth grew out on both sides (into the rock), and he could not pull it off; and this is what is written (Ps 3:8): Schinne reschoim schibbarta, that is: Thou breakest the teeth of the wicked. But according to Rabbi Simeon, the son of Lakish, it is to be understood differently: for Rabbi Simeon, the son of Lakish, said, what is that which is written, Thou breakest the teeth of the wicked? Read not schibbarta, thou breakest, but schirbakta, that is, thou hast caused to grow. How tall was Moses: ten cubits. He took an axe ten cubits long, leaped ten cubits into the air, and struck him on the ankle-bone, and killed him. In Jonathan's Chaldean translation of Num 21:36, the giant is described as twice as large, and it is read there as follows: הוה כיון דחמא עוג רשיעא ית משריתא דישראל דהוה שיתא פרסי אמר ליה אנא מכד סדרי קרבא כולו קבל עמא הדין דלמא יעבדו לי היכמא דעבדו לסיחון אזל ועקר טורא בר שיתא פרסי ואחתיה על רישיה למטרק עליהון מן יד זמין מימרא דיי "והלל ופקר טורא ונקריה וטמע רישיה בגויה בעא למשלפה מן רישיה ולא יכיל מן בגלל דמשכי נכיה ושינייה פומיה הלכא והלכא ונסב משה נרגא כרת עשרין אמין וטפי עשרין אמין וטחיה That is: it came to pass that the wicked Og had seen the camp or army of the Israelites, which was six miles long, and said, I will make all preparations for war against this people, so that they do not deal with me as they dealt with Sihon. He therefore went and uprooted a mountain six miles in size, and laid it upon his head so that he might throw it upon them; but God immediately caused vermin to come, which ruined the mountain and bored a hole through it, so that his head was stuck inside it. When he now wished to throw it off his head, he could not, for his cheeks and other teeth grew out, and his mouth went back and forth. Then Moses came and took an axe ten cubits long, leaped ten cubits into the air, and struck him on his heel, so that he fell down and died. This fable also appears in the book Zeëna urëna, fol. 80, col. 4, in the Parascha Chykkath.

It is likewise read in the Sepher hajaschar, in the Parascha Vajiggaksch, that when Joseph would not allow Benjamin to go to Egypt, the following came to pass: ויאמר יהודה אל יוסף שלח נא את אחינו ואל תחרב את ארץ היום הזה: ויען יוסף ויאמר אליהם לכו ואמרו אל אביכם חיה רעה אכלתהו כאשר אמרתם על יוסף אחיכם ויפן יהודה אל נפתלי אחיו ויאמר אליו מהר לך נא ופקד את שוקי כל מצריים ובוא והגד לי: ויאמר אליו שמעון אל נא יהיה לך הדבר הזה למשא עתה ואלך אני ההרה ואקח אבן אחת גדולה מההר ואשמינה על כל מצרים כלה והסח את כל אשר בה: that is, Judah spoke to Joseph: let our brother go now, and do not let your land be laid waste this day. Then Joseph answered and spoke to them: Go hence, and say to your father that a wild beast has torn him to pieces, just as you said concerning your brother Joseph. Then Judah looked at his brother Naphtali (who could run very swiftly) and spoke to him: make haste now, and count all the streets in Egypt, then come and report them to me. Then Simeon said to him: do not let this matter be a burden to you; I will go up onto the mountain right now, take a great stone from the mountain, and hurl it across the entire land of Egypt, killing everything that is within it. From this it follows that Simeon yielded nothing to Og in strength, and indeed surpassed him well.

Because King Og, who, as has been mentioned before, is also said to have been called Eliezer and to have been Abraham's servant, is supposed to have been killed by Moses, I would very much like to know how it can be true that he entered Paradise alive, concerning which the Talmud, in the tractate Derech erez sota, fol. 20, col. 3, in the Talmud printed at Amsterdam, states as follows: תשעה נכנסו בחייהן בגן עדן ואלו הן חנוך בן ירד ואליהו ומשיח ואליעזר עבד אברהם וחירם מלך צור ועבד מלך הכוש ויעבץ בנו של רבי יהודה הנשיא ובתיה בת פרעה וסרח בת אשר : that is, Nine entered Paradise during their lifetime, and they are the following: Enoch the son of Jared, Elijah, the Messiah, Eliezer the servant of Abraham, Hiram the king of Tyre, the servant of the king who was a Moor (mentioned in Jer 38:7), and Jabez the son of Rabbi Jehuda the Prince, etc. Some also say: Rabbi Jehoshua the son of Levi. This is also found in the Jalkut Schimoni on the first book of Moses, fol. 12, col. 1, numero 42. Why he is supposed to have entered Paradise alive is stated in the Jalkut Chadasch, fol. 83, col. 1, numero 51, where one reads that Isaac had harbored a suspicion against him on account of Rebecca; but since he was innocent, God commanded the ministering angels to bring him alive into Paradise.

Furthermore, since King Og is said to have lived before the Flood and to have survived until the time of Moses, he must have reached an age of over 900 years. The reason why God allowed him to live so long is indicated in the Jerusalem Targum on Num 21:35, where it is written as follows: חמא פר חמא משה ית עות אמר הלא דין עוג רשיעא דהוה ממתיל אברהם ושרה ואמר אברהם ושרה דמיין לאילנין יאן דקיימין על מבוועין דמיין ברם פדין לא עבדין בגין כדין קיים יחיה יתיה קודשא בריך הוא חי שמה ממך שנין סגין ועד זמן דחמא בניהון ובני בניהון תרד ונפל בידיהון : that is, And it came to pass that when Moses saw Og, he said: Is this not the wicked Og, who mocked Abraham and Sarah, and said that Abraham and Sarah are like beautiful trees standing by the water-springs but bearing no fruit? Therefore the holy Lord, whose name be blessed, allowed him to live for many years, and until that time when he saw their children and their children's children. It is also read in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 97, col. 1, num. 39, under the title Jehoscha, that other kings likewise lived to a very great age, and the words read as follows: וכל השלשים ושנים מלכים שהרג יהושע כולם במשתה של אברהם : that is, All those thirty-two kings (in Josh 12:24 only thirty-one are mentioned) whom Joshua slew were present at the feast of Abraham. Therefore not one of them can have been less than five hundred and fifty years old. But let this suffice concerning King Og.

Now that we have seen what a great servant Abraham had, let us also examine how great Abraham himself is said to have been. On this subject, the Talmud, in the tractate Sopherim, fol. 14, col. 4, in the 21st chapter, writes the following concerning the words of Josh 14:15, "who was the greatest man among the Anakim or giants": האדם הגדול היה אברהם אבינו כמה יותר מענקים כענקסיה אברהם: that is: the great man was Abraham our father, who was taller than the giants. By the one who was among the Anakim or giants, Abraham is also understood, who in bodily stature was exactly as tall as seventy-four men; he likewise ate and drank as much as seventy-four men, and was also just as strong as that many. Concerning how great the strides were that he took, the following is read in the Jalkut Schimoni on the book of Joshua, fol. 6, col. 3, num. 23, from the 29th Parascha of Bereschith rabba, and in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 17, col. 1, num. 117, under the title Abraham: האדם הגדול בענקים אמר רבי לוי ואברהם ולמה 'קורא אותו גדול לוי ורבי אלעזר בשם רבי יוסי בן זמרא פסיעותיו של אברהם אבינו היו ג' קורא אותו גדול לוי ורבי אלעזר בשם רבי יוסי בן זמרא פסיעותיו של אברהם אבינו היו ג' רבי יהודה ברבי סימון אומר מיל שנ' ארה ברגליו לא יבא מי that is: the Rabbi said that the great man among the Anakim or giants was Abraham. But why does he call him great? Rabbi Levi and Rabbi Eliezer say in the name of Rabbi Jose, the son of Simra, that the strides of Abraham our father were three miles long. Rabbi Jehuda, the son of Rabbi Simon, says they were one mile long, as it is said (Isa 41:3): "On a way where his feet had not come." Who did it? And the initial letters of the words לא יבא מי lo javo mi (which stand in the Hebrew text of the aforementioned passage in Isaiah) read backwards spell מיל mil, that is, one mile. Now, since it was mentioned above on page 381 that the giants were begotten by the angels cast out of heaven, that is, by the devils, the patriarch Abraham, being such a great giant, would necessarily also have descended from them. But should a Jew wish to say that people at that time were large because Adam, from whom they descended, was very great, then it is false that all the giants were begotten by the devils; and one could rightly ask why, in Holy Scripture, a distinction was made between the giants and other men, if they were all supposed to have been giants.

From Abraham's strength, however, one may judge from the following, which comes immediately after what was cited shortly before from the tractate Sopherim fol. 14. col. 4., where it is written thus: מה עשה נטל שבעה עשר בני קטורה ובנה להן כרך של ברזל והכניסן לתוכו והשמש מעולם לא נכנס בתוכה מפני שהיא גבוהה הרבה ומסר להן דיסקרין של אבנים טובות ומרגליות לעתיד לבוא כשעתיד הק"ה להחפיר חמה ולבנה כמה דכתיב וחפרה הלבנה ובושה החמה (Abraham) do? He took the seventeen sons of Ketura (his second wife, who is mentioned in Gen 25) and built them an iron city and placed them within it; the sun, however, never entered it, because it was very high, and he gave them a dish full of precious stones and pearls (which shone within it in place of the sun), which will be made use of in the future, when God will cause the sun and the moon to be put to shame, as it is said (Isa 24:23): And the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed.

Because mention is made here of such brilliantly shining precious stones and pearls, I must, on this occasion, also indicate what is written in Rabbi Eliezer's Chapters, in the 10th Chapter, concerning such a gleaming pearl that is said to have been inside the fish in which Jonah was enclosed, where, over the words of Jonah 2:1, "But the Lord appointed a great fish to swallow Jonah," the following is read: נכנס בפיו כאדם שהוא נכנס בבית הכנסת הגדולה ועמד היו שתי עיניו של דג כחלונות אפומיות מאירות ליונה. ר. מאיר אומר מרגלית אחת היתה תלויה במעיו של דג מאירה ליונה כשמש הזה שהוא מאיר בצהרים ומראה לו כל שבים ובתהומות ועליו הכתוב That is: He entered into its mouth just as a man enters into a great synagogue or school, and he stood there, and the two eyes of the fish were like windows that gave him light. Rabbi Meir says: there was a pearl hanging in the entrails of the fish, which shone upon Jonah as the sun shines at midday, and it showed him everything that was in the sea and in the depths; and of this the Scripture says (Ps 97:11): "Light is sown for the righteous." Likewise, in the German-Hebrew booklet Sepher gelilóth érez Iisraél, there is an account of such a precious stone which the fictitious Jewish king over the river Sabbatjon, by the name of Daniel, is said to have possessed in his castle, concerning which a report is to be given below in the 10th Chapter of the second part.

Such brilliantly shining precious stones were also, by God's command, to have been placed by Noah in the ark; for in the Talmudic Tractate Sanhedrin fol. 108, col. 2, it is reported as follows: אמר רבי יוחנן אמר הק"ה קבע בה אבנים That is, Rabbi Jochanan said that the holy blessed God spoke to Noah: place precious stones and pearls therein (in the ark), so that they may shine like midday, namely as the sun is accustomed to shine at bright noon. This may also be looked up in the Jalkut Shimoni on the books of Moses, fol. 14, col. 4, numero 57.

Since the great brilliance of precious stones is mentioned here, I must also report in what manner the entire land of Egypt is said to have once been illuminated by Sarah, concerning which the following is read in Bereschith rabba, in the fortieth Parascha, fol. 37, col. 1, on the words of Gen 12:14, "Now when Abraham came into Egypt, the Egyptians saw the woman, that she was very beautiful": ושרה היכן היתה נתנה בתיבה ונעל בפניה כיון דמטא למכסא אמרין ליה: הב מכסא אמר אני יהיב מכסא אמרין ליה מאנין את טעין אמר אנא יהיב דמאנין. א"ל דהב את טעין אמר אני יהיב דמי דהבי. א"ל מטכסין את טעין אמר דמטכסי אני יהיב. א"ל מרגלין

את טעין אמר אנא יהיב דמרגלין. אמרין ליה לא אפשר אלא דתפתח ותחזי לן מה בגוה. כיון שפתחה הבהיקה כל ארץ מצרים מזיוה: that is, Where then was Sarah? He (Abraham) had laid her in a chest and locked it shut before her face (so that no one should see her beauty). When he came to the customs post, they (namely the customs officers) said to him, pay the toll. He said, I will pay my toll. They said to him, you are carrying clothing. He said, I will pay it on the clothing. They said to him, you are carrying gold. He answered them, I will pay the value of my gold. Further they said to him, you are carrying the finest silk. He said to them, I will pay it on the finest silk. They said further to him, you are carrying pearls. He said to them, I will pay it on the pearls (and thus wished to pay the toll as though he had such costly goods). But they said to him, it cannot be; rather you must open it and show what you have inside. When he then opened (the chest), the entire land of Egypt shone with her radiance.

To return now to the giants and strong men: in Vajikra rabba, in the eighth Parascha, fol. 141. col. 4., the following is read concerning Samson, regarding the words (Judg 13:25), "And the Spirit of the Lord began to move him in the camp of Dan, between Zorah and Eshtaol": אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמן מלמד שנטל 'שני הרים והקישן זה בזה כאדם שנטל שני צרורות ומקישן זה בזה. ר. 'יהודה ור. 'נחמן ר' יודא אומר בשעה שהיתה רוח הקודש שרויה עליו היה פוסע פסיעה אחת ממצרעה ועד אשתאול. ר. 'נחמן אמר בשעה שהיתה רוח הקודש שורה עליו שערותיו עומדות היו מקישות זה לזה: that is, Rabbi Samuel, the son of Nachman, said: this teaches us that he took two mountains and struck them against one another, as a man strikes two small stones together. Rabbi Jehuda and Rabbi Nachman (are of differing opinions.) Rabbi Jehuda says: when the Holy Spirit rested upon him, he took a single stride, as it were from Zorah all the way to Eshtaol. Rabbi Nachman said: when the Holy Spirit rested upon him, his hair stood on end and struck against itself like a bell (or rang), so that its sound traveled as it were from Zorah all the way to Eshtaol. Rabbi Gerson writes in his little book, which he calls Sepher geliloth erez Israel, already mentioned in the preceding section, that he traveled through the land of King Og and there saw a grave that was eighty ells long, and was told that it was the grave of Shem, the son of Noah. Furthermore, the same author reports in the said little book that a backbone from a human being hangs in the castle at Jerusalem, which is four fathoms long. In the Jalkut Schimoni on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, it is also read at fol. 166. col. 3. num. 1001. that when the Chaldeans had besieged Jerusalem, there was at that time a valiant hero in Jerusalem, of whom the following account is given: היו גבורים בירושלים עד אין חקר היו נלחמים עם הכשדים ומפילים מהם חללים הרבה והיה שם גבור אחד ושמו אביקא בן גבתרי כשהיו אנשי חיל מקלעים אבנים גדולה להפיל החומה היה מקבלם בידו ומשליכן על בני החיל והורג מהם הרבה עד שהתחיל לקבל האבנים ברגלו והיה מחזיר לחיל וגרם העון וכו' 'ובאה הרוח והפילתו מן החומה ונבקע ומת באותה שעה נבקעה ירושלים ונכנסו הכשדים, that is: In Jerusalem there were heroes beyond all reckoning, and they fought against the Chaldeans and slew many of those whom they had wounded. But there was among them a hero by the name of Afika, the son of Gafteri, and when the (Chaldean) soldiers hurled great stones to cast down the city wall, he caught them with one hand and threw them back at those same soldiers, killing many of them, until he began to catch the stones with his foot and hurl them back into the army. But sin brought it about that a wind came and cast him down from the wall, so that he burst apart and died. In that same hour Jerusalem was broken open, and the Chaldeans entered in. It is likewise written in the book Zeéna ureéna, fol. 108. col. 1., under the heading Chórban, that when a Roman emperor had besieged the city of Turmálka, there was among the Jews within it a great hero by the name of Bar Deróma, who leaped an entire mile in a single bound and killed all the Roman people within a mile's distance; alongside which many other crude and senseless fabrications are to be found. And in the Máase-Buch, in the 145th chapter, it is reported of Joab that he captured the Ammonite city of Rabbah single-handedly and killed many within it, accompanied likewise by unheard-of lies.

Having now seen what blatant lies stand in the Talmud and certain other Rabbinical books concerning giants and heroes, we will now also consider what foolish fables they shamelessly put forward therein about great birds, fish, and four-footed animals. Regarding the birds, the following is written in the Talmudic tractate Bechôroth fol. 57. col. 2. concerning a bird called Bar jûchne: פעם אחת נפלה ביצה בר יוכנ 'וטבעה ששים כרכים ושברה שלש מאות ארזים ומי שהיא ליה ליה ליה that is: Once the egg of Bar jûchne fell (from the nest) and (the white and the yolk) flooded sixty villages and broke three hundred cedar trees. How so? Did he throw it away? For it is written (Job 39:13, or according to others v. 16): The wing of the (bird) Renanim is joyful, (and here, according to Rabbi Solomon's interpretation, the word Renanim signifies the bird Bar jûchne, which is however a great error, for it means peacocks, which are so named on account of their cry, since Ranan means to cry out.) Rabbi Aschi said that the said (egg) was worthless and rotten. It must therefore have been a terrifyingly large bird that laid so great an egg.

Furthermore, concerning a great bird that is said to be called Sis, the following is written in the tractate Báva báthra (or Bóvo básro), fol. 73. col. 2.: אמר רבה בר בר חנה זימנא חדא הוה אזלינן בספינתא וחזינן ההוא צפרא דקאים עד קרסוליה במיא ורישיה ברקיע ואמרינן ליכא מיא ובעינן למיחת לאקרורי נפשין ונפק בת קלא ואמר לן לא תנחתו הכא דנפלה ליה חצינא לבר נגא הא שבע שני ולא קא מטיא ארעא לאו משום

דנפישו מיה אלא דמרהי מיה משום דדמי מיה אמר רב אשי ההוא זיו שדי הוא דכתיב וזיו שדי עמדי, that is: Rabba, the grandson of Chunna, said: Once we were traveling in a ship and saw a bird that stood in the water up to its shins, while its head reached up to the firmament of heaven. We said: there is no deep water there; let us climb in and cool ourselves. But a voice came from heaven (which, as already noted above, is called Bath-kol) and said to us: do not climb in there, for seven years ago a carpenter's axe fell in at that spot and has not yet reached the ground; not because there is so much water there (and it is so very deep), but because it flows so strongly (that the axe cannot sink straight down). Rabbi Aschi said: that same one is the Sis of the field, of which it is written (Ps 50:11): The Sis of the field is with me, that is, as Rabbi Solomon notes in his commentary on this passage in the Talmud, he is near to me, because his head reaches the firmament and he is thus said to be near to God. In the Chaldean translation of the aforementioned words, this bird is called Tárnegul bára, that is, the wild rooster, and that passage reads as follows: תרנגול ברא דקסוליה שריין בארעא ורישיה מטי בשמיה מיכן קדמי, that is: the wild rooster, whose shins are upon the earth but whose head reaches to heaven, sings before me. The word Sis, however, is foolishly understood in the Talmud to refer to such a great bird, whereas it commonly denotes all creatures that move upon the field, since it derives from the root, or stem-word, Sus, which means "to move," as Rabbi Solomon also explains in his commentary on the Psalms, on the cited passage Ps 50:11, where he writes: וזיו שדי זה זי על שם שהם זים ממקום למקום, that is: the creatures of the field are called Sis because they move from one place to another. Concerning this bird, the following is also written in Vajikra rabba, in the twenty-second Parascha, fol. 155. col. 4., as well as in Rabbi David Kimchi's Sepher Scharaschim, under the word Sis: אמר רבי יהודה בר סימון בשעה שהוא פורש את כנפיו מכסה גלגל חמה ה"ד המבינתך יאבר נץ יפרוש כנפיו לתימן. ולמה נקרא שמו זיו שיש בו כמה מיני טעם מזה ומזה, that is: Rabbi Jehuda, the son of Simon, said: when it spreads its wings, it darkens the sun, and this is what is written (Job 39:26, or according to others v. 29): Does the hawk soar by your understanding and spread its wings toward the south? But why is it called Sis? Because it has many kinds of taste, from this and from that. This Sis, moreover, is said to be the aforementioned bird Bar juchne, as will be shown below in the fifteenth chapter of the second part, from the commentary of Aben Esra on Dan 12:3.

In the aforementioned passage of the tractate Bava bathra, immediately following what has been cited from it, there is also mention, at fol. 73. col. 2., of large fat geese that had been cut open, and the following stands written there: אמר רבה בר בר חנה זימנא חדא הוי קא אזלינן במדברא וחזינן הנהו אווזי דשמטי גדפיהו ממשמניהו וקא נגדי נחלי דמשחא מתותיהו ואמינא להו אית לן פלגא לעלמא דאתי אמרה לי חדא דל אטמא לי וחדא דל אגפא לי אתאי לקמיה דרבי אלעזר אמר לי עתידין ישראל ליתן עליהן את הדין (that is: Rabba, the grandson of Channa, said: we once went through a wilderness and saw geese whose feathers were falling out on account of their fatness, and streams of fat were flowing beneath them; whereupon I said to them, do we also have a share in you in the world to come (when the Messiah shall arrive)? Then one of them raised its wing, and another raised its foot (to signify thereby: this is your portion in the world to come, as Rabbi Solomon explains it). When I then came before Rabbi Eliezer, he said to me: the Israelites must one day give an account on account of those geese (because through their sins they cause the Messiah to tarry so long, and those geese must on account of their great fatness suffer pain for so long, as the aforementioned Rabbi Solomon Jarchi expounds it).

There is also further mention in the said passage of the Talmud of a large raven, a frog, and a serpent, of which the words read as follows: אמר רבה בר בר חנה לדידי חזיא אקרוקתא דהויא כי אקרא דהגרונאי ואקרא דהגרונאי כמה הויא שתין בתי אתא תנינא בלע אתא פושקנצא ובלעה לתנינא וסליק ויתב באילנא חזי כמה נפיש חילה דאילנא.

that is: Rabba, the grandson of Channa, said: I myself have seen a frog that was as large as the village of Akra in Hagronia. How large, then, was the village of Akra in Hagronia? Sixty houses. Then a snake came and swallowed the frog; after that a raven came and swallowed the snake, and flew up into a tree and perched upon it. Consider how great the strength of this tree must have been. Raf Papa, the son of Samuel, said: had I not been there myself, I would not have believed it. This tree, however, must certainly have been one of those cedar trees of which it is written in the Talmudic tractate Bechoroth (or Bechbros), fol. 57, col. 2, as follows: פעם אחת נפל ארז אחד שבמקומו ועברו שש עשרה קרונות על חודו that is: Once a cedar tree fell that stood in our place, and sixteen wagons passed over its edge (that is, as Rabbi Salomon explains it, it was so wide that sixteen wagons could travel upon it side by side). Yet even such a tree would still have been far too small and too weak to bear such a great raven.

Regarding the large fish, the following is written about one in the aforementioned passage of the tractate Bava bathra, fol. 73. col. 2.: אמר רבה בר אבא ר' זימנא חדא הוה קא אזלינן בספינתא וחזינן ההוא כורא דיתבא ליה אכלה טיגא באוסייה ואדחוהו מיא ושדיה לגידא וחרוב מיניה שיתין מחוזי ואכול מיניה שיתין מחוזי ומלחו מיניה שיתין מחוזי ומלאו מחד גילגלא דעיניה תלת מאה גרבי משחא וכי חדרן לבתר תריסר ירחי that is: Rabba, the grandson of Channa, said: We were once sailing on a ship and saw a fish, in whose nostril there was a certain worm otherwise called kilbith כלבית, which attaches itself to the ears or nostrils of large fish and causes them to die; and the water drove it (since it was dead) and cast it upon the shore, and thereby sixty cities were laid waste (in that the water had hurled it against the land with such great force that the cities lying along the shore were shattered); and sixty cities ate from it, and sixty cities salted provisions from it, and from its one eyeball they filled three hundred barrels of fat. When we returned after twelve months, or one year, we saw that its bones were being hewn apart in order to rebuild those same cities that it had destroyed.

אמר רבה בר בר חנה זימנא חדא הוה קא אזלינן בספינתא וחזינן ההוא כוורא דיתבא ליה חלתא אגביה וקדח אגמא עילויה סברינן יבשתא היא וסלקינן ואפינן ובשלינן אגביה וכד חם גביה איתהפך ואי לאו דהוה that is: Rabba, the grandson of Channa, said: We once sailed in a ship and saw a fish upon whose back sand lay and upon which reeds had grown; we thought it was dry land, and climbed up onto it and cooked and boiled upon it. But when it grew hot upon it (on account of the fire, which burned him), he turned himself over, and had the ship not still been near us, we would have sunk (and drowned). Furthermore, immediately following the foregoing passage in the same place, one reads: אמר רבה בר בר חנה זימנא חדא הוי אזלינן בספינתא וסגאי ספינתא בין שיצא לשיצא דכוורא תלתא יומי ותלתא לילוואת איהו בקיפא ואנן בשיפלא וכי תימא לא מסגיא ספינתא טובא כי אתא רב דימי אמר כמיחם קומקומא דמיא סגיא שיתין פרסי ושדי פרשא גירא וקדמה ליה ואמר רב אשי גילדנא דימא הוא דאית That is: (Rabba, the grandson of Channa, said: We once sailed in a ship, and the ship traveled for three days and three nights between the two fins of a fish. He (the fish) went upward (that is, as Rabbi Solomon explains, against the wind), while we went downward (that is, with the wind). Should you wish to say that the ship did not travel swiftly, when Rav Dimi came he said: in as much time as it takes to warm a pan of water over the fire, it traveled sixty miles. A knight also shot an arrow, and the ship outpaced it (so that it moved faster than the arrow). Rav Ashi said it was a sea fish called Gildena, which has two fins.) In the following fol. 74, col. 1, another great fish is also described in this manner: לבי יוחנן משתעי זימנא חדא הוה קא אזלינן בספינתא וחזינן ההוא כוורא דאפקיד לרישיה מימא דמיין עיניה כתרי סהרי ונפץ מיא מתרתי זימיה כתרי That is: Rabbi Jochanan relates: We once sailed in a ship and saw a fish which put its head out of the sea, and its two eyes were like two moons, and water sprayed out of its two nostrils like two rivers of Sura. Immediately following this, one reads in the same place: רב ספרא משתעי זימנא חדא הוי קא אזלינן בספינתא וחזינן ההוא כוורא דאפקיה לרישיה מימא והוה ליה קרני וחקיק עליה אנא בריה קלה שבים והוינא תלת מאה פרסי ואולנא לפומיה דלוינן אמר רב אשי היזוא עיזא דימא That is: Rav Safra relates: We once sailed in a ship and saw a fish which stretched its head out of the sea and had horns, and upon it was written: I am one of the lesser (or smaller) creatures that are in the sea.

and I am three hundred miles long, and I go into the maw of the Leviathan (so that he may eat me today). Rav Ashi said that it was a sea-goat, which searches (digging in the sea with its horns and seeking its food) and has horns.

Regarding the Leviathan, however, which, as mentioned, can eat such an enormously large fish all at once, one can imagine how large it must therefore be, and the following is read there in the second column concerning it: אמר רב יהודה אמר רב כל שברא הק"ב בעולמו זכר ונקבה בראם אף לויתן נחש בריה ולויתן נחש עקלתון זכר ונקבה בראם ואלמלא נזקקין זה לזה מחריבין כל העולם כולו מה עשה הק"ב סרס את הזכר והרג את הנקבה ומלחה לצדיקים לעתיד לבוא שנ' והרג את התנין אשר בים : that is: Rav Yebuda has said that Rav said: Everything that GOD created in His world, He created a male and a female of it; thus He also created a male and a female of the Leviathan, which is a straight serpent, and the Leviathan which is a crooked serpent (of which mention is made in Isa 27:1); but if they had mingled with one another (and produced offspring), they would have destroyed the entire world (on account of their size). What did the holy blessed GOD do: He castrated the male and killed the female, and salted her away for the righteous for the time to come (namely for the meal which is to be seen at greater length in the fifth chapter of the second part), as it is said (in the aforementioned Isa 27:1): And He will slay the dragon that is in the sea.

The Jews might well be permitted to say, when one confronts them with these fairy tales about the fish, that they are not to be understood literally; but one can meet them with the reply that the Rabbi Bechai, who is very renowned among their scholars, in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 7, col. 2, on the words of Gen 1:21, "And Elohim, that is, GOD, created great tanninim, that is, whales," takes all of this in its proper and literal sense, where he writes as follows: על דרך הפשט דגים הם ולהפלט גודל גופם יחס הבריאה לאלהים כשם שתמצא באדם שיחס הכתוב בריאתו לאלהים : הוא שכתוב ויברא אלהים את האדם בצלמו... והכוונה כי הבורא ית' המציא הגופים הגדולים ההם יש מאין : חכמי הפלוסופים כתבו בספריהם שידעו מהם ארוכים חמש מאות פרסה... גם רבותינו חכמי התלמוד ספרו לנו הפלגות כטובת נבא : בתרא. והוא שהעיד רבה בר בר חנה וכו' : 'ופסוק מלא הוא : יודדי הים באניות ועושי מלאכה כמים רבים המה ראו מעשה ה' וגו' that is: "In the literal sense, the word tanninim means fish, but on account of their excessive size, the act of creation is attributed to Elohim, that is, GOD (which word sometimes signifies greatness), just as you find with man, that Scripture attributes his creation to Elohim, as it is written (Gen 1:27): 'And Elohim, that is, GOD, created man in His image.' The intent is that the blessed Creator brought those same great bodies (of the fish) into existence out of nothing. The wise philosophers likewise write in their books that they had knowledge of some of these which were six hundred miles in length. In the same way, our Rabbis, the sages of the Talmud, recount strange things in the tractate Báva bâthra (or bâfra), to which Rabba, the grandson of Channa, bears witness, etc. And it is indeed a complete verse (on this matter, Ps 107:23-24, where it is written:) "They that go down to the sea in ships, and carry on their trade in great waters, these have seen the works of the LORD, etc." If, therefore, the recounted fables were to be understood in any sense other than the literal one, then the learned Rabbi Bechai would also have had to understand them differently. But granted that there are some who do not wish to understand them literally, which I nonetheless doubt, very few of those will be found, while on the other hand a great many fools will be found who are of a different mind.

Regarding the great four-footed animals: a great ox is said to have been created at the beginning, which is called Schor habbâr by the Jews, that is, the wild ox, and also Behemóth (or Béhemos), and they wish to prove this from Ps 50:10, where it is written: "For all the animals of the forest are mine, Behemoth (that is, according to their opinion, the animal Behemoth, though it actually means 'the animals,' for it is the pluralis numerus, or the plural number of the singular Behemá, which means a beast or animal) upon a thousand mountains." Concerning this, in the aforementioned passage of the Talmudic Tractate Báva bâthra, fol. 74, col. 2, immediately following what was cited from it shortly before regarding the Leviathan, the following is found: ואף בהמות בהרר אלף זכר ונקבה בראם ואילמלא נזקקין זה לזה מחריבין כל העולם כולו. מה עשה הק"ה סירס הזכר וצינן הנקבה ושמרה לצדיקים לעתיד לבוא שנ' הנה נא כוחו במתניו זה זכר ואונו בשרירי בטנו זו נקבה: that is, He also created of the Behemóth that is upon the thousand mountains a male and a female, and if they had mingled with one another (and multiplied), they would have destroyed the entire world. What did God do? He castrated the male and cooled the female (and made her unfit to bear young) and preserved her for the righteous for the time to come, as it is said (Job 40:11): "Behold, his (that is, the Behemoth's) strength is in his loins" - these words signify the male; "and his power in the muscles of his belly" - this signifies the female. Concerning this, in Vajikra rabba, in the twenty-second Parascha, f. 155, col. 4, the following is likewise read: רבי יוחנן אמר בהמה אחת היא רבוצה על אלף הרים ואלף הרים מגדלין לה מאכל ממאכלן של צדיקים והיא אוכלת מאי טעמא והיה שרון לנוה צאן. ורבנן אמרי בהמה אחת היא רבוצה על אלף הרים ואלף הרים מגלין לה מיני בהמות והיא אוכלת מ"ט שנ' וכל חית השדה ישחקו שם ואפשר כן את בעיר אכיל בעיר. א"ר תנחומא גדולים הם מעשי האלהים מה משונין הם מעשיו של הקב"ה ומהיכן הוא שותה. רבי יוחנן אמר כל מה שהירדן מכניס אחת לו 'חדשים הוא עושה גמיעה אחת מ"ט שנ' הן יעשוק נהר ולא יחפזו. ר"ש בין לקיש אמר כל מה שהירדן מכניס ל"ב חדשים הוא עושה גמיעה אחת מ"ט יבטח כי יגיה ירדן אל פיהו וג' תני ר' שמעון בן יוחאי אמר נהר יוצא מעדן ושמו יובל ומשם הוא שותה מ"ט

ישלח שרשיו: that is, Rabbi Jochanan said: it is a single animal (although it is called Behemoth in the plural) which lies upon a thousand mountains, and those thousand mountains bring forth all manner of herbs for it, which it eats, as it is said (Job 40:17, and according to others v. 20): "The mountains bring forth fodder for him." Resch Lakisch said: it is an animal which lies upon a thousand mountains, and the thousand mountains bring forth food for it, from the food of the righteous, and it eats the same. From where is this proven? (Because it is written in Isa 65:10:) "And Sharon shall be a dwelling for the flock." Our rabbis, however, say: it is an animal which lies upon a thousand mountains, and those thousand mountains raise up for it kinds of animals, and it eats them. From where is this proven? Because it is said (Job 40:15, and according to others v. 20): "And all the wild animals play there." This too is possible, for there are animals which devour others. Rabbi Tanchúma said: the works of God are great; how varied are the works of the Holy and Blessed God! But from where does it drink? Rabbi Jochanan said: all the water that the Jordan gathers in six months, it drinks in a single gulp. From where is this proven? Because it is said (Job 40:18, or according to others v. 23): "Behold, he (namely the Behemoth) swallows up a river and does not hasten." Rabban Schimeon, the son of Lakisch, said: all that the Jordan gathers in twelve months, it drinks in a single gulp. From where is this proven? (Because Job 40:18, or according to others v. 23, says:) "He trusts that he can drink up the Jordan with his mouth," etc. Rabbi Schimeon, the son of Jochai, teaches that a river goes out from Paradise which is called Júval, and that it drinks from the same. From where is this proven? Because it is said (Jer 17:8): "And is rooted by the Júval (that is, the brook)." In the commentary of Rabbi Menachem of Rekanat on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parascha Bereschith, fol. 10, col. 3, the following is also found concerning this: בהמות הוא רבון בהררי that is, the animal Behemoth lies upon a thousand mountains and grazes a thousand mountains every day, but at night they spring up again (and bring forth grass) of themselves, as if nothing had touched them, as it is said (Job 40:17): "And the mountains bring forth herbs for him." In the Chaldean translation of Ps 50:10, it is likewise reported that it grazes so many mountains daily, and it stands there: תור בר דדעי בכל יומא בטורין אלפא that is, the wild ox which grazes every day upon a thousand mountains. So too does Rabbi Salomon Jarchi write in his commentary on the words of Ps 50:10, "Behemoth upon a thousand mountains," as follows: הוא המתוקן לסעודת לעתיד that is, the same (Behemoth) is prepared for the future banquet, and it grazes a thousand mountains daily, upon which the grass grows again every day.

In the Talmudic tractate Chollin, at fol. 59, col. 2, mention is also made of a great lion, which is described there as follows: אמר ליה קיסר לר' יהושע בן חנניא: אלהיכם באריה מתיל דכתיב אריה שאג מי לא יירא מאי רבותיה פרשא קטיל אריא א"ל לאו בהאי אריא מתיל דבי עילאי מתיל א"ל בעינא דמחווית ליה ניהלי א"ל לא מצית חזית ליה אמר ליה איברא חזינא ליה בעא רחמי ואעקר מדוכתיה בי היה מרחיק ארבע מאה פרסה נהם חד קלא אפילו כל מעברתא ושורא דרומי נפל ומרחיק תלת מאה פרסם ביהם קלא אחרנא נתרו שני דשיני דגברי ואף הוא נפל מכורסיה לארעא א"ל במיטותא מינך בעי רחמי עליה דליהודא, that is: The Emperor said to Rabbi Jehoshua, son of Chananja: your GOD is compared to a lion, as it is written (Amos 3:8): The lion roars, who would not fear? Wherein, then, consists His excellence? A knight can kill a lion! (As if He were therefore no excellent being, that one should compare GOD to it.) To this he answered him: He is not compared to such a (common) lion, but to the lion that is in the forest of Ilai. Thereupon the Emperor said to him: I desire that you show him to me. He (Rabbi Jehoshua) answered him: you cannot see him. But the Emperor said: I certainly desire to see him. Then the Rabbi prayed for mercy (before GOD and called upon Him), and the lion was brought out from his place (where he had been staying). Now when he was still four hundred miles away (from the Emperor), he roared once, whereupon all pregnant women miscarried and the walls of Rome fell down. But when he was only three hundred miles distant, he roared once more, and the people's cheek teeth and other teeth fell out; the Emperor also fell from his throne to the ground and said to the Rabbi: I beg you, call upon GOD for mercy in this matter, that He bring him back again to his place. Then he called upon GOD for mercy, and He brought him back to his place. This must indeed have been a terrifyingly great lion, that was able to roar in so dreadful a manner.

But he was not the only one who could roar in such a terrible manner; for in the Sepher hajaschar, in the Parasha Vajiggasch, it is read of Judah that when Joseph in Egypt would not let his brother Benjamin go, Judah together with his remaining brothers began to fight with the Egyptians, and roared in such a fashion as well, whereof the words there read as follows: וירא יהודה את כל אנשי מצרים סובבים אותם במצות יוסף להפחידם אך יוסף צוה לאנשיו להם לאמר אל תגעו באחד וימהר יהודה וישלוף חרבו ויצעק צעקה גדולה ומרה עד מאד ויך בחרבו אל גגרו על הארץ ויטש חרץ עליון על כל האנשים: ויהי בעשותו הדבר הזה ויפול יי' פחד יהודה ואחיו על כל הגבורים וכל האנשים אשר סביבותם וינוסו כל מקול הצעקה ויפחדו ויפלו איש על רעהו וימותו מהם הרבה בנפלים ויברחו כלם מפני יהודה ואחיו ומפני יוסף. ויהי בנוסם וירדפם יהודה ואחיו עד בית פרעה וימלטו להם כלם וישב יהודה על פני יוסף וינהם עליו כאריה ויצעק עליו צעקה גדולה ומרה מאד ותשמע הצעקה ההיא עד למרחוק וישמעו כל יושבי סוכות ותהרעש כל מצרים מקול הצעקה וגם כל חומות מצרים וארץ גושן נפלו בלם מרעש הארץ ונפל גם פרעה מעל בסאו על פניו ארצה תם כל נשי מצרים וגבוריה חול וחלחלה נפלו עליהם ויפחדו במעשיו

מאד מאד מאד: וכשמעם את קול הרעש כי יראו מאד מאד. The meaning is as follows: And Judah saw all the Egyptian men who had surrounded them at Joseph's command in order to frighten them. But Joseph had commanded his men that they should not touch any one of them; whereupon Judah made haste and drew his sword and cried out very loudly and bitterly, and struck with his sword, and leaped also upon the ground, and cried out once more against those same men. When he did this, God caused the fear of Judah and his brothers to fall upon all the heroes and all the men who had surrounded them, and they all took to flight on account of the voice of the cry and the terror; and one fell upon another, so that many of them died as they fell, and all fled before Judah and his brothers and before Joseph. Now as they were in flight, Judah and his brothers pursued them as far as Pharaoh's house, but they all escaped; and Judah sat before Joseph and roared against him like a lion, and cried out mightily and bitterly against him, so that the same cry was heard from afar, and all who dwelt in the tents heard it, and the whole land of Egypt trembled and shook at the voice of the cry, and all the walls in Egypt and in the land of Goshen fell down from the shaking of the earth, and King Pharaoh also fell from his throne upon his face to the ground; and moreover all the pregnant women in Egypt and Goshen lost their children from their wombs when they heard the voice of the shaking of the earth, for they were exceedingly afraid. This fable is also found in Bereschith rabba, in the ninety-third Parascha, fol. 84, col. 4, and fol. 85, col. 1, where it is reported that he roared so loudly that it was heard four hundred miles away, and that the teeth of Joseph's heroes fell out from it; and also that Chuschim, the son of Dan, heard it in the Promised Land and leaped to him in Egypt and roared along with him. And this is likewise to be found in the Jalkut Schimoni on Job, fol. 147, col. 2, as well as in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 55, col. 1, in the Parascha Vujiggasch.

Since in the foregoing, large humans, birds, fish, and four-footed animals have been discussed, I must also here report something about large plants of the earth, concerning which tall tales are told in the Talmud, and which stands in the Tractate Kethuvoth (or Kesuvos) fol. 111. col. 2., written as follows concerning a large turnip, a branch of a mustard stalk, and likewise a cabbage stalk: אמרו עתידה חטה שתהא כשתי כליות של שור הגדול ואל תתמה שהרי שועל קנן בלפת ושקלוהו ומצאו בו ששים ליטרין בליטרא של ציפורי תניא אמר רב יוסף מעשה בשיחין באחד שהניח לו אביו שלשה בדי חרדל ונפשה אחד מהן וסיככו בו סוכת יוצרין. אמר רבי that is: It is said that in the future (at the time of the Messiah) a grain of wheat will be as large as two kidneys of a great ox; but do not be astonished at this, for behold, a fox once made its lair inside a turnip (which it had hollowed out and used to raise its young), and it was weighed and found (even though it was hollow) to have weighed sixty pounds by the Cyprian measure. We learn that Raf Joseph said that it had come to pass among the shrubs that his father had left him three branches of a mustard-seed shrub, of which one had been split (and threshed), and nine Kab of mustard seeds were found on it (which was a certain measure holding as much as twenty-four hen's eggshells); but from the wood of that same branch, a potter's hut had been roofed. Rabbi Simson, the son of Tachalifa, said: our father left us a cabbage stalk, and we climbed up and down it on a ladder (to break off the leaves).

There are also many more shameless lies to be found in the Talmud, of which I will point out a few more here. In the tractate Gittin, at fol. 56, col. 2, the following is read concerning Emperor Titus Vespasian: that when he had entered the Temple after the conquest of the city of Jerusalem, he had conducted himself in a most godless manner. The words read as follows: גיטאט הרשיע חירף וגדף כלפי מעלה מה עשה תפס זונה בידו ונכנס לבית קדשי הקדשים והציע ספר תורה ועבר עליה עבירה ונטל סייף וגדר את הפרוכת ונעשה נס והיה דם מבצבץ that is, the godless Titus blasphemed and reviled GOD. What did he do? He seized a harlot with his hand and entered the Holy of Holies, and laid the book of the Law there, and upon it committed the sin (fornication). He also took a sword and pierced the curtain, and a miraculous sign occurred, in that blood came forth. Shortly thereafter it is related that when Titus sailed back to Rome across the sea, there was a great storm wind, and that he said it appeared that the God of the Jews was mighty only upon the water, and that for this reason He had caused Pharaoh and Sisera to drown; if He were truly strong, He should come to him on dry land and wage war with him. Whereupon a voice came from heaven and said to him: O you godless man! I have a small creature in my world, namely a gnat, which will make war with you. When he then came ashore, a gnat entered his nose, which bored holes in his brain for seven years. But after the skull had been opened, a gnat was found inside it, which was as large as a young dove, weighed two pounds, and whose mouth was of copper and whose claws were of iron. This is also to be found in Bereschith rabba, in the tenth Parascha, fol. 10, col. 3, 4, and in Vajikra rabba, in the twenty-second Parascha, fol. 154, col. 4, as well as in Medrasch Koheneth, fol. 312, col. 4, and in the 38th chapter of the Chapters of Rabbi Elieser. In the celebrated Jewish historian Josephus, however, not the least mention is made of any of this; on the contrary, Titus is praised. Likewise, in the little book Divre malke bajith scheni, fol. 126, col. 1, it is read that when the Jews had refused to surrender the Temple, Titus gave them a sharp rebuke for defiling and polluting the Temple, and said to them: העד עד קודש היא הבית בית מקדש ה' הוא ואתם טמאים אותו פוגמתם את חסידכם על מזבחכם כאשר עשיתם לפני זכריה בן יהוידע ואחרי כן לא תבושו ולא תכלמו לאמור אלהים יעזר לנו ואם שלחן איש אחד זולתם מטמאים היה שונא אותכם אף כי

גור: that is, this city is a holy city, and this house is a holy house of the LORD; but you have defiled it by putting your pious men to death upon your altars, as you formerly did to Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada; and after this you are not ashamed or abashed to say, GOD will help us! If you had defiled a man's table, he would hate you; how much more (will you be hated) for defiling the table of your GOD. And in the following folio 127, col. 2, it is reported: וביאה טיטוס כי לא יכול לרומיים. נכנס אל הבית והוא עדנו לא נשרף כולו וראה את יופיו ואת הדר כבודו ותמה ויאמר עתה דעתי כי אין זה. כי אם בית אלהים ובאמת היו באים אליו מקצה הארץ בכסף וזהב ולבונה לאלהי השמים והוא ינקום נקמת הבית הזה מיד הפרצים That is, when Titus saw that he could not restrain the Romans (who were burning the Temple), he went into the Temple while it was not yet entirely burned, and saw its beauty and the splendor of its glory, and marveled, and said: now I know that this is nothing other than the house of GOD, and that people had truly come to it from the ends of the earth with silver and gold and frankincense before the GOD of heaven; He will also avenge this house upon the violent men who caused all this evil. How then can it ever be possible that Titus, who spoke such godly words, should have committed so abominable a vice in the Temple as the Talmud teaches? If it were true, why have the Jewish historians made no mention of it, and on the contrary written so honorably of Titus?

In the Talmudic tractate Báva báthra, it is read at fol. 74, col. 1 that the Rabba, grandson of Channa, once went to a place where heaven and earth touch one another, and the words read as follows: אמר לי (ההוא טייעא (תא אחוי לך היכא דנשקא ארעא ורקיעא אהדדי שקלת לסלתאי אתחתיה בכוותא דרקיעא אדמצלינא בעיתיה ולא אשכחתיה אמינא ליה איכא גנבי הכא אמר לי האי גלגלא דרקיעא הוא דהדר נטר עד לה : That is: An Ishmaelite merchant said to me, come here, I will show you where heaven and earth touch one another; then I took my bread basket with me and placed it at the window of the firmament until I had performed my prayer at its appointed time; but I did not find it again; then I said to him (the merchant): are there thieves here as well? But he gave me this answer: this is the sphere of the firmament (which goes around and has taken it along with it); it will come back; wait here until tomorrow, and you will find it when the window of the sphere comes back to this place where it was before.

In the aforementioned Tractate Báva báthra, fol. 74, col. 2, the following is written concerning a precious stone with which something dead could be brought back to life: רב יהודה הינודא משתעי זימנא חדא הוה אזלינן בספינתא חזינן הדיא : אבן טבא דהוה הדיר לה תנינא נחית בר אמוראי לאייתיה אתא תנינא קא בעי למבלע לה לספינתא אתא פושקנצא פסקיה לרישיה אתהפיקו מיא והוו דמא אתא תנינא חבריה שקליה ותליה לה חיה הדר אתא קא בלעא לספינתא הדר אתא ציפרא פסקיה לרישיה שקליה להדיא אבן טבא שדא שדיא לספינתא הדדי חזיא ציפי מלוחי כדון אותיביא עלייהו שקלוה ופרחו להו

בהדיהו : that is, Rabbi Jebuda Hindóa related: We were once sailing in a ship and saw a precious stone which a serpent encircled (or surrounded), and when one who was skilled at rowing descended (into the water) to fetch it, the serpent came and sought to swallow the ship. But a raven came and bit off its head, and the water was turned into blood. When the serpent's companion came, it took the stone and hung it upon her (the dead serpent), whereupon she came back to life, and she came again to swallow the ship; but again a bird came and bit off her head. Then (the helmsman) took that same precious stone and threw it into the ship. We had salted birds with us, and when the precious stone had been laid upon them (to test whether they too would come back to life), they took it and flew away with it.

It is also written in fol. 74. col. 2. of the aforementioned tractate Báva báthra concerning a precious stone which Abraham is said to have possessed, as follows: רבי שמעון בן יוחאי אומר אבן טובה היתה תלויה בצוארו של אברהם אבינו של חולה הרואה אותה מיד נתרפא ובשעה שנפטר אברהם אבינו מן העולם תלאה הק"ה בגלגל חמה : that is, Rabbi Simeon, son of Jochái, says: Our father Abraham had a precious stone hanging at his neck, and every sick person who looked upon it was immediately made well. But after our father Abraham died, God hung it in the orb of the sun. On this matter, the book Ammudéba Schibha fol. 7. col. 1. 2. may also be consulted under the title Ammud rishon numero 5.

In the tractate Moëd káton, the following is set forth concerning King David at fol. 16. col. 2.: כשעוסק בתורה היה מקשיש עצמו כעץ על ח' מאות חלל בפעם אחת : that is, when he went out to war, he hardened himself like a tree against eight hundred at once in order to strike them down, for he shot an arrow with which he wounded eight hundred at once.

In the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 109, col. 1, the following is read concerning those who built the Tower of Babylon: אמר ר' ירמיה בר אלעזר נחלקו לשלש כיתות: אחת אומרת: נעלה ונשב שם ואחת אומרת נעלה ונעבד ע"ז ואחת אומרת: נעלה ונעשה מלחמה זו שאומרת: נעלה ונשב שם הפיצם ה' וזו שאומרת נעלה ונעשה מלחמה: נעשו קופים ודורחים : that is, Rabbi Jeremias, son of Eliezer, has said: they divided themselves into three groups or factions. The first faction said, we want to go there and dwell in that place. The second said, we want to go up and serve idols. The third said, we want to climb up and wage war in heaven. Now those who said they wanted to climb up and dwell there, God scattered them. Those who wanted to start a war in heaven were all turned into apes, spirits, and devils. Those who wanted to serve idols, their languages God confounded, so that one could not understand another. The second said, we want to go up and practice idolatry. The third said, we want to go up and wage war against God. Those who said, we want to go up and dwell there, God scattered them. Those who said, we want to wage war, were transformed into apes, spirits, devils, and night-phantoms. But those who let it be known that they wanted to practice idolatry, their languages God confounded. More on this subject is also to be found below in Chapter 8 of the second part.

In the Talmudic tractate Pesachim, fol. 118, col. 2, a great lie about the city of Rome is found, which reads as follows: שלש מאות וששים וחמשה שווקים בכרך גדול שלרומי וכל אחד היו בו שלש מאות וששים וחמשה בירניות וכל בירנית ובידנית היו בו ג, ג' מאות וששים וחמשה מעלות וכל מעלה ומעלה היו בו כדי לזון את כל העולם כולו, that is: In the great city of Rome there are three hundred and sixty-five streets, and in each street three hundred and sixty-five palaces, and in each palace three hundred and sixty-five staircases, and beside each staircase there is enough to feed the entire world. What a store that would have to be! In the tractate Megilla, fol. 6, col. 2, Venice edition, the said city of Rome is also boasted about in the following manner: איטליא של יון זה כרך גדול של רומי והויא ש' פרסה על ש' פרסה ויש בה שס"ה שווקים כמנין ימות החמה וקטן שבכולם של מוכרי עופות והויא י"ז מיל על י"ז מיל ומלך סועד בכל יום באחד מהן והדר בו אף על פי שאינו נולד בו נוטל 'פרס מבית המלך והנולד בו אף על פי שאינו דר בו נוטל פרס מאוה המלך ושלשת אלפים ב בני יש בו חמש מאות חלונות מעלים עשן חוץ לחומה צדו אחת ים וצדו אחת הרים וגבעות צדו, that is: The Italy of Greece is the great city of Rome, which is three hundred miles (each reckoned at 4,000 great paces) long and wide, and it has three hundred and sixty-five streets, according to the number of the days of the sun, of which the smallest of all is the one in which people sell poultry, which is sixteen miles long and wide. The king also dines every day in one of them, and whoever dwells in it, even if he was not born there, receives a portion of food from the royal household; and whoever was born there receives a portion of food from the king, even if he does not dwell there. There are also three thousand bathhouses in it, and five hundred windows which cause the smoke to rise above the wall. On one side of it is the sea, on the other side are mountains and hills, on the (third) side is an iron wall, and on the (fourth) side of it is a barren, stony land with deep ditches. The same things are also found in the book En Jisrael, fol. 132, col. 1; in the aforementioned tractate Megilla, however, instead of the word רומי, Romi, that is, Rome, the word ארם, Aram, which means Syria, is found there, and this alteration was made for the purpose of preventing Christians who read it from knowing that this was said about the city of Rome. In the Talmud printed at Amsterdam, this shameless lie is omitted altogether. From this, however, one may judge what dreadful lies must be found in the Talmud, given that such a well-known and palpable falsehood is found therein. If the rabbis were not ashamed to boast so extravagantly in this matter, where the true size of the city of Rome is well known, how much more must they have lied about other things? An equally gross lie is also found in the Talmudic tractate Bava Batra, fol. 75, col. 2, concerning a city called Zippore, in these words: אמר רבי יוסי אני ראייתי צפורי בשלוחה היו בה מאה ושמונים אלף שווקים של מוכרי ציקי קדירה, that is: Rabbi Jose said: I saw the city of Zippore in its peaceful state, and in it there were one hundred and eighty thousand streets of those who sold a certain food called zike kedera. Now if there were so many streets in the said city that were inhabited solely by such cooks, how large must the remaining part of it have been, in which the rest of the people lived and carried on other trades?

Concerning the inhabitants of Sodom, foolish things are found in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Sanbedrin, fol. 109, col. 2, which they are said to have committed, and the words read as follows: ארבעה דיניי היו בסדום: שקראי ושקרוראי זיפיי ומצלי דינא דמחי ליה לאתתא דחבריה ומפלא ליה אמרו ליה יהבה ניהליה דניעברה וזילון. דפסיק ליה לאודנא דחמרא דחבריה אמרו ליה הבו ניהליה עד דקדחא עד דפרע ליה לחבריה אמרי ליה הב ליה אגרא דשקל לך דמא. דעבר במברא יהב ארבעה זוזי דעבר במיא יהב תמני זוזי. זימנא חדא אתא ההוא כובס איקלע להתם אמרו ליה הב ארבעה זוזי אמר להו אנא במיא עברי אמרו ליה אם כן הב תמניא דעברת במיא. אלעזר עבד אברהם רמשו פדיוה אתא לקמיה דינא אמר ליה הב ליה אגרא דשקל לך דמא שקל גללא פדיוה ורמייא אמר מאן דהאי אמור ליה אגרא דנפק לי מינך הב ניהליה להאי וחזי ידידי בדקיימי קיימי: דהיא להו פדייתא דהוו מגני עליה אורחים כי מארך ניך כי גויז מחתי ליה. אלעזר עבד אברהם איקלע להתם אמרו ליה קום גני אפוריאי אמר להון נדרא נדרי מן יומא דמיתת אמא לא גננא אפוריאי. כי הוה מתרמי להו עניא יהבו ליה כל חד וחד דינרא וכתוב שמיא עליה וריפתא לא הוו ממטו ליה כי הוה מית אתא כל חד וחד שקל דידיה הכי אתנו בינייהו כל מאן דמזמין גברא לבי הילולא לישלח גלימא הות האי הילולא איקלע אלעזר להתם ולא יהבי ליה נהמא כי בעו למסעד אתא אליעזר ויתבי יתיב לסיפא דכולהו אמר ליה מאן אומך להא את זמנתן שקל גלימיה ודחפו דיתבי גביה ורהט לברא וכן עבד לכולהו עד דנפקן בולוהו ואכלא איהו לסעודתא. הוא ההוא דביתא דהוה קא ספקא ריפתא בעניא בחצבא אולא ומלתא שפירא 'דובשא ואוקמה על איגר שורא אתו זיבורי ואכלוה יתבי ואבליה והיינו דבתבי ויאמר יי' That is: There were four judges in Sodom who were liars, inciters to lying, falsifiers, and perverters of justice. When someone struck his neighbor's wife so that she miscarried, they said to him (namely, to the woman's husband): give her to him (the one who struck her) so that he may impregnate her. When someone had cut off his neighbor's donkey's ear, they said to him (namely, to the one to whom the donkey belonged): give it to him until it grows back. When someone wounded his neighbor, they said to him (to the wounded party): give him his wages, because he has let blood for you. Whoever crossed over the bridge paid four guilders, but whoever went through the water paid eight guilders. Once a fuller came there, and they said to him: pay four guilders. But when he said to them, "I went through the water," they said to him: if that is the case, then pay eight guilders, since you went through the water. Eliezer, Abraham's servant, came there once, and they wounded him. When he came before the judge, the judge said to him: give him (the one who wounded you with blows) his wages for having let blood for you. Then Eliezer took a stone and wounded the judge with it. Thereupon the judge said to him: what does this mean? He said to him: give this man (who wounded me) the wages that are owed to me from you (for my having struck you and drawn your blood), and I shall keep my guilders (which I would otherwise have had to pay). They also had a bedstead into which they laid travelers; if someone was too long for it, they cut him down (at the feet, so that he would fit into it); but if he was too short, they stretched him out. When Eliezer, Abraham's servant, came there, they said to him: go and lie down in the bed. But he said to them: from the time my mother died I have taken a vow that I will not lie in any bed. When a poor man came there, each one gave him a penny with his name written on it, but they let no bread reach him; and when he died of hunger, each one came and took back his own (namely, his penny). They also had the custom among them that anyone who invited a person to a wedding had his cloak or coat stripped from him (and was robbed of it on that account). Now once there was a wedding, and Eliezer came there, but they gave him no bread. When they were about to eat, Eliezer came and sat down at the far end, among all the others. Then one of them (who was sitting close to him) said to him: who invited you here? He answered him: you invited me. Thereupon that same person who was sitting next to him and had questioned him took his cloak and ran outside (because he feared that his cloak would be taken from him, since he had invited Eliezer). And thus Eliezer did the same to all the rest, so that they all went outside, and he ate the entire meal by himself. There was once a young girl who brought bread to a poor man in a water jug; but when the matter became known, they smeared her with honey and placed her on top of the wall; then the hornets came and devoured her. And this is what is written (Gen 18:20): "And the Lord said, the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great." The very same account is also found in the Maase-Book, in chapter 116, and in the aforementioned passage of the Talmud there are yet more such foolish pranks concerning the inhabitants of Sodom.

The Talmud also teaches, in a blasphemous manner, that the earth sprang toward certain persons so that they could quickly arrive at the desired place. Concerning this, it is written in the Tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 95, col. 1, over the words of 2 Sam 21:16, as follows: אמר לו הק"ב לדוד עד מתי יהא עון טמון בידך על: ידך נהרגו נב עיר הכהנים ועל ידך נטרד דואג האדומי ועל ידך נהרג שאול ושלשת בניו רעתיך יכלה זרעך או תמסר ביד אויב אמר לפניו רבונו של עולם מוטב אמסר ביד אויב ולא יכלה זרעי יומא חד נפק לשפר ביזא חזיא שטן דאידמי ליה כטביא פתק ביה גירא ולא מטייה משכיה עד דאמטייה לארץ פלשתים כדחיייה ישבני בנוב אמר היינו האי דקטליה לגלית אחי בפתחיה

On your account the inhabitants of Nob, the city of the priests (concerning which 1 Sam 22:19 is to be read), were slain; on your account Doeg the Edomite was driven away; on your account Saul and his three sons were killed. Do you now wish that your seed should come to an end, or that you should be delivered into the hand of the enemy? Then he spoke to Him: Lord of the world, it is better that I be delivered into the hand of the enemy, and that my seed not cease. One day David went out hunting; then the Satan came and let himself be seen before him in the form of a deer, and he shot an arrow at it, but he did not hit it (namely, the supposed deer). It caused him, however, to follow after it, until it had brought him to the land of the Philistines. When Ishbi of Nob had seen him, he said: this is the one who killed my brother Goliath; and he bound him, and set him down bent over, and threw him under a winepress (in order to press him to death). But a miracle happened to him, in that the earth beneath him became soft (and it could do him no harm). This is what is written (Ps 18:37): You make my steps wide beneath me, so that my ankles do not waver. On that same day, toward the evening of the onset of the Sabbath, Abishai the son of Zeruiah was washing his head with four measures of water, and saw spots of blood. Some say, however, that a dove came which showed itself greatly alarmed (and conducted itself mournfully); whereupon he said: the congregation of Israel is compared to a dove, as (Ps 68:14) it is said: Like the wings of a dove covered with silver; and from this I can conclude that David, the king of Israel, must be in anguish and distress. Then he went to his (that is, David's) house and did not find him, and said: we have learned in the Mishnah that one shall not ride upon his (namely, the king's) horse, nor sit upon his throne, nor use his scepter; but what is to be done in a time of danger? (He went and asked in the school what was to be done.) And he was answered that in a time of danger one was indeed permitted to do so. Thereupon he mounted his (namely, King David's) mule, set out, and went forth; and the land (of the Philistines) sprang toward him (so that he was immediately there). When he had arrived there, he saw Orpah, the mother of Ishbi, who was spinning. But when she saw him, she broke her distaff and threw it at him, intending to kill him. (Since she had not hit him, however,) she said to him: boy, bring me the distaff. But he threw it at her head into her brain and killed her. After Ishbi of Nob had seen this, he said: now there are two of them, and they will kill me; and he threw David up into the air and drove his spear into the ground, intending that he should fall upon it and perish. But Abishai pronounced the Name (that is, the Schem hammephorasch, or another name) and caused David to remain suspended between heaven and earth (and not fall down). David himself should indeed have pronounced that same Name (and helped himself). (To this the answer is:) A prisoner does not free himself from prison. Then Abishai said to David: what are you doing here? And he answered him: thus has the holy blessed God said to me, and thus have I answered Him. Thereupon he said to him: turn your prayer around (and say to God: it is better that your seed should cease than that you should fall into the hands of the enemy), so that your son's son may buy wax (that is, be subject to misery), and you need not endure any sorrow. Then David said to him: if it must be so, then help me turn (my prayer) around. This is what is written (2 Sam 21:17): But Abishai the son of Zeruiah helped him. Rab Judah reported that Rab said he had helped him in prayer. Then Abishai pronounced the Name and caused him (namely, David, from the air) to come down. But Ishbi pursued them. When Ishbi had come as far as Cubi (and had pursued them that far), they said to one another: let us stand against him. But when he had come to Bethere, they said: two young lions must kill a lion; and they said to him: go, seek your mother in the grave. When they had pronounced his mother's name, his strength diminished, and they killed him. This is what is written (2 Sam 21:17): Then the men of David swore to him, saying: you shall no longer go out with us into battle, lest you extinguish the light of Israel. These are the words of the Talmud, from which it can be seen that the earth sprang toward Abishai.

Furthermore, in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, at the cited location, fol. 95. col. 1. 2., one reads immediately following the preceding passage: תנו רבנן שלשה קפצה להם הארץ אליעזר עבד אברהם ויעקב אבינו ואביש בן צרויה הא דאמרן. אליעזר עבד אברהם דכתיב ואבא היום אל העין למימרא דההוא יומא נפק יעקב אבינו דכתיב ויצא יעקב מבאר שבע וילך חרנה וכתיב ויפגע במקום וילן שם כי בא השמש כי מטא לחרן אמר אפשר עברתי על מקום שהתפללו בו אבותי ואני לא התפללתי בו : that is, our Rabbis teach that the earth sprang toward three persons: Eliezer, the servant of Abraham; our father Jacob; and Abishai, the son of Zeruiah. As for Abishai the son of Zeruiah, this is proven by what we have already said. As for Eliezer, the servant of Abraham (the same thing happened to him as well), for it is written (Gen 24:42): "So I came today to the well," by which he meant to say that he had departed on that very same day (from his master Abraham, and toward Mesopotamia). As for our father Jacob, it is written of him (Gen 28:10): "But Jacob went out from Beer-sheba and traveled toward Haran." And it is written (v. 11): "And he came to the place" (namely to Haran, according to the opinion of the Rabbis, although the text says "to a place," near the city of Luz, as can be seen in v. 19) "where the sun had gone down." When he arrived at Haran, he said: perhaps I have passed over the place where my fathers prayed, and I have not prayed there myself, and he wished to turn back. But as he stood in the thought of turning back, the earth immediately sprang toward him, and he arrived at that same place.

Regarding Jacob, this is also read in the Talmudic Tractate Chollin, fol. 91. col. 2, as well as in Gen 28:10 in Jonathan's Chaldean translation. And in Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, it is written in the Parascha Vajeze, fol. 26. col. 1 as follows: עפי שיש וזה המדרשים כולם א"עפי שיש ביניהם חילוף במקצת אבל כולם מודים שקפיצת הארץ היתה ליעקב שהלך כמה ימים בדרך : that is, "Behold, all the Midrashim (or allegorical interpretations, even though there is some variation among them) acknowledge that the earth leaped toward Jacob, and that he traveled many days' journeys in a single moment." Rabbi Solomon Jarchi likewise reports this in his commentary on the aforementioned verse Gen 28:11, on the words ויפגע. "Here is nothing other than Beth-El," that is, the house of God, he writes: נעקר הר המוריה ובא לכאן : that is, "Mount Moriah was uprooted and came there, and this is the leap of the earth," of which mention is made (in the second chapter of the Talmudic Tractate Chollin), namely that the site of the sanctuary (upon which the Temple was subsequently built) came to meet him as far as Beth-El; and this is (what is written in v. 11:) And he came to the place.

From the Jalkut Shimoni on the first book of Moses, fol. 30, col. 2, no. 109, concerning the aforementioned words of Gen 24:42, "So I came today to the well," the following is read regarding Eliezer: ימים י"ז מהלך עד חרן מלך ארבעה עשרת בא העבד לחרן והיה תמיה בלבו והיה אומר היום יצאתי והיום באתי שנ' ואבוא היום אל העין רצה הק"ב לגמול חסד ליצחק ושלה מלאך לפני אליעזר וקפצה הדרך לפניו וכו' : 'ובשביל שלא יתייחד העבד עם הנערה בלילה נקפצה הארץ לפניו ובשלוש שעות בא

לחרן : that is, "From Kiriath-arba to Haran is a journey of seventeen days; yet the servant Eliezer arrived in Haran in three hours, and marveled at this himself, and said: I set out today and arrived today, as it is written: So I came today to the well. God wished to show mercy to Isaac, and sent an angel before Eliezer, and the road leapt toward him, etc. And so that the servant might not be alone with the maiden at night (since he was under suspicion), the earth leapt toward him, and he arrived in Haran in three hours."

Regarding Abraham, something similar is likewise read in the Midrash Tehillim, fol. 47, col. 1, on Ps 110, in these words: כשבא לרדוף אחריהם נקפצה לו הארץ לפניו : ויא שלשה מלין היתה פסיעתו של אברהם ויש אומרים שנים אבל כשבא לרדוף אחריהם לא קפצה לפניו הארץ : that is, "When he went to pursue them (namely those who had taken his brother Lot captive, as is related in Gen 14), the earth leapt toward him. Some, however, say that Abraham's stride was three miles long, while others report two miles. But when he returned, the earth did not leap toward him." On this leaping of the earth, one may also consult Rabbi Moses bar Nachman's commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 25, col. 3, in the Parasbat Vayetze.

Likewise, one also reads of mountains that are said to have leaped from their place and run, and this is written in Bereschith rabba fol. 91. col. 1., at the beginning of the ninety-ninth Parascha, on the words of Ps 68:17, "Why do you leap, you hilly mountains?", as follows: רבי יוסי הגלילי פתר קראה בהרים בשעה שבא הק"ב ליתן תורה בסיני היו ההרים רצים ומדיינים אלו עם אלו זה אומר עלי תורה ניתנה וזה אומר עלי תורה ניתנה- תבור בא מבית אלים וכרמל מאספמא הה"ד חי אני נאם ה' וגו' כי כתבור בהרים וככרמל בים יבוא. זה אומר אני נקראתי וזה אומר אני נקראתי אמר הקב"ה למה תרצדון הרים גבנונים כולכם הרים אלא כולכם גבנונים המז"א או גבן או דק כולכם נעשה ע"א על ראשיכם אבל סיני שלא נעשה ע"א עליו הה"ד חמד אלהים לשבתו : that is, Rabbi Jose the Galilean has expounded this passage concerning the mountains. At the time when the holy and blessed GOD came to give the Law on (Mount) Sinai, the mountains ran and contended with one another. This one said, upon me shall the Law be given; but that one said, upon me shall the Law be given. (Mount) Tabor came from Beth Elim, and (Mount) Carmel from Spain; and this is what is written (Jer 46:18): "As I live, says the LORD, etc., as Mount Tabor is among the mountains, and as Carmel goes forth into the sea." This one said, I have been called; but that one said, I have been called. Then the holy and blessed GOD said (to them:): "Why do you leap, you hilly mountains? You are all mountains, but you are all hilly." This is what (the Scripture Lev 21:20) says: "Or crooked-backed, or lean." Idolatry has been practiced upon all of you, upon your summits; but upon Mount Sinai no idolatry has been committed: and this is what is written (Ps 68:17): (This is the mountain in which GOD delights to dwell.) In the Jalkut Shimoni on the Book of Judges, fol. 9. col. 3. numero 47., the following is also found on this matter: בשעה שבא הק"ב ליתן תורה שמעו תבור וכרמל והניחו מקומם ובאו לשם וטש כרמל בים והק"ב צוה להם למה תרצדון הרים בגבננים למה אתם רצים ומדיינים בעלי מומין : that is, At the time when GOD came to give the Law, (the mountains) Tabor and Carmel heard it, and left their place and betook themselves thither, and Carmel went out over the sea. Then the holy and blessed GOD said to them: "Why do you leap, you hilly mountains? Why do you run and quarrel with one another? You have blemishes," as is said (Lev 21:20): "Or he that is crooked-backed, or lean, etc." And this is likewise to be found in the Jalkut Chadash fol. 113. col. 2. numero 51. Are these not once again strange Jewish ravings and foolish perversions of Scripture? How could the earth, which stands immovable, be capable of leaping?

Since it was mentioned just before that Abraham had taken such extraordinarily large strides, I must, on account of that, also report here how far Amalek leaped in a single night, concerning which the following is written in the Chaldean translation of Jonathan, the son of Uziel, on the words of Exod 17:8, "Then Amalek came and fought against Israel in Rephdim": ואתא עמלק מארע דדומא ושוור בליליא ההוא אלף ורשית מאה מילין ומן בגלל מצותא דדה ביני עשו וביני ישראל, that is: And Amalek came from the land of the south and leaped in that same night one thousand and six hundred miles; and on account of the dispute which had existed between Esau and Jacob, he came and waged war against the Israelites in Rephdim. Now, if Amalek leaped so far in a single night, then he and his warriors must likewise have taken strides of an extraordinary size.

The Talmud further teaches, in a foolish manner, that not only irrational animals, but also mountains, hills, valleys, trees, and herbs are supposed to have their own distinct languages, which some have understood. Concerning this, the following is written in the tractate Sopherim, fol. 13. col. 3. in the 16th chapter: אמרו עליו על הילל שלא עזב דברי חכמים שלא למדם אפילו כל הלשונות אפילו שיחת הרים וגבעות ובקעות שיחת עצים ועשבים שיחת חיות ובהמות שיחת שדים ומשלות שיחת הכל למד : that is, It is said of Hillel that he left no words of the sages that he had not learned; indeed, that he had also learned the speech of the mountains and the hills, as well as the valleys, the speech of the trees and herbs, the speech of the cattle and animals, the speech of the devils, and the parables, all of them together. And in the Talmudic tractate Succa, fol. 28. col. 1., it is said of Rabbi Jochanan, the son of Saccai, that he understood the speech of the ministering angels, as well as that of the devils and of the date palms. In the Maase-Book, likewise, in the 143rd chapter, it is stated of Rabbi Channina that he knew the seventy languages of men, as well as the languages of animals and birds; and when he had preached to his disciples about the birds, a raven came which had prayed to God that He would protect Rabbi Channina from the great wealth that he would come to possess, at which the Rabbi marveled; and in that same chapter much more of such foolishness is to be found. Furthermore, in the aforementioned Maase-Book, in the 114th chapter, drawn from the Talmudic tractate Gittin, mention is made of one who was versed in the seventy languages as well as in the language of birds. In the said Maase-Book, in the 156th chapter, one may also read what conversation the hens and geese once held with one another. And in the 115th chapter of the same work, it is recorded how Rabbi Meir heard two snakes speaking with one another, which he understood. In the Talmudic tractate Erubin, at fol. 18. col. 2., concerning the dove which Noah had sent out, with reference to the words of Gen 8:11, "And behold, it had plucked off an olive leaf," the following is written: אמרה יונה לפני הק"ב רבוננו של עולם יהיו מזונותי מרורין כזית ומסורין בידך ואל יהיו מתוקין כדבש ותלויין : that is, The dove spoke before God: O Lord of the world, let my food be bitter as an olive leaf and come from Your hand, and let it not be sweet as honey, such that I must receive it from flesh and blood (that is, from men). Furthermore, in the said tractate Eruvin, fol. 100. col. 2., one may read that the rooster first soothes the hen before he mounts her, and thereafter it follows: ומאי פייסיה לה אמר רב יהודה אמר רב הכי קאמר לה זבינא לך זיני דמטו לך עד כרעיך לבתר הכי אמר לה לישמטיה לכרבלתיה דההוא תרנגולא אי אית ליה ולא זבינא לך that is, With what then does he soothe her? Raf Jehuda has said that Raf said he speaks to her thus: I will buy you a garment that shall reach down to your legs. After this (when he has done his business), he says to her: may my comb fall off, if I have one and do not buy it for you.

In his commentary on the first book of Moses, on the words of Abimelech at Gen 20:16, "And she also said, he is my brother," Salomon Jarchi writes the following: לרבות עבדים וגמלים חמורים שאלתי ואמרו לי אחיה הוא. That is: the little word "she" includes her (namely Sarah's) servants, camels, and donkeys (so that Abimelech thereby meant to say as much as:) I asked them all, and they gave me the answer that he (Abraham) was her brother. In the tenth chapter of the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, one may also see how Jonah spoke with the whale while he was lodged in its belly. And in the Jalkut chadasch, at fol. 26, col. 3, numero 40, under the title Eliabu, from the book Tanchúma, there is to be found an account of how the bull mentioned in 1 Kgs 18:26 is said to have spoken, the words of which read as follows: אליהו אמר לנביאי הבעל קחו שני פרים תאומים מאם אחת וגדלו על אבוס א' ועשו כן : הטילו גורל איזה לה' ואיזה לע"ז. אותו שנפל לה' נמשך מיד אחר אליהו והשני נתקבצו כל נביאי הבעל ולא יכלו להזיזו ממקומו אמר לו אליהו לך עמהם והשיב הפר לעיני כל ישראל שנינו מבטן אחד יצאנו זה יקדש שם שמים ואני אכעיס שם שמים. א"ל אליהו לך עמהם ולא ימצאו עליה ויתקדש שמו בן כמו בזה. אמר הפר אם כן שבועה שלא אזה ממקומי אלא אתה תמסרני בידם תעשה כן אליהו ולכך כתיב ויקח that is, Elijah spoke to the prophets of Baal: take two bulls that are twins, born of one mother and raised at one manger; and they did so, and cast lots as to which of them should belong to the LORD and which to the idol (Baal). The one that fell to the LORD followed Elijah at once; the other, however, all the assembled prophets of Baal could not move from its place. Then Elijah said to it: go with them. But the bull answered him before all of Israel: we two came forth from one womb; should this one sanctify God, and I provoke God to anger? Then Elijah said to it: go with them, no evil deed will be found (on your account), but rather His name will be sanctified through you just as through the other. Thereupon the bull said: if that is so, I swear that I will not move from my place unless you yourself deliver me into their hands; and Elijah did so, which is why it is written (1 Kgs 18:26): and they took the bull that he gave them. This must have been a pious bull, which did not wish to be sacrificed to an idol.

Of such pious animals one also reads in the Avot of Rabbi Nathan, fol. 4. col. 1. in the Amsterdam Talmud, as follows: כשם שהצדיקים הראשונים היו חסידים כך בהמתן היו חסידות אמרת גמליו של אברהם אבינו לא נכנסו לע"א שנ' ואנכי פניתי את הבית ומקום לגמלים מלמד שלא נכנסו לבית לבן הארמי עד שפנו כל העבודות אליהם מפניהם מעשה בחמורו של רבי חנינא בן דוסא שגנבוהו לסטים וחבשו את החמור בחצר והניחו לו תבן ושעורים ומים ולא היה אוכל ושותה אמרו למה אנו מניחין אותו שימות ויבאיש לן את החצר עמדו ופתחו לו את הדלת והוציאוהו והיה מושך והולך עד שהגיע אצל רבי חנינא בן דוסא כיון שהגיע אצלו שמע בנו קולו א"ל אבא דומה קולו לקול בהמתנו אמר לו בני פתח לה את הדלת שכבר מתה ברעב ופתח לה דלת והניח לה תבן ושעורים ומים והיתה אוכלת ושותה לפיכך אמרו, that is: Just as the first righteous men were pious, so too was their livestock pious. It is said that the camels of our father Abraham did not go to any idol, as is stated (Gen 24:31): "I have cleared the house and made room for the camels." This teaches us that they did not enter the house of Laban the Syrian until all the idolatrous images had been cleared away before them. There is also the story of the donkey of Rabbi Hanina ben Dosa, which robbers stole and tied up in a courtyard, and they placed before it straw, barley, and water, yet it would not eat or drink. They said: Why should we leave it here to die and make the courtyard stink for us? So they arose and opened the door for it and let it out, and it went along, walking until it arrived at the home of Rabbi Hanina ben Dosa. When it arrived there, his son heard its voice and said to him: Father, its voice sounds like the voice of our animal. He said to him: My son, open the door for it, for it has nearly died of hunger. And he opened the door for it and placed before it straw, barley, and water, and it ate and drank. Therefore they said: Just as the first righteous men were pious, so too was their livestock pious.

It also came to pass with the donkey of Rabbi Channina, the son of Dosa, that thieves stole it and placed it in their courtyard, and had set before it straw, barley, and water; yet it would neither eat nor drink. Then they said: why should we let it stand here so that it dies and makes our courtyard stink? They therefore rose up, opened the door for it, and let it go out. And it went on its way until it came to Rabbi Channina, the son of Dosa. When it had come to him, his son heard its voice and said to his father: my father, this voice is like the voice of our donkey. Then he said to him: my son, open the door for it, for it will be nearly dead from hunger. So he rose up and opened the door for it, and laid straw and barley before it, and set water before it, and it ate and drank. For this reason it is said that, just as the first righteous men were pious, so too was their livestock, like them, pious.

So it is also written in the Maase-Book, in the 54th chapter, from the Talmudic tractate Chollin, fol. 7. col. 1. 2., concerning the donkey of Rabbi Pinehas, that it would eat nothing whatsoever from which the tithe had not been paid. And in the 8th chapter one reads there of a cow which on the Sabbath would not plow and would not pull the plow. So too is it read in the Talmud concerning the donkey of Rabbi Jose, that whenever someone had made use of it, it would accept no more than its proper daily wage. This donkey must therefore have been far more pious than all Jews are today, who make no scruple of it when they can deceive and rob Christians. Beyond this, one also reads in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 14. col. 1. num. 56., under the title Abraham, of a tree which is said to have withdrawn from idolatrous people, where the words read as follows: אברהם בכל מקום שהיה שם נטע אילן ולא עלה לו כהוגן עד שבא לארץ ישראל ונטעו שם ובאותו אילן בדק בני אדם מי שהיה דבוק בהק"ב האילן פרש עליו ענפיו וכוסה את ראשו ועשה עליו צל ומי שדבק בעבודה זרה האילן סילק את עצמו ממנו : והענפים עלו למעלה ולא הניחו אברהם עד שגייירו that is: In every place where Abraham had been, he planted a tree; but not one of them thrived properly for him until he came into the land of Israel and planted one there. By means of that tree he tested the people: whoever had cleaved to God, over that person the tree spread its branches and covered his head and made shade for him; but whoever had cleaved to idolatry, from that person the tree withdrew, and the branches rose upward; Abraham, however, did not let him go until he had made him a fellow believer.

Returning now to the previous subject matter, it is found in Bereschith rabba, in the 15th Parascha, fol. 15. col. 4., as well as in the Jalkut Shimoni on the Psalms fol. 102. col. 4. numero 727., that the trees spoke with the first man

Adam. And in the book Avodath hakkodesh it states fol. 120. col. 3. in the 16th chapter of the fourth part, that the trees sang a song and praised GOD. So too it is reported in the book Zeror hammor, fol. 141. col. 3. in the Parascha Shofetim: א"ל כי האילן כשכורתין אותו נשמע קולו מסוף העולם ועד סופו that is: Our rabbis, of blessed memory, say that when a tree is cut down, its voice is heard from one end of the world to the other. And in the book Zeena ureena it may be read fol. 6. col. 4. in the Parascha Noah, that the raven which Noah sent out from the ark spoke with him and reproached him, saying that he was sending him out so that he might lie with his mate, the female raven; which fable is taken from the Talmudic Tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 108. col. 2. In what manner the bird Phoenix also spoke with Noah is likewise to be found in the aforementioned Tractate Sanhedrin in the column cited above. In the Jalkut chadash it may also be seen fol. 65. col. 3. numero 80. under the heading David, how a frog spoke with King David.

Since the Jews are so senseless that they even write about things that are supposed to have spoken when they were already completely lifeless and had neither mouths nor tongues, I must report something further on this matter. Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes in his commentary on the five books of Moses, on the words of Gen 28:11, "And he took of the stones and laid one under his head," in the following manner: התחילו מריבות זו עם זו זאת אומרת עלי יניח צדיק that is: את ראשו וזאת אומרת עלי יניח מיד עשן הק"ה אבן אחת אשר שם מראשותיו that is: They (the stones) began to quarrel with one another; this one said, upon me shall the righteous one lay his head, but that one said, he shall lay it upon me; but GOD made them all into one stone, which he then laid under his head. And in the Jalkut chadasch, at fol. 34, col. 2, numero 13, and in the little book Othi'oth (or Oti'os) Rabbi Akkiva, fol. 2, 3, 4, and in the Jalkut Schim'oni on the first book of Moses, fol. 2, col. 1, as well as in the Sohar, col. 15, 16, of the Sulzbach printing, it is reported that all the letters of the alphabet spoke with GOD, and that each one desired that GOD might create the world through it. And at fol. 19, col. 2, 3, of the aforementioned little book Othi'oth Rabbi Akkiva, it is to be found that GOD spoke with the open as well as the closed letter Mem or M, embraced and kissed them, and that both of them are supposed to have sung before Him. Likewise it stands in the Jalkut Schim'oni on the first book of Kings, fol. 31, col. 1, num. 195, that the letter Jod or I spoke with GOD. Beyond this, the following is also read concerning the Law in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 101, col. 1: תנו רבנן הקורא פסוק של שיר השירים ועושהו כמין זמר והקורא פסוק בבית משתאות בלא זמנו מביא רעה לעולם מפני שהתורה חוגרת שק ועומדת לפני הק"ה ואמרה לפניו רבונו של עולם עשאוני בניך ככנור שמנגנים בו גוים אמר לה בתי בשעה שאוכלין ושותין במה יתעסקו אמרה לפניו רבונו של עולם אם בעלי מקרא הן יעסקו בתורה ובנביאים ובכתובים אם בעלי משנה הן יעסקו במשנה that is:

Our rabbis teach that whoever reads a verse from the Song of Solomon and makes of it, as it were, a song, and whoever reads a verse in a house where a meal is being held outside of the proper time, brings misfortune into the world: for the Law once put on a sackcloth and stood before the holy blessed GOD, and said to Him: O Lord of the world! Your children have made me into a lute upon which the heathens play and make music. But He answered it: My daughter, with what shall they occupy themselves when they eat and drink? Then it said: O Lord of the world, if they have studied the Bible, then they shall occupy themselves with the Law, and the Prophets, as well as the Hagiographa; but if they have learned the Mishnah, then they shall occupy themselves with the Mishnah, etc. And in the book Menorach hamma'ór, at fol. 54, col. 2, 3, in the 5th chapter, under the title Ner schelischí, kelál schemini, chélek schelischí, it is written from the book Médrasch Tanchúma that the Law weeps over those who teach and learn when they die, and that the Talmudic tractate Chagiga once wept greatly over a deceased pious man, in the form of a woman, and spoke with the people. But are these not mad Jewish dreams?

How one may attain the ability to understand the languages of all creatures is indicated in the little book Maján bachóchma, which is said to have been given by the angel Michael to Pali, and by Pali to Moses, at fol. 2. col. 2., namely that this can occur when one properly understands the Schem hammephórasch; and it stands written there: הָבִין מִלַּת אָדָם וְדִבּוּר בְּהֵמָה וְצִפְצוּף עוֹפּוֹת וּמִלַּת חַיִּים וְנִעְקַת כְּלָבִים וְכו' שִׁיחַת שָׂדִים שִׁיחַת מְלָאָכִים וְשִׁיחַת דָּקְלִים וְתַנּוּעוֹת גִּמִּים וְתַרְוּז לִבָּבוֹת וְנִעְקַת כְּלָבִים וְכו' שִׁיחַת שָׂדִים שִׁיחַת מְלָאָכִים וְשִׁיחַת דָּקְלִים וְתַנּוּעוֹת גִּמִּים וְתַרְוּז לִבָּבוֹת וְנִעְקַת כְּלָבִים וְכו' that is: Then you will understand the words of men, the speech of cattle, the chirping of birds, the words of beasts, the crying of dogs, etc., the conversation of devils, and the conversation of the ministering angels, the speech of date palms, the movements of the seas, the composition of hearts, and the murmuring of tongues, as well as the thoughts of the kidneys.

The fourth reason why the Talmud is not the Word of God is that it contains many superstitious things that do not agree with the Word of God. In the tractate Berachoth, it is taught at fol. 6, col. 1 that there is a great multitude of devils, and the following passage comes after this: מאן דבעי למידע להו לית קיטמא והילא ונהדר ונהדר אפורה ובצפרא חזי כי פרעי דמרגולא האי. מאן דבעי למחזינהו לית שליחא דשניגרא אופמתא בת אופמתא בוכרתא בת בוכרתא ולקלנה בנורא ולשחקה ולימלי עיניה מניה וסוי להו. ולשנייה בגובתא דפרזלא ולחתמיה בגושפנקא דפרזלא דילמא גנבי מניה ולחתום פומיה כי היכי דלא ליטוק רב ביבי בר אבני עבד הכי ואיתויזיזי בעי רבנן רחמי עליה ואתסי: that is, whoever wishes to know them, let him take sifted (or sieved) ashes and strew them before his bed, and in the morning he will see them, as though there were cock's footprints upon them. Whoever desires to see them (namely the devils), let him take the afterbirth of a black cat that was itself born of a black cat that had kitted for the first time, whose mother had likewise kitted for the first time, and burn it in fire, and grind it to powder, and put some of it in his eye, and he will see them. He should then throw such a devil into an iron tube and seal it with an iron signet ring, so that it is not stolen from him by the devils (for they have no power over sealed things, as Rabbi Solomon writes on this point), and seal its mouth, so that he is not harmed by it. Raf Bibi, the son of Abaye, did this and was harmed; but the rabbis prayed to God for mercy on his behalf, and he was healed again. It would, however, have to be a rather simple-minded devil that allowed itself to be locked up in such a manner. In the tractate Pesachim, it is taught at fol. 110, col. 1 at the end and col. 2 at the beginning, what one should say when one encounters sorceresses, so that no evil befalls one, and the words read as follows: אמר אמימר אמרת לי רישנא דנשים כשפניות האי מאן דפגע בהו בנשים כשפניות נימא הכי חרי חמימי בדיקולי בזיאי לפומיכו נשי חרשייא: קרה קרחייכי פרה פרחייכי ציבור that is, Amemar reported: the chief of the sorceress women said to me, when one encounters sorceresses, he should speak thus: Warm (with all due respect) filth in broken baskets shall come into your mouths, you sorceress women. God grant that the hair with which you practice sorcery be torn from you, and that the wind scatter the bread crumbs with which you work your magic. Your spices must be scattered; a wind must blow away your fresh saffron that you hold in your hands (to work sorcery with it). As long as heaven has been gracious to me and I have spared myself, and you yourselves have spared me, I have not come among you. But now, since I have fallen among you, I know well that your compassion toward me has grown cold. So too my compassion has grown cold, because I have not spared myself. Foolish nonsense of this kind can also be found at fol. 111, col. 1 in the aforementioned tractate Pesachim, as well as in the tractate Gittin, fol. 69, col. 1.

In the aforementioned tractate Pesachim, fol. 112, col. 1, the following is further written: ת"ר לא ישתה אדם מים לא בלילי רביעיות ולא בלילי שבתות ואם שתה: דמו בראשו מפני סכנה מאי סכנה רוח רעה ואם צחי מאי תקנתיה נימא ז' קולות שאמר דוד על המים והדר נישתי שנ' קול ה' על המים אל הכבוד הרעים ה' על מים רבים קול ה' בבח קול ה' מהדר קול ה' שובר ארזים וישבר ה' את ארזי הלבנון: קול ה' "חוצב להבות אש. קול ה' יחיל מדבר יחיל ה' מדבר קדש קול ה' יחולל אילות ויחשוף יערות ובהיכלו כולו אומר כבוד ואז לא נימא הכי לול שפן אנגרון אגדפון בין כוכבי יתיבנא בין בליעי שמיני אזלנא. ואי לא איכא אנוש בחדוה ניתעריב ולימא ליה פלניא בר פלניא צחינא מיא והדר נישתי. ואי לא מקרקש נכתמא אתנכא והדר נישתי. ואז לא נישדי בה מדי והדר נישתי. That is: Our rabbis teach that a person should not drink water on the nights of the fourth days of the week (that is, on Wednesday nights), nor on the nights of the Sabbaths; and if he does drink, his blood is upon his own head (that is, he himself is to blame if misfortune befalls him) on account of the danger. What kind of danger is it? The evil spirit. But if he is thirsty, what remedy does he need (so that he may drink)? He should recite the seven voices over the water that David spoke, and then drink, as it is said (Ps 29:3-5, 7-9): "The voice of the LORD goes upon the waters; the God of glory thunders, the LORD upon great waters. The voice of the LORD goes with power; the voice of the LORD goes gloriously. The voice of the LORD breaks the cedars; the LORD breaks the cedars of Lebanon. The voice of the LORD cleaves flames of fire. The voice of the LORD makes the wilderness tremble; the LORD makes the wilderness of Kadesh tremble. The voice of the LORD makes the hinds calve and strips the forests bare, and in His temple everyone says: Glory." If this is not possible (that is, if he cannot do this), he should say the following: Lul schafan anigron agardefon (which, as Rabbi Solomon writes in his commentary on this passage, are magical words): "I sit among the stars; I walk among the lean and the fat." If this is not possible, and if there is a person nearby, he should go to him and say to him: "You, so-and-so, son of so-and-so, I am thirsty for water," and then drink. If this is not possible, let him knock with a lid upon a vessel and then drink. If this is not possible, let him throw something into it and then drink. After this, the following further passage occurs: ת"ר לא ישתה אדם מים לא מן הנהרות ולא מן האגמים בלילה ואם שתה דמו בראשו מפני הסכנה מאי סכנה שברירי ואי צחי מאי תקנתיה אי איכא איניש בהדיה לימא ליה פלוניא בר פלוניא צחינא מיא ואי לא נימא איהו לנפשיה פלניא אמיא לי אמי אזהר משברירי ברירי רירי רי דצחינא מיא בכסי חוירי (that is: Our rabbis teach that a person should not drink water at night, neither from rivers nor from lakes or ponds. But if he has drunk, his blood is upon his own head on account of the danger. What kind of danger is it? The danger of blindness, or the danger of Schafiri, the angel of blindness. But if thirst is present, what remedy is there for it? If he has a person with him, he should say to him: "You, so-and-so, son of so-and-so, I am thirsty for water." But if no one is with him, he should say to himself: "You, so-and-so, my mother said to me: beware of Schafiri, friri, iri, ri; I am thirsty for water, in white cups." This passage is also found, though in a somewhat altered form, in the tractate Avôda sâra, fol. 12, col. 2; and Rabbi Solomon Jarchi writes in his commentary there that Schafrizi is the name of the devil who is appointed over the plague of blindness, and who is driven away by the pronunciation of his name in this manner, dropping one letter after another and one syllable after another. Likewise, in the Talmudic tractate Sanbédrin, fol. 94, col. 1, it is taught what one should do when one is seized with fright, and the words read as follows: מאן דמבעית אף על גב דאיהו לא חזי מזליה חזי מאי תקנתיה לינשוף מדוכתיה ארבעה גרמידי that is: When someone is seized with fright, and he himself does not see the thing (which caused it), his spirit nonetheless sees it. How is he to be helped? Let him leap four cubits away from his spot, or let him recite (the words of Deut 6:4): "Hear, O Israel." But if he is standing in an unclean place, he should say the following: "The goat in the slaughterhouse is fatter than I." This same passage is also to be found in the book En Jisrael, fol. 131, col. 1, in the tractate Megilla, in the first chapter.

In the aforementioned tractate Pesachim, it is also written at fol. 12. col. 2.: אל תעמוד בפני השור בשעה שעולה מן האגם מפני שהשטן מרקד בין קרניו, that is: Do not stand before an ox when it is climbing out of a pond, because the devil is dancing between its horns. Furthermore, one reads there: אל תעמדו בפני הנר ערום, דתני העומד בפני הנר ערום הוי ניכפה והמשמש מיטתו כנגד הנר הוין לו בנים נכפין, that is: Do not stand naked before a light, for we learn that whoever stands naked before a light will get the falling sickness, and whoever touches his wife by the light of a candle will get children who have the falling sickness. And in the Jalkut chadasch, at fol. 73. col. 4. numero 18., under the title Choli, the following is also read from the Talmudic tractate Nedarim: הקב"ה שורה על מטתו של החולה ולכך הנכנס לבקר לא ישב על מקום גבוה אלא בארץ ופרש"י שיש אומרים דהיינו דוקא כשהחולה שוכב על הארץ לא ישב על ספסל שהוא הוא למעלה משכינה אבל אם החולה לא שוכב במיטה לא, that is: The holy and blessed GOD dwells above the bed of a sick person; therefore, whoever enters to visit (the sick person) should not sit in an elevated place, but rather on the ground. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi has interpreted it thus, that some say this is specifically meant as follows: when the sick person is lying on the ground, the visitor should not sit on a chair, so that he not be higher than GOD; but when the sick person is lying in a bed, it is not so (that he may not sit on a chair). There are still many more such superstitious fooleries in the Talmud, and in many such instances the sayings of Holy Scripture are used and misused in a thoroughly foolish manner, as can be seen sufficiently in the little book Schimmush Tillim as well.

In a written tractate called Segullóth ukemeóth mimmalach Raziel, I found the following ridiculous remedy for strengthening the memory and against forgetfulness, which reads as follows: כל מי שרוצה שלא ישכח תלמודו יאמר אלו הפסוקים קדם שיאכל וימזג לו כוס של יין או משקה אחר ויאמר אלו הפסוקים עלי, רום היא באגוש ונשמת שדי תבינם. לאדם מערכי לב וימנע מענה לשון. אל תשליכני מלפניך ורום קדשך אל תחם ממני. יי בצר פקדוך צקון לחם מיסרך למו. לב טהור ברא לי אלהים ורום נכון חדש בקרבי. אדני אלהים נתן לי לשון למודים לדעת לעות את יעף דבר. יעיר בבקר בעיר לי און לשמע כלמודים. אדני אלהים פתח לי און ואנכי לא מריתי אחור לא נסוגתי. רום יי דבר בי ומלתו על לשוני. ואומר כן יהי רצון מלפניך אלהי אברהם יצחק וישראל שתפתח לי בתורתך ותאיר עיני ולבי בשם פתחאל רפאל חופאל שיפתחו את לבי שלא אשכח כל ימי מכל מה שלמדתי ומה שצויתני ללמוד ויהיה מעמדי שאלמוד בלא ימי That is: Whoever wishes not to forget what he has learned, let him recite the following verses over himself before he eats and before a cup of wine or other drink is poured for him (from Job 32:8): "The spirit is in man, and the breath of the Almighty makes them understanding." (And from Prov 16:1): "Man makes his plans in his heart, but from the LORD comes what the tongue shall speak." (And from Ps 51:13): "Cast me not away from Thy presence, and take not Thy Holy Spirit from me." (And from Isa 26:16): "LORD, in their affliction they sought Thee; when Thou didst chastise them, they poured out a quiet prayer." (And from Ps 51:12): "Create in me, O God, a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me." (And from Isa 50:4-5): "The Lord GOD has given me a learned tongue, that I may know how to speak a word in season to him who is weary. He wakens me morning by morning; He wakens my ear to hear as the learned. The Lord GOD has opened my ear, and I was not disobedient, nor did I turn back." (And from 2 Sam 23:2): "The Spirit of the LORD has spoken through me, and His word is upon my tongue." And then he who does this speaks as follows: "May it be pleasing to Thee, O God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, that Thou open Thy law to me and enlighten my eyes and my heart, in the name of Parchiel, Raphael, Chubiel, that they may open my heart, so that I forget nothing all the days of my life of all that I have learned and that Thou hast commanded me to learn; and that it may be my standing to learn every day, and that I never forget the words of the law. Amen. Blessed be God forever, Amen." After this follows: ויש שעושין תענית בערב ראש חודש סיון וכותבים הפסוקים האלה על ביצה או על חררה לשה עם דבש טוב וקודם שיאכל שום דבר מכל שאר מאכלים אותה that is: There are some who fast on the eve of the first day of the month of May, and write these verses on an egg or on a cake kneaded with good honey, and before one eats anything of all other foods, he shall eat it.

Although many ridiculous fables, shameless lies, and superstitious fooleries are found in the Talmud and other Rabbinical books, no Jew may, on pain of losing his salvation, mock them; therefore it is written in the book Ir gibbórim, fol. 37. col. 3. numero 71. as follows: כל מהלעיג נופל לגיהנם, that is, Every mocker descends into hell. And it follows shortly thereafter that by this is also meant לפי שמצינו, that is, he who mocks the words of the Wise, המלעיג בדברי חכמים לפעמים איזו מאמר שבכל יבנו כח ההשגה להשיג תוכן כוונתו מצד קוצר המשא ולפי שהם לפעמים כנגד השכל והטבע והמלעיג ארז"ל שניהן על זה אמר שנופל לגיהנם, that is, Because we sometimes find something that they have said whose intent our understanding is too feeble to grasp, and because such things are contrary to reason and nature, our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have said that one who mocks them on that account shall be punished and descend into hell. Something similar has already been cited above on p. 58. in the first chapter of this book from the book Menorath hammaór. Likewise it stands in the Talmudic Tractate Báva bathra, fol. 75. col. 1. that a disciple laughed at Rabbi Jochanan because he had said that in the future, precious stones would be set into the gates of Jerusalem, thirty cubits long and thirty cubits wide, on account of which the disciple also died; and this fable is to be found below in the fifteenth chapter of the second part.

The fifth reason why the Talmud is not the Word of God is that some of the Talmudic doctors, from whose oral teaching it derives, were godless people, afflicted with great and grievous sins and vices, and concerning whom doubt has also been expressed regarding their salvation. As for the grievous sins, Rabbi Elieser is described in the tractate Avóda sára, fol. 17, col. 1, as a wanton whoremonger, and the words read as follows: אמרו עליו על רבי אלעזר בן דורדיא • שלא הניח זונה אחת בעולם שלא בא עליה • פעם אחת שמע שיש זונה אחת בכרכי הים והיתה נוטלת כיס דינרין בשכרה נטל כיס דינרין והלך ועבר עליה שבעה נהרות בשעת הרגל דבר הפחה אמר כשם שהפחה זו אינה חוזרת למקומה וכך אלעזר בן דורדיא אין מקבלין אותו בתשובה הלך וישב בין שני הרים וגבעות אמר הרים וגבעות בקשו עלי רחמים אמרו לו עד שאנו מבקשים עליך נבקש על עצמינו שנא 'כי ההרים ימושו והגבעות אמר שמים וארץ בקשו עלי רחמים אמרו עד שאנו מבקשים עליך נבקש על עצמינו שנא 'כי שמים כעשן נמלחו והארץ כבגד תבלה. אמר חמה ולבנה בקשו עלי רחמים אמרו לו עד שאנו מבקשים עליך נבקש על עצמינו שנא 'וחפרה הלבנה ובושה החמה. אמר כוכבים ומזלות בקשו עלי רחמים אמרו לו עד שאנו מבקשים עליך נבקש על עצמינו שנא 'ונמקו כל צבא השמים. אמר אין הדבר תלוי אלא בי הניח ראשו בין ברכיו וגעה בבכיה עד שיצתה נשמתו יצתה בת קול ואמרה רבי אלעזר בן דורדיא מזומן לחיי העולם הבא: That is: Concerning Rabbi Elieser, the son of Dordeja, it is said that he left no harlot in the world with whom he had not lain. Once he heard that there was a harlot in the coastal cities who took a chest full of gold coins as her fee; so he took a chest full of gold coins, set out on the road, and crossed seven rivers on her account. But as he was with her, she (with all due respect) let wind: whereupon he said, just as this wind does not return to its place, so shall Elieser, the son of Dordeja, not be received unto repentance. Thereupon he went and sat down between two mountains and hills, and said: O mountains and hills, intercede for me and beg for mercy. But they said to him: Before we intercede for you, we will first intercede for ourselves, since it is said (Isa 54:10): For the mountains shall depart and the hills shall fall. Then he said: O heaven and earth, intercede for me and beg for mercy; but they said: Before we intercede for you, we will first intercede for ourselves, since it is said (Isa 51:6): For the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment. Then he said: O sun and moon, intercede for me and beg for mercy; but they said to him: Before we intercede for you, we will first intercede for ourselves, since it is said (Isa 24:23): And the moon shall be confounded and the sun shall be put to shame. Then he said: O stars and planets, intercede for me and beg for mercy; but they said to him: Before we intercede for you, we will first intercede for ourselves, as it is said (Isa 34:4): And all the host of heaven shall wither away. Thereupon he said: The matter rests with none but myself, and he laid his head between his knees and cried out with weeping until his soul departed from him. Then a voice came from heaven and said: Rabbi Elieser, the son of Dordeja, is called to eternal life.

Concerning Rabbi Akkiva, it is written in the tractate Kidduschin, fol. 81, col. 1, as follows: ר' עקיבא הוה מתלוצץ בעוברי עבירה יומא חד אידמי ליה שטן כאיתתא בריש דיקלא נקטיה לדיקלא וקסליק ואזיל כי מטא לפלגיה דייקלא שבקיה אמר אי לאו דמכרזי מעי ברקיע הזהירו ברבי עקיבא ותורתו שויהיה דמך תרתי מעי That is: Rabbi Akkiva used to mock those who had committed a transgression; but it came to pass one day that the devil appeared to him in the form of a woman at the top of a palm tree, whereupon he seized the tree and climbed up (in order to reach the woman he supposed to be there); but when he was halfway up the palm tree, the devil let him go and said to him: Were it not proclaimed in the firmament (that is, in heaven), "Take heed with Rabbi Akkiva and his law," I would not reckon your life worth two pennies.

Concerning Rabbi Meir, the following is also found in that same place: די מאיר הוה מתלוצץ בעוברי עבירה יומא חד אדמי ליה שטן כאיתתא בהך גיסא דנהרא לא הוה מברא נקט מצרא וקא עבר כי מטא פלגא מצרא שבקיה אמר אי לאו דקא מכרזי ברקיעא הזהירו תרי מעי ברבי מאיר ותורתו שויתיה לדמך תרי מעי that is: Rabbi Meir used to mock those who had committed a transgression; it came to pass, however, that Satan appeared to him in the form of a woman on the other side of a river, and since there was no bridge (or drawbridge) there, he seized the rope (which was stretched across the river to pull the drawbridge back and forth) and crossed by means of it. But when he reached the middle of the rope, Satan let him go and said: if it were not proclaimed in heaven, "Take heed of Rabbi Meir and of his law," I would not give two pennies for your life. In the aforementioned place, in the second column, the following is also read concerning the said Rabbi Meir, that he did not trust himself to be alone with his own daughter; likewise concerning Rabbi Tarpon, that he had admonished his household members not to leave him alone with his daughter-in-law, and the words read as follows: תניא אמר רבי מאיר הזהירו בי מפני בתי אמר רבי טרפון הזהירו בי מפני כלתי אמר ליה ההוא בר בי רב הוה קא מזלזל ביה אמר רבי אבהו משום ר' חנינא בן גמליאל לא היו ימים מועטים עד שנכשל אותו תלמיד בחמותו that is: We learn that Rabbi Meir said: take heed of me on account of my daughter (lest I commit fornication with her). And that Rabbi Tarpon said: take heed of me on account of my daughter-in-law. At this a student laughed, and Rabbi Abhu said in the name of Rabbi Channina, the son of Gamaliel, that not many days later that same student sinned with his mother-in-law, and indeed even with an animal. These two rabbis, therefore, Rabbi Meir and Rabbi Tarpon, must have been very licentious men,

Of this same kind must also Raf and Raf Nachman have been, who had wives, and yet in the places to which they had traveled on account of certain business and stayed for a short time, each took another wife for that brief period, whom they then let go when they returned home again. Concerning this, the following is written in the Talmudic Tractate Yoma, fol. 18. col. 2.: רב כי מיקלע : להרשיש מכריו מאן הוויא : רב נחמן כדמיקלע לשכנציב מכריו מאן הוויא ליומא that is, When Raf came to Tharsis, he had it proclaimed: Who wishes to be (my wife) for a few days? When Raf Nachman came to Schachnezibh, he had it proclaimed: Who wishes to be (my wife) for a few days: as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi himself explains it.

On account of this subject matter, I must also indicate here that the rabbis consider the marriage of Christians and all other peoples living outside of Judaism to be no marriage at all, and hold the erroneous opinion that when a Jew lies with a Christian man's wife, he commits no adultery. For Rabbi Solomon Jarchi writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, on the words of Lev 20:10, "Whoever commits adultery with another man's wife shall surely be put to death, both the adulterer and the adulteress, because he has broken the marriage with his neighbor's wife," in the following manner: אשר ינאף את אשת רעהו פרט לאשת נכרי למדנו שאין קידושין לנכרי that is, Through the words "because he has broken the marriage with his neighbor's wife," the wife of a foreigner is excepted (who is not the Jew's neighbor), and this teaches us that the foreigner has no marriage betrothal. Rabbi Bechai likewise teaches this in his commentary on the aforementioned words, fol. 144, col. 3, in the Parascha Kedoshim. Rabbi Levi ben Gerson writes equally on the said words in his commentary, fol. 164, col. 1, in the last-mentioned Parascha, as follows: מגיד שלא יתחייב מיתה כי אם על אשת בן ברית כי לא ישלמו תנאי האישות בזולת בני ברית that is, This indicates that one is not guilty of death except on account of the wife of a member of the covenant (that is, of an Israelite), for the conditions of marriage are not fulfilled among others who are not members of the covenant. This is also confirmed in Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's book called Jad Chasaka, in the second part, in the second chapter of the Tractate on Kings and their Wars, numero 2, 3, where he teaches as follows: וכן בועל אשה בכותיתה אם תקפו יצרו אבל לא יבעלנה וילך לו אלא מכניסה לתוך ביתו שנ' 'וראית בשביה אשת יפת תואר ואסור לבעול אותה ביאה שניה עד שישאנה. אין אשת יפת תואר מותרת אלא בשעת השביה בין בתולה בין בעולה בין אשה איש שאין אישות לכותים that is, Likewise, one may lie with a woman in her state of unbelief (that is, when she is not a Jewess) if his desire overpowers him; however, he shall not lie with her and then go away, but shall bring her into his house, as it is said (Deut 21:11): "And you see among the captives a beautiful woman," for it is forbidden to lie with her a second time until he has married her. A beautiful woman is not permitted except at the time of captivity, whether she be a virgin, or one who is no longer a virgin, or a married woman, for the Cutheans (that is, the Christians and other peoples, since this word is here taken in place of Gôjim, as frequently occurs among the Jews) have no marriage.

This worthless teaching, that Christians and other peoples have no marriage, is taken from the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin fol. 52. col. 2., where, concerning the words of Lev 20:10, "He who commits adultery with another man's wife, with his neighbor's wife, shall surely be put to death," the following is taught: פרט לאשת אחרים, that is, the wives of others (that is, of the Gojim or Christians, as Rabbi Salomon explains it) are excepted or excluded; and the aforementioned Rabbi Salomon writes further on this: אשמעינן שאין להם קידושין, that is, "We learn from this that a Goi (or Christian) has no marriage." This is also to be found in the Tosephoth in the same place. We see from this, therefore, that Friedrich Samuel Brenz writes the truth in the fourth chapter of his work Jüdischer Schlangentalg when he reports that the Jews teach that Christians have no binding marriage, and that a Jew who lies with a Christian man's wife does not commit adultery; whereas, on the other hand, Rabbi Salman Zevi, in keeping with his custom, maliciously denies this in the fourth chapter of his Jüdischer Theriak, numero 14.

I must also report here what is written in the tractate Jôma, fol. 19. col. 2. concerning the unchastity of Elias, where the words read as follows: אמר לו אליהו לרב יהודה אחוהי דרב סלא חסידא אמריתו אמאי לא אתי משיח והא האידנא יומא דכפורי הוא ואבעול כמה בתולתא בנהרדעא אמר ליה הק"בה מאי אמר אמר ליה לפתח חטאת רביץ: that is, Elias spoke to Raf Jebuda, the brother of the pious Raf Salla: You say, why does the Messiah not come; behold, it is now the Day of Atonement (on which one ought especially to guard oneself against sins), and yet I intend to lie with many virgins in Nehardea. Then he (Raf Jebuda) asked him (Elias): what does the holy and blessed God say to this (when you do such a thing)? To which he answered him, He says (from Gen 4:6): Sin crouches at the door, that is, as Rabbi Solomon expounds it in his commentary thereon, evil desire causes him to sin against his will. From which one can conclude as much as if God did not particularly regard the fornication which He has nonetheless strictly forbidden, according to the teaching of the Talmud.

Regarding murder and manslaughter, there were also among the Talmudic teachers some who are accused of this grave sin. In the tractate Megilla, fol. 7, col. 2, it is recorded of Rabba that he killed Rabbi Sira while drunk. The words there read as follows: רבה ורבי זירא עבדו סעודת פוריס בהדי הדדי איבסם קם רבה

שחטיה לרבי זירא למחר בעא רחמי ואחייה לשנה אמר ליה ניתי מר ונעבד סעודת פורים בהדי אהדי, that is: Rabba and Rabbi Sira held a meal together at the feast of Purim (which is the Jews' carnival), and when they had drunk, Rabba stood up and cut Rabbi Sira's throat. The next day he called upon God for mercy on account of this, and brought it about that he came back to life. In the following year, he (Rabba) said to him (Rabbi Sira): let the master come, so that we may hold the Purim meal together. But he answered him: a miracle is not performed every single hour, as I was brought back to life by a miracle in the past year; and so he no longer trusted him, out of fear that he might cut his throat a second time. In the tractate Shabbath, fol.
 30, col. 2, it is likewise recorded of Rabbi and Rabbi Chija that they committed a murder, of which it is written as follows: ההוא דאתא לקמיה דרבי אשתך אשתי ובניך בני א"ל רצונך שתשתה כוס של יין שתה ופקע. ההוא דאתא לקמיה דרבי חייא א"ל אמן אשתי ואתה בני א"ל רצונך שתשתה כוס של יין שתה ופקע, that is: A man came before Rabbi and said to him, your wife is my wife and your children are my children; whereupon he (Rabbi) said to him, would you like to drink a cup of wine; but when he had drunk, he burst asunder. A man came before Rabbi Chija and said to him, your mother is my wife and you are my son; whereupon he said to him, would you like to drink a cup of wine; but when he had drunk, he burst asunder. These two must therefore have given their invited guests poison to drink, since their bodies burst apart.

Regarding sorcery, there is a passage in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 65, col. 2, concerning the drunken Rabba, who, as mentioned, had killed Rabbi Sira, stating that he created a man, where the words read as follows: רבא ברא גברא שדריה לקמיה דרבי זירא הוה קא משתעיא בהדיה ולא הוה קא מהדר ליה א"ל דאי מן חבריא : that is, Rabba created a man and sent him to Rabbi Sira; and when he (Rabbi Sira) spoke with him and he gave no answer, he said to him:
 you have come here from the companions (that is, as Rabbi Solomon interprets it, from the Christians); return to your dust (that is, become dust again, from which you were made). After this follows: רב חנינא ורב אושיעא ארשייא חוי יהבי
 i.e., Raf
Channina and Raf Oschaja sat every Sabbath eve and studied in the book Jezira, and created for themselves a calf that was as large as if it had been three years old, and ate it. This is supposed to have occurred, according to the Jews' account, through the aforementioned book Jezira (which, as is claimed in the fourth part of the book Cosri, n. 25, is said to have originated from the patriarch Abraham, whereas others have maintained that Rabbi Akkiva composed it), and they hold that through this book mighty things can be accomplished, which is why it is also called Sepher Jezira, that is, the Book of Creation; and Rabbi Naphtali provides, in his book Emeck hammelech, fol. 10,

col. 3, in the 55th chapter, under the title Schaar fabaal chüs hammelech, a brief instruction on how one is to conduct oneself in the use of this book, and how the letters of the alphabet, through which everything is accomplished, are to be arranged, as well as how one is to bring about a golem, that is, such a dull man as Rabba made, or alternatively a calf, as Rabbi Channina and Rabbi Oshaja did. There is also a passage read in the book Nischmath chajim, in the 24th chapter of the third part, fol. 136, col. 2: 'הושע אמר ר' (ליקח דלועין ואבטיחים ולעשותם אילים וצבאים ממש בן חנניה יכול אני) ע'י ס' יצירה (ליקח דלועין ואבטיחים ולעשותם אילים וצבאים ממש): that is, in the Jerusalem Talmud, in the seventh chapter of the tractate Sanhedrin, it is written that Rabbi Jehoscha, the son of Chanania, said: I can, through the book Jezira, make real stags and deer out of gourds and melons. All of this is, however, certainly nothing other than godless sorcery, and therewith a delusion wrought by the devil, for the creation of creatures belongs not to any creature but to God alone; and one reads in the account of Doctor Faustus that he was able to conjure all manner of things before one's eyes, and that he made five fat swine as well as a horse, which was nonetheless nothing other than a delusion. A great many such things are read of sorcerers in their accounts.

Rabbi Menasse ben Israel also writes in his aforementioned book Nischmath chajim, fol. 136. col. 2., in the 24th chapter of the third Maamar, on this subject as follows: אמר ר' ינאי מהלך הייתי בשוק זה של ציפורי וראיתי מכשף א' לוקח צרור חורקן למעלה והיה יורד ונעשה עגל. וכאשר הקשו לו מהא דאמר ר' אלעזר בשם ר' יוסי בן זמרא אם מתכנסין הן כל באי העולם אינן יכולין לבראת יתוש א' ולזרוק בו נשמה. השיב לו שאפשרות הדבר היה מפני שהמכשף היה קורא לשד שלו הממונה על הכישופים והה גונב עגל מן הבקר ומביא לו. ואמר רבי חנינה בן ר' חנינה משמיה דהונא במקום הנפת דלתות של צפורי וראיתי מכשף א' שהיה לוקח אבן א' חורקה ונעשת עגל. בבתי וספרתי לאבי אמר אם אכלת ממנו האמן המעשה ואינו ולא אל תאמין המעשה כי למראה היה אחיות עינים בכח השדים: that is: Rabbi Jannai said: I was walking in the marketplace of the city of Zippore and saw a sorcerer who took a stone and threw it upward; but when it came back down, a calf had come from it. When they then put it to him (to Rabbi Jannai) that Rabbi Eliezer, in the name of Rabbi Jose, the son of Simra, had said that even if all the people in the entire world were to come together, they still could not create a single gnat and place a soul within it, he gave the answer that the matter had been possible because the sorcerer had called upon his devil, who is set over sorcery, and that devil had stolen a calf from a cow and brought it to him. Rabbi Channina, the son of Rabbi Chananja, also said: I was walking in Zippore, at the place where the gates close, and I saw a sorcerer who took a stone and threw it, and a calf came from it. I came and told my father about it, but he said to me: if you had eaten of it, you could believe the deed; but since you certainly did not eat of it, believe that it was, through the power of the devil, nothing but illusion. Now, just as the devil could have brought the sorcerer in the city of Zippore a calf, according to Rabbi Jannai's opinion, or, according to Rabbi Chananja's account, it was an illusion, so one can also say that the devil brought Rabbi Channina and Rabbi Oschaja a calf every Sabbath evening. I would, however, sooner hold that he, as a deceitful spirit, brought them a dead animal and carrion, or perhaps a pig, and so blinded their eyes that they took it for a living calf and ate of it.

Concerning Jannai, it is recorded in the Tractate Sanbedrin fol. 67, col. 2 that he transformed a woman into a donkey through sorcery and rode that donkey to the marketplace, where the following is written: ינאי איקלע לההיא אושפיזא אמר להו אשקין מיא קריבו שתיתא הוא דקא מרחשן שפוותהא שדא פורתא מינה הוו עקרבי אמר להו אנא שתית מדידכו אתון נמי שתו מדידי אשקייה הואי חמרא רכבה סליק לשוקא אאתא חברתה פשרה לה הויה דרכיב וקאים איתתא בשוקא, that is: Jannai came to an inn and said to them (namely, to the innkeeper's people), give me water to drink; but they brought him a drink in which flour had been stirred into water, which is called Schethita; and he saw that the lips of the woman who brought it were moving (and he thereby noticed that she was a sorceress); whereupon he poured a little of it out, and scorpions came from it. He then said to them: I have drunk of yours, so now drink of mine. After he had given her (the woman) something to drink, she became a donkey, and he mounted her and went to the marketplace. But her companion came and dissolved the sorcery when she saw him riding, and a woman stood in the marketplace in place of the donkey. As for this Jannai, Rabbi Solomon Jarchi does indeed deny in his commentary on the last-cited words that he was a rabbi, when he writes: לא גרסינן רבי ינאי דלאו אינש מעליא הוא שעשה כשפים, that is: We do not read that he was called Rabbi Jannai, for he was not a distinguished man, since he practiced sorcery. These are the words of Rabbi Solomon. However, he was greatly mistaken in this, for although in the cited passage he is called only Jannai, he is nonetheless called Rabbi Jannai in the book En Jifrael fol. 124, col. 2, in the seventh chapter of the Tractate Sanbedrin, where this very same story is recounted, and in the Tractate Sopherim, fol. 13, col. 3, in the sixteenth chapter, in the sixth Halacha, as well as in the words cited shortly before from Rabbi Menasse ben Jfrael's book at fol. 136, col. 2. It is therefore entirely clear that this Jannai was one of the Talmudic teachers and at the same time a sorcerer. Likewise, in fol. 68, col. 1 of the Tractate Sanbedrin, it is recorded concerning Rabbi Eliezer that by speaking a single word he produced an entire field full of gourds and then brought them all together into one place, which was likewise nothing other than a delusion wrought by the devil.

In the Maase Book, several stories about rabbis are also found, who were without doubt great sorcerers as well. In chapter 162 it is reported that Rabbi Samuel, by speaking a name, caused a lion (which was larger than a camel) to come to him, upon which he placed a sack of flour that his donkey had been unable to carry through the water; he then sat upon the sack and rode home on the lion through the water, for which his father rebuked him. That same lion, however, was most likely the devil, who goes about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, as can be seen in 1 Pet 5:8. And in chapter 161, the same Rabbi Samuel is described as having overcome three clergymen who came to him from foreign lands and boasted of their diabolical arts, defeating them so thoroughly with his own arts that they had to confess that he understood the matter better than they did and was their master. The affair proceeded as follows. Rabbi Samuel demanded that they send a letter through a devil to Rabbi Jacob in another city and have a book fetched that he had lent to the said Rabbi Jacob, in order to prove their art. But after they had caused the soul of one among them to depart in order to carry out the task, that soul was unable to return into the body until they had acknowledged Rabbi Samuel, who had prevented this, as their master. In chapter 173, it is also reported of Rabbi Elieser that he traveled from Regensburg to Mainz within a few hours. Likewise, in chapter 174, a strange story is found which is said to have taken place between a bishop of Salzburg and Rabbi Judah of Regensburg, and the said Rabbi Judah, if the matter is true, must also have been a genuine sorcerer. This same Rabbi Judah is also said, according to chapter 171 of the aforementioned book, to have attached a small slip of paper bearing a name to a dead man, thereby causing the dead man to rise up and identify the one who had killed him.

It is no wonder, then, that the Jews learn sorcery and make use of such devilish arts, given that the rabbis teach that the pious patriarch Abraham gave the art of sorcery as a gift to the children of his concubines. This is written in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 91, col. 1, on the words of Gen 25:6, "But to the sons he had by the concubines, he gave gifts," as follows: מאי מתנות אמר that is: What does the word "gifts" mean? Rabbi Jeremias, the son of Abba, has said: this teaches us that he gave them the name of impurity. What, however, is to be understood by this name of impurity is taught by Rabbi Solomon Jarchi in his commentary on this passage, in these words: שם טומאה כשור ומעשה שדים that is: The name of impurity signifies sorcery and the work of devils. This is also found in the Sepher haemunoth of Rabbi Shem Tob, fol. 54, col. 1, in the fourth chapter of the fifth part; and in the book Schääre Zedeck, fol. 17, col. 1; as well as in the book Mekór chajim, fol. 17, col. 3. And in the book Zijóni, it is written at fol. 20, col. 2, on the aforementioned words of Gen 25:6: 'נטומא ז"ל שמ' אמרו חכמינו 'מסר להם שהיו משתמשים בהם בטומאת הגוף וזאת היתה חכמת בני קדם שהיו בני הפלגשים' שב 'וישלחם אברהם מעל יצחק בנו בעודנו חי קדמה אל ארץ קדם ורומז לכה בני קדם שנ מן ארם ינחני בלק מהררי קדם וכחות הטומאה החיצונות מסר להם והם מעשה שדים וכשפים that is: Our sages, of blessed memory, say that he gave them impure names, which they used in the impurity of the body, and that this was the wisdom of those who dwelt toward the east (the rising of the sun), who were the children of the concubines, as it is said (Gen 25:6): And Abraham sent them away from his son Isaac, while he was still alive, toward the east, into the land of the east; which indicates the power of those who dwell toward the east, as it is said (Num 23:7): From Syria Balak, the king of Moab, had me fetched, from the mountains of the east. And he gave them the outward powers of impurity, which consist in the work of the devil and in sorceries. So too it stands in the book Nischmâth chájim, fol. 145, col. 2, at the beginning of the 29th chapter, under the title Máämár schèlischí, as follows: חז"ל על פסוק ולבני הפלגשים נתן להם. ושאברהם אבינו עשה מסכתא שהיו סדורים בה כל סדר מתנות אמרו שם בטומאה מסר להם. ושאברהם אבינו עשה מסכתא שהיו סדורים בה כל סדר הכשוף ופעולותיו מכחות הטומאה כמו שחבר ספר יצירה משמות הקדושים that is: Our sages, of blessed memory, say concerning the verse, "But to the sons he had by the concubines, he gave gifts," that he gave them names of impurity; and that our father Abraham composed a tractate in which all the orders of sorcery and its operations, drawn from the powers of impurity (that is, the unclean spirits), were arranged in sequence, just as he had composed the book Jezira from the holy names. In view of all this, the pious patriarch Abraham is accused by his degenerate and senseless descendants of having been a sorcerer and of having taught this godless practice, by which the devil is served, to the children he had by his concubines, through which the art of sorcery was spread throughout the entire land of the east.

Furthermore, they also teach that all who sat in the Synedrio, or High Council, must have understood sorcery, as is indicated in the book Emek haméleah, fol. 108, col. 2, in the 111th chapter, under the title Schäär Kirjath árba, with these words: הסנהדרין היו מחוייבים לידע כישוף כדי שיהיו יודעים איזהו מעשה ואיזהו אחיות עינים: that is, those in the Synedrio were required to know sorcery, so that they could know which was a (true) deed and which was a deception of the eyes. And in the book Júchasin, it is written concerning this at fol. 17, col. 1, as follows: הסנהדרין צריך שידעו כשור בעבור שידעו הדין על איזה כשור יהרגו המכשף. אבל פירש רש"י בפרק האומר שאם יהא חנוון מכשף ויעשה האור שלא יישלחו בו יעשו הם מכשפות וימיתוהו: that is, the Synedrium had need to understand sorcery, so that they could properly know on account of which sorcery the sorcerer was to be put to death. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, however, explains it in the chapter that begins Haómer as follows: if the one against whom the verdict had been pronounced were a sorcerer and had caused the light to have no power over him, then they were to employ sorcery and thereby put him to death. Of which matter something has already been treated above in the third chapter, p. 150 and 151.

Regarding gluttony and drunkenness, some of the Talmudic teachers were also given to these two vices. Concerning great gluttony, it is written in the tractate Berachoth fol. 44. col. 1. as follows: אמר רבה בר בר חנה כי הוינא אזלינן בי מאה מנקטינן ליה כל חד וחד עשרה עשרה ובתריה דרבי יוחנן למיכל פירות גינוסר כי הוינן בי מאה מנקטינן ליה כל חד וחד מאה וכל מאה מינייהו הוה מחזיק להו צנא בר תלתא סואי ואכיל להו ומשתבע דלא טעים זינא ס"ד אלא אימא מזונא רב אמי ואכיל עד דהוה שריק ליה דודבא מאפותיה. ורב אמי ורב אסי הוו אכלי עד דנתור מזייהו that is: Rabba, the grandson of Channa, said: when we followed Rabbi Jochanan to eat the fruits of Ginnosar (that is, of the region lying in Galilee on the Sea of Gennesaret, which bore the finest fruits), and there were a hundred of us, each one of us would bring ten along for Rabbi Jochanan; but when there were ten of us, each one would bring him a hundred; and a hundred of them would fill a basket holding three bushels (so that it was full), and he ate them, and yet swore that he had eaten no food. What do you mean (that he swore he had eaten no food)? I would rather say he swore he had derived no nourishment from it (since it was to him as though he had eaten nothing). Raf Abbu ate until a fly fell from his forehead (that is, until from eating and drinking his face was so fat and greasy that no fly could hold on to it on account of the slipperiness). Raf Ammi and Raf Asi ate until their hair fell out. Rabbi Shimon ben Lakish ate until he became confused in his head. Concerning Jochanan, the son of Narbai, the following is read in the tractate Pesachim fol. 57. col. 1.: אמרו עליו על יוחנן בן נרבאי שהיה אוכל שלש מאות עגלים ושותה שלש מאות גרבי יין ואוכל ערסות that is: It is said of Jochanan, the son of Narbai, that he ate three hundred calves, drank three hundred bottles of wine, and ate forty bushels of young doves as a dessert or confection. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi does write in his commentary on this passage that the man fed many priests at his table, which is why so much was consumed; but be that as it may, a great deal of gluttony must have taken place. Likewise it stands in the tractate Sanhedrin fol. 94. col. 2. concerning Pekah, the son of Remaliah: מארתה ה' בביתו רשע זה פקח בן רמליהו שהיה אוכל ארבעים סאה גוזלות בקנוח סעודה. וגה צריקים יברך זה חזקיה מלך יהודה שהיה אוכל ליטרא ירק בסעודה that is: (The words of Prov 3:33,) "The curse of the LORD is upon the house of the wicked," signify Pekah, the son of Remaliah, who ate forty bushels of young doves as a dessert. (And the words,) "But the dwelling of the righteous He blesses," signify Hezekiah, the king of Judah, who ate a pound of herbs at a meal.

Rabbi Ismael and Rabbi Elieser must also have been great gluttons, since they had such very large bellies; concerning which, in the Talmudic tractate Bava mezia fol. 84. col. 1., the following is read: כי הוה מקלעי ר' ישמעאל ברבי יוסי ורבי אלעזר ברבי שמעון בהדי הדדי הוה עייל קקרא דתורי בנייהו ולא הוה נגעא בהו אמרה להו ההיא מטרוניתא בניכם אינם שלכם אמרו לה שלהן גדול משלנו that is, when Rabbi Ismael, the son of Rabbi Jose, and Rabbi Elieser, the son of Rabbi Simeon, came together (and held their bellies toward one another), a pair of oxen could pass between them without touching them. And when a noble lady said to them, "Your children do not come from you," they answered her: "Our wives' bellies are even larger than ours."

Concerning the aforementioned Rabbi Elieser, it is also read in the last-mentioned Talmudic tractate fol. 83. col. 2. that he once took a sleeping draught and had many baskets full of fat cut out of his body, which was then laid in the sun but did not putrefy; and he thereupon applied to himself the words of Ps 16:9, "Moreover my flesh also shall rest in safety." Concerning this same Rabbi Elieser, it is also written in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate fol. 84. col. 2. that he voluntarily submitted himself to affliction, and the following passage ensues: באורחא הוּוּ מֵייתֵי לִיה שִׁיתִּין נִמְטִי לְצִפְרָא נִגְדִי מִתּוֹתִיָּה שִׁיתִּין: משכלי דמא וכיבא למחר עבדה ליה דביתהו שיתין מיני לפרא ואכיל להו וברי: that is, in the evening they laid sixty shaggy blankets (or plasters, as Rabbi Salomon interprets it) under him (in his bed), but in the morning they drew out from beneath him sixty basins full of blood and pus. The following day his wife prepared for him sixty kinds of food made from figs, and he ate them and recovered his health. Are these not, once again, unheard-of Talmudic lies?

Regarding drinking, a short while before on p. 434, examples were cited from the Talmud showing that Rabba and Rabbi Sira drank themselves so full that the former, in his drunkenness, cut the latter's throat. Rabbi Ishmael must also have been quite a dissolute drunkard, of whom it is written in the tractate Pesachim fol. 86. col. 2. as follows: תנו רבנן ישמעאל ברבי יוסי איקלע לבי ר'ש ברכי: יוסי בן לקוניא יהבו ליה כסא קבליה בחד זימנא ושתה בחד זימנא אמרי ליה לא סבר ליה מר: השותה כוסו בבת אחת הרי זה גרגרן אמר ליה לא אמרי בכוסך קטן וייןך מתוק וכריסי רחבה: that is, We learn: When Rabbi Ishmael, the son of Rabbi Jose, came to the house of Rabbi Simeon, the son of Rabbi Jose, the son of Lakunja, he was given a cup (of wine), and he took it and drank it down in one go; whereupon they said to him, does the master not know that whoever drinks his cup in one draught is a glutton (or reveler)? He replied, however, to the one who had said this to him: this is not said of your small cup, and besides, your wine is sweet and my belly is wide. Such a tippler may well also have been Rabbi Akkiva, of whom the following is read in the tractate Shabbath fol. 67. col. 2.: מעשה ברבי עקיבא: שעשה משתה לבנו ועל כל כוס וכוס שהביא אמר חמרא וחיי לפום רבנן היי חמרא לחיי רבנן: that is, It came to pass that Rabbi Akkiva held a feast for his son, and at each and every cup that he brought he said: wine and life belong in the mouths of the Rabbis; life and wine belong in the mouths of the Rabbis and in the mouths of their disciples.

The Jews also hold that they must spend their holy days with nothing but gorging and guzzling, because in the Talmudic Tractate Pesachim fol. 68. col. 2. the following is read: שמחת יום טוב נמי מצוה היא דתניא רבי אלעזר אומר אין לו לאדם ביום טוב אלא/ או אוכל ושותה או יושב ושונה רבי יהושע אמר חלקהו חציו לאכילה ושתיה וחציו לבית המדרש: that is, the joy on a holy day is also commanded; for we learn that Rabbi Eliezer says: a person has nothing to do on a holy day except eat and drink, or sit and study; but Rabbi Jehoshua has said: divide it, and devote half of it to eating and drinking, and the other half to the school. That such gluttons and drunkards are to be regarded as godless people, however, can be seen from the book Menoráth hammáor, fol. 7. col. 3. in the first chapter under the title Ner rischon, Kelál schéni, chélek schéni, where the following is taught: גרסינן במדרש תלים צדיק אוכל לשבע נפשו ר"ל הצדיק המשכיל אוכל מעט כדי לקיים נפשו לעבודת הקב"ה אבל הרשע והאויל אינו כן אלא אוכל להנאת גופו וממלא בטנו ואינו חושש להוצאת ממון כי יחשוב באולתו שלא נברא העולם הזה אלא לאכול ולשתות ואינו חומד מן העולם הזה: that is, we read in the Médrasch Tillim: the righteous man eats until his soul is satisfied (Prov 13:25), by which it is indicated that the righteous and wise man eats only a little in order to sustain his life, but the godless man and the fool do not act in this way; rather, he eats for the pleasure of his body and fills his belly, and does not concern himself with the money he spends on it; for in his foolishness he thinks that the world was created for nothing other than eating and drinking, and therefore he desires from the world nothing but eating and drinking. According to this statement, then, the aforementioned gluttons and drunkards must have been godless people. And if they were godless people, their teaching will also not have been of much use. Who, then, would wish to hold their traditiones to be the Word of God?

Concerning Rabbi Eliezer and Rabbi Jose, it is also recorded in the Talmudic tractate Jevammóth (or Jevómos), fol. 96, col. 2, that they fell into a dispute with one another and in their anger tore the book of the Law to pieces; from which one may judge that they were worthless fellows, since they dealt so contemptuously with the Word of God.

As for those who doubted their own salvation, it is written in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos), fol. 28, col. 2, concerning Rabban Jochanan, the son of Saccai, as follows: כשחלה רבן יוחנן בן זכאי נכנסו תלמידיו לבקרו כיון שראה אותם התחיל לבכות אמרו לו תלמידיו נר ישראל עמוד הימיני פטיש החזק מפני מה אתה בוכה א"ל אילו לפני מלך בשר ודם היו מוליכין אותי שהיום כאן ומחר בקבר שאם כועס עלי אין כעסו כעס עולם ואם אוסרני אין איסורו איסור עולם ואם מיתני אין מיתתו מיתת עולם ואני יכול לפייסו בדברים ולשחדו בממון אע"פ כן הייתי בוכה ועכשיו שמוליכין אותי לפני מלך מלכי המלכים הקב"ה שהוא חי וקיים לעולם ולעולמי עולמים שאם כועס עלי כעסו כעס עולם ואם אוסרני איסורו איסור עולם ואם מיתני מיתתו מיתת עולם ואני יכול לפייסו

בדברים ולא לשחדו בממון ולא עוד אלא שיש לפני שני דרכים אחת של ג"ע ואחת של גיהנם ואני יודע באיזו מוליכין אותי ולא אבכה: that is: When Rabban Jochanan, the son of Saccai, was ill, his disciples went in to visit him; but when he saw them, he began to weep. His disciples then said to him: "You light of Israel, you right pillar, you mighty hammer, why do you weep?" He answered them: "If they were bringing me before a king who is flesh and blood, who is here today but tomorrow lies in the grave, and if that king were angry with me, his anger would not be an eternal anger; and if he had me bound, the binding would not last forever; and if he put me to death, the death he inflicted upon me would not endure for eternity, and I could appease him with words and win him over with money; even if it were only that, I would weep. But now, when I am to be brought before the King of all kings, the holy and blessed God, who lives and endures for all eternity, if He is angry with me, His anger is eternal; and if He binds me, His binding endures forever; and if He puts me to death, I must remain dead for eternity; and I can appease Him neither with words nor win Him over with money. And not only this, but there are also two paths before me, one leading to Paradise and the other to Hell, and I do not know upon which I shall be led. Should I then not weep?" Likewise, it is recorded concerning Rabban Gamaliel in the Talmudic tractate Sanhédrin, fol. 81, col. 1, that he wept when he read the words of Ezek 18:21: "But if the wicked man turns from all his sins which he has committed, and keeps all my statutes, and does what is right and good, he shall live and not die"; and that he said: מאי דעביד לכולהו הוא דחיי בחדא מינייהו לא that is: "Shall only he live who does all of them (the commandments)? But he who does not fulfill even one of them, shall he not live?" He is likewise said to have spoken in the same manner when he read the words of Ps 15:5, "He who does this shall fare well," as is to be found in the Talmudic tractate Maccóth, fol. 24, col. 1; and further examples of this kind could be adduced.

The sixth reason why the Talmud is not the Word of God is that it contains indecent things mixed with shameless, crude lies, and disgraceful obscenities. I was indeed in doubt as to whether I should set down such unseemly things here and make mention of them; however, since it can thereby be seen all the more clearly what a worthless book it is, I have wished to mention them here. In the tractate Sanhedrin, at fol. 22, col. 1, the words of 1 Kgs 1:1-3 are cited, in which it is reported that a young maiden was sought for King David, who was old and could not get warm, to sleep in his arms and warm him, and that Abishag of Shunem was taken for this purpose. Thereupon it continues in that same place, relating what transpired when she lay with King David, and the words read as follows: אמרה ליה ניסבן אמר לה אסירה לי אמרה ליה חסרא לגנבא נפשיה: לשלמא נקיט אמר להו קראו לי לבת שבע וכתוב ותבא בת שבע אל המלך החדרה. אמר רב

מפת באותה שעה קינחה בת שבע בשלש עשרה מפת: that is, Then she said (namely, Abishag to King David), marry me; and he answered her, you are forbidden to me (since I already have eighteen wives); but she said in reply, when a thief lacks a place (in which he can steal something), he keeps himself peacefully quiet. Then the king said to them (namely, to his servants), call Bathsheba to me; for (in the fifteenth verse of the cited passage, 1 Kgs 1) it is written: And Bathsheba went in to the king. The Rab has said that Bathsheba wiped herself in that same hour with thirteen napkins. These are the words of the Talmud. As for what the words of Abishag mean when she said, "When a thief lacks a place, he keeps himself peacefully quiet," Rabbi Solomon Jarchi teaches in his commentary on this passage that she intended thereby to say: מפני שזקנת ותשש, that is, Because you are old and your strength is weakened, you say that I am forbidden to you. As for how one is to understand the statement that the Raf said that Bathsheba wiped herself with thirteen napkins, the aforementioned Rabbi Solomon explains it thus: קניתה בת שבע שבא עליה י"ג ביאות ומקנחה בין תשמיש לתשמיש ובמקרא הזה כתובין י"ג תיבות ותבא בת שבע: that is, (By the words) "Bathsheba wiped herself," it is indicated that he touched her (at that same time) thirteen times, and that she wiped herself between each touching. And (for this reason) there are thirteen words in this (fifteenth) verse (in the Hebrew text, namely) Vattávo Bathschévu el hammélech bachádrab vehammélech sakén meód vaabbischág baschunámmith mescharáth eth hammélech: that is, And Bathsheba went in to the king into the chamber, and the king was very old, and Abishag of Shunem served the king. Is this not a subtle proof of so crude and shameless a lie?

In the fourth chapter of the Book of Judges, the twenty-first verse records how Jael drove a nail through Sisera's temple and killed him. And in the fifth chapter, v. 27, it is written that Deborah spoke of it thus: "At her feet he bowed, he fell, he lay down; he bowed, he fell at her feet; where he bowed, there he fell down dead." Over these words, however, in the Talmudic tractate Nasir fol. 23. col. 2., the following is written: אמר רבי יוחנן שבע בעילות בעל אותו: that is, Rabbi Jochanan has said that the same wicked man in that hour mingled carnally with Jael seven times, since it is said (v. 27): "At her feet he bowed; he fell, and he lay down." On this, the Tosephoth state the following: שבע בעילות בעל סיסרא דשבע פעמים כתיב: that is, Sisera touched Jael seven times, because the words "to bow," "to fall," and "to lie" are written seven times in the aforementioned verse 27. Is this not once again a senseless proof? When the nail had been driven through Sisera's temple, he writhed in great pain, fell down, and died, as is quite plainly to be seen in Judg 5:26-27; how then could such writhing and falling be understood to mean carnal mingling? Rabbi David Kimchi himself rejects this Talmudic foolishness in his commentary on the aforementioned passage, Judg 5:26-27, when he states: כרע כריעה שלא היתה לו תקומה וזהו שאמר כאשר כרע שם נפל שדוד. ויש בו דרש והיא רחוק כי יש בפסוק שבעה בין כרע ונפל ושכב ואמרו כי שבע בעילות בעל אותו רשע ליעל אותו היום ומה שכתבו למעלה במילת שמיכה מכחיש זה הדרש: that is, he bowed because he could not rise again; and this is what is said (v. 27): "Where he bowed, there he lay down dead." There is, however, an allegorical interpretation of this passage which is absurd, namely that in this verse the words "he bowed, he fell, and he lay down" appear seven times, and it is said that the same wicked man touched Jael seven times on that day. But what was written above (in the fourth chapter, v. 18) concerning the word Semicha (which means a rough covering, or according to others a cloak) renders this allegorical interpretation false. These are the words of Rabbi David Kimchi, who thereby accuses the Talmud itself of lying in this matter.

In the fourth book of Moses, chapter 25, it is written that Zimri committed fornication with a Midianite woman, Cozbi, concerning which matter the following is found in the Talmudic tractate Sanbedrin fol. 82. col. 2.: ארבע מאות ועשרים וארבע בעילות בעל אותו רשע אותו היום והמתין פנחס לו עד שתשש כחו והוא אינו יודע שמלך אלקים עמו. במתניתא תנא ששים עד שנעשה כביצה המותרת ההיא. היתה כערוגה ידועה ומלאה מים. אמר רב. כהנא ומושבה בית סאה. תני רבי יוסף קבר שלה אמה; that is: That same wicked man touched (the Midianite woman) four hundred and twenty-four times on that same day, and Phinehas waited for him until his strength was exhausted (and he had become entirely spent). Phinehas also did not know that the mighty King (namely, God) was with him (that He would stand by him against Zimri). In the Mathnitha we learn that he touched her sixty times, ס"ו. The remainder I do not wish to translate, for it sounds far too coarse; and Rabbi Solomon expounds it plainly enough.

In the Book of Judges, chapter 13, v. 13, the following is read concerning Samson: "And the boy grew, and the Lord blessed him"; over which words in the Talmudic tractate Sôta, fol. 10. col. 1. the following is written: במה ברכו: אמר רב יהודה אמר רב שברכו באמתו וכבני אדם וזרעו נכחל שוטף; that is: In what did He bless him? Rabbi Jehuda reported that Rabbi said He blessed him in his manhood, ס"ו. What follows I cannot translate, out of concern for the offense it would cause. Likewise, in chapter 16, v. 21 of the aforementioned Book of Judges, it is read that Samson was made to grind in prison, concerning which the following is found in the aforementioned passage of the tractate Sôta: אמר רבי יוחנן אין טחינה אלא לשון עבירה וכן הוא אומר תטחן לאחר אשתי מלמד: שכל אחד ואחד הביא לו את אשתו לבית האסורים כדי שתתעבר הימנו; that is: Rabbi Jochanan said that grinding signifies nothing other than a transgression (namely, a carnal union, for thus, and in that sense, it is said in Job 31:10: "Let my wife grind for another"). And this teaches us that each man brought his wife to him in the prison, so that she might become pregnant by him, in order that they might have children by him who would be as strong as he had been.

It is also shamefully boasted in the Talmud by some, regarding what great virile members they possessed, and in the Tractate Moëd Katon, fol. 18. col. 1. the following is read concerning the Egyptian King Pharaoh, who lived in the time of Moses: אמר אביטול ספרא משמיה דרב פפא פרעה שהיה בימי משה הוא אמה וזקנו אמה ופרמשתקו אמה ורוחב ידיו אמה לקיים מה שנאמר ושפל אנשים יקים עליה: that is, Abuitol the scribe said in the name of Raf Papa that the Pharaoh who lived in the time of Moses was one cubit tall, and had a beard one cubit long, and that his virile member was one cubit and a span in length, in fulfillment of what is said (Dan 4:14, or according to others v. 17): And the lowest of men He (namely God) sets over it, meaning over the kingdom. Concerning Rabbi Ismael and Rabbi Jochanan, the following is also written in the Tractate Bava Mezia, fol. 84. col. 1.: אמר רבי יוחנן איבריה דרבי ישמעאל כחמת בת תשע קבין. that is, Rabbi Jochanan said that Rabbi Ismael's virile member had been as large as a wineskin holding nine Kab. (One Kab, however, holds as much as goes into 24 hen's eggshells, so nine Kab amount to as much as 216 eggshells contain.) Raf Papa said that Rabbi Jochanan's virile member had been as large as a wineskin holding five Kab.

Concerning Bileam, the following shameful matter is written in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 105, col. 1: העין וסתם הוא שנאמר וסתם העין: 'איתמר מר קוסם באמתו היה כתיב הכא נופל וגלוי עינים וכתוב והמן נופל על המטה וגו': 'איתמר מר זוטרא אמר קוסם באמתו היה. מר בריה דרבנא אמר שבא על אתונו. מאן דאמר קוסם באמתו היה כדאמרן למאן דאמר בא על אתונו הדר כתיב הכא כרע שכב וכתוב התם בין רגליה כרע that is, Bileam was blind in one of his eyes, and this is what is said (Num 24:3, 15): "He whose eye is closed." He prophesied by means of his manhood. It is written here (Num 24:4, 16): "Who fell down, and whose eyes were opened"; and there (Esth 7:8) it is written: "And Haman fell upon the bed, etc." It is reported that Mar Sutra said he prophesied by means of his manhood, as we have stated. According to the opinion of him who said that he committed sodomy with his she-ass, however, this is proven from the fact that it is written here (Num 24:9): "He crouched down and lay"; and there (Judg 5:27) it is written (of Sisera): "He bowed at her feet, he fell, and lay down." Concerning these words, Rabbi Solomon writes in his commentary in the following manner: כריעה והתם ראיית ביה נפילה בעילה אף כריעה והכא דכתוב: פה כריעה והתם ראיית ביה נפילה בעילה היא שבא על בהמתו; that is, just as the crouching there (Judg 5:27), accompanied by the falling, signifies a carnal act, so too does the crouching here (Num 24:9), where it is also written (v. 4) that he (namely Bileam) fell down, indicate a carnal act, namely that he committed sodomy with his she-ass. But is this not a diabolical perversion of Holy Scripture? First, it is reported that Bileam was blind in one eye, and this is proven from the fact that he calls himself in vv. 3 and 15 שתום העין Setúm haájín, which is falsely interpreted as meaning "he whose eye is closed or shut," whereas it in fact means the opposite, namely "he whose eyes are opened," as Aben Esra interprets it and as it is understood in the Chaldean translation of Onkelos; for which reason it is also plainly read in vv. 4 and 16: "He whose eyes were opened." Second, the words of v. 9, "He crouched down and lay," are interpreted as referring to Bileam, whereas they are spoken of the people of Israel and not of Bileam, as the text itself clearly demonstrates.

In the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 108, col. 1, the following is written concerning the people who lived at the time of the Flood, regarding the words of Gen 6:12, "For all flesh had corrupted its way upon the earth": אמר רבי יוחנן: מלמד שהרביעו בהמה על חיה וחיה על בהמה הכל על האדם והאדם על הכל; that is, Rabbi Jochanan has said: this teaches us that they mingled the domesticated cattle with the wild animals, and the wild animals with the domesticated cattle, and all of these with human beings, and human beings with all of these. This, however, is once again a foolish interpretation of Scripture, for here the word "flesh," which in Hebrew is called bâsar, refers only to human beings, just as in the Arabic language the word bâscharon likewise signifies human beings; and in this sense the word bâsar, or flesh, is also used in Isa 40:6. And in the second column of that same folio 108, the following is read: תנו רבנן שלשה שמשו בתיבה: וכלם לקו כלב ועורב וחם כלב נקשר עורב רק חם לקה בעורו: that is, Our rabbis teach: three kinds engaged in intercourse in the ark (Noah's little wives), and all of them were struck (or punished): the dog, the raven, and Cham. The dog is bound (to his little female); the raven spits out (the seed); and Cham was punished in his skin, because the black Cus descended from him.

The seventh reason why the Talmud is not the Word of God is this: that Holy Scripture is therein frequently twisted into a false meaning, and one word is substituted for another, with the declaration "read not thus, but rather thus," solely in order to prove whatever the rabbis wish to maintain. Hence one reads in the Talmudic tractate Berachoth, fol. 32, col. 1, as follows: אמר רבי אלעזר: משה הטיח דברים כלפי מעלה שני ויתפלל משה אל יי אל תקרי אל יי אלא על יי that is, Rabbi Eliezer has said that Moses let words fly against God, because it is reported (Num 11:2): And Moses prayed יהוה אל El Jehova, that is, to the Lord; read not אל Jehova, that is, to the Lord, but rather יהוה על al Jehova, that is, against the Lord. In the tractate Shabbath, fol. 119, col. 2, the following also stands: אמר ריש לקיש כל העונה אמן בכל כחו פותחין לו שערי גן עדן שני פתחו שערים: that is, Resh Lakish has said that to everyone who speaks the Amen with all his strength, the gates of Paradise will be opened, because it is said (Isa 26:2): Open the gates, that the righteous people may enter, shomer emunim, that is, which preserves faithfulness. Read not shomer emunim, that is, which preserves faithfulness, but rather she-omrim Amen, that is, those who say Amen. Something similar is also found in the tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 119, col. 2, concerning the word emunim. And in the tractate Bava Batra, fol. 75, col. 2, it is written as follows: אמר ר' שמואל בר נחמני אמר ר' יונתן שלשה נקראו על שמו של הק"ב ואלו הן צדיקים ומשיח וירושלים צדיקים הא דאמרן משיח דכתיב וזה שמו אשר יקראו ה' צדקנו וירושלים דכתיב שמה אלף ושמנה עשר אלף ושם העיר מיום י"י שמה אל תקרי שמה אלא שמה that is, Rabbi Samuel, son of Nachmani, says that Rabbi Jochanan said: Three are called by the name of the Holy and Blessed God, namely the righteous, the Messiah, and Jerusalem. As for the righteous, this is proven from what was said (from Isa 43:7). The Messiah (is called by the name of God, Jehova) because it is written (Jer 23:6): And this shall be his name, that one shall call him, Jehova who is our righteousness. Jerusalem (is so called) because it is written (Ezek 48:35): Thus it shall have eighteen thousand rods round about, and thereafter the city shall be called Jehovah shammah, that is, Jehova is there; read not shammah, that is, there, but rather shemah, that is, her name, meaning it shall be called Jehova. In the tractate Eruvin, fol. 19, col. 1, it is taught that the fire of hell has no power over the wicked Israelites, and the following reason is given for this: שעמדו על פתחה של גיהנם ומעלין כל אדם מישראל שיש לו מצות כרימון שנ' כצלה שערמון that is, because they are full of commandments (of God) like a pomegranate (is full of red seeds), as it is said (Song 4:3): Kefelach harimmón rakkathech, that is, your temples (your cheeks) are like a piece of a pomegranate. Rabbi Shimon ben Lakish has said: read not rakkathech, that is, your temples, but rather rukkithech, that is, your emptiness, for even those who are empty among you are stuffed full of commandments, as a pomegranate is full. In the tractate Niddah, fol. 73, col. 1, the following also stands: כל השונה הלכות בכל יום מובטח לו שהוא בן העולם הבא that is, whoever learns a Halacha, that is, a Talmudic ordinance, every day is assured that he is a child of eternal life, as it is said (Hab 3:6): Halichoth olam lo, that is, his ways are eternal. Read not halichoth, that is, ways, but rather halachoth, that is, ordinances. Similar examples are also to be found in the tractate Pesachim, fol. 49, col. 2, and Sota, fol. 13, col. 2, and Sanhedrin, fol. 22, col. 1, and Chagiga, fol. 14, col. 1, as well as Gittin, fol. 56, col. 2, and many other places.

The eighth reason why the Talmud is not the Word of God is that foolish and untrue explanations are put forward in it for why this or that came to pass. In the tractate Sota fol. 13. col. 2. it is written as follows: אמר רב יהודה אמר רב that is, Rabbi Jehuda said that Raf, or if you prefer, Rabbi Chama, the son of Channina, said: why did Joseph die before his brothers? Because he lorded it over others (and conducted himself in a domineering manner). And in the tractate Nedarim, at fol. 32. col. 1., the following is read: א"ר אבהו אמר רבי אלעזר מפני מה נענש אברהם אבינו שנשתעבדו בניו למצרים מאתים ועשר שנים מפני שעשה אנגרייא בתלמידי חכמים שנ' וירק את חניכיו ילידי ביתו ושמואל אמר מפני שהפריז על מדותיו של הקב"ה שנ' במה אדע כי אירשנה ורבי יוחנן אמר שהפריש בני אדם מלהכנס תחת כנפי השכינה that is, Rabbi Abbu says that Rabbi Elieser said: why was our father Abraham punished, so that his children were in Egyptian bondage for two hundred and ten years? Because he compelled the disciples of the sages (who had studied the Law under him) into service (so that they had to fight against those who had taken his brother Lot captive as prisoners), as it is said (Gen 14:14): And he armed his trained men (or disciples) who were born in his house. Samuel, however, says (that it happened) because he multiplied his words beyond the attributes of God, as it is said (Gen 15:8): By what shall I know that I shall possess it? But Rabbi Jochanan said (that the reason was) because he separated the people (and returned them to the king of Sodom), so that they did not come under the wings or pinions of the Divine Majesty (that is, so that they were not converted to the true religion and faith in God), as it is said (Gen 14:24) (that the king of Sodom had said to Abraham: Give me the people, but keep the goods for yourself). So too in the tractate Sota, fol. 10. col. 1., the following is to be read: מפני מה נענש אסא מפני שעשה אנגריא בתלמידי חכמים שנ' המלך אסא השמיע את כל יהודה אין נקי מאי אין נקי אמר רב יהודה אמר רב אפילו חתן מחדרו וכלה מחופתה that is, why was Asa punished (so that in his old age he was sick in his feet, as may be seen in 1 Kgs 15:23)? Because he compelled the disciples of the sages into service, as it is said (in v. 15 of the aforementioned chapter): But King Asa caused all Judah to be assembled by public proclamation, and no one was exempted. What does it mean, "and no one was exempted"? Raf Jehuda said that Raf said that even the bridegroom had to leave his chamber and the bride her bridal bed (and perform compulsory labor).

Also read in the Jalkut chadash, fol. 69, col. 2, numero 150, under the title David, from the Jalkut Shimoni on Ezekiel, fol. 72, col. 4, num. 377, is the claim that Adam was punished on account of the king of Tyre, namely Hiram, and the words read as follows: אמר הקב"ה לחירם בשבילך קפחתי מיתה על אדם הראשון : that is, the Holy and Blessed God said to Hiram: on your account I punished the first man with death. Concerning Moses, it is also written in the aforementioned Jalkut chadash, fol. 129, col. 1, numero 45, under the title Moshe, as follows: משה שהכניס הערב רב תחת כנפי השכינה נענש על ידם שלא בא לארץ ישראל : that is, because Moses brought the mixed multitude (mentioned in Exod 12:38) under the wings of the Divine Majesty, he was punished on their account by not being permitted to enter the land of Israel. Concerning Jacob, a strange reason is likewise given in the aforementioned Jalkut chadash, fol. 91, col. 3, numero 161, as to why he was punished through his daughter Dinah and her violation, of which one may read in Gen 34:2, and it is written there as follows: בשביל שאמר יעקב ויקרא לו אל אלהי ישראל שמשמעותו שישאל שהוא יעקב הוא אלוה אמר לו הק"ב אני אלוה בעליונים ואתה בתחתונים בחמיה אפילו ומן הכנסת אינו : that is, because Jacob (as one may read in Gen 33:20) said, "And he called himself: Israel is God," which properly means that Israel, namely Jacob, is God, God said to him: I am God among those above (in heaven), and you wish to be God among those who are below (on earth); a servant of the synagogue does not make himself a prince, and yet you make yourself a prince! Therefore he was punished through Dinah. But is this not once again a horrifying Jewish distortion of Scripture? For the words of Gen 33:20 must not be interpreted in the manner described, as though they should mean "And he called himself: Israel is God," but rather "And he called upon the name of the mighty God of Israel." How then can this serve as proof that Jacob presented himself as a god on earth and was punished for it?

Since it is now sufficiently evident from the foregoing what a worthless book the Talmud is, inasmuch as it contains blasphemous things against the Divine Majesty, no small number of matters that run directly contrary to Holy Scripture, many gross lies and tasteless fables, and foolish interpretations of Holy Scripture; whereas in the New Testament, on the other hand, nothing is found but pure truth and comforting instruction on how one ought to serve God and one's neighbor and attain eternal salvation: the Jews have absolutely no cause to despise it in the manner indicated in the preceding seventh chapter, but ought rather, from the contents of the New Testament and of their Talmud, to recognize and confess that the former is a divine book, while the latter is a godless book that leads into great error and darkness. This is confirmed by the words of Ps 143:3 and Lam 3:6, "He has set me in darkness, like those who are eternally dead," which are expounded in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 24, col. 1, with reference to the Babylonian Talmud, where it is written as follows: בְּמַחְשָׁכִים הוֹשִׁיבֵנִי עוֹלָם אָמַר יִרְמְיָה זֶה תַּלְמוּד שֶׁל בְּבֵל : that is: "He has set me in darkness, like those who are eternally dead. Rabbi Jeremiah has said: this is the Babylonian Talmud." Concerning these words, Rabbi Solomon Jarchi writes that this Talmud is called a darkness for the following reason: שְׂאִין נוֹחִין זֶה עִם זֶה וְתַלְמוּדָם סִפֵּק בֵּינָם, that is, because they (namely, the Talmudic teachers) are not in agreement with one another, and their teaching is doubtful in their own hands. If, then, the Talmud is, according to its own teaching, a darkness, what light can one vainly seek within it that is supposed to show the way to salvation? It is likewise to be rationally concluded from all the foolish things and tasteless fables pointed out in this chapter that what was adduced above in the first chapter from Jewish books, namely that everything contained in the Talmud is the Word of God, is pure fabrication and false pretense.

But if the Talmud is such a wicked book, how does that square with what is written in the tractate Kidduschin, fol. 40, col. 2, where it is taught: תלמוד גדול: שהתלמוד מביא לידי מעשה, that is, "The Talmud is great, for the Talmud leads to practice, or exercise"? If one wishes to understand this as meaning that it leads men to blasphemy, lying, perversion of Scripture, and other shameful vices, then such words are true, as has been sufficiently demonstrated from what preceded. But if one wishes to say that it guides men toward the fear of God and the duty owed to God and one's neighbor, then it is untrue. With that, however, let enough be said on the matter.

Chapter IX.

In which it is shown in how many different ways the Law is expounded according to the teaching of the Jews, and how unreasonably they interpret it in many places, and also what the cause of their lack of understanding in the interpretation of Scripture is.

Although in the preceding chapter many foolish Jewish interpretations of Holy Scripture were brought to light, of which not the slightest trace is to be found in the New Testament, the godless Jews nevertheless have the audacity to claim slanderously that the holy Evangelists and Apostles were ignorant men who falsely cited and perverted the Holy Scripture of the Old Testament, and who sometimes adduced something as proof of their assertions that is entirely unsuited to that purpose; I have therefore deemed it necessary to show in this chapter in how many ways the Law can be expounded according to the teaching of the Rabbis, and in how unreasonable and absurd a manner they are accustomed to citing the Word of God in support of their invented foolishness.

Regarding the methods of interpreting the Law, Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes on the words of Gen 33:20, "And he (namely Jacob) called upon the name of the mighty God of Israel," in the following manner: רבותינו דרשו שהק"ב קרא, ודברי תורה כפטיש יפוצץ סלע מתחלקים לכמה טעמים ליעקב אל, that is, our Rabbis interpret this to mean that God called Jacob a mighty GOD, and the words of the Law are like a hammer that shatters a rock asunder, and they are divided into many meanings. And in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 34, col. 1, on the words of Jer 23:29, "Is not my word like a fire, says the LORD, and like a hammer that breaks the rock in pieces?", the following is taught: מה פטיש זה מתחלק לכמה ניצוצות אף מקרא אחד יוצא לכמה טעמים, that is, just as a hammer is divided into many sparks, so too does a single verse (of Holy Scripture) have many meanings or interpretations. It also stands in the tractate Sopherim, in the sixteenth chapter, fol. 13, col. 3, in the Amsterdam Talmud, as follows on this matter: אמר רבי ינאי תורה שנתן הקב"ה למשה נתנה לו בארבעים ותשע פנים טהור שנאמר דגלו בגימטריא ארבעים ותשע הוא, that is, Rabbi Jannai said: God gave the Law, which He gave to Moses, to him in such a way that a thing can be considered unclean in forty-nine ways and clean in forty-nine ways, as it is said (Song 2:4): ודגלו Vediglo, that is, "And his banner," for the word Vediglo, through Gematria (when the letters are converted into a number), yields forty-nine. But if this is not an absurd interpretation of the passage Vediglo, how can it be applied to the methods of interpreting the Law, given that not the slightest mention of the Law and its interpretation is made there? One could just as well prove by such a method that the Jews are to be regarded as blockheads in two hundred and sixty ways, because Gen 20:17 reads וחמורו Vachamoro, i.e., "And his donkey," since this yields two hundred and sixty by Gematria. Likewise, in the book Pesikta rabbetha (or rabbesa), fol. 23, col. 1, it is read: התורה נדרשת בארבעים ותשע פנים, that is, the Law is explained in forty-nine ways.

In general, however, it is held and taught among the Jews that the Law can be interpreted in seventy ways, concerning which it is written in the Baal Turim on the word שמע Schema, hear, Deut 6:4, as follows: עין דשמע גדולה שע' שמות: יש לישראל ונתן להם תורה שיש לה ע' שמות ונדרשת בע' פנים (which makes seventy in number) is great, because Israel has seventy names, and (God gave them) the Law, which has seventy names, and the same is also interpreted in seventy ways, in order to make a distinction among the seventy nations. And in Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 61, col. 2, in the Parascha Vajeze Jaacob, these words appear: שבעים פנים לתורה הכל אמת, that is, the Law has seventy ways (of interpretation), and they are all true. Likewise, in the book Mattath jab fol. 46, col. 1, in the Parascha Bechukothai, the following is read on this subject: כמי שיש להקדוש ברוך הוא ע' שמות כך תורה הוא ע' שמות של הקדוש ברוך הוא, נדרשת בע' פנים עד ע' שמות, that is, just as the holy and blessed God has seventy names, so the Law is interpreted in seventy ways, in consideration of the seventy names of the holy and blessed God. That the Law is interpreted in seventy ways is demonstrated by Rabbi Bechai in his commentary on the five books of Moses, in the Parascha Mischpatim, fol. 99, col. 4, with the word להורתם lehorót ham, which appears in Exod 24:12 and means "to teach them," in a laughable manner with these words: תמצא להורתם להלמ"ד והמ"ט שבעים ובתמצע תורה והו שבעים פנים לתורה lehorótham the Lamed and the Mem (or the letters L and M, of which the former is the first and the latter the last letter of the word), which together make seventy in number, and in the middle תורה Tórah (namely, between the two letters Lamed and Mem, the letters He, Vav, Resh, Tav, which, when rearranged, form תורה Tórah, meaning the Law), and this indicates that the Law is interpreted in seventy ways. Is this not a hair-splitting proof? In the Jalkut chadäsch, fol. 169, col. 3, numero 24, under the title Tóra, from the book Zijóni, fol. 10, it is also written as follows: התורה נדרשת בשבעים פנים ולכן אינה נקודה בספר תורה שאז כל השבעים פנים בכח ובפועל אבל אילו היתה נקודה פנים, בלית לא היה לה רק על דרך הנקודה והקראה, that is, the Law is interpreted in seventy ways; for this reason there are no points (or vocales) in the book of the Law, because in this way all seventy modes are present potestate & actu, that is, in potentiality and in actuality; but if the points or vocales were present in the book of the Law, it could only be interpreted according to the points and as it is read. On this subject, the following also appears in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 197, col. 1, in the Parascha Vaëthbchannán: התורה היא נדרשת לכמה טעמים עד שאמלו תיבה אחת היא מתפרשת לכמה: ענינים לפי הנקוד, that is, the Law is explained in manifold senses, such that even a single word is interpreted in many different ways, depending on how it is pointed and what vocales are assigned to it.

For this reason, it is considered among the Jews to be nothing at all absurd when the rabbis interpret a matter in a manner that runs entirely contrary to itself, and one holds it to be clean while another holds it to be unclean, one holds it to be permitted while another holds it to be forbidden; rather, they are of the opinion that both are true and are the Word of God. This is written in the commentary of Rabbi Menáchem of Recanat on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 98, col. 2, in the Parashah Vajischma Jethro, on the words of Exod 20:1, "And God spoke all these words," as follows: א"ל כמטכת חטינה בעלי אסופות אלו: תלמידי חכמים שיושבין אלו אוסרין ואלו מתירין אלו מטמאין ואלו מטהרין אלו פוסלין ואלו מחדין הללו הללו מם גס כן מן התורה: והללו אוסרין שמא יאמר אדם היאך אני למד מעתה תלמוד לומר וידבר אלהים את כל הדברים האלה לאמור כולן אל אחד נתנן פרנס אחד אמרן מפי אדון כל המעשים ב"ה ואמרו תלמוד אחד היה לו לרבי מאיר שהיה מטהר את השרץ במ"ט פנים כל זה הוא כי בדבור אשר נאמר עליו קול גדול ולא יסף היו בו כל הפנים המשתנים המתהפכים לטמא וטהור לאסור ומותר לפסול וכשר כי לא יתכן להאמין שיהיה הקול ההוא חסר כלום ולכן בגודל הקול היו הדברים מתהפכין מכל צד זה לעומת זה וכל אחד ואחד מן החכמים קבל את שלו כי לא הנביאים בלבד קבלו מהר סיני אלא אף כל החכמים העומדים בכל דור ודור כי כל אחד קבל את שלו שנאמר את כל הדברים האלה דבר יי' את כל קהלכם ועל הענין הזה אמרו אלו ואלו דברי אלהים חיים הם כי אם היה אחד מהם טועה בקבלתו לא היה אומר כך ואלו הם שבעים פנים שיש לתורה המתהפכין לכל צד כי נחלק הקול ההוא לע: ענפין כאשר בארנו: that is: Our rabbis, of blessed memory, have said in the tractate Chagiga (fol. 3, col. 2): The men of the assemblies are the disciples of the wise (that is, the wise men, who are often called merely disciples of the wise), who sit in the assemblies and study the Law; these hold a thing to be clean, those hold it to be unclean; these hold it to be right, those hold it to be wrong; these permit it, those forbid it. Perhaps someone might (become doubtful and) say: how then shall I now learn (since I do not know which one teaches rightly and which wrongly)? But such a person must consider that it is said: "And God spoke all these words, saying" (so everything is indeed God's Word, and he need not doubt any of it). One Father gave them all, one Ruler spoke them all, they all came from the mouth of the Lord of all works, the holy and blessed God. It is also said that Rabbi Meir had a disciple who declared vermin to be clean in forty-nine different ways. All of this is because in that speech (which God delivered to the children of Israel at the proclamation of the Law), of which it is said (Deut 5:22) that it was a great voice and nothing was added to it, all the different modes were contained, which are distinct from one another and can be turned toward the clean and the unclean, the forbidden and the permitted, the wrong and the right; for one must not believe that there was anything deficient in that voice. Therefore those words, on account of the greatness of the voice, turned on all sides against one another, and each one among the wise learned his own portion. For not only did the prophets receive (their teaching) from Mount Sinai, but also all the wise men who arise in every generation (received their teaching from there); for each one received his own portion, as it is said (Deut 5:22): "All these words the Lord spoke to your whole assembly." And for this reason they say (namely, our wise men): this and that is the Word of God (that is, the one who holds a thing to be clean, permitted, and right speaks the Word of God just as much as the one who holds it to be unclean, forbidden, and wrong). For if one had erred in his Cabbala (or tradition and teaching), it would not have been said thus. And these are the seventy modes which the Law possesses, which turn on all sides; for that same voice (through which the Law was given) was divided into seventy branches, as we have explained. That all the wise men in all ages derive their teaching from Mount Sinai is also taught in Schemoth rabba, at the end of the 28th Parashah, fol. 118, col. 1. It is thus evident from this that all rabbinic teachings, however much they may run contrary to one another and consist of whatever they will, are supposed to be the Word of God. Hence it also follows that when someone says or teaches something that does not please others, and he merely says that he learned it through the Cabbalam, or tradition, no one may contradict him; this is taught in the Talmudic tractate Rosch haschana, fol. 19, col. 1: דברי קבלה כדברי תורה דמו: that is, the words of tradition (or oral teaching) are equal to the Law.

Indeed, it is taught by the foolish rabbis that every single verse of Holy Scripture can be interpreted in sixty times ten thousand ways, concerning which the book Les arjeh fol. 96. col. 4. contains the following written passage: הנה משה רבינו ע"ה מחמת האור הגדול שהיה בו יכול לדעת כל התורה כולה בס' רבואה פירושים כדאיתא בספר כוונות האר"י זל"ו that is, Behold, our teacher Moses, upon whom be peace, was able, by virtue of the great light that was within him, to know the entire Law with its sixty times ten thousand interpretations, as may be seen in the book Cavvanoth (or Cavvónos) of Rabbi Isaac Lúrja, of blessed memory. Likewise, in the ninth Ofan of the book Megalle amykoth fol. 3. col. 2., the following is to be found: הנה מלת שרף בגימ' ששים רבואה.

פרצופים יש בעולם כנגד ששים רבוא אותיות התורה וכן יש לכל אות בתורה גם כן ששים רבוא פרצופים ששים רבוא פשטים : that is: Behold, the word Saraph שרף signifies (through Notaricon) a mystery, namely six hundred thousand forms (for the Shin or Sh signifies Schischim, sixty; the Resch or R, Ribbo, that is, ten thousand; and the Pe, Parzúphim, that is, forms), which exist in the world, in correspondence with the six hundred thousand letters of the Law. Likewise, every single letter of the Law has six hundred thousand forms and six hundred thousand literal meanings. And in the Jalkut chadash, fol. 155, col. 1, numero 34, under the title Neschamoth, drawn from the book Cavvanoth, fol. 53, col. 2, and fol. 54, col. 1, the following is read: כללות הנשמות הם ששים רבוא והתורה היא שורש הנשמות דישאל ויש ששים רבוא פירושים לכל פסוק שבתורה וכל נשמה ונשמה כפי עצמה נתהוה מפירוש כל אחד יקרא התורה כפי הפירוש המגיע לו אשר משם נבראת נשמתו ויש כמה נשמות שכוללות כמה פירושים ומשה רבינו ע"ה היה כלול מכל הששים רבוא ובכל לילה כשהאדם ישן אם זוכה עולה נשמתו וקרא שם הפ' השייך לו בפסוק אחד ובלילה : that is: The total number of souls amounts to six hundred thousand (that is, six hundred thousand), and the Law is the foundation (or origin) of the Israelite souls; and every single verse that is in the Law has six hundred thousand interpretations. Likewise, every soul is in itself formed from one interpretation, and in the future each person will read the Law according to the interpretation that pertains to him, from which his soul was created. There are also many souls that comprehend many interpretations within themselves, and our teacher Moses, upon whom be peace, was composed of all six hundred thousand together. Also, every night when a person sleeps, provided he is worthy of it, his soul ascends (into Heaven) and reads there the interpretation that belongs to him in one verse, and on another night in another verse; and these six hundred thousand interpretations exist in the plain or literal sense (of the Law), and just as many exist also in the Aggada (that is, the fabulous narratives), and no fewer in the Cabbala, or tradition. But let this suffice concerning the methods by which the Law is to be interpreted.

Concerning the irrational citations and interpretations of Holy Scripture, these are very common in Jewish writings, as can be seen in many places in this my work; yet, for further confirmation of my assertion, I wish to point out still more such follies here, in the course of which many ridiculous fables will likewise come to light. In the first book of Moses, chapter 3, v. 23, it is written: "And the LORD God drove him (namely Adam) out of the Garden of Eden, that he might till the Adamah, that is, the earth." And in the following chapter 4, v. 14, it is read that Cain spoke thus to God: "Behold, you have driven me out this day from this Adamah, that is, earth." What these words are supposed to mean, however, is to be sought in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 179, col.

That is: the holy worlds surround one another, so that one is beneath the other, such that the navel (that is, the center) of the earth, which is called tebbel, is in the middle; and it is found that there are seven heavens which surround it, as it is said (Zech 4:2): "And indeed seven pipes." Just as the firmaments surround from above, so too do they surround from below, and in the seven round globes, that is, spheres, are the firmaments, and within them the seven earths. This mystery, however, was not given and revealed to those who divide the boundaries, namely the astronomers, who have divided all seven climates of the measurements of the earth; rather, they are a great mystery, among the mysteries of the Law: for they were all created for the severe punishments of the wicked, who have been transformed into devils, spirits, and night-witches, which are the third order of devils, who are fruitful and multiply like human beings, and eat, and drink, and die; and they are from the six earths which are beneath us, as is mentioned in the (Talmudic) tractate Chagiga and in the Sohar in the Parascha Vajikra. The seven earths are also arranged one above the other, just as the seven firmaments are, one above the other; and they are named, from the bottom upward, as follows. The first is called Erez battachtónah, that is, the lowest earth; the second Adamáb (or Adómoh); the third Arka; the fourth Gè; the fifth Neschija; the sixth Zija; and the seventh Tébbel, which is the highest of them all and lies beneath the springs of life, as it is said (Ps 9:9): "And He will judge the Tébbel, that is, the earth, with righteousness." Now when the first man (Adam) was driven out of Paradise, the holy and blessed GOD banished him into the Erez battachtónah, that is, the lowest earth, which is the place of darkness, where there is absolutely nothing and which serves no purpose whatsoever, for there are no fruits therein, inasmuch as the moon has nothing of its own. And after Adam had entered therein, a fear and terror came over him, and a very great darkness, and the blade of the turning sword (mentioned in Gen 3:24) gleamed on all sides and corners of that earth, so that he had no place therein to hide himself: for he was driven out of Paradise on the eve of the Sabbath, and sat therein throughout the entire Sabbath until its end, and thought upon repentance (that he wished to do penance for the sin he had committed); and the holy and blessed GOD caused him to be brought up to the Adamáb, which is the second earth from the bottom upward, as it is said (Gen 3:23): "And the LORD God drove him out of Paradise, that he might till the Adamáb, that is, the earth." Upon this Adamáb there is a light which shines from its firmament, and there are found therein the forms of the stars and planets. As for the form of the human beings therein, there are giants of great bodily stature, who were begotten by the first man (Adam) during those hundred and thirty years in which he begot devils, spirits, and night-witches; for Lilith (or Lilis) came to

Adam against his will and was inflamed by him (that is, lay with him); and those beings are always sorrowful, in affliction and sighing, and there is no joy whatsoever among them. Such hosts of evil spirits can also fly from that Adamáb into this Tébbel, or earth, upon which we stand, and are made into harmful devils, and they go back again and offer their prayers to GOD the Creator of the world, and remain in their place, and sow seed upon the earth, which grows up, whereupon they thresh the fruit and eat it. There is, however, no wheat therein, nor any of the seven kinds of fruits for which the land of Israel is praised. In this place Cain and Abel were born to him (to Adam): but when Cain had sinned, the holy and blessed GOD drove him down into that place which is called Erez, as it is said (Gen 4:14): "Behold, you have driven me out this day from the Adamáb (from that place which is called Adamáb), and I must be a fugitive and a wanderer upon the Erez." When he was driven from the Adamáb and expelled from it, he spoke (the words of Gen 4:14): "It will come to pass that everyone who finds me will kill me." And this signifies the mystery of the blade of the turning sword, which turned against him on all sides and gleamed to slay him. And it came to pass that out of great fear he thought upon repentance, and the holy and blessed GOD caused him to be brought up to the Arka, and he begot children therein. Upon this Arka there is a light which shines from the sun, and seeds are sown therein and trees are planted, but there is neither wheat therein nor any of the seven kinds of fruits. All those who dwell therein are from the children of Cain, and each of them has two heads. Some of them are tall of body, but some are very small, and they do not have the complete and steadfast knowledge that the other human beings who dwell upon the Tébbel possess. They are also sometimes righteous or pious and turn from evil to good; but sometimes they turn to evil, in order to do harm to the people who are here upon the Tébbel, and they die like other human beings. But behold, Adam remained upon the Adamáb until Seth was born, whereupon he ascended and passed through three earths, and continued ascending until he came to the Tébbel, which is the seventh earth upon which we dwell and the highest of all seven; and when he had ascended, he came forth into this world from the place of the Temple (at Jerusalem), which is called by the same names as those places in which he had previously dwelt, namely Erez and Adamah, as it is said (Exod 20:24): "Make me an altar of Adamah, that is, earth." Thus the first man (Adam) leaped over three earths, namely Ge, Neschia, and Zija. Ge is a very great and extensive place, for therein is the length of Hell, inasmuch as Hell is called Gê ben Hinnom, that is, the Valley of the Son of Hinnom; and behold, upon those three earths, Ge, Neschia, and Zija, all those who built the tower at Babel were scattered, and they begot sons and daughters therein. The holy and blessed GOD, however, caused them to be brought thither through the mystery of Gilgul (that is, the transmigration of souls from one body into another, of which a detailed account is to be given below in the first chapter of the second part), on account of the sin of having built the tower through an impure name of an evil spirit, as it is said (Gen 11:4): "And let us make a name," that is, properly speaking, through the power of an impure name, as we have explained. And because the place of the earth Gê is near to the place of the element of burning fire, those people who dwell therein in all glory have wealth and precious stones. Whoever among the people who dwell here in the Tebbel comes thither, either through the transmigration of souls or is brought thither by them out of desire and longing for that wealth, to him they give thereof. Sometimes one also ascends to the place called Neschia (from Nascha, which means to forget), because he is forgotten there like a dead man from the heart, and then descends again to the place Gê, so that he does not know from which place he came. Behold, this place Gê is in the middle of the seven earths, and is called Gê ben Hinnom, that is, the Valley of the Son of Hinnom, and from it a strip extends into this Tebbel, which is likewise called Gê ben Hinnom after its name, because it is the place of the Valley of the Son of Hinnom which lies near Jerusalem, as it is said (Isa 31:9): "He who has his fire in Zion and his furnace in Jerusalem." All those people who dwell in Gê understand the art of sorcery, and are more skilled in this art than others. They sow seed and plant trees, but there is therein neither wheat nor any of the seven kinds of fruits. The fifth earth is called Neschija, and therein are small and short people who in the German language are called dwarves, and they have no noses; rather, in the place of noses they have two holes through which the breath passes that they draw in; and everything they do they forget immediately, and for this reason this earth is also called Neschija, which signifies forgetfulness: for behold, the nose causes memory, as it is said (Isa 48:9): "And for the sake of your praise I will stop up my nostrils for my own sake" (that is, as it is here intended to be interpreted: I will stop up my nostrils so that I may forget your sins), because memory blows through it to everything that is fitting for it. They also sow and plant trees, but there is therein neither wheat nor any of the seven kinds of fruits. The sixth earth is called Zija, and the place corresponds to its name (for זֵיָא Zija means a dry and arid place). It is entirely dry, and the people therein are beautiful in form and appearance, and they seek and search for spring water or rivers. They go into the midst of the water, and sometimes ascend through the water into this Tebbel, or earth, upon which we dwell. Among those people there is more faith or fidelity than among other people, and among them are good inhabitants and great wealth. They sow little on account of the dryness which is therein, and plant trees, but they do not thrive; and all their desire and longing is directed toward devouring the people who are from here, namely the earth called Tebbel. Of all the seven earths mentioned, there is none where the inhabitants have bread, except the people who are here, because the Tebbel is the highest of all. There is also a brief summary of the likeness of those earths upon this earth Tebbel, and it has those same names of the seven earths and their nature, and therein dwell various peoples differing from one another, as it is said (Ps 104:24): "How manifold are your works, O LORD! You have ordered them all wisely." In the Parascha Vajikra the same author (namely Rabbi Shimon ben Jochai, in the book Sohar) also says that between those seven earths are Paradise and Hell with their seven dwellings; and that Raf Hamnuna was punished for this reason, because he was unwilling to believe it, as is reported therein in the Sohar. These are the words of the book Emek hammelech, from which it may be seen how foolishly the Holy Scripture is therein adduced and interpreted as proof.

Occasioned by this Jewish foolishness concerning the seven terrestrial spheres, I must report yet further what is found on this subject in the Rabbinical books. In the great Jalkut Rubeni, at fol. 2. col. 4., from the book Chésed Abraham, the names of the aforementioned seven earths appear in a somewhat altered form, and they are there called ארץ Erez, אדמה Adamáh, חרבה Chárba, יבשה Jabbáscha, ארקא Arka, תבל Tébbel, and חֶלֶד Chéled, and thereafter follows: ויש מהם שראשו להם ש"ס מיני בריות יש בתבל שמהם שראשו דומה לארי וגופו לאדם. דומה לאדם וגופו לארי. ויש מהם שראשו דומה לנחש וגופו דומה לאדם ויש מהם להיפך. יש להם ב' ראשים ד' ידיים וגוף אחד וכרס אחד וב' רגלים. וכשיושבים חומים לאדם אחד וכרס אחד ושני רגלים. ולא עוד אלא בשעה שהם אוכלים ושותים חומים לכ' בני אדם וכשהם אוכלים עושים מריבה זה עם זה ואומרים זה לזה אתה אכלת יותר ממני: ואתה שתית יותר ממני that is: there are in those same three hundred and sixty-five kinds of creatures (namely, human beings). On the Tebbel there are some whose head resembles a lion but whose body resembles a man; others whose head resembles a man but whose body resembles a lion. Some have a head like a serpent and a body like a man; with others, however, the reverse is the case. Some have two heads and four hands, and one body, one belly, and two feet; and when they sit together, it appears as though they were but one person, with one belly and two feet. Moreover, at the time when they eat and drink, they appear to be two persons; and when they eat, they quarrel with one another, and one says to the other: you have eaten more than I, and drunk more than I. Concerning this, the following is also read at fol. 3. col. 1. in the aforementioned great Jalkut Rubeni, from the book Sóde rase: של ויש"ס מיני בריות של ויש דומה ראשו לאדם: וגופו לארי ויש להיפך. ויש שראשו כנחש ויש כשור ויש בב' ראשים וד' ידיים וגוף אחד וכרס אחד וב' רגלים ועל תבל עתיד הקב"ה לשפוט שנאמר והוא בצדק that is: On the Tébbel there are mountains and hills, etc., and three hundred and sixty-five different kinds of human beings. Some have a head like a man and a body like a lion, but with others the opposite is the case. Some have a head like a serpent, others like an ox; some have two heads, others have three heads, and four hands, and one body, as well as one belly and two feet; and the holy, blessed God will execute His judgment over the Tébbel, as it is said (Ps 9:9): And He will judge the Tébbel with righteousness.

The following is also written in the book Schalschéleth hakkabbála fol. 75. col. 1. 2. concerning such strangely formed human beings: חילוק חילוק שאחד חילוק הלשונות השי"ת ברא כמה מיני מונסטר בלע"ז משונות בכמה מקומות ואזכיר לפניך קצתם באפריקה יש בריות משונות שהם אנדרוגינוס ומשתמשים זה בזה. בגלילות סוטיאה יש אנשים שאין להם אלא עין אחד במצחו. באינדיאה יש שאין להם פה לאכול ולשתות. בהרי אינדיאה יש מין אדם שיש לו זנב ואין להם מנהג אדם. ויש מין שיש לו גוף סוס וראש איל ויש במצחו קרן שמאיר מאד. ויש מין אדם שיש לו ג' שורות שיניים וראש אדם וגוף אריה. ויש מין אדם שאין אלא רגל אחד וכף רגלו רחבה ורצים מאד. יש מי שאין לו גרגרת ועיניהם על השדרה ויש מי שגופם מלא צמח ושיניהם כמו של כלב. בסוטיאה יש מי שיש להם צורת אדם ורגליהם כסוס ונקראו סטירחש. ויש מין בריות שבזמן הקיץ נהפכים בצורת זאב ובזמן הקור שבים בצורת אדם ועובדים מזל מאדים וזוכחים לפניו אנשים. בליביאה יש אנשים שונאים ראית האור ואינם אוכלים בעל חי. ויש אנשים שאינם הולכים ברגליהם אלא משמימים הראש בין ירכיהם והולכים. באתיופיאה יש מי שאין להם נחירים. ויש מי שאין לו אוזן ויש מי שאין לו פה אלא נקב קטן, שעם קנה שותים. בגלילה שמצד מערב יש מי שאזניהם כל כך גדולים שמכסים כל גופם. בגלילות ארכיאה יש אנשים קטנים מאד ונשיהם יולדות בנות ה' שנים ובהיות בני ח' שנים מוקימים ויש להם מלחמות גדולות עם מין הגרובה שמכלים מהם מאד. ובאתיופיאה יש מין אדם שעומדים כמעורות ואין להם דבור אלא קול הברד; That is to say: it is said that the holy and blessed GOD, after the division of the languages, created many kinds of misshapen human beings, who are scattered across many places, and I will report to you some of them. In Africa there are various human beings who are simultaneously of male and female sex (and contrary to nature), and who lie with one another. In the borders of Scythia there are human beings who have only one eye on their forehead. In India there are those who have no mouth with which to eat and drink. In the Indian mountains there is a kind of human being that has tails and observes no human custom. There is also a kind that has a body like a horse and a head like a ram, and a very brightly shining horn on its forehead. There is also a kind of people who have three rows of teeth, a human head, and the body of a lion. One also finds a kind of human being that has only one foot, but a broad sole, and runs swiftly. There are also some who have no throat, whose eyes are on their spine. Others have their body covered in scales and teeth like dogs. In Scythia there are people who have the form of human beings and feet like a horse, and are called Satyri. There is also a kind of people who in summer are transformed into the shape of a wolf, but in winter become human beings again, and these worship the planet Mars and sacrifice human beings to it. In Libya there are people who hate the sight of light and eat nothing from any living animal. There are also people who do not walk on their feet, but rather place their head between their flanks and walk in that manner. In Ethiopia some have no nostrils, others have no ears, and others have no mouth but only a small hole, through which they drink with a reed. In the borders toward the setting of the sun, some have ears so large that they cover their entire body. In the lands of Arabia there are very small people, whose women give birth when they are five years old, and when they reach the eighth year they grow old (and grey), and these same people wage great wars against a kind of crane, which kills great numbers of them. In Ethiopia there is a kind of human being that dwells in caves and eats nothing but serpents, and cannot speak at all, but only emits a sound like an echo. These are the words of the book Schalschéleth hakkabbála, and with this enough has been said concerning the Jews' foolish fables about strangely formed human beings.

Regarding the seven firmaments, which are mentioned in the words cited shortly before from the book Emek hammélech, these are described in the Talmudic tractate Chagiga, fol. 12. col. 2., where the words read as follows: רבי יהודה שני רקיעין הן שנאמר הן לה 'אלהיך השמים ושמי השמים: ריש לקיש אמר שבעה רבין: That is: Rabbi Jehuda has said there are two firmaments, as it is said (Deut 10:14): Behold, to the LORD your God belong the heavens and the heaven of heavens. Resch Lakisch has said there are seven, namely Velon, Rakia, Schechakim, Sebbúl, Máon, Máchon, and Arabbóth, and this is demonstrated there in the following words from Holy Scripture. Concerning the third firmament, however, which is called Schechakim, one reads there: שחקים שבו רחים עומדות וטחנות מן לצדיקים שנאמר ויצו: that is, on the firmament Schechakim there stand mills in which manna is ground for the righteous, as it is said (Ps 78:23-24): And He commanded the Schechakim (that is, the clouds) from above, and opened the doors of heaven, and rained manna down upon them to eat. Concerning such mills, something may also be found in the book Jonáth illem, fol. 12. col. 1., in the 27th chapter. But is this not a subtle proof that up in the firmament there are mills? Had the supremely wise rabbis not revealed this unknown matter to us, we would never have found it from the words of David.

King David says in Ps 92:5, "For You, O Lord, have made me glad through Your work." As for the reason why he spoke these words, it is written about this in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 5. col. 2. numero 53, under the title Adam, as אחליף ליה תרעו מאדם ונתן לדוד ועל זה אמר דוד כי שמחתני ה' בפעלך וגו' ר"ל מי גרם לו חיות בהאי עלמא להיות חי פעלך שהוא אדם הראשון שהוא פעלך ולא פעלו של בשר ודם that is: The holy and blessed God showed Adam all the generations together with their preachers; He also let him see the kings whom He would set over Israel. But when He came to David, he saw that he was a dead lump, and said: I will lend him from my years (which I have yet to live); thereupon those years were taken from Adam and given to David. And for this reason David says: "For You, O Lord, have made me glad through Your work," etc., that is: Who has caused me joy in this world, that I am alive? Your work, namely the first man, is the one who is Your work and not a work of flesh and blood. I will rejoice over the work of Your hands, for he it is who caused me the joy that he did not live (the time which I live, and has given me such years from his own). That God showed Adam all the generations is also taught by the Talmud in the tractate Sanhedrin fol. 38. col. 2. and in the tractate Avoda sara fol. 5. col. 1. As for how many years Adam gave David from his own, this can be seen in the aforementioned Jalkut chadasch fol. 7. col. 1. num. 92., where it is stated that there were seventy of them.

It is forbidden in Deut 20:19 to cut down any fruit-bearing trees when a city is besieged, and the reason given for this is כי האדם עץ השדה, that is, as it has been translated in the Zurich Bible: "Is then such a tree of the field a man (that it could do harm)?" Or, as Rabbi Joseph explains it in his German-Hebrew Bible: "For the trees of the field are (or bring) food for man." In the Midrash Kobelet, however, it is cited at fol. 329, col. 1, as proof that even wolves and barren trees must give an account at the Last Judgment, where the words read as follows: אמר ר' חמא בר גוריון אפילו זאב אפילו אילני סרק עתידין ליתן דין וחשבון ורבנין מייתי לה מן הדא כי האדם עץ השדה מה האדם עתד ליתן דין וחשבון אף אילני סרק עתידין ליתן דין וחשבון, that is: Rabbi Chama, the son of Gorion, has said that even wolves and barren trees must in the future give an account, and the Rabbis prove this from the fact that it is written כי האדם עץ השדה, that is (as it is here understood in a foolish manner): "For as the man is, so is the tree of the field." Just as man will have to give an account, so too will the barren trees have to give an account.

In the prophet Hos 4:2, the murders committed are laid before the people of Israel, and it says there: "And blood touched blood."

In the Talmudic tractate Gittin, however, this matter is explained at fol. 57, col. 2 with regard to the killings of Nebuzaradan, the chamberlain or chief of the guard of King Nebuchadnezzar, by means of a great lie, as follows: אמר ר'

חייא בר אבין א"ר יהושע בן קרחה סח לי זקן אחד מאנשי ירושלים בבקעה זו הרג נבוזר אדן רב טבחים מאתים ואחת עשרה ריבוא ובירושלים הרג תשעים וארבע ריבוא על אבן אחת עד that is: Rabbi Chija, the son of Abin, has said that Rabbi Jehoshua, the son of Korcha, said: An old man from among the inhabitants of Jerusalem told me that Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guard, killed two hundred and eleven times ten thousand (that is, two million one hundred and ten thousand people) in the valley, and in Jerusalem killed ninety-four times ten thousand (that is, nine hundred and forty thousand) upon one stone, so that their blood flowed and reached the blood of Zechariah, in fulfillment of what is said: "And blood touched blood." This matter is described in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 96, col. 2 with the following circumstances: חזא דמיה דזכריה דהוה קא רתח אמר להו מאי האי אמרו ליה דם זבחים דאשתפיך אמר להו אייתו ואיתי אי דמי אמר להו לקלו לי ואיי לא סרקנא לכו לבשריכו במסרקי דפרזלא אמרו ליה האי כהן ונביא הוא דאיתנבי להו לישראל בחורבנא דירושלם וקטלוהו אמר להו אנא מפייסנא ליה אייתי רבנן קטל עילויה ולא נח אייתי דרדקי דבי רב קטל עילויה ולא נח אייתי פרחי כהונה קטל עילויה ולא נח עד דיקטל עילויה תשעין וארבעה רבוא ולא נח קרב לגביה אמר זכריה זכריה טובים שבהן איבדתם ניחא לך דאיקטלינהו that is: When he (namely Nebuzaradan, who is mentioned in 2 Kgs 25:8, after he had come to Jerusalem) saw the blood of Zechariah boiling and surging as though it were cooking, he asked them (namely the inhabitants of Jerusalem) what it was; and they answered him that it was blood from the sacrifice which had been shed. Then he said to them: bring me (cattle) so that I may (slaughter them and) test whether (the blood of the slaughtered animal) is like this (and boils in the same way). When he had slaughtered and it was not the same, he said to them: reveal it to me, or else I will have your flesh torn with iron combs. Then they said to him: this man was a priest and a prophet, and because he prophesied to the Israelites the destruction of Jerusalem, they killed him. Thereupon he said to them that he would appease him, and had the rabbis brought and killed them over it, but it did not become still. After that he had the boys fetched from the schools and killed them over it, but it did not become still either. After this he had the young priests brought and killed them over it, but it still did not become still, until he had killed ninety-four times ten thousand (that is, nine hundred and forty thousand people), and yet it did not become still. Then he went up to it and said: Zechariah, I have killed the best among them for your sake; does it please you that I should kill them all? Thereupon it immediately became still. At that moment he reflected in his mind that he wished to do penance (on account of the many murders he had committed), and said: if it went thus with those who killed only one soul, how then will it go with me (who have killed so very many people)? And he ran off and sent a testament into his house, and became a companion of the Jews and adopted the Jewish faith.

One reads in Gen 4:23 that Lamech said to his wives Ada and Zilla: "Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, and hearken to my speech: I have slain a man for my wound, and a young man for my bruise." And Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes the following in his commentary on this passage: היו נשיו פורשות ממנו מתשמיש לפי שהרג את קין ואת תובל קין בנו שהיה למך סומא ותובל קין מושכו וראה את קין ונחמה לו כחיה ואמר לאביו למשוך בקשת והרגו וכיון שידע שהוא קין זקן זקנו הכה כף that is: His wives had separated themselves from him and no longer wished to lie with him, because he had killed Cain and his son Tubal-Cain. For Lamech was blind, and his son Tubal-Cain led him; and he saw Cain, who appeared to him to be a wild beast, and said to his father that he should draw the bow and shoot at him, whereupon he killed him. But when he learned that it was Cain, his great-great-grandfather, he clapped his hands together and struck his son between them, so that he died; and his wives separated themselves from him, but he appeased them and said: "Hear my voice," etc., and excused himself by saying that he had not done it intentionally when he killed Cain and his son. Lamech must therefore have been a remarkably skilled marksman, who could aim so well even though he was blind. In the Sepher bajaschar, however, this fable is described in the Parascha Bereschith in the following manner: ולמך זקן בא בימים ותכהין עיניו ולא יכול לראות ותובל קין בנו רועה אותו ויהי היום ויצא למך בשדה ותובל קין בנו עמו ויהי הם הולכים שניהם יחד בשדה וקין בן אדם הולך ובא בשדה לקראתם כי היה למך זקן מאד ולא יוכל לראות מאד ותובל קין בנו נער קטן מאד ויאמר תובל קין אל אביו למשוך בקשתו ובמשוך אבת קשתו ויך את קין בחצים מרחוק וימיתו כי היה בעינם לחיה ויבאו החצים בגויית פגנית קין והוא דוחק מפניהם ונפל ארצה ומת. וישלם יי' לקין רעה ברעתו אשר עשה להבל והוא כדבר יי' אשר דבר לו. ויהי כאשר מת קין וילכו למך ותובל קין לראות את החיה אשר הרגו ויראו והנה קין זקנם נופל ארצה מת : ויחר ללמך מאד בעשותו הדבר הזה ויכה כף אל כף ויספוק את בנו בכפיו וימיתו. וישמעו נשי למך את הדבר אשר עשה למך ויבקשו להרגו וישנאו נשי למך אותו מהיום ההוא והלאה על אשר המית את קין ואת תובל קין ויפדו נשי למך ממנו ולא אבו לשמוע אליו כיסים וחס : ויבא למך אצל נשיו ויפצורו בם לשמוע אליו על that is: Lamech was old and well advanced in years, and his eyes grew dim so that he could not see well, and his son Tubal-Cain attended to him. It came to pass one day that Lamech went out into the field with his son, and as they were walking together in the field, Cain, the son of Adam, came toward them in the field. Now Lamech was very old and could no longer see much, and his son Tubal-Cain was a very young boy; and Tubal-Cain told his father to draw his bow, and when he drew his bow, he struck Cain from a distance with arrows and killed him, for he appeared to them as a wild beast; and the arrows entered his body, and he was far from them, and he fell to the ground and died. Thus the Lord repaid Cain with evil, according to the evil which he had done to Abel his brother, according to the word which the Lord had spoken to him. Now when Cain was dead, Lamech and Tubal-Cain went to see the wild beast they had killed, and they saw that it was Cain, their great-great-grandfather, lying dead upon the ground. Then Lamech was very angry that he had done this thing, and he clapped his hands together and struck his son with his hands and killed him. When Lamech's wives heard what he had done, they sought to kill him, and they hated him from that day forward and thereafter, because he had killed Cain and Tubal-Cain. They also separated themselves from him and would not listen to him in those days. Therefore Lamech came to his wives and urged them to hear him out concerning this matter, and said to them: "Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, and hearken to my speech." This fable may also be read in the book Schalscheleth hakkabbála, fol. 74, col. 2.

In Ps 139, at v. 16, it is written that King David said: Your eyes saw my unformed mass, when it was not yet prepared in the mother's womb. In the Jalkut Chadash, however, at fol. 154, col. 4, numero 24, under the title Neschamoth, it is sought to be proven by this that all souls, before they descend into the world, take on a body and present themselves therein before God; and the words there read as follows: כל הנשמות קודם שירדו לעולם הזה מתלבשין בגוף ובידיקן שעתיד לעמוד בע"ה' מתלבש למעלה טרם בואו לעולם ועומד לפני הק"ה בגוף ובדיקון שעתיד לעמוד בע"ה' that is: Every single soul, before it descends into this world, clothes itself with a body; and with that form in which it will stand in this world, it clothes itself up above (in heaven) before it comes into the world, and stands before God with that same body and that same form, and God adjures it (namely the body together with the soul) that it shall not sin; and this is what the words mean: Your eyes saw my unformed mass. That is, Your eyes have seen my unformed mass, namely my body, when I stood before You.

In the first book of Moses, chapter 33, v. 4, one reads: "But Esau ran to meet him (Jacob), and embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kissed him, and they wept," by which it is indicated that Esau had come to love his brother Jacob again very deeply after a long-lasting enmity. The Jews, however, understand it quite differently, and in Bereschith rabba, in the 78th Parascha, fol. 71, col. 1, concerning the word וישקהו vajischakehu, that is, "And he kissed him," which in the Hebrew text is marked above with small dots in an extraordinari or unusual manner, it is written thus: מלמד שלא בא לנשקו אלא לנשכו ונעשה צוארו של אבינו יעקב של שיש וקהו שיניו של אותו רשע ומה תלמוד לומר ויבכו אלא זה בוכה על 'צוארו וזה בוכה על שיניו ר. אבהו בשם ר' יוחנן מייתי לה מן הכא צואך כמגדל השן וגו'

i.e.: This (namely, that the word vajischakebu is marked above with small dots in this manner) teaches us that he did not come to kiss him, but to bite him; however, our father Jacob's neck was turned into marble, and the teeth of that wicked man were made blunt (when he bit into the hard neck). What then does the word ויבכו, that is, "And they wept," signify? It indicates that the one (namely Jacob) wept on account of his neck (that it had been turned into marble), while the other (Esau) wept on account of his teeth (which he had ruined by biting into Jacob's hard neck). This fable also appears in the Targum Jeruschalmi, or the Hierosolymitan Chaldean translation, on Gen 33:4. Likewise, Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes in his commentary on the words of Exod 18:4, "And he delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh," concerning Moses, that his neck was once as hard as marble, where his words read as follows: כשלו הן ואבירם על דבר המצרי ויבקש להרוג משה נעשה צוארו כעמוד של שיש that is: When Dathan and Abiram had revealed the matter concerning the Egyptian (whom Moses had struck dead, as may be read in Exod 2:11-12), (Pharaoh) sought to kill Moses, but his neck became like a pillar of marble.

Concerning Jacob, it is read in Gen 30:43 that he became exceedingly rich and had many sheep, maidservants, and menservants, and donkeys; regarding which, in the book Bereschith rabba, at the end of the 73rd Parascha, fol. 67. col. 1., a thick and fat lie is written, and reported as follows: ר' אבא בר כהנא אמר מאה ותרתי רבוון ושבעה אלפים ומאתין עדרין הוו ליה לאבינו יעקב. ר' לוי אמר ששים רבוא כלבים. רבנן אמרי מאה ועשרין רבוא: ולא פליגי מ"ד ששים רבוא לכל עדר ועדר חד that is: Rabbi Abba, the son of Cahana, has said that our father Jacob had one hundred and two times ten thousand, and seven thousand (that is, a thousand times a thousand, seven thousand, and two hundred) flocks. Rabbi Levi has said that he had six hundred thousand dogs; and our rabbis say that he had twelve hundred thousand. They are not, however, in disagreement on this point, for according to the opinion of the one who said he had six hundred thousand, there was one dog with each flock; but according to the opinion of the one who let it be known that he had twelve hundred thousand, there were two dogs with each flock.

In the fourth book of Moses, in the 16th chapter, v. 4, it is written: When Moses heard this (namely, that Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, together with their followers, had assembled against him and his brother Aaron), he fell upon his face. In the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, however, at fol. 110. col. 1., it is sought to be proven from this passage that Moses was suspected of adultery, and the words there read as follows: וישמע משה ויפול על פניו מה שמועה שמע אמר: רבי נחמני אמר רבי יונתן שחשדוהו מאשת איש שנאמר ויקנאו למשה במחנה: אמר רבי

שמואל בר יצחק מלמד שכל אחד ואחד קינא את אשתו ממש ששנאמר ומשה יקח את האהל that is: When Moses heard this, he fell upon his face. But what kind of gossip had he heard? Rabbi Samuel bar Nachmani says that Rabbi Jonathan said they had suspected him of adultery, as it is said (Ps 106:16): And they were jealous of Moses in the camp. Rabbi Samuel bar Yitzhak said: this teaches that every single one was jealous on account of his wife because of Moses, as it is said (Exod 33:7): But Moses took the tent and pitched it outside the camp. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi writes in his commentary on this passage as follows: יצא מחוץ שלא יחשדוהו עיר that is: He went out (from the camp) so that they might no longer have any suspicion against him. Likewise, in the Talmudic tractate Bava Kamma, fol. 140. col. 2., it is recorded concerning the prophet Jeremiah that he was accused of fornication or adultery, in that over the words of Jer 18:22, "For they have dug a pit to catch me, and have laid snares for my feet," the following is written there: חשדוהו מזונה רבי אליעזר אומר: חשדוהו מזונה: רבי שמואל בר נחמני אמר חשדוהו מאשת איש that is: Rabbi Eliezer says that they suspected him of fornication. Rabbi Samuel bar Nachmani said he was suspected of adultery.

Concerning Joseph, it is read in Gen 39:12 that when Potiphar's wife wanted him to lie with her, he left his garment, by which she had seized him, in her hand, fled from her, and ran out of the house. In the Talmudic tractate Sota fol. 36, col. 2, however, the following is read concerning this: תניא רבי י' 'שמעאל' אותו היום יום אידס היה והלכו כולן לבית עבודה זרה שלהן היא אמרה להן חולה היא אמרה אין לי יום שמזדקן לי יוסף כיום הזה ותתפשהו בבגדו לאמר שכבה עמי באותה שעה באתה דיוקנו של אביו ונראתה לו בחלון א"ל יוסף עתידין אחיך שיכתבו על אבני אפוד ואתה ביניהם רצונך שימחה שמך מביניהם ותקרא רועה זונות דכתיב ורועה זונות יאבד הון מיד ותשב באיתן קשתו. אמר רבי יוחנן משום ר' מאיר ששבה קשתו לאיתנה ויפוזו זרועי ידי נעצץ ידיו בקרקע ויצאת שכבת זרע מבין ציפורני ידי מיד. אביר יעקב מי גרם לו שיחקק על אבני אפוד אלא אביר יעקב משם רועה אבן ישראל משם זכה ונעשה רועה שנאמר רועה ישראל האזינה נוהג כצאן יוסף: תניא היה ראוי יוסף לצאת ממנו י"ב שבטים כדרך שיצאו מיעקב אביו שנ' אלה תולדות יעקב יוסף אלא שיצא שכבת זרע מבין ציפורני ידי ואעפ"כ יצאו מבנימין אחיו וכולן נקראו על שמו: that is, those of the house of Rabbi Ishmael teach that on that same day it was the Egyptians' festival, and that they had all gone to their idolatrous temple; and that she (namely Potiphar's wife) said to them (meaning her household members) that she was sick; but she thought to herself: I have no day on which Joseph can lie with me as this very day (since no one is at home), and she seized him by his garment and said: lie with me. At that same hour (as he lay down upon the bed with her and was about to fulfill her desire), the image of his father came and appeared to him at the window, and spoke to him: Joseph, your brothers will be written upon the stones of the ephod, and among them; do you then wish that your name be blotted out from among them, and that you be called a shepherd of harlots, as it is written (Prov 29:3): whoever is a shepherd of harlots (that is, who cleaves to harlots) loses his wealth. Immediately thereafter (as is read in Gen 49:24) his bow remained in its strength (that is, by a wholly contrary or inverted manner of speaking, his desire to have dealings with her passed away). Rabbi Jochanan said in the name of Rabbi Meir that his bow remained in its strength and the arms of his hands were made strong; he thrust his hands into the ground, and the seed went forth from the nails of his hands: from the hands of the mighty God of Jacob. Who is the cause that his name was written upon the stones of the ephod, if not the mighty God of Jacob? From thence comes the shepherd, the stone of Israel (that is, from thence he earned that he was made a shepherd), as it is said (Ps 80:2): Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, you who lead Joseph like a flock (thus, according to the Talmud and as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi expounds it here, Israel is called the flock of Joseph; which is, however, false, for the words mean nothing other than: you who lead Joseph like a flock). We learn that Joseph was worthy that twelve tribes should come forth from him, just as they came forth from his father Jacob, as it is said (Gen 37:2): And these are the generations of Jacob: Joseph. But because the seed flowed from the nails of his hands (nothing came of it); yet in the meantime they did come forth from his brother Benjamin and were named after his name. Is all of this not a shameful perversion of Scripture in the Talmud, one that the devil himself could scarcely devise any worse?

On this matter, the book Zeëna ureëna, fol. 28, col. 4, at the beginning of the Parascha Vajehi mikkéz, also contains the following written passage:

that is: The Chaskuni (which is a commentary on the Five Books of Moses) writes that, according to the Gemara in the tractate Sôta, Joseph had wanted to lie with his master's wife by force; however, the form of Jacob appeared to him, and he restrained his desire, and drove the ten nails of his ten fingers into the ground, and let seed go forth, etc. Also, that he was supposed to have twelve tribes, just as his father had. For this reason he had only two children, because he lost ten children by letting seed go forth from his ten fingers. And for this reason, Joseph was also commanded to spend ten years in prison. In the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 92, col. 2, n. 179, under the title Jacob, it is likewise read that Joseph had wanted to lie with Potiphar's wife, but that GOD came to him in the form of his father, by which he was restrained from doing so. But in the book Ammude ha Schiva, fol. 49, col. 4, at the end, and fol. 50, col. 1, at the beginning, the following is read on this matter: הַבִּיא הַקֵּב "הַאִיקוֹנִין שֶׁל אָבִיו וְנִתְבַּיֵּשׁ וּבִרְחָ פַּעַם שְׁנִיָּה: נִכְנַס נִטְלָה הַקֵּב" הַאֵבֶן שֶׁתִּיהָ: אָמַר לוֹ אֵל תִּגַּע בָּהּ וְאִם אַתָּה לֹא תִּגַּע בָּהּ הֲרִינִי מִשְׁלִיכֻ וּמַחְרִיב אֶת הָעוֹלָם שֶׁנִּי וְתַפְּזוּ זֵרוּעֵי יָדַי מִיַּד אֲבִיר יַעֲקֹב וְגו' that is: The holy and blessed GOD caused the form of his father to appear before him (when he wanted to lie with his master's wife), and he was ashamed and took to flight. But when he entered a second time (to lie with her), the holy and blessed GOD took the foundation stone (of the abyss) and said to him: do not touch her; but if you do touch her, I will cast it away and destroy the world, as it is said (Gen 49:24): And the arms of his hands were made strong through the hand of the Mighty One of Jacob, etc.

King David says in Ps 92:11: "You have exalted my horn like that of a unicorn; I have been anointed with fresh oil." Concerning this, the following is written in Jalkut chadasch fol. 66, col. 3, numer. 101, from the Jalkut Schimoni on the first book of Samuel, fol. 17, col. 3, num. 124: כִּיּוֹן שְׂבָא שְׂמוּאֵל לְמִשְׁחוֹ: אֶת וּבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בָּרַח וְהַשֶּׁמֶן לְאַחֲרָיו וְכִיּוֹן שְׂבָא לְמִשְׁחוֹ אֶת דָּוִד: בָּא הַשֶּׁמֶן וּרְץ מִעַצְמוֹ וַיִּצֵּק בְּרֹאשׁ דָּוִד הַדָּא הוּא דְכָתִיב וְתָרַם כְּרָאֵם קִרְנֵי בְלוּתֵי בְשָׁמֵן רַעְנָן וְגו' that is: After Samuel had come to anoint the sons of Jesse, the oil fled; but when he came to anoint David, the oil ran forward of its own accord and poured itself upon David's head, and this is what is written (Ps 92:11): "You have exalted my horn like that of a unicorn; I have been anointed with fresh oil."

In the second book of Samuel, in the 22nd chapter, v. 29, or according to others v. 30, it is written that David said to GOD: Through Your help I run (or break) through a troop, and with my GOD I leap over the walls. The reason, however, why he is said to have spoken these words is found in the Midrash Tehillim on Ps 18, fol. 17, col. 2, in these words: ר' חִיָּיא בִּשְׁמֵי ר' לֵוִי אָמַר מִשְׁעָה: שְׂאֵמֶר דָּוִד לְיִשְׂרָאֵל לַעֲשׂוֹת מִלְחָמָה עִם אֲנָשֵׁי יְבוּס הַתַּחֲזִיל אֹמֵר כָּל מַכָּה יְבוּס בְּרָאשָׁנָה יִהְיֶה לְרֹאשׁ וְלִשְׂרָר. מַה עָשָׂה יוֹאָב יָבוֹא ג' בְּרוּשׁ רַעְנָן וְקִבְעוּ בְּצַד הַחוּמָה וְכַפֵּף רֹאשׁוֹ שֶׁהִיא דֶּק וְאַחַז בּוֹ דָּוִד וְקָפֵץ יוֹאָב מֵעַל רֹאשׁוֹ וְנִתְלָה בְּרֹאשׁוֹ וְדָלַג עַל הַחוּמָה אָמַר דָּוִד וְהַלִּפֵּי צָדִיק חֲסֵד וְיוֹכִיחֵנִי מִדֵּת עָשָׂה וְעַמֵּד הַקֵּב"ה וְקָצַר אֶת הַחוּמָה וְעָלָה דָּוִד אַחֲרָיו שֶׁנִּי 'אֲרוּן גֹּד וּבִאֲלֵהִי אֲדַלֵּג שׁוּר: that is: Rabbi Chijja said in the name of Rabbi Levi: at the time when David said to the people of Israel that they should make war against the inhabitants of the city of Jebus (concerning which 1 Chr 11:3 ff. is to be read), he began and said: Whoever strikes Jebus (that is, the Jebusites) first shall be a head and chief (or prince). What did Joab do? He brought a green fir tree and planted it in the ground at the side of the city wall, and bent its top, which was tender; David then held it, and Joab leaped over David's head, grabbed hold of the fir tree, and sprang (from its top) onto the city wall. Then David spoke the words of Ps 141:5: Let the righteous smite me kindly and reprove me. What did the holy blessed GOD do: He made the wall shorter, and David climbed up after him, as it is said: With my GOD I leap over the walls.

In the aforementioned second book of Samuel, it is read in 2 Sam 15:32 concerning David: And David came עַד הָרֹאשׁ ad barosch, that is, to the summit (namely of the Mount of Olives, which is mentioned in v. 30) in order to worship God there; from which it is clearly evident that David's aim and purpose was to call upon God the Lord in his distress at that time. In the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, however, at fol. 107, col. 1, it is foolishly claimed that these words prove he had intended to commit idolatry there, where it is written as follows: אמר רב יהודה אמר רב בקש דוד לעבוד עבודה זרה שנ' ויהי דוד בא עד הראש אשר ישתחוה שם לאלהים ואין ראש אלא עבודה זרה שנ' הוא צלמא רישיה דדהב טב והנה לקראתו חושי הארכי קרוע כתנת ואדמה על ראשו אמר לו דוד יאמרך מלך שכמותך יעמוד עבודה זרה אמר לו מלך שבמומי וחתננו בנ' מוטב יעבוד עבודה זרה ואל יתחלל שם שמים: that is, Rav Jehuda has said that Rav said that David had desired to commit idolatry, as it is said: And David came to the summit (of the mountain, which is called rosch) so that he might worship there לאלהים lelohim, "that is, the gods" (as the Talmud wishes to understand it, namely the idols, which are also called Elohim, whereas here it must be interpreted as God) ; for rosch (which in the Hebrew language means a head, as well as a peak, summit, or height) signifies nothing other than an idol, as it is said (Dan 2:32): The head of that image (in the Chaldean original text it is called rescheb, and in the Chaldean language the word resch means as much as rosch among the Hebrews) was of fine gold; and behold, Hushai the Archite met him with his coat torn and earth upon his head, and said to David: it will be said, should a king such as you are practice idolatry? But he answered him: should a king such as I am have his own son seek to kill him? It is better that I commit idolatry than that the name of God be publicly profaned. Is this not a senseless proof, that because it is reported of that image which King Nebuchadnezzar saw in a dream that its head, which is called rosch, was of fine gold, David must therefore have wished to practice idolatry because he went to the summit of the mountain, which is called rosch?

In Ps 51:9, it is written that King David said to God: "Purge me with hyssop, that I may be clean; wash me, that I may be whiter than snow," with which words he called upon and besought the Lord God to cleanse him of his sins and to forgive them. In the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, however, at fol. 107, col. 1, 2, it is foolishly claimed that this proves David had been a leper, and the words there read as follows: אמר רב יהודה אמר רב ששה חדשים נצטרע דוד ונסתלקה:

הימנו שכינה ופרשו הימנו סנהדרין: נצטרע דכתיב תחטאני באזוב ואטהר תכבסני ומשלג אלבין: נסתלקה הימנו שכינה דכתיב השיבה לי ישועך ורוח נדיבה תסמכני: ופרשו ממנו סנהדרי דכתיב ישובו לי יראיך וגו': 'ששה חדשים מנלן דכתיב והימים אשר מלך דוד על ישראל ארבעים שנה בחברון מלך שבע שנים ובירושלם מלך שלשים ושלוש שנים וכתוב בחברון מלך על יהודה שבע שנים וששה חדשים והני ששה חדשים לא קחשיב שמע מינה נצטרע: that is: Rabbi Jebuda reports that Raf said that David had been a leper for six months, that the Shekhinah, or Divine Majesty, had departed from him, and that those who sat in the Synedrion, or High Council, had separated themselves from him. He was a leper because it is written (Ps 51:9): "Purge me with hyssop, that I may be clean; wash me, that I may be whiter than snow." The Shekhinah, or Divine Majesty, departed from him because it is written (v. 14 of the same Ps 51): "Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation, and let Thy willing spirit uphold me." Those who sat in the Synedrion, or High Council, separated themselves from him because it is written (Ps 119:79): "Let those who fear Thee turn to me," etc. But how is it proved that he was a leper for six months? Because it is written (1 Kgs 2:11): "And the time that David reigned over Israel was forty years: seven years he reigned in Hebron, and thirty-three years in Jerusalem." And it is written (2 Sam 5:5): "In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months." These six months, however, are not counted in the aforementioned passage (1 Kgs 2:11); therefore, conclude from this that he was a leper during that time. What a splendid proof this is! Concerning this leprosy, the book Maor hakkaton, fol. 62, col. 4, in the Parashah Mezora, may also be consulted.

In the 22nd Psalm, verse 2, it is written that King David said to God: "My God, why have you forsaken me?" The reason why he said this, however, is found in the little book Ben Sira fol. 11. col. 1. in these words: בזמן שמצא דוד לשאול שוכב בצהרים והיה אבנר שוכב בפתח ראשו בפתח אחד ורגליו באחד בא ונכנס מבין רגליו וזקופות ונפל צפחת המים וכשבא לצאת מבין רגליו ופשט אבנר רגליו וכסהו ובהם היו עליו כשני עמודים גדולים ובקש רחמים מה' ואמר אלי אלי למה עזבתני באותה שעה נעשה that is: At the time when David found Saul lying at midday (and sleeping, as may be read in 1 Sam 26:12), and Abner was lying at the door, with his head at one door and his feet at another door, David came and went in between Abner's upright feet and took the water jug. When he then wished to go back out between his feet, and Abner had stretched out his feet and covered him with them, and they lay upon him like two great pillars, he besought the Lord for mercy and said: "My God, why have you forsaken me?" At that very moment a miracle was wrought for him, and God sent a hornet, which bit Abner in his feet, whereupon he raised them up (and lifted them high), and David went out and praised the holy and blessed God.

In the sixty-eighth Psalm it says at v. 13: "The kings of the armies have fled, yea, they have fled," from which words the Talmudic tractate Shabbath seeks to prove that at each and every word, that is, commandment, which God spoke when He gave the Law, the Israelites retreated twelve miles, and it is read there at fol. 88, col. 2 as follows: אמר ר' כל כר דיבור ודיבור שיצא מפי הק"ה חזרו ישראל לאחוריהן י"ב מיל והיו מלאכי השרת מדדין אותן שנאמר מלאכי צבאות ידון אל תקרי ידון that is: Rabbi Joshua, son of Levi, has said: at each and every word (that is, commandment) which went forth from the mouth of the Holy and Blessed God, the Israelites retreated twelve miles, and the ministering angels led them (as a woman leads her child when it is learning to walk, because they were weary, as Rabbi Solomon writes concerning this); for it is said (Ps 68:13): "The angels" (though the text actually reads "the kings," since it says malke and not malache, and thus the Scripture is here falsified in the Talmud) "of the armies have fled, yea, they have fled." Read not yiddodun, that is, "they have fled," but yedaddun, that is, "they have led them."

Also in the aforementioned tractate Shabbath fol. 89. col. 1., the Scripture is falsified and irrationally cited, where it is written as follows: אמר ר' יהושע בן לוי מאי דכתיב וירא העם כי בושש משה אל תקרי בושש אלא באו שש. בשעה שעלה משה למרום אמר להן לישראל לסוף ארבעים יום בתחלת שש אני בא. לסוף מ' יום בא ששן ועירבב את העולם: אמר להם משה רבכם היכן הוא אמרו לו עלה למרום אמר להן באו שש ולא השגיחו עליו מת ולא השגיחו עליו. הראה להן דמות מטתו היינו דקאמרי ליה לאהרן כי זה בושש בושש that is, Rabbi Joshua, son of Levi, said: what is that which is written (Exod 32:1): "But when the people saw that Moses בושש boschesch, that is, delayed?" Read not boschesch, that is, delayed, but rather באו שש bäu schesch, that is, the six have come (that is, the sixth hour has arrived). When Moses had ascended on high, he said to Israel: at the end of forty days, at the beginning of the sixth hour, I will return. But when the forty days had come to an end, Satan came and threw the world into confusion, and said to them: where is your teacher Moses? And they answered him: he has ascended on high. Then he said to them: the sixth hour has come (and yet he has not returned to you as he promised); but they paid no heed to it. Thereupon he said: he is dead; but they paid no heed to that either. After this, he caused the image of his bier to appear before them, and this is what they (the Israelites) said (as is to be read in the aforementioned v. 1): for we do not know what has become of this man Moses, who led us out of the land of Egypt.

And in the Talmudic tractate Kiddúschim, at fol. 31. col. 1., it is proven from the words of Isa 6:3, "All the earth is full of His glory," that one ought not to walk with a straight and upright body; and the words there read as follows: אמר ר' יצחק כל העובר עבירה בסתר כאילו דוחק רגלי שכינה: שנ' כה אמר יי' השמים כסא

 that is, Rabbi Isaac has said: whoever commits a transgression in secret thereby, as it were, presses against the feet of the Divine Majesty, as it is said (Isa 66:1): "Thus says the LORD: Heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool." Rabbi Joshua, son of Levi, has said: it is forbidden to a person to walk four cubits with an upright body, because it is said: "All the earth is full of His glory." The very same thing is also to be found in the Yalkut Shimoni on Isaiah, fol. 42. col. 4. num. 272.

In the Jalkut Chadash, at fol. 143, col. 2, numero 54, under the title Masbiach, the following is written in a foolish manner from the Zohar concerning the words of Exod 21:33, "If someone opens a pit, or digs a pit, and does not cover it, and an ox or a donkey falls into it": כי יכרה איש בור וגוי ונפל שמה שור : that is, "When someone digs a pit, etc., and an ox falls into it, this signifies the Messiah the son of Joseph; or a donkey, this signifies the Messiah the son of David (and it is said of him:) venafāl, that is, 'and he falls,' because he is called bar nifle (from 'falling,' as can be seen in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 96, col. 2)."
 Likewise, in the aforementioned Jalkut Chadash, fol. 91, col. 2, numer. 157, under the title Jacob, the following is written concerning the words of Gen 32:5, "And I have oxen and donkeys, sheep, servants and maids": ויהי לי שור וחמור וגוי שור זה משיח מלחמה שנא' בכור שורו וגוי חמור זה מלך המשיח שני עני ורוכב 'that is, "And I have cattle or oxen, and donkeys, etc. The word 'ox' signifies the Anointed of War (that is, the priest who in battle proclaimed the words of Deut 20:8: 'Whoever is afraid and has a faint heart, let him go and remain at home'), as it is said (Deut 33:17): 'The firstborn of his ox, etc.' The word 'donkey' signifies the Messiah, as it is said (Zech 9:9): 'Poor and riding upon a donkey.' The word 'sheep' signifies Israel, as it is written (Ezek 34:31): 'And you, my sheep, etc.'" Something relating to this is also to be found in Beresbit Rabbah, fol. 69, col. 3, in the 75th Parashah.

In Ps 129, v. 3, one reads: The plowers have plowed upon my back, and have made their furrow long. What these words signify, according to the opinion of the Jews, is shown by the Talmudic tractate Sota fol. 11, col. 2, with the following: בשעה שהולכות לשאוב מים הק"ב מה זמן להם דגים קטנים בכדיהן ושואבות מחצה מים ומחצה דגים ובאות ומפיתות שתי קדירות אחת של חמין ואחת של דגים ומוליכות
 אצל בעליהן לשדה ומרחיצות אותן וסיכות אותן ומאכילות אותן ומשקות אותן ונזקקות להן

Thereafter they set two pots (over the fire), one with water to warm it, and the other with fish, which they cooked, and brought these to their husbands in the field, and they washed them, anointed them, and gave them food and drink, and were lain with by them between the two pots (or hearth-places), as it is said in Ps 68:14: Though ye have lain among the pots (or, as Rabbi Solomon interprets it, the ends or boundaries of the fields), etc. After these women had become pregnant, they returned to their houses. But when the time of birth drew near, they went out into the field and gave birth under an apple tree, as it is said in Song 8:5: Under the apple tree I awakened thee. And the Holy Blessed God sent someone from the high heavens who cleansed the children and made them fair, just as a midwife makes a child fair, as it is said in Ezek 16:4: And as for thy birth, on the day thou wast born thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water to make thee clean, etc. And He gathered (or gave) them two balls (or round stones), from one of which oil flowed, and from the other honey, as it is said in Deut 32:13: And He made him to suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock. But when the Egyptians became aware of this and came to kill these children, a miraculous sign befell them, for the earth swallowed the children (so that no harm should come to them); and the Egyptians brought oxen and plowed upon their backs, as it is said in Ps 129:3: The plowers have plowed upon my back, etc. But after the Egyptians had gone away, the children sprouted forth and came out like the grass of the field, as it is said in Ezek 16:7: I have made thee as ten thousand, like the growth of the field. And when they had grown up, they came in crowds to their houses, as it is said in the same place, v. 7: Thou didst also increase and grow great, and thou camest בעדי עדיים baadi adajim, that is, with ornament of ornaments; read not בעדי עדיים baadi adajim, with ornament of ornaments, but rather בעדרי עדרים beedre adarim, that is, in crowds. And when God revealed Himself at the (Red) Sea, these same children (namely, the aforementioned children) were the first to recognize Him, as it is said in Exod 15:2: This is my mighty God, I will praise Him (or make Him a dwelling), namely to serve Him therein. This fable also appears in the book Zeena ureena fol. 37, col. 2, in the Parasha Shemoth, and in Shemoth Rabba fol. 95, col. 1, in the first Parasha, as well as in the little tractate Sepher divre bayamim shel Moshe Rabbenu fol. 2, col. 1-2, in which last work it is additionally stated that the honey which they found caused their hair to grow down to their knees, so that they might be covered beneath the earth.

In the Talmudic tractate Berachóth, fol. 26, col. 2, it is reported that the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob instituted certain prayers, concerning which the following is written there: אברהם תיקן תפילת שחרית שנ' וישכם אברהם בבוקר אל המקום אשר עמד שם ואין עמידה אלא תפלה. יצחק תקן תפלת מנחה שנ' ויצא יצחק לשווע בשדה לפנות ערב ואין שיחה אלא תפלה שנ' תפלה לעני כי יעטוף ולפני יי' ישפוך שיחו. יעקב תקן תפלת ערבית שנ' ויפגע במקום וילן שם ואין פגיעה אלא תפלה שנ' ואתה אל שיחור תתפלל בעד העם הזה ואל תשא בעדם רנה ותפלה ואל תפגע ביי': that is: Abraham instituted the morning prayer, as it is said (Gen 19:27): "And Abraham rose early in the morning to the place where he had stood." By "standing," however, nothing other than prayer is meant, as it is said (Ps 106:30): "Then Phinehas stood up and prayed" (as it is erroneously understood in the Talmud, whereas the text actually says "and executed judgment," or "administered justice," since he had pierced an Israelite together with a Midianite woman in the act of fornication, as can be seen in Num 25:7-8, and thus he did not pray at all). Isaac instituted the evening prayer, as it is said in Gen 24:63: "And Isaac went out into the field to meditate, as it began to grow toward evening." Meditation, however, means nothing other than prayer, as it is said (Ps 120:1): "A prayer of the afflicted, when he was in distress and poured out his meditation before the LORD." Jacob instituted the night prayer, as it is said (Gen 28:11): Vajifga etc., that is, "And he came to a place, where he stayed overnight." The arriving (which in Hebrew is called Pegiah) means nothing other than prayer, as it is said in Jer 7:16, or according to others v. 18: "And you shall not pray for this people, and shall bring forward no lamentation nor prayer for them, ve'el tifga, that is, you shall also make no intercession." The very same thing is also found in Rabbi Menáchem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 52, col. 3, in the Parashah Vajéra; as well as in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 49, col. 1, num. 47, under the title Galuth.

In the Jalkut Shimoni on the Five Books of Moses, see numero 260, fol. 74, col. 3, concerning the manna which, as is read in Exod 16:14, God caused to rain down from heaven upon the children of Israel as food in the wilderness: it is stated there that it lay so high that all the kings of the east and the west could see it, and this is foolishly proven from Ps 23:5. The words there read as follows: אמר בן עזאי . . ועלתה עד שראוין אותו כל מלכי מזרח ומערב שנ' תערוך לפני: שלחן נגד צוררי, that is: Ben Azzai, the son of Judah, says: the manna that came down to the Israelites increased so greatly and rose to such a height that all the kings of the east and the west saw it, as it is said (Ps 23:5): "You prepare a table before me in the presence of my enemies." This fable, however, is taken from the Talmudic tractate Yoma, fol. 76, col. 1, where the very same thing is to be found; and it is also reported there how high it lay, in these words: מן שירד להן לישראל היה גבוה ששים אמה, that is: the manna that came down to the Israelites was sixty cubits high.

Splendid gemstones are also said to have fallen down along with the manna, as is likewise claimed in the aforementioned tractate Jóma fol. 75. col. 1., and this is sought to be proven in a characteristically subtle Jewish manner from the words of Exod 36:3, "For they brought every morning their freewill offering unto him," where it is written as follows: מאי בבוקר בבוקר א"ר שמואל בר נחמני שירד להם בבוקר בבוקר מלמד שירד להם לישראל אבנים טובות ומרגליות א"ר יוחנן מדבר שירד להם בבוקר בבוקר מלמד שירד להם לישראל אבנים טובות ומרגליות עם המן והנשיאים הביאו את אבני השם. תנא גשיאים ממש וכן הוא אומר נשיאים ורוח that is: What does "every morning" mean? Rabbi Samuel, son of Nachmani, has said that Rabbi Jonathan said: it states (in Scripture) that it fell down to them every morning, and this teaches us that precious stones and pearls came down to the Israelites together with the manna. (So also it is written in Exod 35:27:) והנשיאים Vebhannesiim, that is, the clouds (as it is understood here in the Talmud, even though the text actually says "the princes," although elsewhere the word Nebim also means clouds), brought onyx. We learn that they were in fact clouds. In this sense it is said (Prov 25:14): (Like) the clouds (which are also called nebiim here), the wind and rain, etc.

Because manna is mentioned here, I must take this opportunity to note that it is said to have had many different flavors, as is read in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Yóma fol. 75. col. 1. In Shemóth Rabbah, however, it stands at fol. 115. col. 4. in the 25th Parashah, written thus: הורד להם המן שהיה בו מכל 'מיני טעמים והיה כל אחד מישראל טועם כל מה שהיה רוצה שכן כתיב זה ארבעים שנה יי אלהיך עמך לא חסרת דבר מהו דבר בשהיה מחשב לאכול דבר והיה אותו בפיו אלולי היה לי פטימא א' לאכול מיד היה נעשה לתוך פיו טעם פטימא דבר היה אומר ה"קנה היה עושה רצונו. א"ר אבא אף דבר לא היה אומר בפיו אלא חושב בלבו לומר מה שנפשו מתאוה היה ה"מ עושה רצונו והיה טועם מה שהיה מתאוה. תדע לך שהוא כן שכן אמר יחזקאל that is, He (namely GOD) caused the manna to come down to them, which had every kind of flavor, and each Israelite tasted in it whatever flavor he desired; for it is written (Deut 2:7): "Forty years the LORD your God has been with you, and you have lacked nothing." What does "nothing" mean? When someone had a desire to eat something and said with his mouth, "If only I had a fat bird to eat," the flavor of a fat bird would immediately come into his mouth. When someone said something, GOD did his will. Rabbi Abba said: even if someone had not spoken a thing with his mouth, but had only thought in his mind what he had a desire for, GOD fulfilled his desire, and he had the very flavor he had wished for. You must know that this is so, for thus spoke Ezekiel (Ezek 16:19): "My food which I gave you, fine flour and oil and honey, I gave you to eat."

That the manna had all manner of tastes, according to whatever each person desired, can also be seen in Pesikta sotárta fol. 45. col. 2. in the Parashah Behaalotechá, where one reads: נשתנה להם לכל מיני תבשילין that is, It was transformed for them (namely, for the Israelites) into all manner of cooked dishes. And shortly thereafter follows: כשהיה נשתנה להם לכל דבר שמתלקט בשדה. i.e., It was transformed for them into every thing that is gathered in the field. When a person wished to eat grapes, it tasted like grapes; when he wished for figs, it tasted like figs as well. And thus he could have everything that exists in the world.

The Israelites are also said to have had, during those forty years in which they ate the manna, with all due respect, no need to move their bowels; concerning which, in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 83. col. 1., in the Parascha Beschallach, on the words of Ps 78:25, "They ate לחם אבירים léchem abbirtm," that is, bread of the mighty, or angel's bread, it is written as follows: לחם אבירים לחם שנבלע באברים וזוהו דרשו רבותינו ז"ל מוחספס בגימטריא: רס"ה אברים: ומכאן שלא היו צריכין לנקביהם שהרי מזונם היה נבלע בר"מ אברים שלהם: that is, bread of the angels, léchem schemibhlá baabburím, bread that was swallowed up into the limbs; and therefore our rabbis, of blessed memory, interpret the word מוחספס mechysbás, that is, round (which is said of the manna in Exod 16:14, that it was round), in the following manner, saying that its numerical value by Gematria amounts to two hundred and forty-eight, and signifies the two hundred and forty-eight members (of the human body); and it is thereby proven that they had no need to move their bowels, since the food they ate was swallowed up into their two hundred and forty-eight members. Something similar is also to be found in Pesikta rabbetha, fol. 45. col. 1., in the Parascha Behaalotechá. Likewise it stands in Bammidbar rábba, fol. 219. col. 2., in the sixteenth Parascha, that God, when the Israelites called the manna, as is seen in Num 21:5, a worthless or contemptible food, spoke thus: אֶלֹא שְׂאֵכְלוּ אֹתָהּ שֶׁנֶּהָא לֹא נִצְרָךְ אֶחָד מֵהֶם לְנִקְבֵּיוֹ אוֹתָן מ' שָׁנָה: that is, I gave them manna to eat for forty years, and not one of them had need, during those forty years, to move his bowels; rather, they ate the manna, and it became flesh for them, as it is said (Ps 78:25): they ate angel's bread, and with it they provoked me to anger.

Rivers and streams are also said to have arisen from the manna when it melted in the morning heat of the sun, and therefore the words of Exod 16:21 are rendered thus in the Chaldean translation of Jonathan: הוּ מְלֻקָּטִין יְתִיה מִן עֵידֶן צִפְרָא עַד אַרְבַּע שְׁעֵין דְּיוֹמָא אָנֹשׁ לְפֻם מִיכְלִיה וּמִן אַרְבַּע שְׁעֵין וְלֵהֲלֵא שְׁחִין שְׁמִשָּׁא עִילוּי וְהָהִן שָׁח וּמִתְעַבִּיד מְבוּעֵין דְּמִיין וְנִגְדִין עַד יִמָּא רַבָּא וְאַתְּמֵן הֵן דִּכְּנָן וּבְעִירָן וְשִׁתְּנָן מִנִּיה וְהוּ בְּגִי יִשְׂרָאֵל צִידִין וְאַקְלִין יִתְהוּן: that is, And they (namely the Israelites) gathered it from the time of the morning until the fourth hour of the day, each one as much as he could eat. After the fourth hour, however, and further on, the sun grew hot upon it, and a channel was made in which springs of water arose, which flowed all the way to the great sea; and the clean animals and the cattle came and drank from it, and the children of Israel caught them by hunting and ate them. Rabbi Solomon, however, writes in his commentary on this passage as follows: הַנֶּשֶׁאֶר בַּשָּׂדֶה נִעְשָׂה נְחָלִים וְשׁוֹתִין מִמֶּנּוּ אֲיִלִּים וְצִבָּאִים וְאַמּוֹת הָעוֹלָם וְצִדִין: that is, What remained in the field (after the Israelites had taken as much as they needed) became streams, and the stags and deer drank from it; but the nations of the world caught them by hunting and tasted in them the flavor of the manna, and came to know wherein the excellence of the Israelites consisted. This is also to be found in the book Mechiltá fol. 19, col. 4, in the fifth Parascha. That streams arose from it after it had melted is likewise to be seen in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 73, col. 4, numer. 258, and the following passage comes after it: יְכִיֹן שֶׁהִיא יוֹרֵד בְּנַחֲלִים הִיוּ אֲמּוֹת הָעוֹלָם בָּאִים לִשְׁתּוֹת מִמֶּנּוּ וְהָיָה נִעְשָׂה בִּפְיָם: כִּמְר כִּלְעָנָה שֶׁנֶּאֱמַר וּזְמַן כּוֹרֵעַ גָּד הוּא אֲבָל לְיִשְׂרָאֵל נִעְשָׂה בְּתוֹךְ פִּיהֶם כְּדֹבֶשׁ שֶׁנֶּאֱמַר וְטַעְמוֹ כַּצִּפְחִית דְּבֹדֶשׁ: that is, When it flowed like streams, the nations of the world came to drink from it, and it became as bitter as wormwood in their mouths, as it is said (Exod 16:31): And the manna was like coriander seed. But for the Israelites it was like honey in their mouths, as it is said (likewise in the aforementioned verse 31): And its taste was like wafers made with honey.

Furthermore, the Jews teach that when God had given the Law, not only the small children who lay at their mothers' breasts, but even those who were still in their mothers' wombs, spoke with God and became sureties for Israel that they would keep the Law; and this is foolishly proven from Holy Scripture, according to their custom, concerning which it is written in Medrasch Tillim fol. 9. col. 2. on the words of the eighth Psalm v. 3, Out of the mouth of young children and sucklings you have ordained a strength: בִּשְׁעָה שֶׁבִקֵּשׁ הָק"ב לִיתֵן: את התורה לישראל אמר להן תנו לי ערבים שתקיימו את התורה אמרו לו הרי אבותינו ערבים בנו אמר להן בק"ב חייבם הם לי ולואי שיעמדו בעצמם משל למה הדבר דומה למי שהלך ללוות אמרו לו הבא ערב לי הלך והביא לו את מי שחייב לו אמרו לו ולואי שיעמוד בעצמו הכא לי מי שאינו חייב לי כך אמר להם ה"ק"ב לישראל האבות לי ערבים דכמה חובת יש לי עליהם אלא תנו לי ערבים שאינן חייבין לי כלום וכן הוא אומר לא את אבותינו כרת יי' את

הברית הזאת אמרו לו מי הן שאינן חייבין לך אמר להן התינוקות מיד הביאו לו התינוקות משדי אמותיהן ומעוברות שלהן דעמדו כריסן של אמן כמראה של זכוכית והיו רואין להק"בה מתוך כריסן ומדברין עמו שנ' מפי עוללים ויונקים יתלב כעוללים לא ראו אחי אמר להם חק"בה ערבים אתם על אמותיכם שאם אינן מקיימין את התורה שאתם נתפסין עליהם אמרו לו הן אמר להם אנכי יי' אלהיך אמרו לו הן אמר להם לא יהיה לך אלהים אחרים אמרו לו הן ועל כל דבור ודבור היו משיבים לו על לאו לאו ועל הן הן אמר להם מפניכם אני נותן את התורה להן שנ' מפי עוללים ויונקים יסדת עז ואין עז אלא תורה שנ' יי' עז לעמו יתן לכך התורה: כשביטלו ישראל את התורה הן נתפסין עליהן שנ' נדמו עמי מבלי הדעת that is: At the time when God wished to give the Law to the Israelites, He said to them: Give me sureties that you will keep the Law. They said to Him: Let our fathers be sureties for us. Thereupon God said to them: Those very ones are themselves indebted to me; would that they might stand firm on their own account. This matter is like one who went to borrow something, and was told: Bring me a surety. When he went and brought one who was himself indebted to the one who had agreed to lend, the lender said to him (who wished to borrow): Would that he might stand firm on his own account; bring me one who owes me nothing. Thus God said to the Israelites: You have presented me with sureties, but how many debts do I have to demand of them? Provide me with sureties who owe me nothing at all. And thus it is said (Deut 5:3): He did not make this covenant with our fathers. Then they asked Him: Who then are those who owe you nothing? And He answered them: The children owe me nothing. Thereupon they immediately brought Him the children from their mothers' breasts, and their pregnant women, and the bellies of their mothers stood transparent as glass, and from within those bellies they saw the Holy and Blessed God and spoke with Him, as it is said (Ps 8:3): Out of the mouth of young children and sucklings. And it is written (Job 3:15, or according to others v. 16): Like the young children who have not seen the light. Then God said to them: Will you stand surety for your fathers, so that if they do not keep the Law, you shall be held liable in their stead? And they answered: Yes. Then He said to them: I am the LORD your God, and they said: Yes. Further He said to them: You shall have no other God, and they said: Yes, and they answered Him concerning each and every commandment, yes to yes and no to no. He said further to them: Out of your mouths I give them the Law, as it is said (Ps 8:3): Out of the mouth of young children and sucklings you have ordained a strength for yourself; but the word "strength" means nothing other than the Law, as it is said (Ps 29:11): The LORD will give strength to His people. Therefore, when the Israelites annul the Law, those same children are held liable on their account, as it is said (Hos 4:6): My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge.

Also in the little book Ben Sira fol. 2. col. 2. it is written concerning the daughter of the prophet Jeremiah that she became pregnant not through carnal intercourse with her father, but through another shameful act which I am not able to describe, and that her child (who was named Ben Sira) spoke with his mother as soon as he was born. And at fol. 3. col. 1. of the same work it is also reported of the prophet Jeremiah himself that he spoke from his mother's womb and refused to come out until he had been told what his name was to be. Furthermore, it is written there at fol. 3. col. 2. and fol. 4. 5. that when Ben Sira was one year old, his mother brought him to school, where he spoke with his teacher and displayed great understanding, presenting to him all manner of highly rational matters, of which something has already been mentioned above at p. 323.

So Jacob is said to have spoken with his brother Esau while they were still in their mother's womb, concerning which the book Ma'or káton fol. 15. col. 2. in the Paraseha Toledóth writes as follows: אמרו כשהיו יעקב ועשו במעי אמן אמר יעקב לעשו אחי שני עולמות לפנינו עולם הזה ועולם הבא עולם הזה יש בו אכילה ושתייה משא ומתן לישא אשה ולהוליד בנים ובנות אבל בעולם הבא אין בו כל אלו טול אתה עולם הזה ואני עולם הבא שנאמר מכרה לי כיום יום שהיו במעי אמן that is, (our Rabbis) have said that when Jacob and Esau were still in their mother's womb, Jacob said to Esau: my brother, we have two worlds before us, this world and the world to come (that is, this temporal life and the future eternal life). In this world one eats and drinks and carries on trade; one also takes a wife and begets sons and daughters; but in the world to come none of this exists. Take you this world, and I will take the world to come, as it is said (Gen 25:31): "Sell me this day your birthright." The word "today" is used because they were still in their mother's womb. In the book Schalschéleth hakkabbála one likewise reads at fol. 35. col. 2. concerning one by the name of Nachman: תיכף שנולד התחיל: that is, as soon as he was born, he began to speak of wondrous things and of the Work of the Chariot (which is mentioned in Ezek 1) .

The Jews are also of the opinion that when God has determined and resolved something against a person, that resolution is changed by changing that person's name, concerning which the following is written in the Talmudic tractate Rosch haschaná fol. 16. col. 2.: אמר רבי יצחק ד' דברים מקרעין גזר דינו של אדם אלו הן צדקה צעקה שינוי השם ושינוי מעשה. צדקה דכתיב וצדקה תציל ממות. צעקה דכתיב ויצעקו אל יי' בצר להם וממצוקותיהם יוציאם. שינוי השם דכתיב שרי אשתך לא תקרא את שמה שרי כי שרה שמה וכתיב וברכתי אותה וגם נתתי ממנה לך בן. שינוי מעשה דכתיב וירא אלהים את מעשיהם וכתיב וינחם אלהים על הרעה אשר דבר לעשות להם ולא עשה ויש אומרים אף שינוי מקום דכתיב ויאמר יי' אל אברם לך לך מארצך והדר ואעשך לגוי גדול: that is, Rabbi Isaac said: there are four things which annul the verdict of judgment (of God) that is passed upon a person, namely: righteousness or almsgiving, crying out, the changing of one's name, and the changing of one's deeds. Righteousness (or almsgiving, because it is written in Prov 10:2 and also v. 4): But righteousness (or almsgiving) delivers from death. Crying out, because it is written (Ps 107:6): And they cried to the Lord in their distress, and He delivered them from their troubles. The changing of the name, because it is written (Gen 17:15): You shall no longer call your wife Sarai by the name Sarai, but Sarah shall be her name; and it is written (v. 16 there): For I will bless her, and will also give you a son by her. The changing of deeds, because it is written (Jonah 3:10): And God saw their deeds; and it is written (also in the same place): And God repented of the evil that He had spoken of doing to them, and did it not. There are some who also say that the changing of one's place (has the same effect), because it is written (Gen 12:1): And the Lord said to Abraham, go out from your native land; and (it follows) further (there, v. 2): And I will make you into a great nation. As for the changing of the name, the very same thing is also found in Rabbi Levi ben Gerson's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 26. col. 2. in the Parascha Vajéra, as well as in the book Zeéna ureéna fol. 8. col. 4. in the Parascha Lech lecha.

The Lord God said to Abraham (Gen 15:7): "I am the Lord, who brought you out of Ur of Chaldea," and Ur was a place in Chaldea, as can be seen from Gen 11:28, where it is written: "But Haran died before his father Terah in his native land, at Ur of the Chaldeans." The Jews, however, claim that Abraham, having smashed all but one of his father's idols, was accused before Nimrod by that same father, and was thrown by him into a fiery furnace, but was rescued from the fire without injury. Concerning this, the book Schalschéleth hakkabbála, fol. 2, col. 1, at the end, and col. 2, contains the following account: תרח היה עובד אלילים וגם היה אומן לעשותם: ופעם אחת הלך חוצה לארץ לעסקיו והניח אברהם בנו בחנותו למכרם ובבוא איש לקנות מהם היה אברהם שואל ממנו כמרת שנים יש לך ומשיב כך וכך ואברהם אומר לו איך אפשר שאיש כטוב מכך כך שנים רוצה להשתחוות אל דמי אחד שהוא בן יומו: והאיש ההוא מתבייש והולך לו וכן עשה לאנשים רבים. אחר זה באה אשה אחת ובידה מדת קמח סולת ותאמר לאברהם שרצוני להקריבו אל כל האלהיות ההם. ויחר אף אברהם ויקח מטה וישבר כל הציורות ההם והניח שלם הגדול שבהם וניתן המטה ההוא וכשבא תרח שאל לאברהם מי שבר כל האלהות והשיב כי באה זקנה אחת להקריב מדת קמח לכל האלהות ויקומו כלם במחלוקת כי כל אחד היה רוצה הקמח ויקם הגדול שבהם והמיתם עם המטה שבידו. ויחר אפו של תרח והביא אברהם בנו לפני נמרוד שיענישוהו. אז נמרוד צוה. לאברהם שישתחוה לאש השיב אברהם טוב להשתחוות למים שמכבים האש אמר נמרוד שישתחוה למים. השיב אברהם יותר טוב להשתחוות לעננים שמחזיקים המים אומר נמרוד שישתחוה להם. השיב אברהם יותר טוב להשתחוות לרוח שמפזרם. אמר נמרוד שישתחוה לו והשיב אברהם יותר טוב להשתחוות לאדם שעומד לפני הרוח? השיב נמרוד אתה מהתל. כי אני איני משתחוה אלא לאש והנה אני להשליך בך ונראה אם יבא אליהך שאתה

משתחוה לו להצלך ממנו ותכף השליכוהו תוך כבשן האש. תוך זה היו שואלים להרן אחיו במה היה רוצה להאמין והשיב שאם ינצח אברהם יאמין באמונתו ואם לאו בנמרוד. וישליכו גם הרן בכבשן ונשרף ולהן נאמר וימת הרן על פני תרה אביו אבל אברהם יצא בשלום לעיני כלם. That is: Terah was an idolater, and his trade also consisted in making them; he carried on his business with them and sold them. It came to pass on one occasion that he went out into the country on account of his affairs, and he left his son Abraham in his shop to sell them. Now whenever someone came to buy one, Abraham would ask him how many years old he was; and after the person had answered so and so many, Abraham said to him: how can it possibly be that a person who is as many years old as you are should worship something that is only one day old? And that person was thereby put to shame and went away; and thus he dealt with many people. After this, an old woman came with a measure of fine white flour in her hand and said to Abraham that she wished to offer it to all those gods; whereupon Abraham became angry, took a club, and smashed all those idols, but left the largest among them whole and placed the club in its hand. When Terah returned, he asked Abraham who had broken all the gods; and he answered that an old woman had come to offer a measure of flour to all the gods, but they had all fallen into a quarrel with one another, for each one wanted the flour, whereupon the largest among them had risen up and beaten the others to death with the club he held in his hand. At this, Terah became angry and brought his son Abraham before Nimrod so that he might punish him. Then Nimrod commanded Abraham to worship fire; and Abraham answered: it is better to worship water, which extinguishes fire. Nimrod then said he should worship water; but Abraham answered: it is better to worship the clouds, which hold the water within them. Nimrod then said he should worship them; but Abraham answered: it is better to worship the wind, which scatters the clouds. Nimrod then said he should worship it; but Abraham answered: it is better to worship the man who stands before the wind. To this Nimrod replied: you are mocking me; I worship fire alone, and I will have you thrown into it, and we shall see whether your God, whom you worship, will come to rescue you from it. Thereupon he was immediately thrown into the fiery furnace. Meanwhile, his brother Haran was asked what he wished to believe; and he answered that if Abraham gained the victory, he would believe what Abraham believed, but if not, he would side with Nimrod's faith. So they threw him into the furnace as well, and he was burned; for which reason it is said (Gen 11:28): "But Haran died before his father Terah." Abraham, however, came out unharmed before the eyes of them all. The very same account, with minor variations, is also to be found in Bereschith rabba, fol. 34, col. 3-4, in the thirty-eighth Parascha, as well as in Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 24, col. 1, in the Parascha Lech lechá; and the Jews suppose they can thereby confirm their error, because the word Ur also means fire. But let this suffice concerning the foolish Jewish interpretations and perversions of Holy Scripture, from which it is more than sufficiently evident that the godless Jews have absolutely no grounds for despising the holy Evangelists and Apostles, and for falsely claiming that they cited the Old Testament poorly and interpreted it incorrectly, and that they were ignorant, stupid people; for in the entire New Testament there is not a single passage in which anything absurd is to be found, such as has here been demonstrated in abundance from the Rabbinical books.

The reason, however, why the Jews interpret and pervert Holy Scripture in such a strange manner is their great blindness and obduracy, which was mentioned above at the beginning of the 1st Cap. They are also not permitted to read any books by Christians that deal with matters of religion, from which they might become better informed, because they regard our books as heretical books. That our books are forbidden to them to read is evident from the Talmudic Tract Sanhedrin, fol. 90. col. 1., where it is written as follows: כל ישראל יש להם חלק לעולם הבא וגו' ואלו שאין להם חלק לע"הב האומר אין תחיית המתים מן התורה ואין התורה מן השמים ואפיקורס רבי עקיבא אומר אף הקורא בספרים החיצונים that is: All Israelites have a share in eternal life, etc. But these have no share in eternal life: he who says that the resurrection of the dead cannot be proven from the Law; and that the Law was not given from Heaven; and he who is an Epicurean. Rabbi Akiya says: also he who reads in foreign books. What is to be understood by the books of the heretics is evident from Rabbi Asher's commentary on the Tract Sanhedrin, fol. 129. col. 4., where one reads: ספרי חכמים that is: The books of the heretics are those in which the Law is interpreted according to their own opinion, wherein they do not adhere to the words of the sages. So too does Rabbi Moses bar Maimon write concerning this in the 2nd chapter of the first part of his book Jad chasaka, in the Tract Hilchoth Ovede cochafim umaffaloth, fol. 25. col. 2. numero 2., as follows: עבודתה היאך עיקר ספרים רבים חב"ם בעבודתה היאך עיקר עבודתה ומה מעשיה ומשפטיה ציונו הקב"ה שלא לקרוא באותן הספרים כלל ולא נהרהר בה that is: The idolaters have written many books in which the principal substance of the worship of idols is set forth, and what its works and ordinances are; but God has utterly forbidden us to read in those books, and does not wish us to think upon them (namely, the idol) nor upon any thing that pertains to them. Indeed, it is also forbidden to us even to look upon the form (or image thereof), as it is said (Lev 19:4): You shall not turn to idols.

Yes, the Jews hate our books so greatly that they are not even permitted to rescue them from fire or any other thing by which they might be destroyed. On this matter, the Talmudic tractate Schabbáth, fol. 116. col. 1. teaches as follows: מפני הדליקה אותם אין מצילין אותם מפי הדליקה, that is: One does not rescue the books of heretics from fire. Shortly thereafter, the same passage continues: כשם שאין מצילין אותם מפי הדליקה כך אין מצילין אותם לא מן המפולת ולא מן המים ולא מדבר המאבדן, that is: Just as one does not rescue them from fire, so also one does not rescue them from collapse (namely, when an old house should fall upon them), nor from water, nor from any thing whatsoever that destroys them. And shortly after this, the Gospel is mentioned, which is likewise counted among the heretical books. As for their own books, however, they are obligated to rescue those from fire; on this matter, the following is to be read in the tractate Sopherim, at the beginning of the seventeenth chapter, fol. 13. col. 3. of the Amsterdam Talmud: דברי חכמים כדרבנות כולם נתנו מרועה אחד ורועה אחד אמרן וכולן מצילין אותם מפי הדליקה, that is: The words of the wise are like goads; they were all given by one shepherd, one shepherd spoke them, and one rescues them all from fire.

Chapter X.

In which it is shown what the Jews call the Christian religion and the Christian faith, and what they write about it, and also what they call the Christian clergy.

Rabbi Perez writes in his book Maarébeth haëlohúth (or Maaréches haëlobús) fol. 59. col. 2. as follows: דת כל אומה ואומה היא נמשכת משר: של: that is, the religion of each and every people derives from its prince; by which he means to indicate that the seventy peoples who, alongside the Jews, are said to exist in the world, have their religions from those seventy princes or devils who, according to the frivolous teaching of the rabbis, as shall be shown at length below in the 18th chapter of this first part, rule over them, according to which accursed opinion we Christians would have to derive our religion from the chief devil Sammaël, who is called by the Jews the prince and regent of the Christians. From this it can easily be judged that they regard our religion as a godless and idolatrous thing, as indeed becomes even more apparent from most of the names by which they customarily call it. They call it, first of all, אמונת נוצרים Emunáth (or Emúnas) Nózerim, that is, the Faith of the Nazarenes; and this appears in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, pagin. 67. numero 112. in these words: אילו ללא התלמוד גם אמונת הנוצרים מגונה ביותר כי כתוב בתורה לא יבא עמוני ומואבי בקהל השם והנה מייחסים אותו איש למשפחתו של דוד המלך עליו השלום אף מצד אמו אף כי בא ממואביה ואילולי התלמוד שכתוב בו עמוני ולא עמונית וכו' היתה משפחת דוד אסורה לבא בקהל: that is, if the Talmud did not exist, then the faith of the Nazarenes would also be shameful, all the more so because it is written in the Law (Deut 23:3): No Ammonite or Moabite shall enter the congregation of the Lord. And behold, they ascribe that man (that is, Jesus) to the lineage of King David, upon whom be peace, even with regard to his mother, although he (namely David) was descended from a Moabite woman; and if it were not written in the Talmud that an Ammonite, and not an Ammonitess, etc. (shall not enter the congregation of God), then the lineage of David would not be permitted to enter the congregation.

Second, they call it דת Dath (or Das) Jeschu, that is, the Religion of Jesu; hence in the book Májene jeschúa, fol. 43. col. 2., in the eighth Májan, in the fifth Tamar, concerning the emperors who lived before Constantinus Magnus, the following is written: הקיסרים אשר קדמו לו לא היו כן: אבל בהפך שהיו רודפים את הנוצרים והורגים את האפפיורים וכל הנמשכים אחר דת ישו כמו שכתוב בספריהם: that is, the emperors who lived before him were not thus (namely, they were not Christians), but on the contrary, they persecuted the Christians, and killed the popes, and all those who adhered to Dath Jeschu, that is, the Religion of Jesu. And this may also be seen in the book Chifluk emúna, p. 52. In place of Jeschu, however, one also sometimes reads in the books of Abarbanel ישוע Jeschúa or ישוע הנוצרי Jeschúa Hannózeri; and in the aforementioned book Májene jeschúa, fol. 79. col. 3., in the 11th Majan, in the 10th Tamar, the following is also written concerning the aforementioned Constantinus: והכריה זה מלך בכפה והכריה כל ארצות המערב ואיטליא ויון וארץ הנגב : ומצרים וצפון אשור ובבל מהודו ועד כוש להאמין ישוע that is, this one ruled under the whole heaven, and compelled all the lands of the West, together with Italy, Greece, the land toward the South, Egypt and the North, Assyria and Babylon, from India all the way to the land of the Moors, to believe in Dath Jeschúa, that is, the Religion of Jesu. And at fol. 27. col. 4. of the aforementioned book one reads: ידענו מספריהם שכל האפריקה : ורוב האסיאה קבלו דת ישוע הנוצרי כאשר קבלו אותו ברומי that is, we know from their books that all of Africa and the greater part of Asia received Dath Jeschúa Honnózeri, that is, the Religion of Jesus the Nazarene, when it had been received at Rome.

Third, it is called ישו אמונת Emunáth (or Emúnas) Jeschu or ישוע אמונת Amanath Jeschu, that is, the Faith in Jesus. The first occurs in the aforementioned book Májene jeschúa, fol. 43. col. 2. in the eighth Majan, in the fifth Tamar, as follows: הנה הקיסר ל"ט שנקרא שמו קוסטנטין בעצת הילינית המלכה : אמו נתנצר ונטבל ולקח אמונת ישו that is, Behold, the thirty-ninth emperor, who was called Constantinus, became a Christian through the counsel of his mother, had himself baptized, and accepted emunath Jeschu, that is, the faith in Jesus. So also it stands in the book Chissuk emúna, p. 312. as follows: מזמן מלאכי הנביא : אמונת ישו הנוצרי that is, At the time of the prophet Mal, emunáth Jeschu, that is, the faith in Jesus the Nazarene, had not yet existed in the world. The second form is found together with the first in the aforementioned book Chissuk emuná, paginâ 53. in these words: הראשון מהקיסרים הנכנס לאמונת ישו הוא הקיסר קוסטנטין שעזב אמונתו הראשונה וקבל אמונת ישו that is, The first among the emperors who entered into the faith in JESUS was the Emperor Constantinus, who abandoned his former faith and accepted amanáth Jeschu, that is, the faith in JESUS, and three hundred years after the death of JESUS set down the law of the Christians (meaning the New Testament) in writing.

Fourth, it is called ישו אמונת תלוי Emunáth Talúi (or Emúnas Tólui), that is, the faith of the hanged one, by which hanged one Christ is understood, as has been shown above in the second Capit. p. 88 and 89. Rabbi Lipmann does indeed acknowledge this in his Sepher Nizzáchon, numero 350, p. 194, but he writes there that the word talui here does not mean "hanged" but rather "doubtful," just as תלוי אשם áscham tálui signifies a doubtful guilt-offering, when he states that the Jewish faith is called the certain faith, because everyone acknowledges that He who created heaven and earth is GOD; אבל אמונת ישו ומחמט שפליגי בהן; האומות נקראת אמונת תלוי that is, but the faith of JESUS and Mahomet, over which the nations are in dispute, is called Emunâth talui, that is, the faith of the doubtful one. This, however, is nothing other than a false pretense on the part of Rabbi Lippmann, and he intended by it only to instruct the Jews as to what they should answer the Christians when the latter might confront them with this; but it was not his genuine and earnest meaning, for certainly here by Talui the hanged one is understood, as has been sufficiently demonstrated above in the aforementioned second Capitel, p. 89, 90, and 91.

Fifth, it is called אמונת אדום Emunâth Edom, that is, the Faith of Edom, or the Edomite Faith, as is to be found in the aforementioned book Májene jeschúa, fol. 79. col. 3. in dem 11. Majan, im 10. Támar, where it is written as follows: תדע שהיו לאמונת אדום ב' התחלות הא' בענין ישוע שנתפרסם בהרבן בית שני אשר צמח כאשר בוטל התמיד • השני היא היתה סיבה קרובה בקוסטאנטינו הקיסר שזכרו ג' מאות שנה למיתתו של ישוע נתנצר ונטבל כמו שנכתרי that is, Know that the Edomite Faith had two beginnings: the first was when the work of JESUS became manifest at the destruction of the second Temple, which came forth when the daily sacrifice ceased. The second was the proximate cause in the Emperor Constantine, who, approximately three hundred years after the death of JESUS, adopted the Christian religion and had himself baptized, as I have stated.

The reason why it is called thus is because the Edomites are said to have adopted it first, as was indicated above in the seventh chapter, p. 273, from Aben Esra's commentary on Isa 63:1; concerning which the following also stands in Abarbanel's Commentario on the Prophet Isaiah, fol. 54. col. 1: עם היות: שהרמ"בן כתב והרד"ק שהאדמיים הם בני אדום ושקבלו דת יש"ו נוצרי מפי כומר אדומי לפי שהאדומיים החזיקו בדתו ראשונה וכפי שאמר אחר זה הנה לא נתנו טענה ולא ראייה לדבריהם that is: Although Rabbi Moses, the son of Nachman, as well as Rabbi David Kimchi, have written that the Romans are the children of Edom, and that they received (or learned) the religion of Jesus the Nazarene from the mouth of an Edomite priest, because the Edomites were the first to adopt his religion, as I will mention in what follows, they have nevertheless not proven their assertion, as I do. Thereupon he writes in the same place, in the aforementioned fol. 54. col. 4, as follows: האדומיים שהיו שכנים לארץ ישראל המה קבלו ראשונה על עצמם אמונת יש"ו הנוצרי כי בהיותם נימולים מימי הורקנוס היו תמיד מתחברים לאנשי ירושלים ולכן שלוחי יש"ו הנוצרי ותלמידיו בברחם מירושלם הלכו לארץ אדום ופתו האדומיים והכניסו אותם בדתם ואחריהם נמשכו הרומיים ולכן נקראו כולם אדום בשם האומה שקבלה ראשונה את האמונה ההיא ואין ספק שלא בדה זה הרמ"בן מלבו אבל היה הדבר הזה מקובל אצלו that is: The Edomites, who were neighbors of the land of Israel, were the first to adopt for themselves the faith in Jesus the Nazarene; for since they had been circumcised from the time of Hyrchanus, they always associated with the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Therefore, when the apostles of Jesus the Nazarene and his disciples fled from Jerusalem, they went into the land of Edom and seduced the Edomites and brought them into their religion; after them, however, the Romans followed (that is, the Christians, as may be seen below in the 16th chapter of this first part); therefore they are all called Edomites, after the name of that people which first adopted that faith; and it is entirely certain that Rabbi Moses, the son of Nachman, did not devise this from his own mind, but rather knew this matter through a tradition (or oral teaching).

Sixth, it is called דת השקרות Dath haschakrúth (or Das haschákruš), that is, the false or lying religion; and אמונת הכוזבת Emunä hacoseveth (or hacoséves), that is, the lying faith; and both are found in the book Chissuk emuná, p. 468, where Rabbi Isaac writes thus concerning the Christians: הם מפתים ומכריחים את היהודים לקבל דת השקרות ואמונתם הכוזבת, that is, they seduce and compel the Jews to accept the false religion and their lying faith.

In the book Maschmia jeschua, fol. 68, col. 1, Abarbanel writes the following concerning the word שרוקים scherykkim, which appears in Zach 1:8 and which some render as brown and others as ash-colored: תורה על חילוף: שרוקים הוא מל"י תורה על חילוף: הגוונים כמו שקראו רז"ל בכמה מקומות לתכשיט האשה שהיא מעברת על פניה שרק וקרא את הרומים כן לפי שהיה ענינם באמונתם שמזייפין תורת השם ומתקשטין בדברי תורתנו על שרוקים: that is, the word Scherykkim signifies many colors, just as our Rabbis, of blessed memory, in many places call by the name Serák that adornment of a woman with which she paints her face (that is, rouge); and he (the prophet Zechariah) called the Romans (that is, the Christians) by this name, because this (namely, the painting of the face) is their work in their faith, in that they falsify the Law of God and adorn themselves with the words of our Law, on account of the lies of their religion and the falseness of their faith. The aforementioned Abarbanel likewise expounds in his commentary on Zach 7:3 the words, "On the fourth chariot were dappled horses," and says: רמז לבני אדום באמונתם שערבו אמיות התורה האלהיה עם שקר אמונתם: that is, this is an allusion to the children of Edom (understand: the Christians) on account of their faith, who have mingled the truth of the Divine Law with the lies of their faith. Rabbi Bechai also writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 46, col. 2, in the Parascha Vajischlach, on the words of Gen 36:40, אלוף עלוה, Alluf Alva, that is, the Prince Alva, as follows: עשו הזוכרים: that is, this comes to signify the seed of Esau, who in their religious faith speak stubbornness against the Lord, for falsehood is in their right hand, and they cover (that is, gloss over and cloak) things against the Lord that are not right. Therefore there is also no reason whatsoever to doubt the truth of what the convert Frederick Samuel Brenz reports in the third chapter of his work "The Jewish Serpent-Skin Stripped Off," when he states: when one Jew leads another astray by swearing, they do so to the dishonor of Christians, saying, "by the Gôjim שקר אמונה Schèker emúna (or emúno)," that is, "by the false faith of the Christians." This is indeed denied by Rabbi Salman Zevi in his Jewish Theriac, in the third chapter, number 10, where he states: מילט שרייבט אונר ווידר סוף כסדר ווען איין יוד דען אנדרן ועקסירן וויל אז זאגט ער ביא דער גוים שקר אמונה דס איז ביא דער קריסטן וולשן גלויבן. חלילה לו איר זאגן עס ניט. טוז הובן אנגעלוגנט ארויסג. דען קריסטן המזון וואס איין חולך פיילעט מיט. אונטהובן וויא זייט גוק שטייט אז that is: Now the apostate writes again out of order: when a Jew wants to lead another astray, he says, "by the Gôjim scheker amôno," that is, "by the false faith of the Christians." Far be this from us; we do not say it, for the reasons stated above, for the Christians observe what is enjoined upon them. Wherever gôjim appears, it does not mean the Christians but rather the heathens who serve Avôda sâra (that is, idols). These are the words of Rabbi Salman. But just as this reckless scoundrel refuses to acknowledge a great many things against his better knowledge and conscience, so he does here as well; for by the word Gôjim the Christians are expressly understood, as will be clearly demonstrated below in the sixteenth chapter of this first part. And as for his claim that idolatrous peoples are meant by it, it will be irrefutably shown in the said sixteenth chapter that the Christians are regarded by the Jews as great idolaters. For this reason, the excuse he has put forward is entirely and utterly worthless.

Seventh, they call it טעות Tatúa, that is, an error, and טעות הבל Taúth bével, that is, an error and vanity, or a vain error; for in the Polish Siddúrim it stands at fol. 70. col. 2. under the title Józer léschábbath schéni ácher happésach, in a prayer which begins אימתי שמחי Ajummáthi simchí, written thus: אויב חרפני שובי לטעות, that is, My enemy (understand: Christendom) reproaches me (and says to me:) return to my Tatúa, or error (that is, adopt my religion), as is explained in the Commentario thereon, where these words stand: כך אומרים לנו האויבים, לשוב ולקבל אמנותם שהוא טעות הבל, that is, Thus our enemies say to us, that we should apostatize and adopt their faith, which is a Taúth bével, that is, a vain error.

When the Jews speak of the various religions of the Christians, they customarily call the Roman Catholic religion, contrary to the rules of grammar, תפל אמונה tòfel emúna instead of תפלה אמונה emúna tefèla, that is, a tasteless faith; and the Reformed and Lutheran religion they call חדש אמונה chadásch emúna instead of חדשה אמונה emúna chadáscha, that is, the new faith; as I myself have heard this with my own ears, and it was spoken to me in conversation.

As for the Christian clergy, they are dishonored in various ways through mocking names, and they call them the following.

Firstly, כומרים Cumarim, which signifies idolatrous and heathen priests, as Rabbi Elias indicates in his Tischbi fol. 44. col. 2. under the word כמר Camár, where he notes that Cûmar, which is the singularis numerus, or singular form, of Cumarim, means כהן לעבודה זרה Côhen la-avôda sâra, that is, a priest who serves idolatry. In the Hebrew language, such priests are called כמרים Kemarim, a word that appears only three times in Holy Scripture: at 2 Kgs 23:5, Hos 10:5, and Zeph 1:4, in which three passages the priests of Baal are thus named. The word derives from כמר Camár, or נכמר Nichmár, which means to be warm and burning, also to become brown, black, and contracted; among the Chaldeans, however, it means to enclose. The idolatrous priests are so named either because they wore brown or black garments, or because they appeared black and sooty from much sacrificing, or because they were zealous and, as it were, ardent in the performance of their idolatrous service, or because they kept themselves enclosed and separated from the world. In the Chaldean language, however, they are called כומרין Cumarín, and among the Rabbis, in the manner mentioned above, כומרים Cumarím, and the word is always used of idolatrous priests. In the Syriac language, however, even the true and righteous priests of God are so named, and Christ the Lord is called כומרא Cúmero, that is, a priest, at Heb 6:20; and at Heb 8:1 and 9:11, רב כומרא Raf cúmere, that is, the high priest; and at Heb 9:7, the high priest is likewise called Raf Cúmere. And at Heb 9:6, all the priests who attended to divine service in the Temple at Jerusalem are called כומרא Cúmere. Among the Jews, however, the word is taken not in a good sense but in a bad one. That our clergy are called Cumarim can be seen in the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara, fol. 2. col. 1., in the Tosephoth, where it is taught that a Jew may well lend money to Christians to offer in church, with the following reason given: כי מה שהם נותנים אותם לגלחים ולכומרים: אינו ממש לשם עבודה זרה אלא לצורך הנאתם Gallachim (that is, the tonsured ones) and to the Cumarim, this is not done properly on account of the idol, but for their livelihood. Likewise, a prelate of Lindau is called ראש כומרים Rosch Cumarim in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzachon p. 159. numero 290., and the Christian clergy are called Cumarim three times in the book Majene jeschua, fol. 91. col. 2., twice in the old Nizzachon p. 42., and also in the little book Schevet Jehuda, fol. 4. col. 1. and fol.

30. col. 1. and fol. 45. col. 1. In the old Nizzachon, at p. 82., the following is also written concerning the words of Isa 5:11, "Woe to those who rise early in the morning to pursue strong drink, and who linger into the night while wine inflames them": אלו הגלחים והכומרים שמשכימים ומעריבים בבית תרפותם בשביל חוקם: שקורין פריבנדא, that is: These are the Gallachim (or tonsured ones) and the Cumarim, who sit morning and evening in their houses of shame (that is, in the churches) on account of their stipends, which they call Præbenden. In particular, monks are called Cumarim because they enclose themselves in monasteries. The Pope, however, is called הכומר הגדול, that is, the great Cúmar, in Rabbi Mosche de Mircado's commentary on the Psalms, fol. 92. col. 3., on Ps 110, and is otherwise called אפיפיור Affiffor. As for the origin of this word, I have not yet been able to find it anywhere, though I have taken great pains over the matter. If I recall correctly, Rabbi Salman Zevi writes in his Jewish Theriac that this word derives from פי יורה pif jóreh, that is, "his mouth teaches," since the Pope teaches the Roman Catholic Church what it is to do; but I do not at all believe this to be the true origin, and I hold rather that, in keeping with Jewish malice, which habitually mocks everything pertaining to Christians, something derisive is concealed within it. Whether it is perhaps intended to mean as much as אבי פעור Afi Peor, that is, the father of Peor, because Christ is called Baal Peor by Abarbanel, as was reported above at p. 78 and 79, and because the Pope is the head of the Roman Catholic Church and is called its father, remains an open question. It is certain enough that such a name contains something contemptible, which can be judged from the mocking names given to the Evangelists, Apostles, and others, as was shown in the preceding seventh chapter. The vicious minds of the Jews are unfathomable.

Second, they are called כומרי ישוע Cúmere Jeschúa, that is, idolatrous priests of Jesus. This appears in the aforementioned book Májene jeschúa, fol. 73. col. 2. in the eleventh Májan, in the fifth Tamar, where the following is written concerning the mother of Emperor Constantine the Great: ותפתחה האשה הזאת מחגמוני הנוצרים להאמין בדת ישוע ובתלמידיו והסיתה בנה להאמין בו ולשום צורת ישוע that is, this woman was seduced by the Christian prelates into adopting the religion of Jesus and His disciples, and she persuaded her son to believe in Him and to place the image of Jesus with the cross upon his banners, and also to leave his entire land and realm, the great Rome, to the Cúmere Jeschúa, that is, to the idolatrous priests of Jesus. The very same is also read there at fol. 85. col. 2. in the twelfth Májan, in the fourth Tamar; and at p. 91. col. 3. at the end of the book they are likewise so named. Now, since the Christian clergy are called Cumarim, the clerical estate is called כומרות Cumarúth, as may be seen in the little book Schevet Jehúda fol. 30. col. 1. and found elsewhere as well.

Third, they are called כומרי אדום Cúmere Edom, that is, idolatrous priests of Edom; and this is found in Abarbanel's book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 74. col. 3., where, concerning the words of Zech 13:7, "And I will turn my hand against the little ones," the following is written: אדום על כומרי אדום: שדורשים להם אמונתם וכזביהם והם עצמם נקראים אצלם צעירים על ענותנותם ושפלותם: that is, one must interpret this passage in this manner as referring to the Cúmere Edóm, that is, the idolatrous priests of Edom, who preach to them their faith and their lies, and these same ones are called "little" among them on account of their humility and lowliness. The aforementioned Abarbanel writes the very same thing in his commentary on chapter 13 of the prophet Zechariah, fol. 294. col. 4. And in Rabbi Lipmann's Sépher Nizzáchon, the following is read at p. 174, numero 318: זל התאוה אל יאמר אדם הואיל ואמר ר"ז לא אכיל בשר ולא אשתה יין ואתענה תמיד ולא אשכוב והכבוד מוציאין את האדם מן העולם לא אאכול בשר ולא אשתה יין ואתענה תמיד ולא אשכוב עם אשה ולא אשב בדירה נאה ולא אלבוש כי אם שק כמו כומרי אדום עושים: that is, a person should not say: since our rabbis, of blessed memory, have said that lust (or desire) and honor drive a person out of this world, I will eat no meat and drink no wine, but will fast at all times; I will also not lie with a woman, nor dwell in a fine house, nor clothe myself in anything other than a sackcloth, as the Cúmere Edóm, that is, the idolatrous priests of Edom, do.

Fourth, they are called גלחים Gallachím (or Gallochím), that is, "the shorn ones," and in the singular number, or individual count, a single one is called גלח Gallach, that is, "a shorn one," and this word derives from גלח galách or gillach, which means to shear or to shear off. Concerning this, Elias writes in his Tischbi fol. 17. col. 1. as follows: לפי שהגוי 'אלה הנוצרים מגלחים פאת ראשם לכך: נקראו גלחים והיחיד גלח: that is, because the priests of the God of the Christians shear off the corner of their head, they are therefore called Gallachím, but a single one alone is called Gállach. The word Gallachím is, moreover, entirely common among the Jews, and it is found in the old Nizzáchon p. 81., where it is written: הגלחים פותרין ושה גבהות אדם וגו' בגטי הדיה. תשובה כי על אלהותם נאמרה: that is, the Gallachím interpret the words of Isa 2:17, "that every height of men must bow down, etc.," as referring to the arrogant; but the answer to them is that this Parascha, or section, is said of their God (Jesus), as it is written (immediately thereafter): "And the splendor of men shall be humbled, but the idols He shall utterly root out." And at p. 82., in that same work, concerning the words of Isa 5:8, "Woe to those who join house to house, etc.," it is written as follows: גם פרשה זו בעובדי ישו תוכל לפתרה על הגלחים והכומרים שתפסו בידם כל הארץ ומגיעים בית בבית

ומקריבים שדה בשדה עד שלא השאירו אפס מקום: that is, this verse can also be interpreted as referring to those who serve Jesus, namely the Gallachim and Cumarim, who seize all lands with their hands, joining house to house and field to field. It is likewise to be found there at p. 144., and in the Talmudic tractate Avoda sára fol. 2. col. 1. in the Tosephóth, as well as at fol. 50. col. 2., likewise in the Tosephóth.

The word Gallach, however, is found in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon, p. 252, where it is stated: המינים אומרים שהגלה תופש בידו גופו ועצמו של ישו בכל that is, the heretics say that the Gallach holds with his hand the body, and Jesus himself entirely, just as He was hanged upon the cross. And the same is also found in Rabbi Lipmann's Sépher Nizzáchon, numero 112, and in the German-Hebrew booklet Mikveh Jisraël, fol. 20, col. 1, numero 23, as well as in the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Avoda Sára, fol. 2, col. 1, and fol. 50, col. 2, in the Tosephóth. And in the booklet Schévet Jebúda, fol. 77, col. 1, one reads: שנת ק"עו גזרה מלכות הרשעה על עמנו שילכו מצויינים בחותם נכר מ"ב שנה ולמעלה האנשים בכובעיהם והנשים בצעיפיהם ועוד הכבידו עולם ליתן לו כל בעל הבית לגלח העיר ו' פשוטים בכל שנה לזמן חגם that is, in the year 176 (that is, in the year of Christ 1416), the godless kingdom issued a decree against our people, that from the twelfth year of age and upward they should go marked with a foreign sign, the men on their hats and the women on their veils. Their yoke was also made heavier thereby, in that every head of household was required to give six pennies each year to the Gallach of the city at the time of his feast. For this reason, the clergy is called גלחות Gallachúth (or Gallóchus), as can be seen in Rabbi Jechiel's disputation, p. 12 and 13, where one reads that when the convert Nicholas, who had disputed with him, demanded that he swear an oath to confirm his testimony, and the clergy who were present likewise demanded this, and the queen also requested of him that he comply with them, he gave her the following answer: אנא אדונתי מעולם לא נשבעתי ולא אתחיל להשבע עתה ואף אם אשבע לכל ריבוד וטענה אשר אני משיב שאינו כרצונו ושהוא נגד אמונתכם אז יקראני עברייני כי עברתי על שבועתי בעיני הגלחות האלו ועוד כתיב לא תשא את שם יי' אלהיך לשוא פירוש לחינם לדבר שאינו צורך ואף אמנם לא אכחד כי אני האמת המופלא ממני ידוע לאחרים שגדולים ממני כפליים ואני הצעיר מכולם אך לא ניסיתי that is, I beg my lady (with all due respect): I have never sworn an oath, and I will not begin now; and even if I were to swear to every word and argument to which I respond not according to his (that is, the aforementioned Nicholas's) liking, and which is contrary to your faith, he would nonetheless call me a transgressor (that is, a perjurer), and say that I had broken my oath before this Gallachúth, that is, the clergy. Moreover, it is written (Exod 20:7): You shall not take the name of the LORD your God in vain, that is, without cause and when necessity does not require it. Yet I will conceal nothing, but will declare the truth; and what I do not know, others know, who are twice as great (that is, twice as learned) as I, for I am the least among them all. Nor am I accustomed, as they are, to going in and out before this Gallachúth (or clergy) and disputing with it. In the aforementioned German-Hebrew booklet Mikveh Jisraël, however, fol. 17, col. 2, גלחא Gallachá is read in place of Gallachúth.

Because Christian clergy generally learn the Latin language, it is therefore called לשון גלחים leschón Gallachím, that is, the language of the tonsured, as can be seen in the old Nizzáchon, p. 154, 165, and 168; or לשון גלחות leschón Gallachúth (or Galláchus), as is found in the old Nizzáchon p. 168. They also call it לשון עבודה זרה leschón avóda sára, that is, the language of idolatry, as is plainly written in the book Tóledóth Jizchak fol. 57, col. 2, in the Parascha Mischpatím; or לשון טומאה leschón túma, that is, the language of impurity, or the impure language, as the convert Dieterich Schwab indicates in the first part of his Jewish Cloak, in the seventh chapter, p. 64, and as Samuel Friedrich Brenz indicates in his second chapter of the Stripped Jewish Snakeskin. In the aforementioned little book Mikveh Jisraël, however, all languages other than Hebrew are called גלחת Gallacháth (or Galláchas), as can be read there at fol. 2, col. 2, and fol. 3, col. 1. I have also myself frequently heard among the Jews that they collectively call all our books, whether written in German, Latin, or any other language, Galláchus Sephórim, that is, Galláchus books.

Though not only Christian clergy, of whatever religion they may be, but also Turkish and all pagan priests are called Gallachím by the Jews, as can be read in the German-Hebrew booklet Masseóth Binjamín, or Benjamin's Travel Description, fol. 59. col. 1. and fol. 71. col. 2., as well as fol. 72. col. 1. and in the book Emek hammélech fol. 17. col. 1. under the Title Scháär tikkúne hatteschúva: yet the gentlemen clergy of the Roman Catholic Church are called this in particular, and I find in the Jewish books two reasons why they call them thus. The first is found in the diabolical blasphemous booklet Toledóth Jeschu, paginâ 21. The words of which were cited above in the fourth chapter, paginâ 192., where it is reported that when Jesus had been buried by Judas in his garden beneath a watercourse, he was subsequently dug up again, bound to a horse's tail, and dragged along, whereby his hair was also torn out; and in memory of this, the Galláchim among the Christians shave the hair from the middle of their heads. This matter has indeed been presented by Friedrich Samuel Brenz in his Jewish Stripped Snakeskin, in the first chapter, though with some alteration of the circumstances; but it has been denied in his customary manner, maliciously and against his conscience and better knowledge, by Rabbi Salman Zevi in his Jewish Theriac, in the first chapter, numero 8. fol. 6. col. 1.:

however, Friedrich Samuel Brenz wrote the truth, as the aforementioned accursed booklet Toledóth Jeschu attests.

The second reason is found in the book Zerór hammór, Cracow printing, fol. 118. col. 3. and 4., in the Parascha Haasinu; however, in the Venice printing of the year 326, that is, by our calendar 1566, it has been omitted, and a blank space was left so that the matter could be written in there. The words in that place read as follows: השדים אין להם שער לפי שנבראו בערב שבת כפי שפירשתי באמרו אשר ברא אלהים לעשות ולא עשה כי כשקדש היום נשארו חסרים ולא נגמרה שערם ומלאכתם הוא אשר מצא את הימ' במדבר הם השדים ולפי שנשארו חסרים מששת ימי בראשית נכתב הימים חסר יוד ולפי שאומת אדום וכל תועבותם הבלים הוא מכח השדים לכן הגלחים והכומרים מהם היו מגלחי ראשם ומניחים עטרה בראש כמו כתר ואותם שהם טמאים יותר כמו ההגמונים והאפיפיור מגלחים כל ראשם כמו עגולה ואין מניחים אלא מעט שער סביב האזנים לדמות עצמם לשדים שאין להם שער וכן כמו שאין בשדים ברכה כן מניחים אצל בית טעותם אילן סרק, that is: The devils have no hair, because they were created on the eve of the Sabbath, as I have explained when it is said (Gen 2:3): which God created to make. He did not make them, however, for when He had sanctified the day (of the Sabbath), they remained incomplete, and their hair and their work were not finished; and this is that of which it is written (Gen 36:24): he (namely Ana) found the Jemim in the wilderness (which word means mule, but is here erroneously interpreted as referring to devils), which are the devils that remained incomplete from the six days of creation, and for this reason ימם Jemim is written without the letter Yod. And since the Edomite people (that is, the Christians; in the copy printed at Venice in the year 327, that is, in the year of Christ 1567, instead of Ummath Edom, that is, the Edomite people, one reads Ummath Paras u-Madai, that is, the people of Persia and Media, in order thereby to conceal the matter) and all their abominations and vanities derive from the power of the devils, their Gallachim and Cumarim therefore shave their heads and leave on top of them what looks like a patch. But those who are very unclean, such as the prelates and the Pope, have their entire head shaved (or made bald) like a ball, and leave only a little hair around the ears, so as to make themselves resemble the devils, who have no hair. Likewise, just as there is no blessing in the devils, so they also place and plant beside the house of their idol a barren tree that bears no fruit, and such a tree is fitting for them as well, since they beget no sons and daughters. These are the words of the book Zerór hammór. On this matter, Rabbi Menachem of Recanati also writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 149. col. 2., in the Parascha Kedoschim, as follows: הלא תראה כי הגוים אשר מדת הדין שופעת עליהם וכפרט לכומרי עבודה זרה שרוח הטומאה שורה עליהם משחיתים הפאת הזקפה ראשם, that is: Do you not see that the Gójim, that is, the heathens (understand, however, the Christians), over whom the attribute of judgment exerts its influence, and in particular the idolatrous priests, over whom the unclean spirit dwells, corrupt the ends (of their hair) by shaving their heads all around?

In the book of D. Luther which Nicolaus Selneccerus caused to be published concerning the Jews and their lies, and which was printed in Leipzig in the year 1577, it is written that they call Christian preachers נבלנים Nablanim (or Nablónim), that is, flayers; כלבים Kelafim (or Kelóbim), that is, dogs; and גנבים gannavim (or gannóvim), that is, thieves. The converted Johann Adrian von Embden likewise reports this in his letter of admonition and warning, p. 28, as does Dieterich Schwabe in his Jewish Cloak, in the seventh chapter of the first part, p. 63, stating that they call a preacher Nablon, that is, a flayer, from the word נבלה nefélá, which means a carcass. I believe all of this to be true as well, but I have neither heard it from them nor found it in their books. As for the word Kelóbim, that is, dogs, Christians are commonly called by this name among them, as will be demonstrated below in the sixteenth chapter of this first part.

Chapter XI.

In which it is shown how the Jews name the churches of the Christians, and what they otherwise write concerning them and the things found within them.

Rabbi Bechai writes in his commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 198. col. 1, in the Parasha Ekef, on the words of Deut 7:26, "You shall have an abomination and a horror of it" (namely, of the idols), in the following manner: למדך הכתוב שחייב האדם לשקץ עבודה זרה להכירה בלשון גנאי, that is, Scripture teaches you hereby that a person is obligated to have an abomination toward an idol and to refer to it by a contemptuous name. Since they now regard Christian churches in general as houses of idolatry, as shall be shown in what follows, they likewise give them shameful and contemptuous names, and they call such a church:

Firstly, Toēfa, תועבה, that is, an abomination (two or more they call in the plural Toēfoth (or Toēfos)). Concerning this, in the German-Hebrew book called Brandspiegel, in the 18th chapter, fol. 68. col. 2., it is written as follows: דיינא דא חולטן האבן דאס זיי דיא קינדר טראגן מוסן אן אכטונג האבן דאס זיי דייא קינדר ניט וונטר גוים טראגן זייא וולטן נוא ביר איין תועבה טראגן און 'גיגין מיט דן חמין און 'דאס קינד ולט איין גימהל חוס 'גילופט און 'חוס 'וא 'קסס דר חטיא חא 'גלוסט וירד that is, Those who keep maids to carry the children must take care that they do not carry the children among Gojim (understand: the Christians), lest they carry them before a Toēfa (that is, an abomination, namely a church) and go inside with them; and if the child were to see a painting and it pleased him, and he kissed the images and desired to go in again, such a habit in youth would lead him to all manner of evil. They also call it Beth toēfoth (or Bes toēfos), בית תועבה, that is, a house of abominations, concerning which it is reported in the little book Schévet Jehuda, fol. 84. col. 2., that on one occasion certain princes and prelates demanded of a pope that he should expel the Jews, but they were unable to persuade him to do so, and the words read as follows: אחר זה נתעצמו כל השרים וקצת מההגמונים ולא יכלו לנצח: האפיפור עד שאחד מההגמונים נתייעץ משרתו שיעלילו על היהודים שאחד מהם גנב צלם 'אחד של כסף מבית תועבתם וגו' that is, After this the princes, as well as some of the prelates, sought to strengthen their case with firm arguments, but they could not overcome the pope (and bring him around to their view), until one of the prelates had taken counsel with his servants that they should accuse the Jews of a wicked deed and say that one of them had stolen a silver image from their Bes toëfos, that is, house of abominations, etc. In the old Nizzáchon, at p. 196, the following is also read: כגון: קלוקן וכלים למה מטבילין אותם וכי יש להם רוח ונפש הצלמים שבבתי תועבותם וכל כלי תשמיש ע"ז כגון: that is, Why do they baptize the images that are in their Battë toëfóth (or toëfos), that is, houses of abominations, as well as all vessels belonging to idolatrous worship, such as the bells and the Kelófim, that is, the dogs (understand: the chalices, which are called כלבים Kelófim, that is, dogs, instead of the German word Kelch or the Hebrew word כלים Kélim, which means vessel, in a malicious manner, for the purpose of mocking them, as will be shown in the following twelfth chapter)? Do they then have a breath and a soul?

We can thus see from this that the converted Friedrich Samuel Brenz, in his Jüdischer abgestreiffter Schlangenbalg ("Jewish Shed Snakeskin"), in the second chapter, p. 9, and Dieterich Schwab in his Jüdischer Deckmantel ("Jewish Cloak"), in the seventh chapter of the first part, as well as Johann Adrian in his open letter, p. 29, have written the plain truth when they report that the Jews call a Christian church Toëfa. To be sure, the frivolous scoundrel Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his Jüdischer Theriack ("Jewish Theriac"), in the second chapter, num. 19, fol. 12, col. 2, wishes to deny this in his customary fashion, stating against the aforementioned Friedrich Samuel Brenz: אומר שרייבט מיין קינד הייטן: ווו זאג איך דס עם הורייג וומס דס würdig תועבה דס ווייז רייטס ניקס מיט מיהר און וורט ורקערט. איר זאגן דוך צו זומר שול הויך תיבה היוד לפני תיבה להתפלל דס מען ווער דס גיט וור בעטן. איר הייסן איין בימה וודר הויך ווורף אן מתפלל זיין תיבה ווו זאג אן ווק זאגן לו וירר קירכן תיבה ובר ניט מיט דעם עיין ותועבה מרגריטה מיין אונד שרייבט דס דער, that is: "The apostate writes that we call a church תועבה Toëfa, which in German means 'worthless and unworthy'; so I say that the Idiot (that is, the ignorant person) has distorted the word for us. We also call our synagogue תיבה Téfa, לפני ammud (that is, the pillar) to pray.' We call a Bima, or elevated platform upon which one prays, Téfa, and so one may also call their churches Téfa, but not with the letter ע Ajin (תועבה Toëfa)." Antonius Margarita, an apostate, himself writes this in his book: "But in truth, the common man calls their churches Beth tephillathám (or Bes tephillásam), that is, the house of their prayer."

This is, however, a hollow evasion on the part of Rabbi Salman Zevi, for the Jews never call their synagogue téva, but only the place within the synagogue where the book of the Law rests téva, which word means a chest or box, because the book of the Law is kept therein as if in a chest; and the wicked fellow intends in this manner to craftily persuade the Christians, since there is but a slight difference in pronunciation between téfa and toëfa, that they should not believe that a Christian church is mockingly named by them, even though the untruth of his statement has been proven by me from the Jews' own books.

Second, they call a Christian church בית עבודה זרה Beth (or Bes) avóda sára, that is, a house of idolatry, or an idolatrous house; and this is found in Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon's Commentario, or commentary, on the Mishna of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 78, col. 4 of the Amsterdam Talmud, where he writes as follows: ידוע שכל עיר של אומה נצרית שהיה להם בה בית תיפלה שהוא בית עבודה זרה בלא ספק אותה העיר אסור לעבור בה בכוונה וכל שכן לדור בה אבל אנחנו תחת ידיהם בעוונותינו ושוכנים בארצם אנוסים ותקיים בנו מה שנאמר ועבדתם שם אלהים אחרים מעשה ידי אדם עץ ואבן : ואם העיר דינה כן קל וחומר דין בית עבודה זרה עצמו שהוא בית עבודה זרה בלא ספק : that is, You must know that, without any doubt, every city of the Christian people in which they have a Beth (or Bes) tiphla (that is, a house of tastelessness or foolishness), which is a Beth avóda sára, that is, a house of idolatry, is forbidden to pass through deliberately, and much more so to dwell therein. We are, however, under their power on account of our sins, and dwell in their land under compulsion, and that which is said (Deut 4:28) is fulfilled in us: There you will serve other gods, which are the work of human hands, wood and stone. Now if such a judgment is passed upon a city, how much more is this to be observed with respect to a Beth avóda sára, that is, a house of idolatry (or an idolatrous house) itself, which is so forbidden to us that we may scarcely look upon it, to say nothing of entering it. These are the words of Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon.

It is also read in the little book Schévet Jehúda, fol. 62. col. 1., that there was once a great famine, and many Jewish boys had themselves baptized in order to obtain bread. The words read as follows: בגלות ספרד הגיעו ספינות למחוז איטליא : לעשות ולסוף וגם שם הרעב כבד ובספינות דבר עצום ולא היו העניים יודעים לעשות מה : לעשות ולסוף יצאו אבל אנשי העיירות לא היו מניחים אותם לכונוס והלכו למחוז גינובא וגם שם הרעב בארץ אבל הגוים הניחום לבא בעיר הנערים לא היו יכולין לסבול והיו הולכין לבית העבודה זרה להמיר דת שיתנו להם מעט לחם ורבים מהערלים היו הולכים בשווקים ועץ ישו בידם ומעט לחם בידם השנית והיו אומרים לבחורי ישראל אם תשתחו לו הרי פת ועל דרך זה נשתמדו : that is, concerning those (Jews) who were in Hispania in exilio, or in misery: ships landed at the borders or seaports of Italy, but there too was a great famine, and in the ships a mighty plague, and the wretched people did not know what they should do. At last they disembarked, and when the people in the cities would not let them in, they made their way to the port of Genoa, where likewise there was a famine in the land, yet the inhabitants allowed them to enter the city. The young boys, however, could not endure the hunger, and went into the Beth (or Bes) avoda sara, that is, the house of idolatry, to change their religion, so that they might be given a little bread; and many of the uncircumcised (that is, the Christians) went through the streets with a Crucifix in one hand and a little bread in the other, and said to the Israelite boys: if you bow down before this, behold, you shall receive bread. And in this manner many were geschmaddet (that is, baptized, as may be seen in the following twelfth chapter on baptism) and were mingled among the Gojim, that is, the heathens.

Two or more churches, however, are called בתי עבודה זרה Bätte avoda sara, that is, houses of idolatry, as can be read in the old Nizzachon on pages 241 and 242, where it is written as follows: שאול למינים אתם ידעתם כי אדם המרת טמא הוא ומטמא נושאין ונוגעיםין וכל אשר באוהל אשר הוא שם ואתם משמאין כהן כל שעה ומכניסין שלכם ב"ה ב"ה that is, Ask the heretics (namely the Christians): you know well that a dead person is unclean, and that he defiles those who carry him and touch him, as well as everything that is in the tent in which he lies; but you defile the priest at all times and bring him into your Bätte avoda sara, that is, your houses of idolatry. Immediately thereafter, the words of Isa 65:4, concerning those who sit among the graves and eat swine's flesh and broth of abominable things, are expounded as follows: היושבים בקברים שקוברים פגריהם: ה"ה ב"ה that is, Those who sit among the graves are those who bury their carrion (that is, their dead, who are here called carrion by way of contempt) in their Bätte avoda sara, that is, in their houses of idolatry, and defile themselves. But who are these? Those who do such things: they are the ones who eat swine's flesh, namely the Christians.

Third, they call it בית עבודת אלילים Beth avodath elilim (or Bes avodas elilim), that is, a house of idol worship, and this is read in the Sépher chasidim, numero 431, in these words: כשבא אדם לעשות חלונות לביתו לא יעשה כנגד בית עבודת אלילים שבשעתה נראה כמשתחוה ועוד שזהיר פונה בנגד ע"א וכתוב אל תפנו אל האלילים, that is: When a man makes windows in his house, he shall not make them facing the house of idol worship, for when he opens one, it has the appearance as though he were bowing down before it. Moreover, he would always be looking toward the idol, whereas it is written (Lev 19:4): You shall not turn yourselves toward idols. And at numero 435 of the same work, the following is read: איש אחד הלך בבית עבודת אלילים ונתחרט שאל לזקן להורות לו מה לעשות א"ל באותו יום היה כך וכך בכל שנה, that is: There was once a man who had gone into a Beth avodath elilim, and he afterward repented of it, and asked an elder to instruct him as to what he should do; whereupon the elder told him: on such a day, such and such a thing happened; you must fast every year on that day, and he did so. After this follows: יהודי אחד הלך בחצר בית עבודת אלילים כשיצא ששמע בת קול שאמרה ואותי השלכת אחרי גוך והתענה כל ימיו, that is: A Jew once went into the forecourt of a Beth avodath elilim, that is, of an idolatrous house, and as he went out again, he heard a voice from heaven, which said: you have cast me behind your back, and he fasted all the days of his life. The like is also found there at numero 436 and 437, as well as in the book Jore déo, numero 143, fol. 116, col. 1, where in place of the above, בית אלילים Beth elilim, that is, a house of idols, is likewise read.

Fourth, they call it בית הטיפלה Beth (or Bes) battiphla, that is, a house of insipidity or foolishness, instead of בית התפילה Beth (or Bes) battephilla, which means a house of prayer; and they use the mocking word tiphla in place of tephilla, as can be clearly seen from what was adduced in connection with the preceding second name they give to our churches, from Rabbi Moshe bar Maimon's commentary on the Mishnah of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára. They also call it בית תפלuth Beth tiphuth (or Bes tiphlus), as can be read in the Sépher chasidim, no. 433, where without any doubt the word נוצרים Nózerim, which means Christians, must be understood in place of מצרים Mizrim, that is, Egyptians; and the most learned Buxtorf writes in his Chaldean, Chaldaic, Rabbinic, and Talmudic Lexicon, under the root word תפל Tafâl, that he had often heard with his own ears that the Jews had called a Christian church by this name.

Most often, however, they refer to it with a single word, תיפלה Tiphla, that is, an absurdity and foolishness, because they hold that nothing but absurd and foolish things are done therein. This contemptuous name appears in the book Mäjene jeschuà fol. 75. col. 4., in the eleventh Majan, in the fifth Tamar, where it is stated that when the Ishmaelites, that is, the Turks, were masters of the city of Jerusalem, it had always been permitted to the Jews to offer their prayers there in place of sacrifices: עד שפשט יד אדם ולכדוה מיד הישמעאלים ועשו שם תיפלה להם העמידו שם פסיליהם ומנעו ישראל מלהתפלל במקום שהוא ותחץ השקוץ משוממם על קבורת ישוע אלהיהם, that is: Until the power of Edom (that is, of the Christians) gained the upper hand, and they conquered it from the Ishmaelites, and made therein a Tifla (that is, a church), into which they placed their images, and forbade the Israelites to pray in that place, and also erected the desolate abomination over the grave of Jesus their God. Likewise, in the Judeo-German booklet Masseôth Benjamin (or Masseos Binjomin) fol. 45. col. 2., St. Peter's Church in Rome is named thus, and the words read as follows: רום איז גיטיילט אין דואיי חלקים לויפין דאס וואייר האקיס דורך זייבד דרדורך אינמי טיטם איז תיפלה פון אמק פייטם אין דעם פאדערסט חלק פון אמק, that is, Rome is divided into two parts, and the Tiber runs between both parts. St. Peter's Tifla is in the front part of the place. And at fol. 46. col. 1. there is written of St. Stephen's Church there as follows: אין דיי תיפלה פון אשטיפן שטין קופרני סוילן אין איין קעל: חוך, that is, In the Tifla of St. Stephen's stand copper pillars in a chapel. Soon thereafter follows:

שטיט אן דער תיפלה לאטרננין דיו צורה פֿון שמשון הגבור מיט איין שטייניגן זייל אין דער that is, There also stands at the Lateran Tifla the image of the mighty Samson, with a stone pillar in his hand. And at fol. 53. col. 2. there is written of the church in Jerusalem: דאס נענט דאס that is, Further one sees there a great Tifla, which they call the grave of that man (that is, Christ); thither they come from the four corners of the world to visit the grave. The same is also to be found there at fol. 52. col. 1., fol. 54. col. 1., and fol. 55. col. 1. Turkish churches are also named in this manner, as may be read in the aforementioned booklet Masseôth Benjamin fol. 49. col. 1. three times, and at fol. 60. col. 1. and fol. 56. col. 1., as well as in the Judeo-German booklet Mikveh Jisraël, fol. 25. col. 2.; and in the same manner a Mexican church is likewise so called in the said booklet Mikveh Jisraël, fol. 13. col. 1., and in the booklet Geliloth erez Jisraël another heathen church is called by the same name.

Here I must also point out a great lie, which is found in the Maase-Book, in the 240th chapter, concerning the Emiranus Church in Mainz, where the following is written: מעשה הין געשעהן מיין טייל זאגט עז זיין צו אאכן געשעהן חול' און 'דאז טייל זאגן עז זיין צו רעגנשבורג געשעהן פון איין קעסטלוכן רבי דער חוט גהייסן רבי עמרם דער חסיד הין צו אאכן דא הייאן גיווען. נון איז דער רבי געגן חול' חוט ישיבה גהאלטן צו קעלן אים ריין. וויא ער חיו גזעסן צו קעלן ווער ער גערן בייא זיין עלטרן צו אאכן שיקט ער חין זיין קרממקיהיט נאך זיין תלמידים און 'זאגט זיין תלמידים זוא זאמטן מיין לו אאכן לו קבורת פאן בייא זיין עלטרן ספרטכן זיין תלמידים ווידר חיו דו קענן איר מיט טאן דען ש מיו זייני גרוסי מכה א ווייט צו פירן ספרטך רבי עמרם ווידר ווען איך גשטורבן בין זו זייט איך אטהר חול' לאגט איך מיין איין חרון חול' דר נאך סטעלט דען חרון מיין איין קליין שיפליין און 'דאז וואסר אול' לאזט לו וסך אליין גיין וואו עז הין וויל. וויא דער רבי עמרם גיסטורבן וואר ווארן זיין אטהר חול' טעטן אין אין איין חרון חול' טעטן דען חרון מיין דו סיפליין חויד דו וואסר דא חוב דז שיפליין חן לו גין ביז עז קען אאכן קמט חן דיא סטאט. וויא נון דיא לייט זאכן דאז גרוס אונדער חיו מיין דא זאשן זיין דר לו חול' זאכן דו גרס וואונדער וויא דא איין חז מיין איין חרון און 'דו ספרטכן זיין דז אל גוויס עפיו הייליגס זיין חול' בעגערט אן ווא חיון לו קבורה טאן חול' דיא לייט גינגן הין חול' גריפן נאך דען סיפליין דו זול דז שיפליין ה נטר זיך דו גינגן דיא כותים הין חול' זאטן צו דען הגמון פאן אאכן דו קמט דיא גנץ סטאט לו זואן חן ריין יהודים חול' כותים להבדיל דורך אנדר און 'וויא נון דין ריין יהודים חן פחרטן דו ריין קומן אול' וואוטן זעהן דז גרוס וואונדער דו גינג דו סיפליין לו דען יהודים לו. דו וואוטן דיא כותים ווידר נאך דען סיפליין גריפן דו קונטן זיא נישט דען זו מוסט. דו דיא כותים נאך דען סיפליין גריפן פלוג דו סיפליין הינטר זיך ביז דו אן סינפליך איך דז דאז סיין לו דען יהודים בעגערט חונ' נישט לו כותים דו רוסטן דיא כותים חונ' דיא יהודים גיט מיין סייד חול' זעלס וואו מיין סייד חיו דו געיהעט דו וסך לו דען יהודים דו גינגן דיא יהודים חון דיא סייד המיין חול' טעטן דען חרון חויד דו וואר חין חרון מיין אה חול' מיין בריף לאג בייא מיין דו סטונד דרינגן גשריבן איין ליבן ברידער איד פריינד איר יהודים פון ק"ק אאכן חול' חיר בין לו חויד קומן דען איך בין גיסטורבן לו ק"ק קעלן חול' חיר ביגער

 רבי, that is: A story occurred, some say it happened in Mainz, and some report that it took place in Regensburg, concerning an excellent Rabbi who was called Rabbi Amram the pious, and who was a native of Mainz. This Rabbi went and held a high school in Cologne on the Rhine; and when he was in Cologne, he wished very much to be with his parents in Mainz, and in his illness he sent for his disciples and said to them that they should bury him in Mainz with his parents. His disciples, however, said to him: we cannot do this, for it is too great a danger to carry him so far. Rabbi Amram replied to this: when I am dead, cleanse me and lay me in a coffin, and then place the coffin in a small boat upon the water, and let the boat go wherever it will. When Rabbi Amram had died, they cleansed him and laid him in a coffin, and placed the coffin in a small boat upon the water; then the boat began to move, until it came to the city of Mainz. When the people saw the great miracle with the boat, they ran to it to behold the great wonder, how a dead man lay there in a coffin. Then they said:
 this must certainly be something holy, and they desired that he should be buried; and the people went and reached for the boat, whereupon the boat moved backward. Thereupon the Cuthim or Cusion, that is, the Cutheans (namely) the Christians, as will be shown in greater detail below in the 16th chapter of this first part, went and told the Bishop of Mainz. Then the whole city came running to the Rhine, Jews and Cutheans (or Christians), among whom a distinction must nonetheless be made (for the Jews are very holy people), all mingled together. When the Jews came to the bank of the Rhine and wished to see the great miracle, the boat moved toward the Jews.
 Thereupon the Cutheans (or Christians) again wanted to reach for the boat, but they could not; for as often as the Cutheans reached for the boat, it fled backward, until it was plainly seen that it was making for the Jews and not for the Cutheans. Then the Cutheans called out to the Jews: go into the boat and

opened the coffin; there was a dead man inside, and a letter lay with him, in which was written thus: My dear brothers and friends, you Jews of the holy congregation of Mainz, I have come to you, for I died in the holy congregation of Cologne, and I desire that you may bury me with my parents, who also lie in Mainz, and I wish you much happiness and long life; this is the desire of Amram. After the Jews had seen the letter, they all began to mourn and took the coffin out onto the land; then the Cutbeans (or Christians) committed a great act of shamelessness, overpowered the Jews, and beat them. The Cutbeans could not, however, move the coffin from the spot so quickly, and so the Bishop of Mainz commanded that the coffin should be secured there so that it could not be carried away by the Jews. And the Bishop had a tifla built over it, which was exceedingly large; the Jews, however, applied great diligence and pleaded that they might take the coffin, but all of it was to no avail; and to this very day there is still a tifla called טומאת עמרם Tumas Amram, that is, Amram's Impurity (Church). And every night Rabbi Amram came in a dream to his students and spoke to them: bury me with my parents. When the students in Mainz heard this, they were very sorrowful, and went out of the city by night, and took a thief from the gallows, dressed him in white clothes, and went and took Amram out of the coffin, and laid the thief in his place, and buried Rabbi Amram with his parents; and the holy blessed God delivered the Jews, and the matter remained secret. These are the words of the Maase-Book, and they are also found in the aforementioned manner in the book Schalscheleth hakkabbála, fol. 27, col. 2, in the Hebrew language. We thus see clearly from this that Dieterich Schwabe in his Jewish Cloak, at the beginning of the 7th chapter of the first part, as also Johann Adrian in his epistle, p. 30, reported the plain truth when they wrote that the Jews call a Christian church tifla.

Fifth, they call a church בית התורפה Beth (or Bes) batturpa, that is, domum turpitudinis, a shameful house, or house of shame, or בית התורפות Beth batturpoth, that is, a house of shame, or also simply with one word תורפה turpa, that is, a shame, or shameful thing; and in the plurali numero, or plural number, בתי תורפות Batté turpóth (or turpos) or also simply תורפות turpóth, or turpos. Concerning this, Elias writes in his Tischbi, fol. 87. col. 2., under the root word תרף taráf, as follows: בית התורפה פירוש בית עבודה זרה וקורין לו כן לשון לעג וקלס: תרף, that is, Beth batturpa, a house of shame, signifies as much as Beth avóda sára, that is, a house of idolatry, and it is called thus in mockery and contempt. Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon also writes concerning this word in his commentary on the Mishna, in the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara, fol. 79. col. 2. of the Amsterdam Talmud, as follows: הוא כיני דרך בזיון לבתי עבודת זרה שהולכין להם ולפיכך נקראו התועים ההולכים בתורפות, that is, this is a name given contemptuously to the idolatrous houses into which they (namely the Gojim, meaning the Christians or heathens) go; therefore such erring people are called Holechim beturpoth, that is, people who go into the houses of shame. In the old Nizzachon, there stand on p. 82., concerning the words of Isa 5:11, "Woe to those who rise early in the morning to pursue strong drink, and sit until night, so that wine inflames them," these words: אילו הגלחים והכומרים שמשכימים, and מעריבים בבית תורפותם, that is, this refers to the Gallachim, that is, the tonsured ones, and the Cumarim, that is, the idolatrous priests, who sit early and late in their Batté hatturpoth, that is, their houses of shame. And on p. 134., the following stands in the same work: מה שאומרים כי הפסילים אשר בבתי תורפותם לפי שהם אלוהותם לפיכך הם מכבדין אותם באלהים הלא הוא אומר אני יי' הוא שמי וכבודי לא אתן ותהלתי לפסילים, that is, that they (the Christians) say that they honor the images which are in their Batté hatturpoth, that is, houses of shame, as God, because they are their gods; yet God says (Isa 42:8): "I am the LORD, this is my name, and I will not give my glory to another, nor my praise to images." In the little book called Sepher Serubabel, a church is also called בית התורף Beth hattoref, as can be seen from the words excerpted from it below in Chapter 11 of Part 2, in the section dealing with Armillo, and this signifies exactly the same as the aforementioned Beth hatturpa, namely a house of shame. Likewise, in the book Or chadach, fol. 39. col. 1., Beth turpa and Batté turpoth (or turpos) are found in this same sense. And in the Sepher mizvoth gadol of Rabbi Mosche Mikkozi, one reads at fol. 10. col. 2.: גרסינן בפרק שני דעבודה זרה: אמר שמואל גוי ההולך לתורפות בהליכה אסור לשאת ולתת עמו בחזרה מותר, that is, we learn in the second chapter of the tractate Avoda sara that Samuel said it is forbidden to associate or do business with a Goi or Christian who goes to the Turpoth, that is, houses of shame, but that upon his return it is permitted.

Sixth, they call it בית הכסא Beth (or Bes) hakkisse, that is, with all due respect, a privy, or Seeret, as can be seen in the Talmudic tractate Temura fol. 128. col. 2. in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary on the word בית כריא Beth carja, by which a church is also understood, where he writes: בית כריא בית הכסא that is, Beth cárja is as much as Beth hakkisse. We thus see from this that the converted Johann Adrian wrote the truth in his epistle, p. 29, when he confronts the Jews with the fact that they call a Christian church Beth (or Bes) hakkisse. Likewise, the pious Philipp Johann Bleibtreu, already converted to the Christian religion 27 years ago and residing here in Frankfurt, confesses in his little book, which he calls the Enlightened Meïr, p. 61, that whenever, during his time in Judaism, he passed by a Christian church and heard the Christians singing, he would say that the Gójim, that is, the heathens, are in the Beth hakkisse, that is, in the privy. Therefore, there is also no reason to doubt the truth of what Dieterich Schwab reports in his oft-mentioned Jewish Cloak, in the first part, at the beginning of the 7th chapter, as well as what Friedrich Samuel Brenz indicates in the 2nd chapter of his Stripped Jewish Snakeskin, inasmuch as the former reports that they call a Christian church בית המחצא Beth (or Bes) hammóza, while the latter charges them with calling it מושב Móschab, both of which words also mean a privy and signify as much as Beth hakkisse.

The godless Jews, however, call a church by that name because they regard it as no better than a privy, and if it were in their power, they would make it into exactly that, just as is read in 2 Kgs 10:27 concerning the temple of Baal, that it was made into a privy, which was done in contempt of the idol and of idolatry. But since the Jews cannot do this in practice to Christian churches, it is done by them in their wanton minds and their evil thoughts. Indeed, a person who has his house next to a church is permitted, or rather commanded, to build a privy against it, concerning which the book Toledóth (or Tóledos) Adam vechávva, in the fifth part, fol. 159, col. 1, teaches as follows: מי שיש לו כותל סמוך לעבודה זרה ונפל אסור לבנותו ומניח ריה בינו ובין עבודה זרה ד' אמות ואם הבוטל מחצה שלו ומחצה לעבודה זרה מניח מן היסוד שלו שני אמות ושני אמות אחרות בינם בתוך שלו כי השתים מיסוד הכותל הם מעבודה זרה וריח האמור הד' שמניח בינו לבין ע"ז מניח שם קנזים שלא ישתמשו שם בני ע"ז או בית הכסא לתינוקות שאינו יכול לעשותו בית מניח שם קנזים שלא ישתמשו שם בני ע"ז או בית הכסא לגדולים משום צניעות הנכנסין לעבודה זרה that is, whoever has a wall or partition close to an idol (meaning a church given over to idolatry, as is expressly stated in the book Schylchan áruch, in the section Jóre dea, numer. 143) and it collapses, he is forbidden to rebuild it, and he leaves a space of four cubits between himself and the idol. But if the wall or partition belongs half to him and half to the idolatrous church, then he leaves two cubits from his foundation and withdraws (or steps back) two cubits further onto his own ground, since the two cubits from the foundation of the wall or partition belong to the idolatrous building. In the space of the four cubits, however, which he leaves between himself and the idolatrous church, he places thorns, so that the idolatrous people may not make use of it; or he makes a Beth hakkisse there for the children, that is, a privy in that place, since he cannot make one there for adults, on account of the modesty (and sense of shame) toward those who enter the idol's house. In the aforementioned passage of the book Jóre dea, this is likewise to be found at numero 149, from which the disposition of the Jews toward Christian churches can be seen more than sufficiently.

Seventh, they call it בי אבידן Be afédan, that is, a house of destruction or ruin. In the Talmudic tractate Shabbath, fol. 116, col. 1, this term signifies a schoolhouse in which Christians in former times taught and disputed against the Jews, where it is written as follows: רב לא אויל לבי אבידן וכל שכן לבי נצרפי: שמואל לבי נצרפי לא אויל לבי אבידן אזיל אמרו ליה לרבא מאי טעמא לא אתית לבי אבידן : That is: the Rab did not go into the Be afédan, much less into the Be nízrefe, that is, the house of cast images. Samuel did not go into the house of cast images, but did go into the Be afédan. They (the Christians) said to Rabba: why do you not come into the Be afédan? He answered them, however, that such-and-such a palm tree stands in the way, which is troublesome to me (to walk over its roots, which make the path uneven; and when they said to him) we will uproot it, (he answered) its place (where it stands) is troublesome to me (to walk over). What Be afédan means here is to be seen from Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary, or exposition on this passage, where he states: ספרים כתבו להם המינים להתווכח עם ישראל ומקום שמתנחלים שם קרי ליה בי אבידן (understand: the Christians) have written books for themselves in order to dispute with the Israelites, and the place where they disputed is called Be afédan. That a Christian church is also called by this name is to be seen from the Talmudic tractate Avóda Sara, fol. 17, col. 2, where the aforementioned Rabbi Solomon Jarchi writes the following concerning Be afédan, which appears there: בי אבידן בית שאוכלין ושותין לכבוד עבודה זרה ומזבלין זיבול לעבודה זרה: That is, the Be afédan is a house in which they eat and drink in honor of the idol, and spread dung upon it (that is, offer a sacrifice, and the word mesabbelin sibbul, meaning to spread dung, is used maliciously in place of mesabbechin sevach, that is, to offer a sacrifice, as the highest form of mockery, through a substitution of words customary among the Jews), and they attend to its affairs in order to know what is required for them, and give voluntary gifts. The mocking words umesabbelin sibbul, however, are understood to refer to the practice of the holy Lord's Supper, which takes place in the church and not in the school, as shall be shown in greater detail in the twelfth chapter immediately following.

Eighth, a cathedral church is mockingly called תהום Tehóm, meaning "an abyss," through a contemptuous alteration of the word Dom; this is done without doubt because they hold that those who enter it descend into the abyss of hell, or because they wish that such a building might sink into the abyss. It is not only permitted to them but also commanded to mock the churches before Christians with such contemptuous names; hence, in Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 198. col. 1., in the Parasha Vehajá ékef, on the words already cited above at the beginning of this chapter concerning Deut 7:26, "You shall have an abhorrence and a horror of it (namely, of idols)," the following is taught: למדך הכתוב שחייב האדם לשקץ ע"ז ולהגדה בלשון גנאי אם היה שמה בית גליא שהוא לשון גובה קורין אותה בית כריא שהוא לשון עומק ושפלות וכן אמרו עוד כל ליצנותא אסורה חוץ מליצנותא דעבודה זרה דשריא that is: Scripture teaches you hereby that a person is obligated to have an abhorrence and a revulsion toward an idol or idolatry;

when an idolatrous church is called בית גליא Beth (or Bes) gálja, which means a high house, he shall call it בית כריא Beth cárja, that is, a deep and low house. Thus they (namely the Rabbis) have also further said that all mockery is forbidden except the mockery of idolatry, which is permitted, as it is said (Isa 46:1): Bel is bowed down, Nebo has fallen. And in the Aruch or Lexicon of Rabbi Nathan, fol. 23. col. 1., under Beth gálja, the following is written: בתמורה בראש גמרא דפרק כל האסורין בית גליא קורין אותו בית כריא פירוש בית גליא שם גבוהות כמו גל שמכין לה בית כריא שתפל לשוחה כמו כח שחחו ואמר לה גליא לשון שמחה ומכרה ליה גליא שהכלה מן העולם ואמר לה בית צליא גלויה ומפורסמת בית כליא שנתכלה ולא תראה פ"א בית גריא קורין אותו בית כריא פי 'גריא חוד בלשון יון קורין לחוד ביר"י that is: In (the Talmudic tractate) Temura, at the beginning of the Gemara of the chapter (which begins) Col haasurin (fol. 128. of the Amsterdam edition, or according to others fol. 28. col. 1.): When a church is called Beth gálja, one calls it Beth cárja; and Beth gálja means a height (or a high and elevated place), like the word גל gall (which means a heap, because it is high). It is called Beth cárja, however (from כרה Cará, meaning to dig, since it is thereby wished) that it should fall into the pit, as it is read (Jer 18:22): Cáru schucha, that is, they have dug a pit. When it is also called Gálja, which means a joy (from גיל gil, which means to rejoice), it is called כליא Caljá (from כלה Calá, which means to perish, to be annihilated and destroyed), because it will perish from the world and be destroyed. It is also called Beth cálja instead of Beth gálja, that is, an open or public house, because it shall perish and no longer be seen. It is also explained in another way, and it is called Beth gádja, that is, a house of a goat, as well as Beth chárja, that is, a pigsty; for in the Greek language a pig is called χοίρος Choiros. These are the words of Rabbi Nathan.

That a cathedral church is mockingly called Tebóm in precisely this manner, that is, an abyss, can be seen from the old Nizzáchon, p. 41 and 42, where it is written as follows: מעשה ברבי קלונימוס בשפירא ששלח אחריו מלך הינריך הרשע אחרי: כלותו לבנות את התהום המכועד (ר"ל בית הכנסת היפה שקורין בלשון אשכנז דום (בשפירא ואמר לו בנין בית המקדש מה היה רבואת יותר מזה שכתבו עליו כמה ספרים א"ל אדני אם תרשיני לדבר ותשבע לי שלא להרע לי אבאר לך ו א"ל בשבעותי סמוך על אמונתי ועל ממלכתי שלא יאונה לך כל רע :ואמר לו אם היה כל הממון אשר הוצאת כבר וכל הזהב והכסף שבאוצרותיך לא יכולת להשכיר הפועלים ובעלי המלאכה הרבהים כעם העושים במלאכה שכן כתוב ויהי לשלמה שבעים אלף נושאים סבל ושמונים אלף חוצב בהר .ובדברי הימים שלשת אלפים ושש מאות מנצחים להעביד העם .ושמונה שנה טרחו בבית המקדש מה שאתה לא עשית לתהום הזה .ולאחר שבנה שלמה את בית המקדש ויכלוהו ראה מה כתוב ולא יכלו הכהנים לעמוד לשרת מפני הענן כי מלא כבוד יי את בית יי ואילו היה טוען חמור קיא צואה והיו מוליכין אותו בתהום הזה לא היה מזיק לו דבר .אמר לו המלך הינריך אלמלא שנשבעתי that is: It once came to pass in Speyer with Rabbi Kelonimus, that the godless Emperor Henry (the Third) sent for him

after he had completed the construction of the defiled Tebóm, or abyss (that is, the beautiful church which is called "Dom" in the German language) in Speyer, and the Emperor said to the Rabbi: in what respect was the building of the Temple (in Jerusalem) more excellent than this one, that so many books have been written about it? To this he replied: my lord, if he will grant me permission to speak, and will swear to me that he will do me no harm, then I will explain it to him. Thereupon he said to him: I swear to you, rely upon my word of honor, and as surely as I reign, no evil shall befall you. Then he (Rabbi Kelonimus) said to him: if the Emperor were to combine all the money he has already spent and all the gold and silver that he has in his treasuries, he still could not hire the laborers and the craftsmen, together with those who had authority to direct the laborers (which King Solomon had); for it is written (1 Kgs 5:15): And Solomon had seventy thousand who bore burdens, and eighty thousand who quarried on the mountain. And in (the second book of) Chronicles (it is read in chapter 2, v. 2): And (Solomon numbered) three thousand and six hundred overseers to set the people to work. Moreover, eight years were spent laboring on the Temple, which he did not do for this Tebóm, that is, abyss. And after Solomon had built the Temple and brought it to completion, let him see what is written (2 Chr 5:14): And the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud, for the glory of the Lord filled the house of God. But if one were to load a donkey with filthy dung and lead it into this Tebóm, nothing whatsoever would harm it. At this, Emperor Henry said to him: had I not sworn an oath to you, I would have had your head cut off.

Ninth, a church is also called by the Jews טומאה tuma, that is, an impurity, as they are accused of this by Dieterich Schwaben in his Jüdischer Deckmantel in the 7th chapter of Part I, p. 62, and by Friedrich Samuel Brenzen in the 2nd chapter of his Abgestreifter Jüdischer Schlangenbalg, p. 9. A cathedral church, however, is without doubt called this in particular because the words tuma and Dom correspond very closely with one another, a correspondence to which the Jews pay great attention in their mockeries; and the truth of Dieterich Schwaben's and Friedrich Samuel Brenzen's testimony is to be seen from what was reported above on p. 515, under the fourth mocking name that the Jews give to Christian churches, from the 240th chapter of the Maase-Buch, wherein the Emiranus church at Mainz is called tifla tóme, that is, an impure tifla, and thus the mocking word tóme, which means impure, is appended to it. Rabbi Salman Zevi does indeed wish to excuse this in his Jüdischer Theriack, in the second chapter, numero 20, fol. 12, col. 2, when he states: דש איז ניט אבר ביטוישן טומאה דש איינסטן הער דייטש דז עיס אויך שוק הייסן נאך דעם לאטייניש הייסט דס קומט פון דען קריסטן הער דייטש דז עיס אויך שוק הייסן נאך דעם לאטייניש טומט דס איז איין קונסט מאד היש. ער אומר וויז מבר טומאה דריס אכנא בא ורד קיין זיך

גאג that is: That they are sometimes called tuma, however, comes from the Christians, since they also call it Dom, after the Latin word Domus, which means a palace or house. The apostate, however, wants to make tuma out of it; for that I cannot be held responsible. Who can guard against false tongues? These are the words of Rabbi Salman Zevi. But this too is one of his frivolous maneuvers, in which he seeks to conceal the truth and to talk the Christians into something in a cunning manner. If only the Latin word Domus were to be considered in this matter, why then is the Mainz Emiranus church, as mentioned, called tôme, that is, impure?

The reason why they call a Christian church tuma, that is, an impurity, is that they hold the opinion that the Ruach tuma, that is, the unclean spirit, namely the devil, dwells therein, as can be clearly seen in Rabbi Isaac Karo's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, which he calls toledôth (or tôledos) Jitzchak, fol. 74, col. 2, in the Paraſſcha Mezôra, where he writes as follows: בכל הדברים שנעשה צריך כדי שיחול בו רוח הקודש ויהיה מחלק הש"י הגוים מזכירין שם עבודה זרה שלהם על כל מה שעושים חל בו רוח טומאה שהמעמים וחי עוברין ע"ז ומתדבקין ברוח טומאה וזה בניס בניהם לשם פינפיהם וכשמתחילין לבנות הבית היו אומרים בשם ע"ז שלהם כמו שעושים עד היום הגוים וכשהיו מזכירין שם ע"ז כפיהם עלי הבית שורה עליו רוח טומאה וכשבאו ישראל לארץ הקדושה וצרה הב"ה לטובתו ולהקדיש וארצו לפנות הארץ לשכינה שלא יהיה בה טומאה ולפיכך צוה שיהיו נותצין הבית ועפר אחר יקח להעביר רוח הטומאה ותקדש עתה לשרות שכינתו וכן צריך מי שמתחיל שום מלאכה להזכיר שלעבודת הש"י עושה שנ' ה'י 'בונה ביתו בלא צדק ואו שבונה עליו שכינ'הר משרה קדושתו עליו ודוקא עליו שלום שנ' וירעמי 'בי שלום אאהדן ופקדת נוד 'ולא תחטא פי 'תפקד ביתך לשון בשתבנהו ואז לא תחטא ואם אינו מבקדו לש"ית מוכן סוד לשחות עליו רוח טומאה וכל שכן מי שכוונתו לשם ע"ז שיקבל נזק לפי שרוח טומאה שורה על ואותו הבית that is, in every thing that we do, we must declare at its beginning that it is done in the name of the Lord, so that the Holy Spirit may dwell over it and that it may belong to the portion of the blessed God. The Gójim, or heathens, however, make mention of their idol over everything they do; therefore the Ruach tuma, that is, the unclean spirit, dwells therein. So too did the Canaanites serve idols and clung to the unclean spirit, and built their houses in the name of their filthy gods; and when they began to build a house, they said it was done in the name of their idol, just as the Gójim, or heathens (meaning the Christians), do to this very day. And when they uttered the name of their idol over the house from their mouths, the unclean spirit thereupon dwelt upon it.

When the Israelites came into the Holy Land, the holy and blessed God wanted to keep it pure for us, to sanctify His land, and to prepare it for His Majesty, so that no tuma, that is, uncleanness, should be in it. For this reason He commanded that the house be torn down and other earth brought in its place, so that the unclean spirit might be driven out and the same place sanctified as a dwelling for His Majesty. Thus every person who begins a work must declare that he does it in the service of the blessed God, as it is said (Jer 22:13): Woe to him who builds his house with unrighteousness. Then the Divine Majesty dwells over it, for God allows His holiness to dwell therein and grants salvation to it, as it is said (Job 5:24): And you will know that your tent has peace (that is, fortune and salvation), and you will provide for your dwelling and not sin: that is, you shall commend your house to the blessed God when you wish to build it, and then you will not sin. But if one does not commend it to God, it is immediately fitting that the Ruach tuma, that is, the unclean spirit, should take up residence therein. How much more will he who builds it deliberately and with premeditated intent for idolatry (or on account of an idol) suffer harm, since the unclean spirit dwells in such a house. Thus far are the words of the book Toledoth Jizchak. For this reason the Church of St. Peter in Rome is also called, as was indicated above on p. 288 from the little book Toledóth Jeschu, בנין המכואר Binjan hammecuár, that is, a shameful building; and the Cathedral of Speyer, on p. 120, is called תהום מכואר Tehóm mccuár, that is, a filthy abyss. It is therefore also entirely credible that what Friedrich Samuel Brentz reports in his oft-mentioned Jüdischer Schlangenbalm, in the second chapter, p. 8, is true, when he says that the cathedral canons are called by the Jews טמאים שרים temeim sarim (or sórim), that is, unclean lords, since a cathedral church is maliciously called tuma by them, that is, an uncleanness.

Tenth, a church is also called בית הלצות Beth hallezúth (or Bes hallezus), that is, a house of mockery or derision, and it is stated in the little book called sepher Serubábel that the angel Metátron led Serubabel into a church in Rome, which words in the Hebrew there read as follows: ויאחוז בידי ויביאני בית הלצות, that is, And he (namely the Metátron) took me by my hand and led me into the Beth hallezúth, that is, into the house of mockery. The full account of what is read concerning this in the aforementioned little book is to be found below in the thirteenth chapter of the second part, alongside what is reported there concerning the Armillo. Finally, eleventh, they also call a church בִּמָּה Bamá (or Bómo), which word, as will be noted in what follows, signifies an idolatrous altar. Two or more churches, however, are called בָּמוֹת Bamóth (or Bómos), and this name is found here and there in the little book Masseóth Benjamin, which was printed entirely in Hebrew at Amsterdam in the year 1698: for at fol. 6, col. 1, the following is written concerning the church in Constantinople that belonged to the Christians, which was called the Temple of Sophiæ: וְשֵׁם הַבִּמָּה: שֶׁל עֲבוּדָה זָרָה סוֹפִיָּה (ר"ל עַד כָּאן י"א (וְשֵׁם הַכֶּפֶא ר"ל אֶפִּיפִּיּוֹר שֶׁל יְנוּנִים מִכְּנֵי שְׂאֵינִם עוֹנִים לְדַת הַכֶּפֶא שֶׁל רוֹמָא. וְשֵׁם בָּמוֹת כְּמִנְיֵן יְמוֹת הַשָּׁנָה. וְנֶשֶׁ שֵׁם מִזְמוֹן גָּדוֹל לְאֵין מִסְפָּר וְשֵׁם בִּיבְיָאִים אֵלֶיהָ וְגו' וְכִיּוֹצֵא כְּזֶה לֹא נִמְצָא בְּכָל הַבָּמוֹת שֶׁבְּעוֹלָם, that is, There also is the idoltrous Bama of Sophiæ; and there the Pope of the Greeks resides, since they do not submit to the religion of the Pope of Rome. There are also as many Bamóth there as there are days in the year; and there is a great, innumerable treasure there, which is brought into it, etc., the like of which wealth is not found in all the Bamóth that are in the world. Concerning this name, more can also be found in that little book at fol. 8, col. 2, and fol. 10, col. 1, 2, and fol. 11, col. 1. Likewise, concerning the church that was built in Jerusalem over the grave of Christ, the following is read there at fol. 9, col. 2: שֶׁם הַבִּמָּה הַגְּדוֹלָה "וְיִקְרָא אֹתוֹ הָאִישׁ שֶׁהוֹלְכִין כָּל הַנְּזָרִים אֵלֶיהָ שְׁקוּרִיו שְׁפֶלֶק" וְיִקְרָא אֹתוֹ הָאִישׁ שֶׁהוֹלְכִין כָּל הַנְּזָרִים אֵלֶיהָ, that is, There is the great Báma, or church, which is the grave of that man (that is, of Christ, as was indicated above in the second chapter at the twenty-eighth name given to Christ, at p. 147 and 148) to which all those go who make a vow.

The Jews are also accustomed to wishing destruction upon a Christian church whenever they see one. Thus it is written in the book Col bo, numero 87, fol. 98, col. 2 as follows: הַרְוֵאָה בְּמִי עֲבוּדָה זָרָה בְּיִשׁוּבָן אֹמֵר בֵּית גָּאִים יִסַּח י"י בְּהֶרְבֶּנָּן אֹמֵר אֶל נַקְמֹת י"י נָגוּ וְיִשׁ אֹמְרִים בְּרוּךְ שֶׁעָקַר ע"ז מִמָּקוֹם הַזֶּה וְכֵן יַעֲקֹר אוֹתָהּ מִכָּל הַמְּקוֹמֹת בְּיָמֵינוּ, that is: Whoever sees houses of idolatry standing shall say (from Prov 15:25): "The LORD will uproot the house of the proud." But if he sees them in ruins, he shall say (from Ps 94:1): "O God, LORD, to whom vengeance belongs," etc. Some, however, say: "Blessed be He who has uprooted idolatry from this place, and may He likewise uproot it from all places speedily and in our days." The very same is also found in the book Toledóth Adam vechávva, fol. 104, col. 1. 2., and in the book Or chádascch, fol. 39, col. 1, and it is taken from the Talmudic tractate Beráchoth (or Beróchos), fol. 58, col. 2. When, however, they see a Jewish synagogue standing, they say from Prov 15:25: בְּרוּךְ מַצִּיב גְּבוּל: אלמנה, that is: "Blessed be He who establishes the borders of the widow." But if it is in ruins, they say: בְּרוּךְ דִּיין הָאֵמֶת, that is: "Blessed be the true Judge."

We thus see from this that Friedrich Samuel Brenz, in the second chapter of his work Der abgestreifte Schlangenbalg, once again wrote the truth when he reports: When a bar Israel, that is, a Jew, sees a ruined or destroyed Toëfa, that is, a church, he should immediately recite the prayer for it: "Blessed be God, who has torn down the Toëfa, that is, the church, in this land or place. Just as this church has been destroyed, so too shall all other Toëfos, that is, churches, be destroyed." The godless villain, Rabbi Salman Zevi, has indeed sought to excuse this in his Jewish Theriac, at the end of the second chapter, number 34, fol. 16, col. 1, when he states: עַר שְׂרִיבֵיט ווִיטֶער דער תלמוד האט אונז גיבוטן ווען וויר זיין זירברוכני קירך זעהן זולן וויר דעם השם יתברך לובן דז ערש לו ברוכן הוז מונ 'ווינטן דש חלי קירכן זולן אלזו זירברוכן וערדן. דורטן שטייט חיסר וון 'קלור ווען אן זיכט איין בית עבודה זרה דס איז איין אבגוטס חויו חבר ניט איין קירך דער קריסטן דען וויר חלטנס פוניקייט

חז"ל, that is: He (namely Friedrich Samuel Brenz) writes further that the Talmud has commanded us that when we see a ruined church, we should praise the blessed God that He has broken it down, and wish that all churches should likewise be broken down. There it stands clearly and plainly (that one should do this) when one sees a Beth avóda sára, that is, a house of idolatry, but not a church of the Christians, for we do not consider it a house of idolatry. This is, however, once again a frivolous concealment of the truth, which Rabbi Salman Zevi is accustomed to suppress everywhere; for indeed it has been proven more than sufficiently above, on pages 509 and 510, from the Jews' own books, that they call a Christian church Beth avóda sára, that is, a house of idolatry, and it therefore follows that they also wish for its destruction whenever they set eyes upon it.

Yes, if the Jews had power over our churches, they would destroy them all, as can be judged from Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's Sepher Mizvoth, or Book of Commandments, fol. 72, col. 4, where the following is taught: מצוה קע"ה היא שצונו לאבד ע"ז ובתיהם כלם בכל מיני האבוד וההשחתה בשבירה ושריפה והריסה ונתון כל מין שיהיה יותר מופלג יותר ממחר בהשחתה והבניה והכוונה שלא נניח להם רישם והוא אמרו ית' אבד תאבדון את כל המקומות אשר עבדו שם וגו' כי את מזבחותם תתצון ואמרו גם כן: that is, the hundred and eighty-fifth commandment is that He (namely God) has commanded us to destroy idolatry and all idolatrous houses, and to demolish them in every possible manner, through breaking, burning, tearing down, or hewing, in whatever way can be done most thoroughly and most swiftly; and the purpose herein is that we leave no trace of them. This is also that which God says (Deut 12:2): Destroy all the places where the heathen (whom you shall dispossess) have served their gods, etc. (So also is it read in Exod 34:13:) And their altars you shall overthrow. Likewise it is said (Deut 12:3): And tear down their altars.

Concerning an altar in a Christian church, they also name it contemptuously, calling it first במא Bama (or Bómo), which word signifies a high place and an idolatrous altar raised up on high, upon which idols are served, as can be seen in Lev 26:30, Num 33:52, and 1 Kgs 11:7, as well as in many other places of Holy Scripture. That a Christian altar is called by this name is attested by the highly learned Buxtorf in his Chaldean, Rabbinic, and Talmudic Lexicon, in column 316, under the root word Bama. This is likewise evident from the old Nizzáchon, p. 111, where, concerning the words of Isa 65:3, "Those who sacrifice in gardens and burn incense upon bricks," the following is written: הזבחים בגנות וזהו ישיבת קלוסטר שלהם ומקטרים על הלבנים זו היא הבמה שקורין אלתרשטיין: that is, the words "those who sacrifice in gardens" signify the convents or assemblies in their cloisters; (but the words) "and burn incense upon bricks" point to their Bama, which they call the altar-stone. So also writes Rabbi Joseph Albo in his Sépher Ikkarím (or Ikkórim), fol. 91, col. 1, in the 25th chapter, under the title Maamar schelischí, as follows: מה שאומרים בקרבן הפת והיין שהוא קרבן/ אין הדבר כן כי הלחם והיין אינם קרבן אלהיהם/ אבל לפי מה שהם אומרים הוא גוף אלוהם כי יאמרו שגוף ישו אשר בשמים גדול הוא מאוד בשעורו וממנו בא אל הבמה ונתלבש בלחם ויין עם כלות המאמר מפי הכומר אי זה כומר שיהיה כצדיק כרשע ונעשה הכל גוף אחד עם גופו של משיח היורד מן השמים בבלתי זמן ואחר כלות האכילה והשתיה יעלה אל השמים אל מקומו וכן יעשה בכל במה ובמה זהו דעתם בקרבן ההוא: That is, that they (the Christians) say of the offering of bread and wine that it is a sacrifice, this is not the case; for bread and wine are no sacrifice of their God, but rather, as they say, the body of their God; for they state that the body of Jesus, which is in heaven, is very great in its measure, and that this greatness descends to the Bama, that is, the idolatrous altar, and clothes itself with bread and wine as soon as the Cumar, that is, the priest (be the Cumar whoever he may be, whether righteous or wicked), has spoken the words; and that everything becomes one body with the body of the Messia, who descends from heaven without time; but that after the eating and drinking are completed, he ascends again up into heaven to his place; and that he does this upon each and every Bama, or idolatrous altar: and this is their opinion concerning this sacrifice.

Second, they call an altar מזבה תועבה Misbach to'ēba, that is, an altar of abomination, as can be seen in the Piske Tosephoth of the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara, fol. 77. col. 1. numero 25., where one reads: אסור לבנות להם מזבה תועבה that is, it is forbidden to build for them (namely the Gojim, or Christians) an altar of abomination.

That which belongs to the preparation and adornment of the altar is called קדשוֹת Kedeschüch (or Kedeschus), that is, whoredom, instead of קדושה Keduscha, that is, holiness; just as they call holy men Kedeschim, that is, whores, instead of Kedoschim, that is, holy ones, and holy women Kedeschoth, that is, whores, instead of Kedoschoth, that is, holy ones, as has been shown in detail in the seventh chapter, p. 278. and 279.: and this is found in Rabbi Saadia's commentary on the words of the prophet Daniel, Dan 8:11, "Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down," where the words read as follows: ועד שר הצבא הגדיל ממלכו רומא אשר היו בירושלם היכל קדשם המלך ישמעאל לקח ירושלם מידי בחוזה: וממנו התמיד הוסר והשלך מכוון מקדשו: בבוא מלך ישמעאל that is, (by the words) "Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host" (it is indicated) that the Ishmaelite (that is, Turkish) king would become great over the Roman (that is, Christian) kings who were in Jerusalem, and would take Jerusalem by force from their (namely the Christian king's) hand: (and the words) "and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down" (signify) that the Ishmaelite king would lay waste to their many Bamoth (or Bomos), that is, idolatrous altars, and would cast down their place, together with their Kedeschuth (or Kedeschus), that is, whoredom.

Because the Jews are also accustomed to giving everything mocking names, and in the old Nizzáchon, p. 7. Candlemas is called ליכט מיתה Licht mitha, or as the German Jews pronounce it Licht misa, that is, Light-Death, instead of Candlemas, since it is written there as follows: ואותו יום שבאתה למקדש והביאה : that is, the day on which she (Mary) went into the Temple and brought her offering, they call Candlemas, Licht mitha (or misa) in their language. Because, I say, the Jews do such things, there is no doubt that Friedrich Samuel Brenz will also have written the truth in the second chapter of his work "The Jewish Serpent-Skin Stripped Away," when he reports that the Jews call a Mass vestment a Miso-garment, that is, a death-garment, since מיתה Mitha, and as the German and Polish Jews pronounce it, Miso, means death. Rabbi Salman Zevi, however, wishes to excuse this in his Jewish Theriac, fol. 13. col. 1., in the second chapter, numero 24., where he states: גוואנט מיתה גוואנט דס אומגוואנט מיר הייסן דס דרייבט דען אייזל צו דעק ליגר העט ערט בלייבן לאסן בייא מת גוואנט דס איז דאך אויך טיט גוואנט טייטש. וויא זולן ווירט אנדרסט הייסן אלס דיא קריסטן זעלברט. דס אבר אופט איין ווארט אין איין אנדרן לשון איין הפך איז דס איז ניט נייס. אויף טייטש הייסט קאלט פריש אויף איטליניס הייסט קאלט ווארם. מיר הייסן עס אויך ניט אנדרסט that is: The apostate writes further, we call the Mass vestment Miso-garment, that means death-garment. What drives the fool to such lies! Had he left it at מת Mes-garment, that also means death-garment in German (for מת Meth or Mes means a dead person). How else should we call it than the Christians themselves do? That a word in another language often has an adverse meaning is nothing new. In German the word kalt means cool and fresh, but in Italian caldo means warm. We too call it nothing other than a Mass vestment. This is the excuse which Rabbi Salman Zevi puts forward; but this is a futile evasion. That they call it not מת Mes but rather מיתה Misa-garment is done without doubt for the reason that in this way the contempt for it is made all the more clearly understood, for if one Jew were to say Mes-garment to another, that other could not know whether the word Mes meant a dead person or the proper word Mass, as used in the Roman Catholic Church. The wicked are also called מתים Methim (or Mesim) by the Jews; concerning which, in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 129. col. 4. in Parascha Elle baddevarim, the following is read: אחד שהרשעים בחייהם קרויים מתים אע"ן דחיים חים אף על פי : that is, because the wicked are called Methim or Mesim, that is, dead persons, during their lifetime, their life is no life at all, even if they were to live two thousand years; therefore their entire life is to be reckoned as not even one year. Since the Jews now regard Christians as wicked people, and consequently as dead persons, it is no wonder that they also call a Mass vestment a Miso-garment, inasmuch as they consider those who put it on to be dead persons.

In his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 96, col. 1, toward the end of the Parascha Mischpatim, Rabbi Bechai writes the following concerning the origin of bells: שהיה שוכר בקבר המת על: כמי הפניד בספרי הכשפים כי ענין האוב: מראשותיו והאש מרגלותיו ונער באמצע והקשקוש בידו מצלצל ומקשקש בו והיה זה הורגל בין האומות באותם הזמנים במאד מאד ממנו נעתק במלכות אדום שאנו שריים ביניהם שיש להם כלי קשקוש שהם מקשקשים בהם על מגדלים שלהם ואין זה לאומה אחרת יצא להם מן הענה, that is: In the books of sorcery it is reported that in the performance of the divining spirit, a woman stood at the grave opposite the head of the deceased, and a man opposite his feet, while in the middle stood a boy with a bell in his hand, ringing it; and this was very commonly practiced among the heathens in those times. From them it was introduced into the Edomite kingdom (that is, Christendom, as will be demonstrated below in Chapter 16 of this Part 1), among whom we dwell, who have bells with which they ring on their towers, and this is not customary among any other people. They have thus derived this from this root (that is, from this origin), which is a root that bears poison, or poisonous herbs, and wormwood.

In the old Nizzachon, the words of Isa 5:18, "Woe to those who draw iniquity with cords of vanity," are interpreted as follows: אלו החבלים שמושכין בהן הקלוקן: בבית תועבותם לעבודת אלוהים כשמקשקשין בהן, that is, "These are the ropes with which they (the Christians) pull the bells in the house of their abominations (that is, in their church) for the service of their God, when they ring them." The convert Victor von Carben likewise reports, in the seventeenth chapter of his so-called Jewish Booklet, that the Jews, when they hear the bells ringing, are accustomed to say: Móschech bachésel, jippal baséfel, ba-chéfel móschech, jippal bachóschech: מושך בחבל יפול בחבל מושך יפול בחושך, that is, "He who pulls on the rope, may he fall into the filth; he who pulls on the rope, may he fall into the darkness" (that is, into the abyss of hell). And this may well be true, just as that may also be true which Friedrich Samuel Brentz writes in his oft-mentioned Jewish Shed Snakeskin, in the second chapter, p. 9, namely that the Jews, when they hear the bells rung for morning and evening prayer, are accustomed to call the bells Terefa thólja bells, that is, unclean gallows-bells. Rabbi Salman Zevi, to be sure, wishes to deny this in the 2nd chapter of his Jewish Theriac, fol. 13, col. 1, num. 22, and notes how the word Terefa could be fitting here. I answer, however, that it is indeed true that it does not suit the bell at all, since terefa properly means flesh that has been torn by wild animals, as can be seen in Lev 17:15 and 22:8, as well as Ezek 4:14 and other places; among the rabbis, however, it is used of any food that comes from an animal which was sick or otherwise had some defect. But since the common Jewish people also use it in connection with all manner of other things, and Buxtorf attests in his Talmudic Lexicon, col. 920, that he had heard Jewish women say to their children, "See what terefa shoes those are," and thus this word has been applied to shoes, even though it is entirely absurd: why then should one not also believe that they would say it of a bell? Furthermore, Rabbi Salman Zevi answers in the same place and says that praying is not wrong, whether one rings a bell for it (as the Christians are accustomed to do) or knocks, as the Jews do. But if ringing is not wrong, why then do the Jews not also make use of a small bell instead of a wooden clapper when they are to go to their synagogues? The reason this is not done is because it is supposed to be a pagan custom derived from sorcerers, as has been shown above, which they are not permitted to follow.

The cross, which is made with the hands in the Roman Catholic churches, they call שתי וערב Schethi (or Schesi) vaëref, that is, the warp and weft, and this name is taken from women who weave the weft crosswise and in the manner of a cross through the warp. Therefore, Rabbi Bechai writes in his book Cad hakkémach, fol. 20, col. 1, concerning the words of Isa 66:17, "Those who sanctify and purify themselves in the gardens after one in the midst," as follows: המתקדשים אלו אדום שרגילין לנענע אצבעותיהם לכאן ולכאן והמטהרים אלו ישמעאלים שזרכן לרחוץ ידיהם ורגליהם וכל גופן תמיד לא לכם שהוא עיקר אחר אחת בתוך ידמה לשתי וערב של אדום שהם מתקדשים בו: that is, "Those who sanctify themselves" are the Edomites (understand: the Christians), who are accustomed to moving their fingers back and forth (that is, to sanctify themselves with the sign of the cross). "Those who purify themselves" are the Ishmaelites (understand: the Turks), whose custom is always to wash their hands and feet, as well as their whole body, but not their heart, which is the principal matter. The words "after one in the midst" signify the Schethi (or Schesi) vaëref, that is, the warp and weft, or the cross of the Edomites (that is, of the Christians), with which they sanctify themselves. The same is also to be seen in the aforementioned Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 220, col. 4, in the Parascha Nizzafim. Rabbi David Kimchi likewise writes in his commentary on the aforementioned words of Isaiah, as may be seen in the great Bible printed in Venice in the year 307, that is, according to our reckoning the year 1547, as follows: רוב המפרשים פירשו אלו שהם מתקדשים בידיהם כשתי וערב וזה קוראים בזה הלשון בלועז סגנתרוב, that is, "Most commentators explain this as referring to those who sanctify themselves with their hands by means of the Schethi vaëref, that is, the warp and weft, that is, the cross, which is called Santogro in the vernacular." And in the old Nizzachon, p. 23, concerning the words of Gen 27:22, "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau," the following is read: על-כן כשיש רעמים הם עושים שתי וערב ר"ל קרייץ בלשון אשכנזי בידים סימן שירים של עשו היו רוצחות חמיד ואין לנו אלא תפלה והזכרת ברכות רמז שהקול בידים, that is, "Therefore, when it thunders, the Christians (who are supposed to be descended from the wicked Esau, as will be shown in detail below in the sixteenth chapter of this first part) make the warp and weft, that is, the cross, with their hands, which is a sign that the hands of Esau have always committed acts of murder. We, however, have only prayer, and we recite the blessings (or prayers), which indicates that the voice of Jacob has been Jacob's voice."

In the same manner, a cross made of wood or some other material is also called Schethi vaëref, and the cross upon which Christ was hanged is likewise called by this name in the old Nizzachon, page 172, where it is stated that the Christians say Christ spoke the words of Ps 31:10, "Lord, be gracious to me, for I am in distress," כשמסרוהו ולשתי וערב תלוהו, that is, when he was betrayed and hanged upon the Schethi vaëref, that is, the warp and weft (or the cross). Likewise, in the book Schylchan aruch, in the section Jóre dea, numero 141, fol. 114, col. 1, the following is written: צורת שתי וערב שמשתחווים לו דינו כדין צלם: ואסור בלא ביטול אבל שתי וערב שתולין בצואר לזכרון לא מקרי צלם ומותר Concerning the form of the Schethi vaëref, that is, the cross, before which they (the Christians) bow, it is to be judged as an image, and it is forbidden (to buy and to trade in it) unless it has been rendered void (that is, withdrawn from religious or spiritual use). The Schethi vaëref or cross, however, which they hang around the neck as a memorial, is not called an image, and it is permitted.

It is also forbidden for Jews to sell incense, wares, and religious books to Christians, concerning which the book Col bo, num. 97, fol. 104, col. 1 teaches as follows: לבונה אסור למכור לגלח ולכומר דמידי דתקרובת הוא. ותנן עמהם אסור: למכור להם גוי ליום אד קלנדס. שלהם יום אחד שלפני אד אסור ופשוט שאסור למכור להם: כומר למכור. וכן גביעים שפגם הגוי ופסלם: וחזר בן ישראל וקנאם מהישראל: הרי זה אסור למכור לגוים לפי שהגלח יעשה בו תפלה לעבודה זרה דבשביל פגם קטן לא יניח לעבוד עבודת והישראל ולפני עור לא תתן מכשול. וכן הספרים הפסולים אסור למכרן לגוים לפי שהגלח ולשבח לע"ז ואפילו לגוי שאינו גלח אסור למכרן משום דודאי: das ist: קורא בו ומזכיר שם הגוי יתנהו או ימכרנו לגלח: that is: It is forbidden to sell incense to a Gallach, that is, a tonsured one, or to a Cumer, that is, an idolatrous priest (by which two mocking names a Christian clergyman is understood, as was indicated above in the 10th chapter, p. 500, 501, and 502), since it is something that is offered in sacrifice. Likewise it is also forbidden to sell wares to any Goi (or Christian) on their jom ed, that is, the day of perdition, Candlemas (that is, on the feast day called Candlemas, which is here mockingly called a day of perdition; concerning which more will be seen in the following thirteenth chapter) and on the day that precedes it; to the remaining Gojim (or Christians), however, it is permitted to sell wares on the remaining days. Likewise it is also the case with the cups which a Goi (or Christian) has cracked and thereby rendered unfit (that is, removed from use in the church) and which an Israelite has subsequently purchased: it is forbidden to sell these to the Gojim (that is, to the Christians), since the Gallach or clergyman performs his prayer to the idol with it; for on account of a small crack, the said (clergyman) will not refrain from performing his service with it (the cup), and the Israelite (who sells such a cup) transgresses the words of Lev 19:14: You shall not place a stumbling block before the blind. Likewise it is forbidden to sell the Sepharim pesulim, that is, the worthless books (by which are understood the religious books used in the church, and in particular also the books of the New Testament, as is expressly stated in the Sepher Toledoth Adam vechavva, fol. 158, col. 3 of the fifth part) to the Gojim (or Christians), since the Gallach reads in them and makes mention of the idol and praises him; indeed it is also forbidden to sell them to a Goi, even if he is not a Gallach, since the Goi will certainly give or sell such a book to the Gallach. The same is also to be found in the Sepher Agudda, fol. 160, col. 2, numero 7, and in the Sepher mizvoth (or mizvos) gadol of Rabbi Mosche Mikkózi, fol. 10, col. 2, as well as in Sepher Toledoth (or Toledos) Adam vechavva in the fifth part, fol. 158, col. 3.

In the book Col bo, at number 108, fol. 109, col. 1, the following is also written: גרות של שְׁעוּה שְׁמַדְלִיקִין לִפְנֵי עֲבֹדָה זָרָה מוֹתְרִין לְאַחַר שִׁכְבָּה אוֹתָן הִגְלָח וְאִין לֶךְ בְּטוֹל גָּדוֹל מִזֶּה וְהַחֲנֻכּוֹת שֶׁל שְׁעוּה שֶׁהֵם שֶׁל עֲבֹדָה זָרָה מוֹתְרוֹת בְּלֹא שׁוֹם בִּיטוּל וְאוֹתָן בְּרִירוֹת שֶׁל ע"ז שְׁנוֹתְנִין לְכוֹמְרִים שֶׁמִּקְרִיבִין לַע"ז מוֹתְרִין דְּאִין נּוֹתְנִין אוֹתוֹ לְמַאֲכֵל לְעֲבֹדָה זָרָה וְאִם כֵּן לֹא הוּי תְּקֻרֹבֶת אֶלָּא מִתְּנוּת לְכוֹמְרִים וְהֵי מַלְבוּשִׁים שֶׁל גִּלְחִים שְׁקוּרִין שׁוֹפְרֵי פִלִּי"ץ מוֹתְרִין דְּאִין עֲשׂוּיִין לְנוֹי ע"ז אֶלָּא לְנוֹי הַכוֹמְרִים וְאוֹתָן גְּבִיעִין שֶׁל ע"ז בְּעוֹ בְּטוֹל מִשׁוֹם דְּחִשְׁבִּי כְּעֲבֹדָה זָרָה עֲצֻמָּה וְאוֹתָן מַחֲתוֹת כְּמוֹ כֵּן דּוֹא מִשְׁמָשִׁי עֲבֹדָה זָרָה וְצִרְיִכִין בִּיטוּל כֵּן פִּירֵשׁ רַש"י ז"ל עכ"ל that is: The wax candles which they (the Christians) light before the idol are permitted (to be purchased) after the Gallach (that is, the tonsured priest) has extinguished them, and there is no greater act of nullification (by which they are withdrawn from ecclesiastical use) than this. The wax pieces, however, which derive from idolatrous worship are permitted without any nullification. Those idolatrous little cakes (understand: the hosts) also, which they give to the Cumarim (that is, to the idolatrous priests), who employ them for idolatry, are permitted; for they do not give them to the idol to eat, and therefore they are not an offering but are given to the Cumarim. Those garments of the Gallachim (or tonsured priests) also, which they call Superpellicium, are permitted, for they are made not for the adornment of the idol but for the adornment of the Cumarim. Even the idolatrous cups (chalices) themselves require a nullification, inasmuch as they stand in the same esteem as the idol itself. The censers likewise belong to the idolatrous vessels and require a nullification. Thus has Rabbi Solomon Jarchi of blessed memory explained it, and his words end here. These are the words from the book Col bo. The very same thing is also taught in the book Agudda, number 43; 63; col. 2, 3.

Chapter XII.

In which it is demonstrated in what manner the two holy Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper are despised and mocked by the Jews.

Since everything that is Christian is dragged through the mud by the godless Jews with shameful shame and despised in every possible way, as much as they are able, they are accustomed to displaying their poisonous and wicked mockery against the holy Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper in the most frivolous and impious manner, which they are in the habit of naming with derision. They call the water of holy Baptism, first of all, מי השמד Me haschómed or haschemád, that is, water of extermination or of destruction, and the word Schómed derives from the radice or root word שמד Schamád, which in the conjugation called Hiphil means to destroy, to devastate, and to exterminate, but in the conjugation Niphal means to be destroyed and exterminated. In the fifth book of Moses, cap. 9, v. 19 and 25, it reads: להשמיד אתכם lehaschmíd etchém, that is, to exterminate you; and in the book of Esther, cap. 3, v. 6, one reads: להשמיד כל היהודים lehaschmíd col hajehúdím, i.e., to exterminate all the Jews; and cap. 8, v. 11, it is written there: להשמיד להרוג ולאבד lehaschmíd, labaróg, uleabbéd, i.e., to exterminate, to strangle, and to kill; likewise one reads in Prov 14:11, the house of the wicked, jischaméd, that is, shall be exterminated. It is therefore clearly to be seen that the two words mé haschéméd mean water of extermination, and the baptismal water is without doubt called this because the Jews hold that those who are baptized are exterminated and have no salvation to expect. That it is indeed called this is to be seen from Rabbi Lipman's Sepher Nizzáchon, numero 218, where he writes as follows: הנה המה אומרים שמי השמד ניתנו תחת המילה, that is, Behold, they (the Christians) say that the mé haschemád, that is, the water of extermination, has been instituted in place of circumcision. And at numero 289, the following is reported by the same author: אף הביאו הנוצרים ראיה על אמונתם שמי השמד אינם מסריחים והנה אם אמרת הדבר זה מחמת מלח שמעריבים בו כי לכל שמד לוקחים מלח וגם מחדשים אותו תמיד במים אחרים לפי שממעטין בהזאתן. גם ידעתי שיש מהם שמבשרים המים תחלה במלח ויש שלוקחים מי טל שאינם מסריחים לעולם ואין לגלות זאת להם שלא ילמדו תחתם, הדבר אותם מי שאינן יודעין ויחזיקו בו טעותם, that is, The Christians also adduce a proof concerning their faith (that it is correct), because the me haschemád, that is, the water of extermination (meaning the baptismal water), does not become putrid. But see, if the matter is true, this occurs on account of the salt which they mix into it, for at every Schemád, that is, extermination (by which Baptism is understood), they take salt. They also renew it at all times with other water, because it is diminished through their sprinkling. I also know that some among them first boil the water with salt, while others take dew water, which never becomes putrid. But one must not reveal this to them, lest they teach it to those who do not know it, and they thereby confirm their error.

Since the baptismal water is called Me haschemed, it also follows from this that the German Jews call baptism schmadden, and when one of them is baptized, they customarily say of him that he has had himself schmadden, that is, annihilated. When they write or speak in Hebrew, however, to be baptized is called השחמדם bischtammed, that is, to be corrupted and annihilated. The word schmadden is found in chapter 187 of the Maase-Book, where it is written that there formerly lived in Mainz a rabbi who was called Rabbi Schimon the Great, and who had a little son by the name of Elchanan, who was taken away by a Christian woman who had been engaged to heat the room on the Jewish Sabbath, and the following passage comes after this: וזהו טעם ריחה כוותיה דחס קינד וג' מירד אן חזן אן עבדן אין דיין חס גיזען און וואז חס זעהר ודי האבן זיא דעם קינד איין נאם ג' שמעון וד' דאס קינד שארף דאס אייכט זיין נאמי חסן וואר חזק קרבן גיבראכט דען פוך לייטן האבן דא לס חוק 'רז זאגן גיהאלטן : that is: Thus the Cuthith or Cusis, i.e., the Christian woman, took the child while everyone had gone to the synagogue, and departed with it, and had it schmadden. She now believed she had brought a sacrifice, for in former times they had set great store by schmadden. After this it is reported that the Gallachim (by which the Christian clergy are meant) raised the boy, and that he became a very learned man, and traveled from one university to another, until he finally came to Rome and became first a cardinal and thereafter even Pope. Since he knew full well that he had come from Jewish parents and that his father was a rabbi in Mainz, he issued a command to the bishop of Mainz at that time, ordering him to forbid the Jews from observing any Sabbath, from circumcising any child in the Jewish manner (that is, performing circumcision), and from permitting any woman to bathe; so that the Jews of Mainz would thereby have cause to send his father to Rome to him, and to petition him that the harsh decree which had been issued might be lifted. When his father was accordingly sent to Rome, he made himself known to him, and assured him that he would write a book against the Christian religion, and would then return to him in Mainz and adopt the Jewish faith, which also came to pass, and he brought a great wealth with him to Mainz; in Rome, however, no one had known where he had gone. His father, Rabbi Schimon the Great, also composed a Józer, or prayer, for the New Year's Day concerning this story, which begins: אל תתנני למשיסה עוונותי Al tenüseni lemeschissa avonothai, of which much more can be read in the aforementioned passage of the Maase-Book.

In the 121st chapter of that same book, mention is also made of Rabbi Amnon, that a bishop in Mainz had urged him to convert, whereupon he let it be known that he wished to deliberate on the matter and would give his answer within three days. When, however, he did not appear again and declined to declare his intention to adopt the Christian religion, he requested that his tongue be cut out, because he had wavered in his faith and had been willing to deny GOD, and had said that he should be given three days' time to declare himself; whereupon the bishop had his hands and feet cut off and sent him home in a bed. Shortly thereafter he had himself carried into the synagogue, and after he had prayed a certain prayer beginning with ונתנה תוקף Unethaanne (or unesanne) tokof, which he himself had composed, and had requested that this prayer be sent to all places where Jews are found, he vanished, and GOD took him into Paradise; in memory of which, this prayer was placed in the Jews' prayer book, which they customarily pray every year on their New Year as well as on the Day of Atonement. Concerning this matter, which is said to have befallen Rabbi Amnon, one may also consult the book Schalscheleth hakabbala, fol. 44. col. 1. and the Machfor printed in folio at Wilmersdorf, opened to this prayer. But are these not foolish Jewish fairy tales?

It is therefore entirely credible that what Dieterich Schwabe reports in the eighth chapter of the first part of his Jüdischer Deckmantel, pagin. 64, is true, when he states: When they (namely the Jews) see a Christian child being carried into the church to receive the holy sacrament of baptism, they must also make use of their unwashed mouths on the occasion, and then they say: "See, they are bathing the Mamser in the Tuma to defile it; see, they are carrying the whore's child into the uncleanness (that is, the church) to destroy it."

Regarding the aforementioned word השתמד Hischthammed, which means "to be exterminated," and which they use to mean "to be baptized," it is found in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzachon, numero 21, where he writes as follows: הוכחתי להם שהם עושים שלא כדת שמפורש איזה יהודים שהיבים מיתה היו משחררים כי האמונה אינה תלויה במים שלהם אלא בלב, ואלו היה אחד חרדי מאמין בלבו כפי אמונתם היה משתמד קודם שאנסוהו להשתמד : that is, I have reproved them (the Christians) for acting wrongly, in that they release certain Jews who are guilty of death, so that they may have themselves schmadded or exterminated (that is, baptized), for faith does not depend on their water, but on the heart. And if such a Jew believed in his heart according to their faith, he would have had himself schmadded before they had compelled him to have himself schmadded. And in the little book Schevet Jebuda, fol. 46. col. 1., the following is read concerning Rabbi Jeboscha Halürki: שמו בין הגוים מ'אישטר ג'רונימול"י שמו אחד שנשתמד נקרא שמו בין הגוים מ'אישטר ג'רונימול"י שמו that is, after he had himself schmadded, his name among the Gentiles (or heathens, that is, the Christians) was called Magister Hieronymus de sancta fide, which name (through the combination of the initial letters) means me-gaddéf, that is, a blasphemer. In this sense it is also taken in the aforementioned little book fol. 62. col. 1. and fol. 77. col. 1., as well as in the book Mäjene jesbüa, fol. 73. col. 4. And in the old Nizzáchon, p. 188., the following is written concerning Christ: כתיב להם בספר לוקש ישו נשתמד וכשטבל that is, it is written in the book of Luke that JESUS had Himself schmadded, and when He was baptized, the heavens opened and the Holy Spirit came down upon Him. In place of נשתמד bischttamméd, which is the conjugation Hithpabel, the Niphal נשמד Nischmád is also used, as may be seen in Rabbi Nachman's Disputation, which he held with Brother Paul, pages 53 and 54, where Rabbi Nachman answers Brother Paul's question as to who it is that King David calls his Lord in Ps 110:1, as follows: המצאת יהודי 'הדוש הזה ונשמדת המצאת יהודי החדש הזה ונשמדת כעבדו וגור that is, did you, as a Jew, discover this new matter and on account of it have yourself be nischmad (that is, schmadded or exterminated)? etc. Since among the Jews schmadding means baptizing, a converted Jew is also reckoned as משומד Meschummád, that is, an exterminated one, of which more mention will be made below in the 16th chapter of this first part.

Second, they call the water of holy baptism מי זדונים Májim sedónim, that is, the arrogant water, which words are taken from Ps 124:5. Hence it is read in the old Nizzáchon, p. 190: מים של שמד נקראו המים הזדונים: that is, the water of Schemád (or extermination, that is, the water of baptism) is called Májim sedónim, that is, the arrogant water. So also writes Abarbenel in his commentary on Esaiam, fol. 71, col. 2, concerning a Jew who had become a Christian, as follows: "ויהי איש נבון מכני עמינו שהמיר דתו ועברו עליו המים הזדונים ונעשה נוצרי וחו", that is, there was a wise man from our people who had changed his religion, and over whom hammájim basedónim, that is, the arrogant water, had passed (in that he had himself baptized), and he became a Christian, etc. And at fol. 66, col. 2, he reports in his aforementioned commentary on the words of Isa 43:2, "When you pass through the water, I will be with you," as follows: אפילו המים הזדונים שהם בני אדם הנשכלים כשיקבלו דתם ואמונתם יאמר אף על פי שהעברת תעבור באותם המים לא תצא מתחת ידי כי כל דורות העולם לא ישפוך מתחת השגחתי that is, this has a meaning referring to májim basedónim, that is, the arrogant water, namely the people who are baptized when they accept their (that is, the Christians') religion and faith; and by this GOD means to say: even if you pass through that water (that is, are baptized), you will still not depart from my hand, for all the rivers in the world will not be able to overwhelm you so that you should be withdrawn from my providence. The very same thing also stands in the book Maschmia jeschtia, fol. 21, col. 3, and the baptismal water is likewise so called there at fol. 2, col. 3.

Third, they call it מים קדשים Májim kedéschim, that is, whore-water; through a malicious alteration of words, very common among them, in place of מים קדושים Májim kedóschim, which means holy water. In Holy Scripture there are some examples to be found where a mocking name is given to a thing in place of its proper name; for in 2 Kgs 23:13, the Mount of Olives is called, instead of הר המשחה Har hammischcha, which means a mountain of anointing, הר המשחית Har hammá-schchith, that is, a mountain of the destroyer, or of destruction; concerning which Rabbi David Kimchi writes in his commentary as follows: והזתים נקרא הר המשחה לוגאי מפני העבודה זרה שהיה שם קראו הר המשחית: that is, the Mount of Olives, which is called har hammischcha, that is, the mountain of anointing, was mockingly called har hammáschchith, that is, the mountain of the destroyer, or of destruction, on account of the idolatry committed upon it (which may be read in 1 Kgs 11:7). Rabbi Solomon Jarchi likewise indicates the same in his commentary on the passage. So also in Hos 4:15, the place בית אל Bethel, which means a house of God, is called בית און Beth-aven, that is, a house of vanity and nothingness, because idolatry was practiced there with the golden calf which King Jeroboam erected, as may be seen in 1 Kgs 12:29; and the aforementioned Rabbi David Kimchi writes the following in his commentary on the passage: בית אוןהוא בית אל שהיה שם אחד מן העגלים ולגרען לכנות שמו לגנאי קורא אותו בית און: that is, Beth-aven is Bethel, where once the worship of the calves took place; but in order to diminish it and to call it by a shameful name, he calls it Beth-aven. The aforementioned Rabbi David Kimchi also teaches, concerning the words of Isa 22:1, גיא חזיון Ge chissajon, which mean a valley of vision, or a valley of sight, as follows: נבואה זו נאמרה על ירושלם ונקראה גיא חזיון לפי שהוא מקום הנבואה ומה שקראה גיא והיא הר לכנותה לרעה לפי שהפילוה יושביה לרעתם השיבירה ההר אל בקעה ואינה ראויה להראות חזון אל אלא גיא: that is, this prophecy is spoken of Jerusalem, and it is called Ge chissajon, that is, a valley of vision, because it was a place of prophecy. But that it is called Gé, that is, a valley, when it is in fact a mountain, is done in order to name it in an unfortunate manner, in that its inhabitants cast it down to their own misfortune and made a valley out of the mountain, and it is now no longer worthy of being called a mountain, but is called a valley. Since such examples are found in Holy Scripture, where the names of certain things were altered in order to mock them, the Jews hold that they are likewise obligated and bound to do the same, as was shown above in the second chapter, pagin. 65, from Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 198, col.

1, and as many examples have already been adduced in the preceding material, with still more to appear in this and in the following thirteenth chapter; for this reason they also call the water of baptism, as mentioned, mockingly Májim kedéšchim, that is, whore-water, in place of Májim kedóšchim, which means holy water; and this is read in the preface of the book Májene jeschúa, fol. 4, col. 1, where mention is made of the persecution of the Jews which a king in Spain instigated, and it follows: ותהי חרדה גדולה צרה כמבכירה ודת נתנה כי כמשלש חדשים לא תשאר פרסה בכל מדינות מלכותו מכל איש אשר בשם ישראל יכנה אם לא יעמדו על ראשם המים הקדשים that is, and there was a great terror and an anguish like that of a woman in her first birth-pangs, and the command was given that within three months not a single sole of a foot should remain in all the provinces of his kingdom of all those who call themselves Israelites, unless hammájim bakkedéšchim, that is, the whore-water, should pass over their heads; that is, unless they allowed themselves to be baptized.

Fifth, it is called מי טנוף Me tinnuf, that is, water of defilement or impurity, and this is found in the old Nizzachon p. 74, where, concerning the words of Ezek 16:9, "And I bathed you with water, and washed you from your blood, and anointed you with oil," the following is written: אומרים המינים שזה רמז על: that is, the heretics say that this signifies their Me tinnuf, that is, their water of defilement or impurity, as well as the oil with which they anoint their foreheads, which they call confirmation.

Sixth, they call it Me hattúma מֵי הַטּוּמָא, that is, water of impurity, or unclean water, concerning which the aforementioned old Nizzázachon, p. 148, contains the following, written in a godless manner: כַּשֶּׁמֶטְבִּילִים הַשְׂקָצִים ר"ל הַיְלָדִים שְׁלֵהֶם במֵי הַטּוּמָאָה אוֹמְרִים אֵין נּוֹמֵינִי פֹאטֶרס אִיט פִּילִי "אֵת שְׁפִירִיטּוּס סַנְקְטִי אֲמֵן פִּירוּשׁ מִנְחָה יֵה לִשְׁטֵן: that is, when they (namely the Christians) baptize their abominations, that is, their children, with the Me battúma, that is, with the unclean water, they say (in Latin:) In nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus sancti, Amen. (Which in German means: In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, Amen.) And this signifies as much as: it (namely the child) shall be sacrificed to the devil. But is this not a Jewish wickedness inspired by the devil?

The holy baptism is likewise called by them in a very mocking manner, and they name it first שמד Schémed or Schemád, that is, a corruption or extermination, as can be seen in Rabbi Nachman's disputation, which he held with Brother Paulus, on page 26, where Rabbi Nachman writes as follows: וברצון הייתי שומע היאך למד השמד ר"ל טיף מהם ובאיזה מקום. הלא הם למדו אותנו : that is, I would gladly hear where and in what place he (Brother Paul) had learned the Schémed or Schemád from them (namely, the Talmudic teachers), that is, baptism. Have they not taught us our law? etc. From this it is to be judged that Friedrich Samuel Brentz wrote the truth in the second chapter of his work "The Jewish Stripped Snakeskin," page 9, when he reports: When Jews see a child's baptism, they call it ein mamser schmad, that is, the extermination of a whore's child. This is all the more to be believed because a Christian child is frivolously called mámser by them, that is, a whore's child, as shall be demonstrated more fully below in the 16th chapter of this first part. It is therefore once again as clear as the sun that Rabbi Salman Zevi, in the 2nd chapter of his "Jewish Theriac," acts, according to his evil habit, with untruth, in that he shamelessly insists that baptism is not called Schemád or Schémed by the Jews, and that the act of baptizing is not called schmadden.

Second, the same טומאה Tuma, that is, an impurity, is so named, as can be seen in the old Nizzáchon, paginâ 36, where the following is written concerning Exod 14: כאן אומרים המינים שכל ישראל נטבלו בים כמו שהם עושים בטומאתם: that is, Here the heretics say that all Israelites were baptized in the sea, just as they do with their Tuma, that is, impurity (namely, their baptism). And at paginâ 55, col. 1. 2., in the same work, the following is written concerning the words of Deut 23:13, "And you shall have a small shovel among your weapons": הפירוש אינכם יודעים כי יתר על אותן מצוה בשעה שתצאו למלחמה. אינני יתר יהא לך כשיצא אחד מאחריך חוץ למחנה למדל מן המחנה ויחפוש אשור אחרת לערב יטבול מטומאתו דהיינו טניף שלהם: that is, You do not know the interpretation of these words, for the commandment is to be observed only at the time when one is waging war. Or else the meaning of the words is this: you shall have a small shovel, so that when someone from among your brothers goes out of the camp in order to separate himself from the camp (of the Jewish religion) and to adopt another faith, he shall wash himself of their (namely, the Christians')

Tuma, that is, impurity, by which their baptism is meant, and shall then enter into the camp of the Israelites (or Jews) in order to cover over such (impurity).

Third, it is called שמץ טפילה Schémez tefila, that is, a shameful baptism or a disgraceful baptism; and this is also found in the old Nizzáchon, paginâ 70, concerning the words of Jer 31:31, "I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah," where one reads: כאן פוקרין המינים ואומרים על ישו נתנבא שמשנולד נתן להם תורה חדשה ושמץ טבילתם תחת ברית מילה ויום רשאון שהוא זונטאג תחת השבת: that is, here the heretics teach erroneously and say that the prophet prophesied this concerning Jesus, who, after he was born, gave them a new law and instituted their Schémez tefila, i.e., shameful baptism, in place of circumcision, as well as the first day of the week, namely Sunday, in place of the Sabbath. And on p. 192, it is written in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon: ומי שמץ טבילתם מה חטא וטומאה דוחה: that is, What sin and impurity does their (the Christians') Schémez tefila, that is, shameful baptism, drive away? Likewise, on paginâ 193 of the same work, the words of Ps 144:7, "Deliver me from great waters," and the words of Ps 69:16, "That the flood of water may not drown me," are interpreted as follows: אילו מי שמץ טבילתם, i.e., This signifies the water of their Schémez tefila, or their shameful baptism.

Fourth, it is called שיקוך טבילה Schikkuz tefila, that is, an abomination-baptism, as can be read in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon, p. 64, where, concerning the words of Jer 17:13, "O Lord! You are the hope of Israel: all who forsake You must be put to shame; those who turn away from me must be written in the earth, for they forsake the Lord, the fountain of living waters," the following is written: יי קור של ישראל זהו יי: כל עזבך אילו שפנים מאחריו ללכת אחרי אלהים יכושו כשיבאו תשועת ישראל: יסורי בארץ יכתבו כי עזבו מקור מים חיים את יי' ובוחרים דורשים במים מכונסים ומסרוהם ר"ל בשיקוך יי' : that is, "O Lord! You are the hope of Israel," that is, You, O Lord, are the trust of the Israelites. "All who forsake You" (that is, those who turn away from Him and go after other gods) "must be put to shame when they see the salvation of Israel. Those who turn away from me must be written in the earth, for they forsake the Lord, the fountain of living waters," and choose and seek for themselves collected and stinking water, that is, their Schikkuz tefila, or abomination-baptism, which they call baptism.

Fifth, it is called טיבול שקץ מים Tibbul schékez májim, that is, a baptism of abominable water, and this likewise appears in the old Nizzáchon, p. 62, where the following is read: לפי דבריהם היה ירמיה מוכיח את ישראל על תורת ישו את עצמו: that is, according to their (namely the Christians') account, Jeremiah rebuked the Israelites (in chapter 3, v. 14 and following) on account of the law of Jesus; but why did he not rebuke himself on that account, and for what reason did he not himself follow it and have himself baptized with the Tibbul scbékez májim, that is, the baptism of abominable water, and observe the days of their ruin or destruction (that is, their festivals)?

Sixth, it is also called טינוף טבילה Tinnuf tefla, that is, a filthy baptism, as can be seen in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon, p. 74, where the following is read: 'כשאמר לך וואהחז מים זהו נאמר על טינוף טבילתם וגו' that is: When (a Christian) says to you (that the words of Ezek 16:9,) "And I washed you with water," were said concerning their Tinnuf tefla, that is, their filthy baptism, etc.

If a Christian were to fetch water from a Jew's house for baptism or for holy water, and were to state clearly that he wished to use it for that purpose, then it is forbidden for the Jew to give him the water, as is taught in the Sopher Toledóth Adam vechávva, in the fifth part, fol. 158, col. 3, where the following is written: הגלחים הקטנים המבקשים מים בבית שום יהודי ואומרים בפירוש שרוצין אותם לשום בדתים של עבודה זרה לטבול בהן קשמשמדין או בשביל מים טמאים לזרק על פני בני אדם פי אסור לתנם להם וזולתי אם בקשו סתם מים. וכן הנסרתי לאנשי ביתי שלא לתנם להם קשמשמים אותו לדלות מבורי. d.i. When the small Gallachim (or tonsured ones) demand water in a Jew's house and say expressly that they wish to pour it into the idolatrous channels (that is, vessels) in order to baptize therewith when they convert people, or that they wish to use it as מים טמאים májim teme'jim, that is, impure water (meaning the holy water customary in the Roman Catholic churches) in order to sprinkle it upon the faces of people, then it is forbidden to give it to them, unless they simply ask for water (and do not say for what purpose they wish to use it.) Thus I have warned the people in my house that they should give them none when they wish to draw it from my well.

Regarding the Holy Communion, Friedrich Samuel Brenz writes in his Abgestreiffter Jüdischer Schlangenbalg (Stripped Jewish Serpent-Skin), in chapter 2, that it is called סעודה טמאה Seúda tóma, i.e. an unclean meal by them; and although Rabbi Salman Zevi denies this in his Jüdischer Theriack (Jewish Theriac), chapter 2, num. 30, just as he is accustomed to denying the clearest of matters, I nonetheless hold it for certain that the aforementioned Brenz wrote the plain truth, since they call the water of holy baptism, as was mentioned in the preceding section, מי טמאה Me túma, or מים טמאים májim teméim, i.e. unclean water, and likewise call the bread in the Holy Communion, or the host, לחם טמא léchem tóme, i.e. unclean bread, or זבח טמא zévach tóme, i.e. an unclean sacrifice, as will be demonstrated in the section immediately following; how then should it be too much to suppose that they call the Holy Communion seüdá tóme, or rather seüdá teméa, i.e. an unclean meal, or also (since Christ the Lord is called by them טָמֵא וְמֵת tamé uméth, or tóme uméa, i.e. the Unclean One and the Dead One, as was demonstrated above in chapter 2, p. 142, in connection with the twenty-sixth name they give to our Savior) טָמֵא סְעוּדַת seüdáth (or seüdás) tóme, i.e. the meal of the Unclean One (meaning: the meal in which the supposed Unclean One is eaten), since according to the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church the host is to be transformed into the substantial body of Christ and thus consumed.

Concerning the bread in the Holy Supper, or the host, which is used by many Christians in place of ordinary bread: it is 1. first called לֶחֶם טָמֵא léchem tamé (or tóme), that is, unclean bread, and this appears in a small tract printed here in Frankfurt am Main in the past year 1696, which is called Máase harúach dikbillá kedóscha Niklasburg, that is, the story of a spirit in the holy congregation at Nikolsburg, in which an account is given of a Jew who is said to have become a Christian and ultimately a bishop, but whose spirit or soul, after his death, namely in the year 1696, is said to have entered into a young Jewish man, and when that spirit had confessed his sins, he stated among other things: סולת חמץ מיר געבן בר לחם טמא, that is, fine flour I gave to make léchem tóme, that is, unclean bread, in order to make it therefrom. These words had been crossed out with ink by a local Frankfurt Jew before he allowed the little book to come into my hands, so that they could no longer be read; however, I soon removed the ink strokes with a certain substance, so that the printed text was once again entirely legible.

Rabbi Lipmann also acknowledges this in his Sepher Nizzáchon, number 351, and instructs the Jews therein as to what answer they should give to Christians who confront them with this, when he states: ועל לחם טמא שאמר להם אי אתה מודה שכתוב בספר הדבי 'כפ' בחוקתי אדם כי ימות באהל כל הבא אל האהל וכל אשר באהל יטמא והטומא מחמת מת ולא מחמת יציאת נשמת כמ' שפ' שמה דתגע בחלל חרב או במת או בעצם אדם או בקבר יטמא הרי אתם מצניעים את לחמכם בבית תפילתכם וגם שמה מתים קבורים הרי אנו אומרים שאתם עושים כנגד תורתנו שאתם מצניעים הלחם במקום שמתמא d. i. Regarding léchem tóme, that is, the unclean bread, we must give the following answer to the one who reproaches us for calling their bread in the Lord's Supper by that name: do you not acknowledge that it is written in the fourth book of Moses (Num 19:14) in the Parascha Bechykkothái (though it ought rather to be called Chykkáth, for the Parascha Bechykkothái begins in the third book of Moses at Lev 26:4 and extends to the end of that third book) that: when a man dies in a tent, whoever enters the tent, and everything that is in the tent, shall be unclean. The uncleanness, however, is on account of the dead person, and not on account of the departure of the soul, as I have explained in that passage. (And it follows there at v. 16:) Whoever also touches one slain with a sword, or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, is unclean. But see, you lay your bread in your house of prayer (or your church), in which the dead are likewise buried; therefore we say that you act contrary to our Law, in that you place the bread in a place that causes uncleanness.

Rabbi Lipmann would have it that one should answer the Christians that it is called léchem tóme, that is, unclean bread, because it is defiled by the dead who are buried in the churches. This, however, is a hollow evasion, and the true reason has been concealed, which consists in the following: because, according to the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church, the host is supposed to be transformed by Consecration into the substantial body of Christ and is thereafter worshipped, it is therefore called tóme, that is, unclean, as may be judged from Rabbi Menáchem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 124, col. 4, in the Parashah Ki tissa, where it is written as follows: מהו וכבודי לאחר לא אתן שנ לא תשתחוה לאל אחר דהוא מסטרא דמסאבא טמא וזה טעם ותהלתו לפסילים ר"ל לכחות הטומאה, that is: What do the words mean (Isa 42:8), I will not give my glory to another? (They indicate) you shall not worship another god who comes from the unclean side, that is, who is unclean. Nor my praise to the Pesilim, that is, to the idols, by which the powers of uncleanness are understood. And this is all the more confirmed by the fact that a consecrated host is called by the Jews not only פסיל לחם Pesil léchem, that is, a bread-idol, but also עבודה זרה Avóda sára, that is, an idol. That it is called a bread-idol may be seen from the book Chilluk emuná, p. 54, where one reads: ואפילו בבתי עבודתם עדיין לא פסקו עצבי כסף וזהב ופסילי עץ ואבן ובפרט פסילי הלהם שהם עובדים ומשתחווים להם כפי מה שהורגלו מקדמת דנא ומל זה הם עושים. היפך תוראת יש, that is: In their (namely the Christians') churches, the silver and golden idols, and the wooden and stone images, and in particular the Pesile balléchem, that is, the bread-idols, before which they serve and prostrate themselves, just as they (namely their forefathers, before they adopted the Christian religion) were accustomed to do in former times, have not yet ceased; and in all of this they act contrary to the teaching of Jesus. That it is also called Avóda sára, that is, an idol, may be seen from the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 21, col. 1, in the Tosephóth, where the following is written: עתה שהגויים שבינינו אינם מכניסים לבתיהם עבודה זרה בקביעות אלא כשיש שם פגר או שנוטה למות וגו' מותר, that is: Now that the Gójim (that is, Christians) who are among us do not bring the Avóda sára, that is, the idol, permanently into their houses, but only (do so) when a carcass (that is, a dead person) or someone who is near death lies therein, etc., it is permitted (for a Jew) to rent them a house. This is also to be found in Rabbi Asher's commentary on the said tractate, fol. 83, col. 4. Likewise, in the Sepher Terumá, numero 144, one reads: כתיב לא תביא תועבה אל ביתך ועכשו רגילות

הוא להשכיר בתים לגוים וכן מכניסין לתוכן עבודה זרה כשהם חולים ופעמים אחרים ותימה על מה הם סומכים, that is: It is written (Deut 7:26): You shall bring no abomination into your house; yet it is now customary to rent houses to the Gojim (that is, heathens, namely the Christians), into which they bring the Avóda sára, that is, the idol, when they are sick, or at other times as well; and I marvel at what grounds those (who rent their houses to them in such a manner) rely upon. Now since an idol is called by the Jews tóme, that is, unclean, and they themselves call a consecrated host a bread-idol and an idol, there can be no doubt that they call the consecrated bread, or the consecrated host, Léchem tóme, that is, unclean bread, especially since Rabbi Lipmann himself, as mentioned, admits as much.

Notwithstanding all of this, Rabbi Salman Zevi denies it entirely in his Jüdischer Theriack (Jewish Theriac), in the second chapter, number 30, fol. 14, col. 2, in keeping with his frivolous manner, that they call it léchem tóme, where he reports the following: דש חבר שמד שרייבט איר הייסן דס נאכטמאל טמאה סעודה: דש איזט איין לוגן אונד אויש דעם דאש פערשטוהן דש ער ען מאל איין דישפוטט היין הובן צו רום פאר דעם פאפסט אונד דעם יודן הובן זיא פאר גיווארפן דש דיא יודן אין רומניא דס נאכטמאל לחם דמא גיהייסן הובן דש רד דער יוד גיאנטווארט ווייל אין עוואנגעליון אטיס מארקוס בילוקאס גישריבן דש ישוע נוצרי זיין יונגערן דס נאכטמאל צו ירושלים אין ברוד אונד ויין גיגעבן אונד גיזאגט דס איז זיין לייב אונד בלוד דס זאלן זיא טון צו זיינר גדזכניס אונד דיא קריסטן ביקינן אונד גלויבן דש דער וואר לייב אונד בלוד ישוע אמת אין דען הוסטין פרמישט איז אז קאן עס אויף היבראיש מיט קירצער ווארט בעסר גינאנט וורדן אלס לחם דמא (ניט מיט דער ט וויא שמד שרייבט) (דס איז דא ספייז דס בלודס אונד לייבס אין דעם וערטלין דמא איז אלס בגריפן דא בייא לוס איכס דאס איסט. That is: the apostate (Friedrich Samuel Brenz) writes that we call the Lord's Supper seüda tamé, meaning the unclean meal, which is a lie and a falsehood. One may gather from this that there was once a disputation held at Rome before the Pope, and the Jews were there charged with the fact that the Jews in Romania had called the Lord's Supper léchem demá, that is, bread of blood; to which the Jew replied that, since it is clearly written in the Gospel of Matthew, Mark, and Luke that Jesus the Nazarene gave his disciples the Lord's Supper in Jerusalem in bread and wine, and said that it was his body and blood, and that they should do this in his remembrance, and since the Christians confess and believe that the true body and blood of Jesus, their Messiah, is mingled in the host, it cannot be named more briefly or better in Hebrew than léchem demá (not with the letter Teth or T, טמא tamé, as the apostate writes), that is, the food of blood and body. In the little word demá everything is contained; and with that I let it rest, though I have never in all the days of my life heard it called thus. These are the words of Rabbi Salman; in which he once again reveals his frivolous, false, and deceitful disposition. And just as he attempted to excuse it, as may be seen above in Chapter II, pp. 521 and 522, that the Jews call a Christian church Túma (which means an uncleanness) because, according to his claim, it is also called Domo in Latin, so he does the same here, craftily substituting for the Hebrew word טמא támé, which means unclean, the Chaldean word דמא demá, which means blood, since támé and demá resemble each other very closely, just as túma and domo do. He falsely asserts, however, that a converted Jew, in a disputation held before a Pope, charged a Jew with the claim that the Jews in Romania call the Lord's Supper léchem demá; rather, what would have been put to him is that they all together, whether they live in Romania or elsewhere, call it léchem támé, that is, unclean bread, as it is named in the short tract cited just before, concerning the spirit at Nikolsburg, which Rabbi Moshe Präger is said to have finally driven out, and also in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon; with which the convert Johann Adrian likewise agrees in his letter, p. 28, where he addresses the Jews thus: When you see the host, you call it לחם טמא léchem támé, that is, unclean bread; which is also confirmed by the convert Hieronymus de Sancta Fide in his little book against the Jews, in the fifth chapter of the second part, where he reports that they call the consecrated host corpus pollutum, that is, an unclean body. There is therefore nothing in any of these books about léchem demá; rather, it is unanimously indicated that they call it léchem támé. The aforementioned Rabbi Salman Zevi is convicted of falsehood all the more, since in the Talmud printed at Amsterdam, in the Piske Tosephoth of the tractate Avóda sára, fol. 77, col. 1, number 30, a consecrated host is called זבח טמא sevach támé, that is, an unclean sacrifice, and the following is taught there: פ"ה שהוא מכיר לתוכה: זבח טמא דבחותה לארץ שרי משכירין בתים לגוים לבית דירה אע"פ שהוא מכיר לתוכה. That is: one may also rent houses to the Gojim (or Christians) for dwelling, even though the Gállach (that is, the tonsured priest) brings into it a sevach támé, that is, an unclean sacrifice (namely when a sick person who is near death is within it, as is mentioned in fol. 20, col. 1 of the said tractate Avóda sára in the Tosephoth), for outside the land (of Israel) this is permitted. His false pretense is further exposed in a second respect, in that the bread of the holy Lord's Supper is also called לחם מגואל léchem megóal, that is likewise, unclean (or defiled) bread, words taken from Mal 1:7, where they call it unclean bread; and this is found in the old Nizzachon, p. 148, where the following blasphemy is written: לעדת של אדום אין בהם אמונה כמו גרעין של חרדל כשהן מטמאין ומטנפין לחם המגואל אומרים זהו הגוף הוק ענים קורפוס מיאום וזה העברי אני לבדי גוף ודם. That is: the Edomite (understand: the Christian) congregations have not so much faith as a mustard seed is large. When they defile and befoul the לחם מגואל léchem megóal, that is, the unclean bread (that is, when they consecrate it, which here means to defile and befoul it), they say (in Latin) Hoc est enim corpus meum (that is, for this is my body), which in Hebrew means ani leváddi guf vedám, that is, I am only a body and blood. We can thus perceive from this the frivolity of that godless villain Rabbi Lipmann, in that he, in his Sepher Nizzáchon, number 353, instructs the Jews as to what they should answer the Christians who might confront them with this, when he writes: ועל לחם מגואל נאמר להם שכך משבחים הנצרים לחמם כי אומרים שהנצרי בתוך הלחם ועל הנוצרי הם אומרים שהוא שגאלם מן הגיהנם ואנו אומרים שלכן הם אומרים לחם מגואל ואין המם יתירה כי הוא לשון הפסוק כי קרוב לנו האיש מגאלנו הוא. That is: concerning the léchem megóal, one must tell them (when they raise this objection) that the Christians praise their bread (in the Lord's Supper) in this way because they say that the Nazarene (that is, Christ) is in the bread, and because they say of the Nazarene that he has redeemed them from hell, we say that they therefore call it léchem megóal, that is, the redeeming bread (as Rabbi Lipmann would have us believe), and the letter Mem or M (in the word megóal) is not superfluous, since it is written in Scripture (Ruth 2:20) thus: for the man is our kinsman, miggoalénu hu, that is, he is one of our redeemers. These are the deceitful words of Rabbi Lipmann, by which anyone who does not understand the Hebrew language could easily be misled and satisfied. In the Hebrew language, the root or stem word is גאל Gaál, meaning to redeem, to deliver, to save, to avenge; from which גואל Goël is derived, meaning a redeemer (that is, a kinsman who holds the right of redemption), deliverer or savior, and avenger; and it is used in Ruth 4:1, 6, 8 for a redeemer or kinsman, and in Isa 49:7 and 59:20 for a deliverer and savior, and in Num 35:19, 21, 24, 25 for an avenger. The said stem word Gaál, however, has in the second conjugation, called Pihel, an entirely different meaning, and is Géel, meaning to defile; and in the conjugation Pyhal, which is the passive of the conjugation Pihel, גאל Goal means to be defiled; from which comes the participle מגואל megóal, which, as may be seen in Mal 1:7, 12, means defiled or befouled; for which reason Rabbi David Kimchi also explains it in his commentary as מתועב metóav umetúnnaf, that is, abominable and befouled. The frivolous fellow Rabbi Lipmann, however, would have us believe that megóal, meaning defiled, signifies a Goël, that is, a redeemer; and seeks to prove this from Ruth 2:20, where the word miggoalénu appears, which, as already noted, means "from our redeemers," where the Mem or M is a preposition, pointed with a small Chirek or the vowel i, and the énu at the end is a pronoun, after the removal of which goël remains, which, as already stated, means a redeemer who holds the right of redemption. In the word megóal, however, the first letter Mem or M necessarily belongs to it, since it is by this that the participle is formed, and it is pointed with a Schevá or the vowel ë. How then can this desperate villain be so bold as to make us believe such an absurd thing: that because we believe Christ has redeemed us from hell and is our goël or redeemer, and because miggoalénu in the cited passage Ruth 2:20 means "one of our redeemers," the word megóal must therefore also mean a redeemer, when it in fact, by the Jews' own cited admission, means defiled and befouled? Shame on such devilish Jewish tricks of lying! I prove further, however, that Rabbi Salman Zevi's claim regarding léchem demá is fundamentally false, in that, thirdly, the bread in the holy Lord's Supper is also blasphemously called זבל Séfel táme, that is (with all due respect), unclean dung or filth, in place of the aforementioned Sévach táme, which means an unclean sacrifice (through a mocking alteration of the word Sévach, which means a sacrifice, into Séfel, meaning dung or filth), in which passage the word demá does not appear, but rather táme again, as Dieterich Schwab indicates in the fifth chapter of the first part of his Jüdischer Deckmantel (Jewish Cloak). Rabbi Lipmann does indeed acknowledge this in his Sepher Nizzáchon, number 352, but he again employs a frivolous trick, instructing the Jews as to what they should answer the Christians who might confront them with this, and shamelessly pretends that the word Séfel does not mean dung here, but rather a dwelling, when he writes: ועל זבל טמא נאמר להם: לא תמצא בכל התורה וכל לשון צואת: ואם יאמרו הא דאמרי 'ובל פדונו של יצחק טוב מכסף וזהב של אבימלך נאמר אדרבה מטונכם כי איבה יהיה צואה טובה כנגד כספים של אבימלך אלא זבל לשון דירה וכן מצינו כתוב במלכים הנה בניתי בית וכול לך וכן אנחנו אומרים שקדושה שלכם דך אצל טומאה וכרפירשתי בסימן שנ"א. That is: concerning Séfel táme, one must answer them (namely the Christians, when they raise an objection on this account) that one does not find in the entire Law (of Moses) the word Séfel used to mean Zóá (that is, with all due respect, dung). But if they object that the word Séfel does indeed mean dung in the saying, "The Séfel of Isaac's mules is better than the silver and gold of Abimelech," one must reply to them in turn: this serves your purpose, for how could dung be better than Abimelech's silver? Therefore Séfel here means a dwelling. And thus we find it written (1 Kgs 8:13): I have built a house, זבול seful lecha, that is, as a dwelling for you. In this way we also say that your sanctuary dwells beside the uncleanness (that is, the buried dead), as I have explained in n. 351. These are the words of Rabbi Lipmann.

To refute this frivolous evasion and expose its emptiness, one must know that in the Hebrew language the Radix, or root word Sakal, means "to dwell," as can be seen in Gen 30:20, and from it comes the word זבול seful, which means a dwelling, as found in Isa 63:15, where one reads: "Look down now from heaven, and behold from the זבול seful, that is, the dwelling of Your holiness and glory." Sometimes, however, the Vocalis Schurek, or u, is dropped, and in its place the Vocalis Kibbuz, or u, is placed under the Beth, or b, and it is written זבל sebul, or seful, as can be seen in Ps 49:15 and 2 Chr 6:2, as well as 1 Kgs 8:13. In the Chaldean language, however, as also among the Rabbis and Talmudists, the root word fakal has an entirely different meaning, in that in the second Conjugation Pabel, זבל fabbel means to manure, to enrich with dung, which among the Syrians is likewise זבל seful, and among the Arabs זבל fabbala; hence dung or filth is called among the Chaldeans and Rabbis זבל sefel, among the Syrians זבלא sefla, and among the Arabs זבל Siblon; therefore Elias writes in his Tischbi fol. 28. col. 2.: זבל נקרא הצואה והרעי, that is, the filth and excrement is called Sefel. It is therefore a deceitful roguery that Rabbi Lipmann would have Christians believe that Sefel here means the same as Seful, namely a dwelling, when it in fact means, with all due respect, filth or dung, as is plainly to be seen in the book Zeéna ureéna, fol. 18. col. 4. in the Parascha Toledoth Jizchak, where it is written as follows: יצחק ווטר זעהר רייך דס מען זאגט דער מיסט פון זיינע אוילי מולי דס אכט פיל יער אך געלט אלס דס זילבר און 'גולד פון אבימלך: דא פרעגט אן איין קשיא ווארום האבין דיא לייט גיזאגט דער מיסט פון דעם אוילי מולי חול האבין מיט גוואלט פון אנדרי בהמות דער תירוץ איז זייא האבן קיין חדוש גיזאגט אפילו פון אוילי מולן, מולן פלעגט קיין ברכה צו קומן אבר דיא אוילי מולן פון יצחק איז איין ברכה גיוועזן, that is: Isaac was very rich, so that people said the dung from his mules produced more money every year than all the silver and gold of Abimelech. Here an objection is raised and the question asked: why did the people say this about the dung of the mules, and not about the dung of other animals? The resolution of this objection consists in the following: they said something new, for from mules no offspring is wont to come; yet from the mules of Isaac a blessing came, just as silver came to Abimelech. Here, then, the godless blasphemer Rabbi Lipmann is convicted of falsehood out of a Jewish German-Hebrew book, inasmuch as the word Séfel mentioned in his above-cited words is expressly translated by the word "dung" by Rabbi Jacob, who wrote the book Zeéna ureéna. How then does he mean to persuade us that it means a dwelling, when a dwelling is called not Séfel but Sebül?

The Jews also mockingly use the word זבל Sábbel, meaning "to muck" or "to dung," in place of זבח Sabbéach, meaning "to sacrifice," as can be read in the tractate Berachoth of the Jerusalem Talmud, fol. 13, col. 2, where it is written as follows: ראה אותם מזבלים לעבודה זרה אומר זובה לאלהים יחרם, that is: When one (namely, a Jew) sees them (meaning the Goyim or heathens) dunging (or making dung, that is, sacrificing) to an idol, he shall say (from Exod 22:19, or according to others v. 20): "Whoever sacrifices to the gods shall be accursed." Likewise, in the Babylonian Talmud, in the tractate Avoda Sara, fol. 18, col. 2, in the Tosepboth on the word מזבלים mesábbelim, it is written: רבינו תם פירש: מזבלין כזבחים ולשון גנאי נקט mesábbelin, "to dung," in place of mesábbechin, "to sacrifice," and has taken it in a mocking sense. We can therefore easily gather from this that Dietrich Schwab, in his work Jüdischer Deckmantel, in the seventh chapter of the first part, page 62, reports the truth when he states: When they (namely, the Jews) see a pastor going to a sick Christian to administer and provide him with the holy Sacrament, or when he has already done so, they say: Reah, "look, the Nablan" (that is, the skinner) "is going, or has been, to the Kélef" (that is, the dog) "and wants to, or has beséfelt him" (that is, besmirched him). And the word beséfelen, meaning "to besmear with filth," is derived from the aforementioned word Séfel, meaning filth or dung. This also accords with what the convert Johann Adrian holds before the Jews in his open letter, page 28: when you see a preacher going to a sick person, you say: "there goes" (that is, walks) "the נבלין nablan" (that is, the skinner) "to the כלב Kélef" (that is, the dog) "and wants to be מטמא metamme to him," that is, he wants to defile him. As also with what Friedrich Samuel Brenz indicates in his work Abgestreiffter Schlangenbalg, in the second chapter, where he writes on page 10 as follows: When the Jews notice that a Christian is to be administered the holy Lord's Supper, they call it היה מטמא mittâmmé hajá, that is, "he has been defiled"; or they also say that he has eaten the Tólui, that is, eaten the hanged one. By this Tólui, or hanged one, Christ is meant, whom the Jews call by this name, as has been demonstrated above in chapter 2. And it may well be true that the aforementioned Friedrich Samuel Brenz reports the truth when he writes in his oft-mentioned Jüdischer Schlangenbalg, at the end of chapter 2, page 11: When they (the Jews) hear a Christian swear by the Sacrament, they say he has sworn by the שקר טמא Schéker tóme, that is, by the false and unclean, wherein their malice is again to be seen, in that they transform the word "Sacrament" into schéker tóme.

The wine in the Holy Communion is also mockingly and contemptuously named by them, and they call it firstly יין נסִיך Jen násich, or יין נסֵך Jen nésech, that is, wine of the outpouring, which is poured out and sacrificed in idolatry, as may be read in Eliae Tischbi, where at fol. 58. col. 1. it is written thus: כל יין נסֵך שנתנסֵך לעבודה זרה הוא נקרא יין נסֵך that is, all that wine which is poured out (and sacrificed) to an idol is called יין נסֵך jen nésech. That the wine of the Holy Communion is named in this way is to be seen from the 59th chapter of the book Maggen Abraham by Rabbi Abraham Perizol, where it is written thus: לילה אחת קודם תלייתו אכל עם תלמידיו וברך על הלחם ויין כמנהג ישראל ואמר להם כי הלחם אחד הוא גופו והיין הוא דמו ועל דברים אלו נמשכה אצלם עבודת העוגה ויין נסיכם that is, one night before he (namely Jesus) was hanged, he ate with his disciples and spoke the blessing over the bread and the wine, according to the custom of Israel, and said to them that the bread was his body and the wine was his blood; and from this derives among them the worship of the cake (that is, of the bread or the host) and of the jen násich, that is, of the wine of the outpouring unto idolatry. This is likewise confirmed in Buxtorf's Talmudic Lexicon, col. 1356, that the Jews call the wine of the Holy Communion jen nésech.

Second, it is called יין תרעלה jajin taréla, that is, wine of terror or of trembling, which words are taken from Ps 60:5, where it is read: "You have given us to drink יין תרעלה jájin or jen taréla," that is, the wine of terror; and this is found in their great book of festival prayers, namely the Machsor, under the title Józer le jóm ríschon schel schevuóth (or schevúos) in the second part, fol. 108.

1. col. 2. of the folio edition printed in Prague anno 373, that is, anno 1613, but under the title Józer lejóm schení of the edition printed here in Frankfurt am Main anno 450, that is, anno 1690, where in the prayer which begins אתו מצוות וחקים Ittó mizvóth vechykkim, the following is read: עצבי הגוים הערלים סומים חרשים ולא ממללים, נשאים על כתף ונסבלים, מאומה להועיל לא יכולים, לא עוזרים ולא מצילים, כנפלים נשברים כנבלים, יבושו כל בם מתהללים טועיהם לחושך מובלים חגיהם כמאוסים וגעולים, זבחיהם מרק פגולים ונסכיהם יין תרעלים, היכלהם קברי חללים, דחיהם חוקות הבלים, גוים לתופת נרגלים, that is: The idols of the uncircumcised Gójim or heathens (that is, of the Christians, for whom in the Frankfurt printing עובדי פסילים ófede pesilim, that is, servants of images, stands) are blind, deaf, and mute, and are lifted up on high and carried upon the shoulder. They can be of no use, nor help, nor deliver. When they fall, they break like earthen jugs. All who boast of them must be put to shame. Those who err in serving them are led into darkness. Their feast days are despised and loathsome; their sacrifices are abominable broths, and their libations (or drink-offerings) jajin or jen tarélim, that is, wine of terror or of trembling.

The chalice used in the Holy Communion is also called, in a mocking fashion, through a malicious alteration of one word into another, כלב Kélebh or Kélef, that is, a dog, in place of the German word Kelch (chalice), or the Hebrew כלי Keli, which means a vessel; as can be seen in the old Nizzáchon, p. 149, where it is written as follows: בשעת בליעת הלהם הוא אומר כוס ישועות אשא ובשם: עט נומן דומיני אינבוקאבו ואז יתה יי 'אקרא וזהו הלטין קאליצם סאלטוארים אקציפאם: that is: when he (namely the Gállach or priest, as can be seen from the preceding) swallows the bread, he says (from Ps 116:13): I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord; which is in Latin, Calicem salutarem accipiam, & nomen Domini invocabo. Thereafter he drinks the wine that he spoke over in the Kélef, that is, the dog, meaning however the chalice. And at p. 196 in the aforementioned old Nizzáchon one reads: כשמתבילין האנשים אינם מטבילין כי אם הנפש שכך קוראים גופו של אדם קדם לכן כלי ריק. והצלמים שבבתי תועבותם וכל כלי תשמיש עבודה זרה כגון קלוקן וכלבים למה that is: when they (namely the Christians) baptize people, they baptize only the soul, for before this (or before it takes place) they call the human body merely an empty vessel. Why then do they baptize the images in their houses of abomination (that is, their churches), and all idolatrous vessels, such as the bells and Kelafim (or Kelófim), that is, dogs (meaning the chalices)? Do these then have a spirit and a soul? We thus see clearly from this that Friedrich Samuel Brenz, in the second chapter of his work The Stripped Jewish Serpent-Skin, p. 10, and Dieterich Schwab in the first part of his Jewish Cloak, in the seventh chapter, p. 63, as well as Johann Adrian in his epistle, p. 28, have stated the truth, in that they unanimously accuse the Jews of calling such a chalice Kélef; and Dieterich Schwab notes at the cited passage that when a Jew has purchased a chalice that was stolen from a church, he immediately smashes it to pieces and melts it down so that it does not come to light; after which he boasts to other Jews and says: I have gekinjet a Kélef from a Túma, that is, I have purchased a dog from the uncleanness (namely the church). Likewise, when a Jew brings another Jew, or a Christian brings a Jew, some silver to purchase that is broken, smashed, or bent together, the Jew says: see, this is certainly from the Kélef. Johann Adrian, however, addresses the Jews at the aforementioned passage in the following manner: when you see a chalice, you call it a כלב Kélef, that is, a dog, whereas you ought instead to say כלי Keli, that is, a vessel, and out of sheer malice you alter the letters, whereby a different meaning arises.

The frivolous and godless liar and perverter of words, Rabbi Salman Zevi, also denies this in a wanton manner in his book of lies, the Jewish Theriac, in the second chapter, numero 22, fol. 13. col. 1, where he states: that is: The apostate (Friedrich Samuel Brenz) writes that we call a chalice in the church Kélef, which is supposed to mean a dog; to which I say: how does a dog come to be associated with a cup? This is a palpable lie. He has heard the bells ringing but does not know where. We call our sacred vessels כלי Keli, that is, vessel, and not dog in German, as you find with the vessels of the Tabernacle in Exod 25:9, where it is written: a pattern of the Tabernacle, and col Kelav, that is, all its vessels, etc. The opposite I am willing to believe, namely that the Christians have derived the word "chalice" from our language, that is, from the Hebrew, as from כֶּלֶךְ Kelécha, meaning vessel; for כֶּלִי Keláv and כֶּלֶךְ Kelécha share one Radix, or root word; it is not written with the letter Beth or b at the end, namely Kélebb. These are the words of Rabbi Salman Zevi.

By this means, someone who does not understand the Hebrew language at all, and who likewise has no other knowledge of the matter, could easily be persuaded that a great injustice is done to the Jews by accusing them of such a thing. But anyone who understands Hebrew even a little can very quickly detect the deception. He shamelessly asserts, against his own conscience and better knowledge, that the Jews call their sacred vessels כֶּלִי Keláv, which is supposed to mean "vessels," when in fact in the Hebrew language vessels are not called כֶּלִי Keláv but rather כֶּלִים Kelím, and כֶּלִי Keláv means in Latin vasa ipsius, and in German "his vessels," since the v at the end is the suffixum Pronomen and means "his," just as דְּבָרִים devarím means "word" and דְּבָרָיו devaráv means "his words," מִשְׁפָּטִים mischpatím means "judgments" and מִשְׁפָּטָיו mischpatáv means "his judgments." Now because כֶּלִי Keláv in its pronunciation closely resembles the word כֶּלֶב Kéleff, he has sought to instruct the Jews in this manner as to what evasion they should use as their excuse against Christians who might confront them with this. The very same situation applies to the word כֶּלֶךְ Kelécha, which according to his deceitful claim is also supposed to mean "vessels," when it in fact means "your vessels," just as צָרִים Zárím means "enemies" and צָרֶיךָ Zarécha means "your enemies," עֵינַיִם enájim means "eyes" and עֵינֶיךָ enécha means "your eyes," since the écha at the end is a Pronomen suffixum pluralis numeri and means "your." How then does it make sense that a chalice or cup should be called כֶּלִי Keláv, that is, "his vessels," or כֶּלֶךְ Kelécha, that is, "your vessels"? This is indeed a thoroughly foolish evasion. His claim that it is not written with the letter Beth or b at the end is a shameful lie, for not only do the converted Jews cited above attest to this, but it is also clearly and irrefutably confirmed in the two passages from the old Nizzáchon that have been adduced. As for Rabbi Salman Zevi's daring to ask how a dog comes to be associated with a cup: one may equally ask how the word mentioned above, מְזַבְּחִים mesäbbechím, which means "sacrificing," corresponds to מְזַבְּלִים mesäbbelím, that is, "dunging," or how חָרָא Chárja, which, with all due respect, means "filth," corresponds to Maria, or how פְּנֵי מֶלֶךְ Pené mélech, that is, "the face of a king," corresponds to פְּנֵי כֶּלֶב pené kéleff, that is, "the face of a dog."

The Jews know very well that their blasphemous Talmud teaches them such mocking alterations, as can be seen in the Tractat Temúra, fol. 128, col. 2 of the Amsterdam edition, where, concerning the words of Deut 12:3, "And you shall destroy their (namely, the idols') name," the following is taught: כל העשוי לשמם הדרתא לכנות להם שם הוא דאתא לבירה גליא קרי אותו בית כריא פני המלך פני כלב עין כל עין קוץ, that is: Everything that is made for their sake (that is, for the sake of the idols) must be called by an (altered and mocking) name. Whoever comes to a house which is called גליא בית Beth (or bes) gálja, that is, a high house, shall call it כריא בית Beth (or bes) cárja, that is, a low house. Instead of pené hammelech, that is, the face of the king, (he shall say) pené Keléf, that is, the face of a dog; and instead of עין כל en col, that is, the eye of all, (he shall say) עין קוץ en koz, that is, the eye of a thorn. Now since such contemptible alterations not only appear in the Talmud but the Jews are also commanded to do likewise, they take great pains to alter this or that word in such a manner as to show the utmost contempt for Christians and the Christian religion, many instances of which have already been pointed out in the preceding chapters, and some more will appear in the following thirteenth chapter.

The cups are also called גביעי עבודה זרה gevié avóda sára, that is, cups of idolatry, as can be read in fol. 77, col. 4 of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, in the Piske Tósephoth, num. 105; for they are regarded as idolatrous vessels, as can be read in the Sepher Toledóth Adam vechávva, in the 4th part, fol. 158, col. 1, in the seventeenth Nathibh, where it is written thus: גביע ומחתה שמשמי עבודה זרה הם, that is: The chalice and the censer are idolatrous vessels.

Chapter XIII.

In which it is demonstrated how the Jews name the Christian holidays and feast days, and what they write concerning them.

It is written in the book Zéda ledérech, fol. 151. col. 4. in the Parascha Emór: הבא that is, Whoever despises the feast days has no share in eternal life; however, this is understood only of the Jewish feast days, for they despise our holidays and feast days in the most extreme manner, and give them mocking names, concerning which the words of Isa 1:14, "My soul is the enemy of your new moons and annual feasts," are expounded in the old Nizzáchon p. 79., where it is read: המועדים שבדאו מלבם that is, concerning their feast days which they have invented out of their own minds, and which God has not commanded, it is said: "My soul is the enemy of your new moons and annual feasts." And in the preceding twelfth chapter, at p. 553., something was brought forward from the Machsor, according to which it is written therein as follows: הגיהם מאוסים וגעלים that is, Their feast days are despised and abominable. Likewise it is noted in the Talmudic tractate Avôda sâra, fol. 2. col. 1. in the Tosephôth: רוב אדיהם מן הקדישים that is, Their (namely the Christians') most numerous feasts are derived from the קדישים Kedéschim, that is, whores; and the word Kedéschim is here mockingly substituted for קדושים Kedóschim, that is, saints. From all of this it can be gathered that they refer to our feast days with contempt. As for the mocking names which they give to a Christian holiday and feast day, they call it first of all איד Ed, that is, a misfortune, mishap, ruin, and destruction; in the plural number, however, אידים Edim, that is, destructions or mishaps, because they wish such things upon us on such a day. That the word איד Ed signifies a mishap, misfortune, ruin, and destruction is evident from Job 31:3, where it is read: "Is not איד Ed, that is, destruction, for the perverse?" And in Jer 48:16 it is said: "For איד Ed, that is, the mishap (or destruction) of Moab will come soon." In this sense it is also found in Deut 32:35, Jer 46:21, and 49:8, Prov 1:26, and in other places besides. That our holiday and feast day is called by this name is evident from Elie Tischbi, fol. 6. col. 1., where he notes: קורין לחג של עובדי עבודה זרה איד that is, A feast of the idolaters is called איד Ed. And in the Musaph Aruch printed at Amsterdam it is read: איד פירוש כינוי לחגי הנכרים that is, Ed is a surname for the feasts of foreigners. The excellent Buxtorf likewise indicates in his Talmudic Lexicon, in the 69th column, that from this word it is taught in the notis or annotations on the Mischnejôth that it is כינוי גנאי לימי חגם that is, a mocking surname for the feast day of the Gójim. Therefore it is read in the old Nizzáchon p. 24. concerning the Parascha or section of the Law which is called Vájez Jáacobb, beginning at Gen 28:10 and ending at Gen 32:2: ברוב ימי אידיהן ר"ל בחיי טאג: that is, The Gójim or heathens (that is, Christians) read this Parascha on most of the days of their אידים Edim, that is, destructions, by which their holidays are understood. Likewise, a Sunday is called יום איד jom ed, that is, a day of destruction, as can be seen in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára fol. 6. col. 1. in Rabbi Solomon's commentary, where it is read as follows: בנוצרי ההולך בטעותו אותו איש שצוה להם לעשות להם יום איד באחד בשבת: that is, A Christian who walks in the error of that man (that is, of Christ), who commanded them to observe the jom ed, that is, the day of destruction, on the first day of the week. And it is likewise so named in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 220. col. 4. in the Parascha Nizzavím, and in the book Cad hakkémach, fol. 20. col. 1., as well as in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára fol. 2. col. 1. in the Tosephoth.

Since Sunday is mentioned here, I cannot refrain from pointing out that Rabbi Joseph Albo, in his Sepher Ikkarim, in the 25th chapter, under the title Máamar Schelischí, fol. 92. col. 1. 2., claims that Sunday was instituted by a pope in place of Saturday as the Sabbath, approximately five hundred years after Christ, where he writes as follows: אי אפשר לשום אדם לבטלו. וכל שכן שהוא אחת מעשרת הדברות והיא מצוה שקיימה ישו וכל תלמידיו ואחר ישו כמו חמש מאות שנה שנה: that is, it is impossible for any person to abolish it (meaning the Sabbath, which must be observed on the sixth day of the week), and all the more so because it is one of the Ten Commandments. It is likewise a commandment which Jesus and his disciples observed; but approximately five hundred years after Jesus, the pope changed it and commanded that the first day (of the week, i.e., Sunday) be kept in place of the Sabbath. Rabbi Joseph Albo is, however, entirely mistaken in this, for Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, in the very words cited shortly before, himself acknowledges that Jesus instituted it and commanded that the first day of the week be observed in place of Saturday. Furthermore, the first day of the week is called the Lord's Day in Rev 1:10, because Christ rose from the dead on that day; for this reason, this day had already at that time been appointed by the Christian Church for the performance of divine worship in place of the Jewish Sabbath, as all the ancient Church Fathers attest, and as may also be gathered from Acts 20:7 and 1 Cor 16:2. But how does Rabbi Joseph Albo's statement accord with what was indicated above in chapter 7, pp. 287 and 288, from the devil-inspired blasphemous pamphlet Toledoth Jeschu, where it is reported that Peter, who is said to have traveled to Rome and to have remained a Jew throughout, instituted Sunday in place of the Sabbath and the Christian feast days immediately after the death of Christ?

It is also forbidden for Jews to fast on our Sunday, because we observe that day as a holiday; this is stated in the Talmudic tractate Taanith, fol. 27. col. 2. in these words: בערב שבת לא היו מתענין מפני כבוד שבת ק"ו בשבת וביום אחד בשבת במאי טעמא לא א"ר יוחנן מפני הנוצרים, that is: On the eve of the Sabbath one did not fast, out of honor for the Sabbath, and much less on the Sabbath itself. But why did one not fast on the first day of the week? This was done on account of the Christians.

To return, however, to the aforementioned word Ed, Candlemas is likewise called by this name, and during that time it is also forbidden for Jews to sell wax to a Christian; concerning which, the Sepher mizvoth gadol of Rabbi Mosche Mikkozi, fol. 10. col. 2. teaches as follows: אסור למכור לכוזמה ולגלה ולכומר דמידי אסור לעשוהו הוא כן שעהו אסור למכור לגוי ביום אד קנולד שלהם אבל שעה בשאר ימים ולכונה דתקריבת הוא כן שעהו אסור למכור לגוי מותר לשאר גוים מותר למכור, that is: It is forbidden to sell incense to a Gallach (that is, a tonsured one, namely a priest) and to a Cumar (that is, an idolatrous clergyman), since it is something that is offered in sacrifice. Likewise it is also forbidden to sell wax to a Goi (or heathen, that is, a Christian) on their jom ed, that is, the day of the festival of Candlemas; on the remaining days, however, it is permitted to sell wax and incense to the other Gojim (or heathens, that is, Christians). The very same is also found in the book Agudda, fol. 60. col. 2. num. 7. and in the book Col bo num. 97. fol. 104. col. 1., the words of which have already been cited above in the eleventh chapter, p. 532.

Second, a Christian feast day and holiday is called הבל hefel, that is, a vanity, concerning which the following is read in Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's commentary on the Mishnah of the Talmudic tractate Avoda Sara fol. 78. col. 3. of the Amsterdam Talmud: אידיהם הבלים כמי למועדיהם ואסור לקרותם מועדים לפי שהם הבל על האמת, that is: Their אידים edim (that is, destructions, by which the feast days are understood, as mentioned) are their הבלים hafalim, that is, vanities, which is a surname for their feast days, and it is forbidden to call them מועדים moadim, that is, feasts, because in truth they are הבל hefel, that is, a vanity.

Third, a Christian feast day is called חגגה Chogga, a word that appears in Isa 19:17, where it is written: "The land of Judah will be a חגגה Chogga to Egypt," that is, a terror (or trembling); and this is interpreted in their commentaries thereon by Rabbi David Kimchi as ורעדה חרדת תנועה, that is, a movement of terror and trembling, and by Rabbi Solomon Jarchi as שבר אימה ופחד, that is, a breaking, fear, and terror; and the Jews call a Christian feast day by this name because they wish that during such a time fear and terror may come upon us, and that we may be broken and reduced to nothing. That a Christian feast is called Chogga can also be clearly seen in the Elias Tishbi, where it is written in fol. 31, col. 2 as follows: חג ומועד של עובדי עבודה זרה אנחנו מכנין אותו חגא מלשון שבר כמו למצרים לחגא וכן קורין אותו איד Chogga, which signifies a breaking, as can be seen in Isa 19:17, where it is written that the land of Judah will be a Chogga to Egypt, that is, a breaking. And thus it is also called איד Ed, that is, a ruin or destruction." That we Christians are regarded by the Jews as idolatrous people will be demonstrated in detail below in the 16th chapter of this first part. It is also read in the little tract called Maase ruach, that is, "The Story of a Spirit from Nikolsburg," at f. 5, c. 1, that the spirit reported in his confession that he had been a Jew but had become a Christian and had committed many sins, and among other things is said to have stated: חלפתי שמלותי ביום אדום Chil-lafti simlothai bejom edom, which is translated there as: "I exchanged my garments at Chogga," though it should read: at their (namely the Christians') Chogga. And at fol. 7, col. 2, it is reported there that the spirit had given no rest whatsoever to the Jewish boy whom he had possessed, and it follows: זון זונטאג הט ער אים מנוחה גילאזין: און 'אימר לו אן חגא האט ער אים מנוחה גילאזין, that is: "And on Sunday, as also always at Chogga, he left him in peace." Likewise it stands at fol. 8, col. 2 in the same work: און 'גאנץ שבת האט ער אים ניסט עסין לאזין און 'אן חגא האט ער אים: ניסט גיטון, that is: "On the entire Sabbath he (namely the spirit) did not let him (meaning the Jewish boy) eat, but at Chogga he did nothing to him." Likewise, in the German-Hebrew booklet Masseoth Benjamin, fol. 73, col. 2, a feast that the Egyptians are accustomed to observe is called Chogga. And I believe that Friedrich Samuel Brenz reported the truth in his work "The Stripped Jewish Serpent-Skin," in chapter 2, p. 8, when he states that the Jews call the Feast of Our Lady terefa tholja chagga, that is, "an unclean gallows-holiday," and the annual feast days of the Apostles terefa Taschmidim Chogga, that is, "the feast day of the unclean, exterminated disciples," for no slander or abuse is too much for them.

The Christmas festival is called, through a mocking alteration of the Latin word Natale (for festum natale means the birth-feast), ניטל Nital, which derives from תלה Tala, meaning to hang, and signifies as much as נתלה nithléh, that is, one who has been hanged; or ניטל Nittal, which comes from נטל Natál, meaning to take away and to remove from the midst, and signifies one who has been taken away or removed from the midst; or נואל Noal, that is, one who has become a fool, whereby without doubt an allusion is made, in a malicious manner, to the French word Noël, which means the Christmas festival. The word ניטל Nittal, signifying one who has been hanged, is found in the old Nizzáchon, p. 7. 8., where it is written as follows: כנגד אותן מ' ימים ששהתה בנדה: טומאתה משאל ר"ל ויין אוכלין עד לכ"ט כסלו הם מתענין מ' יום שהרי כתוב אשה כי תזריע וגו' ויילדה זכר וטמאה שבעת ימים ושלושים יום ושלושת ימים וגו' that is: In consideration of those forty days during which she (namely Mary) remained in her uncleanness, from Nital, that is, from Christmas until Candlemas, they (the Christians) fast forty days; for behold, it is written (Lev 12:2): When a woman is impregnated and bears a male child, she shall be unclean for seven days. (And in v. 4 it is read there:) And thirty-three days (shall she remain at home.) Behold, this amounts together to forty days. And in the book Agúdda it stands at fol. 59. col. 3. in the tractate Avóda sára numero 1. as follows: וגו' אִמְרֵי שְׁמוּאֵל לִפְנֵי אֲדִיהֶן: של כותים אסור לישא ולתת עמהן ובגלות אינו אסור אלא יום אידם בלבד פירש רש"י כ"ב בשם רש"י דעכשיו אין אנו צריכין שלשה ימים כיון דאנו במלה וגם אין לאסור אלא אותם חגות דבשביל כגון קצ"ח וניטל ואפילו אותם ימים יש להתיר משום איבה that is: It is forbidden before the Edim, that is, the declines (namely the feast days of the Cutheans), to conduct trade with them, etc. Samuel has said that in the exilio, or exile, it is not forbidden except on their yom ed (that is, the day of decline) itself. Rabbi Samuel, son of Meir, has explained it in the name of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi that we do not now need three days (to abstain from commerce with Christians), since we are in exile, and that only those feast days which are celebrated on his account (that is, for the sake of Jesus) are to be forbidden, such as קס"ח Késach, that is, Easter (which is mockingly called thus instead of פסח Pésach) and ניטל Nítal; yet even such days are to be permitted on account of enmity (so that we do not make enemies of the Christians). Precisely the same is also found in the book Col bo with these words: פירש רבינו שמואל ז"ל בשם רש"י ז"ל הוקא ניטל וכסח: (ואפילו אותן יש להתיר משום איבה that is: Rabbi Samuel, of blessed memory, has explained this in the name of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, that specifically Nital (that is, Christmas Day) and כסח Kélach (that is, Easter Day, which is called Késach instead of Pésach on account of the Nazarene, that is, Christ, as is expressly stated in the book Terúma, numero 134.) were to be forbidden, yet one must also permit them in order to avoid enmity. And this is likewise found in the Piske Tosephoth of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, num. 1. fol. 77. col. 1. of the Amsterdam edition. It is thus evident from this that Dietrich Schwab, in the 1st chapter of the first part of his Jewish Cloak, wrote the truth when he reports that the Jews call the Christmas festival Nital, that is, the festival of the hanged one.

The second word, ניטל Nittal, which means one who has been taken away or removed from the midst, appears in the book Schulchan aruch, in the section Jore dea, numero 148, at the end, fol. 119, col. 1, where one reads: אי שולח דורון: that is: When he (namely a Jew) sends a gift to the idolater (meaning the Christian) at this time on the eighth day after נִיטָל Nittal (that is, Christmas Day), which they call New Year, etc. And thus Christmas Day is also named in the Sepher mizvoth gadol of Rabbi Mosche Mikkozi, fol. 10, col. 2, as well as in the book Terumoth, num. 134.

The third word, נוֹאֵל Noal, which means one who has become foolish, appears in the manuscript book Ez chajim in the following words, as the highly renowned and highly learned Doctor Wagenseil cites them in his book Sota, p. 775 and 776: וְנוֹצְרִים שְׂיוֹם אִידִם יוֹם רֵאשׁוֹן אֲסוּר לִשְׂאֹת וּלְתַת עֲמָהֶם בָּאֶרֶץ יִשְׂרָאֵל יוֹם ה' יְיוֹם שְׁבָהֶם ו' שְׁבַכְל שְׁבַת וְכ"ש יוֹם א' עֲצֻמוֹ וּבְחֻצָּה לָאֶרֶץ אֵין אֲסוּר לִשְׂאֹת וּלְתַת רַק בְּיוֹם אִידִם בְּלִבְד פֶּרֶשׁ"ב בְּשֶׁם ר' דְּוֹקָא נוֹאֵל וּפְסָה שְׁהֶם בְּשֶׁם הַתְּלוּי וּפִלְיוֹ אוֹתוֹן יֵשׁ לְהַתִּיר: that is, with the Christians, whose jom ed, that is, day of ruin, is the first day of the week (namely Sunday), it is forbidden to conduct trade on the fifth and sixth day in the land of Israel (or in the Jewish land); how much more so, then, is it forbidden on the first day (that is, Sunday) itself. Outside the (promised) land, however, commerce with them is forbidden only on their jom ed, that is, their day of ruin. Rabbi Samuel, son of Meir, explains this in the name of Rabbi Isaac as referring specifically to נוֹאֵל Noal (that is, the Christian feast) and כֶּסֶח Ke-sach (that is, the Easter feast), which were instituted on account of the Hanged One (that is, Jesus), yet which are nonetheless also permitted.

Since Christmas is mentioned here, I must also report that the Jews, through the instigation of the devil, most blasphemously claim that our most beloved Savior must, on the night of that feast, crawl through all (to speak with due decorum) privies and secret chambers, as is unanimously attested by Jews who have converted to the Christian religion. Concerning this, it is written in the converted Ernst Ferdinand Hessen's Judengeissel [Jewish Scourge], in the 4th chapter of the first part, as follows: Dear Christians, when we keep and celebrate our Christmas in a holy manner, which always takes place on the 25th of December in the Christian church, and when, following the old and laudable custom, we rise during the night hours to perform our divine service, prayers, and thanksgivings to God through reading and singing, because on that very night the Alma (that is, the Virgin), as shown by Isa, gave birth to Christ, our Messiah: when you Jews then hear the bells ringing, you say with truly dreadful words: "Now the Mamser is crawling through all מוֹשְׁבִים moschóvím," that is, "now the whoreson must pass through all privies and secret chambers," thereby instilling fear and horror in your little children and the entire household, so that on that night they are reluctant to go to the privy unless they have the most urgent need. These are the words of Ernst Ferdinand Hessen, with which Dieterich Schwab likewise fully agrees in his Jüdischer Deckmantel [Jewish Cloak], in the first chapter of the first part, p. 30 and 31, as does Friedrich Samuel Brenz in the first chapter of his Abgestreiffter Schlangenberg [Stripped Snakeskin], p. 7, along with Johann Adrian in his open letter, p. 29, so that, given such concordant testimony, there is not the slightest reason to doubt the truth of the matter, and all the more so because, when I was once on a Christmas Eve here in Frankfurt in the Jewish quarter, in a Jew's house, his little son would not go to the privy at all, and cried so long until the maidservant, at the father's command, went with him.

Furthermore, the aforementioned Dieterich Schwab writes in the last-mentioned place as follows: During the Christmas season, which they call Nital, that is, the feast of the Hanged One, they dare neither to study nor to pray, on the grounds that they believe Christ is in great hellish torment during that night, so that He may have no rest or refreshment, since they do nothing other than curse, spit upon, and execrate Christ. Concerning this, the aforementioned Johann Adrian, in the last-cited passage of his epistle, also addresses the Jews in the following manner: On Ascension Day (he meant to say, Christ's Ascension Day) you do not study, and you put forward the claim that our Lord Christ must do penance, and as punishment must crawl through all filthy privies and Secrete throughout that night, and has no rest except when he hears you studying. But since you begrudge him such rest, you refuse to study. You also say to your children at that time: take care that the תלוי Tolui (that is, the Hanged One) does not drag you in. So too writes Friedrich Samuel Brenz in the last-mentioned place as follows: On the said Christmas night the Jews are very merry, playing, gorging, and drinking, and give out in addition that in whatever house they read and pray, the Tolui has all the better rest there, and need not crawl through the corners of those houses.

That these converts wrote the truth, I do not doubt in the least; for I know from experience that the Jews do not study at that time. They also hold that the damned have rest from their torment during the time of prayer, concerning which it is written in the book Megalle amykkòth, fol. 41. col. 3. in the 127th Ofan as follows: איתא בזהר פ' נח עמוד מ"ט שבכל יום שבכל צלותא וצלותא יש מנוחה לרשעים בגיהנם בכל יום ארבעה שעות ומחצה הרי בו ימי השבוע ו' פעמים ד' ומחצה הרי כ"ז שעות יש לרשעים בגיהנם בששה ימי החול וכן כ"ד שעות של שבת הרי נ"א שעות בכל שבוע יש לרשעים מנוחה בגיהנם. That is: In the Sohar it is written in Parascha Noach, in the 49th column, that the wicked have rest in hell every day during the time of prayer, and at each prayer, for one and a half hours; it follows from this that the wicked in hell have four and a half hours of rest every day at the three prayers (namely the morning, evening, and night prayer), which in the six days of the week amounts to six times four and a half hours: thus the wicked have twenty-seven hours of rest in hell during the six working days, and likewise twenty-four hours on the Sabbath, which together makes fifty-one hours in each week during which the wicked have rest in hell. More on this can be found below in the eighth chapter of the second part. Now since, according to their view, the damned have rest during the time of prayer, and yet they are deadly enemies of Christ the Lord, it is easy to conclude that they will omit nothing which they believe to be contrary to Him.

The aforementioned Friedrich Samuel Brenz also reports, in his work Der abgestreifte Jüdische Schlangengalg, in the first chapter, p. 2, that the Jews read the diabolical blasphemous booklet called מעשה תלוי Maase Talui (or Tolui), that is, the Story of the Hanged One, which is otherwise also called Toledoth Jeschu, that is, the Birth of Jesus, entirely in secret in their homes on Christmas night, to the greatest dishonor of Christ. This is very easy to believe, for once, as mentioned just shortly before, when I was at a rabbi's home here in Frankfurt in the Jewish quarter on a Christmas Eve, a Jewish student came in who had not recognized me and addressed the rabbi, asking him to lend him that Sepher, that is, book, which was customarily read on that night; the rabbi, however, did not answer him, because I was standing nearby and he was wary of me. It was certainly none other than this accursed, hellish little booklet; and it would be desirable that all such and similar godless booklets be taken away from the Jews.

Concerning the Christian Easter festival, which in the Hebrew language is called פֶּסַח Pesach, it is referred to by them, through their customary malicious distortion, as כֶּסַח Késach, that is, a cutting out or hewing out, derived from כָּסַח Casach, which means to cut out and to hew out, because they believe that during this festival the Christians are to be exterminated and entirely done away with by their supposed Messiah, as will be shown in greater detail below in the 14th chapter of the second part. In order that their malice might not be noticed, however, they often write, in place of כֶּסַח Késach with the letter Caph, the form קֶסַח Késach with the letter koph, which means nothing, or even קֶצַח kézach, which signifies Roman coriander, or according to others, vetch; and the word כֶּסַח késach with the letter Caph is found in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, num. 240, p. 134, where בְּיוֹם הַכֶּסַח be jóm hakkésach, that is, "on the day of késach," is written in place of Pésach. So too in the Piske Tosephoth of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, num. I, fol. 77, col. 1 of the Amsterdam Talmud, the following is taught: מותר ליהן אפילו בכסה וניטל, that is, it is permitted for us (to trade with Christians) even on their késach and Nital; and this is also found in the words cited above at p. 561 from the book Col bo. The word קֶסַח késach with the letter koph I have often seen in their calendars, and it likewise appears in the Sepher mizvóth gadól of Rabbi Mosche Mikkózi, fol. 10, col. 2, in these words: דוּקָא נִיטל וקסח שהן עיקר אדם וראש יצאתם אסור, that is, it is specifically Nittal (that is, the Christmas festival) and késach (that is, the Easter festival), which are both their principal festivals and the foremost work of their idol, that are forbidden for trading with them. It is also found thus in the manuscript book Ez chájim, as can be seen in the honorably remembered Dr. Wagenseil's Sóta, p. 776. The word קצח készach, however, appears above in the words cited at p. 561 from fol. 59, col. 3 of the book Agúdda, as well as in the book Terúma of Rabbi Baruch, num. 134.

How the Jews are to conduct themselves toward Christians during Christian feast days is sufficiently shown by their books, and they are forbidden to enter a Christian's house on his feast day and to greet him, as is to be found in the Talmudic Tractate Gittin fol. 62. col. 1., where it is written: לא יכנס אדם לביתו : בשוק נתן לו בשפה רפה ובכבוד ראש : that is: A person shall not enter the house of a stranger (understand: a Christian) on the day of his Ed (that is, of his ruin, namely on his feast day) and greet him. If he encounters him on the street (or in the marketplace), he greets him with a soft word and with bowed head. The very same is also found in the book Col bo, num. 108, as well as in the book Schulchan áruch, in the section Jóre déa, numéro 148, §. 9, and in Rabbi Mosis bar Majemon's book Jad chasaka, in the first section, in the tractate Avóda sára, cap. 10, §. 5. In the last-mentioned passage, however, it is also written thus: שואלין בשלומם אפילו ביום הגם מפני דרכי : שולם that is: One greets them, even on their feast day, for the sake of peace; however, one never repeats the greeting so as to greet them twice.

Furthermore, it is forbidden for them to conduct business with Christians before and on Christian feast days, concerning which the following is taught in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 2. col. 1.: לפני אידיהן של עובדי אלילים : שלשה ימים אסור לשאת ולתת עמהם להשאיל ולשאול מהן להלוותן וללוות מהן לפרען שואלין בשלומם אפילו ביום הגם מפני דרכי : שולם that is: Three days before the Edim (that is, the downfalls; understand thereby the feast days) of the idolaters, it is forbidden to conduct business with them, to lend to them or to borrow from them, to loan to them or to take loans from them, to pay them or to be paid by them. Rabbi Jehuda says: one allows oneself to be paid by them, because in this way one torments them. Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his Jewish Theriac, chapter two, numero 31, fol. 14, col. 2, wishes to interpret these words as though they did not apply to Christians, but this is a plain falsehood; for Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon, in his commentary on the Mishnah of the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 78, col. 3 of the Amsterdam Talmud, on the words: "ואלו אידיהן וגו'" And these are their Edim (or downfalls, i.e., feast days), ש"ע," writes as follows: אלו הזמנים הנזכרים היו מפורסמים באותן

Further, they are forbidden to give a gift to a Christian on his feast day, or to receive one from him, concerning which the book Col bo, fol. 108. col. 4. numero 97. under the title Avôda sâra, contains the following written: אסור לשלוח דורון לגוי ביום אידו אלא אם כן נודע לו שאינו מודה בעבודה זרה ואינו עובדה. וכן גוי ששלח דורון לישראל ביום אידו לא יקבלנו ואם חשש לאיבה נוטל בפניו ואינו נהנה בו עד שיודע לו שזה הגוי אינו עובד עבודה זרה ואינו מודה בה. הנוצרים עובדי ע"ז הם ויום אידם : that is, it is forbidden to send a gift to a Goi (that is, a heathen) on his jom ed (or feast day), unless it is known that he professes no idol and does not serve one. Likewise, a Jew shall accept no gift from a Goi on that Goi's jom ed (or feast day); but if he (meaning the Jew) fears enmity, he may accept it in the other's presence, yet he shall not make use of it until it becomes known to him that the said Goi serves no idol and professes none. The Christians, however, are idolatrous people, and the first day of the week, namely Sunday, is their jom ed or feast day. The very same is also read in the book Schulchan aruch, in the part Jóre dea, numero 149. § 5. fol. 118. col. 2., though with some alteration, for it is stated there: ואם חשש לאיבה מקבלו וזורקו : בפניו לבור או למקום האבד : that is, but if he fears enmity, he shall accept it and throw it before him into a pit, or to a place where it will be ruined.

Chapter XIV.

Since I was before reporting in the following fifteenth chapter in what manner the Jews despise and hate all peoples of the world outside of Judaism, and especially the Christians, I have deemed it not inappropriate to first set before the reader's eyes, in this chapter, their arrogance and great boastfulness, so that one may see from it how these miserable people foolishly exalt themselves in their vain imaginings above all other peoples, even though the righteous wrath and curse of God rests upon them, and their wretched condition, in which they find themselves as a people cast off and rejected by the Most High, ought rightly to bring them to more humble thoughts and to a recognition of their unfortunate state. They were indeed in former times the chosen people of God, for which reason Moses addresses them thus in Deut 7:6: "You are a holy people unto the Lord your God; the Lord your God has chosen you to be a people of His own possession, out of all the peoples that are upon the earth." The like is also to be read there in Deut 10:15 and Deut 14:2. But on account of their godless conduct, the kingdom of God, as Jesus prophesied to them in Matt 21:43, has been taken from them and given to the Gentiles. Concerning this, it is also written in Medrasch Tillim fol. 35, col. 1, on the words of Ps 75:10, "I will break off all the horns of the wicked," as follows: עשר קרנות הן שנתן הק"ב לישראל קרן אברהם: שנ' 'אשירה נא לידידי בקרן בן שמן, קרן יצחק שנאמר הנה איל אחד נאחז בסבך בקרני וקרנו של משה שנ' 'כי קרן עור פני משה, קרן של נבואה שנאמר ותתפלל חנה ותאמר רמה קרני. וקרנה של תורה שנ' 'וקרנים מידו לו. וקרנה של כהונה שנ' 'וקרנו תרום בכבוד. וקרן לוייה שנ' 'כל אלה בנים להימן להרים קרן. וקרן ירושלים שנ' 'מקרני ראמים עניתי. וקרנו של מלך המשיח שנ' 'ויתן עז למלכו וירם קרן משיחו וכן הוא אומר שם אצמית קרן לדוד כיון שחטאו ישראל ניטלו מהן וניתנו לאומות העולם שנ' 'וקרנין עשר לה שנמשילו אומות העולם: that is, the Holy and Blessed God gave the Israelites ten horns: the horn of Abraham, as it is said (Isa 5:1), "I will sing to my beloved a song concerning the horn of oil"; the horn of Isaac, as it is said (Gen 22:13), "Behold, a ram was caught in the thicket by his horns"; the horn of Moses, as it is said (Exod 34:29), "that the skin of Moses' face sent forth rays." In Hebrew, "to send forth rays" is קרן Karán, from קרן Kéren, which means a horn, because rays go forth from a shining object like horns. The horn of prophecy, as it is said (1 Sam 2:1), "And Hannah prayed and said: my horn is exalted." The horn of the Law, as it is said (Hab 3:4), "And horns (that is, rays) went forth from His hands." The horn of the priesthood, as it is said (Ps 112:9), "And his horn shall be exalted with honor." The horn of the Levitical office, as it is said (1 Chr 25:5), "All these were sons of Heman, to lift up the horn." And the horn of Jerusalem (in whose place in Echa rabbathi, f. 303, c. 1, where all of this is likewise to be read, it stands: קרן בית המקדש, that is, the horn of the Temple), as it is said (Ps 22:22), "You have answered me from the horns of the wild oxen." As also the horn of King Messiah, as it is said (1 Sam 2:10), "He shall give strength unto His king, and exalt the horn of His anointed." And thus it is said (Ps 132:17), "There will I cause the horn of David to spring forth." But after the Israelites had sinned, these (namely, all these horns) were taken from them and given to the peoples of the world, as it is said (Dan 7:7), "And it had ten horns," for the peoples of the world are compared to those beasts mentioned in the said passage of Daniel.

Notwithstanding this, however, that they have lost such ten horns, by their own admission, they boast of themselves beyond all measure, and believe that they are still God's worthy people; hence in the book Schéva tal, in the preface, the following is read: כל נשמה ונשמה מישראל בפני עצמה חביבה חשובה בעיני הק"ה: בה, that is: every single Israelite soul, in and of itself, is dearer and more precious in the eyes of the blessed God than all the souls of an entire people together. And in the book Cad hakkémach fol. 64. col. 4., as also in Rabbi Menachem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 187. col. 4., in the Parashah Vajéra Balak, it is written: חביבין ישראל, that is: the Israelites are more pleasing before God than the ministering angels, which is taken from the Talmudic tractate Chóllin fol. 91. col. 2. And in the book Cosri, in the second part, n. 36., it is said of them: ישראל באומות כלב באברים, i.e., the Israelites are among the nations what the heart is among the limbs, namely the most distinguished people among all peoples. In place of which, in the book Chissük emuná, the following is found: כנסת ישראל היא כבחי' המין כמו הלב מבין כל אברים, i.e., the people of Israel is the most excellent among the (human) race, just as the heart is the most distinguished among all the limbs; hence in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 229. col. 3., in the Parashah Vesoth habberachá, it stands: יִשְׂרָאֵל עֶקֶר הַמְּצִיאוֹת, that is: Israel is the most distinguished among all things that exist. This is also to be found in the book Nézach Jisraël, in the tenth chapter, fol. 17. col. 4., and in the fifteenth chapter, fol. 25. col. 1. Likewise, in the aforementioned book Cad hakkémach fol. 75. col. 4., it stands: אֵין הַקִּבְ"ה מְתַעֵלָה מִכָּל עַי אֹמֹת שְׂבָעוֹלָם כִּי אִם בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל, that is: the holy and blessed GOD is not praised by all seventy peoples of the world, except by Israel alone.

They are also of the opinion that God is with them alone. For this reason, Rabbi Menáchem of Recanati writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 61, col. 4, in the Parascha Vajéze Jaácob: שוֹרָה בְּרַחֵל שְׂכִינָה הַנִּרְמָזֶת בְּרַחֵל שוֹרָה: that is, the Divine Majesty, which is signified by Rachel, dwells among the Israelites and not among the nations of the world. And in Bammidbar rabba it is written in the 12th Parascha, fol. 202, col. 2: הוּא אֵין מְשַׁרְה שְׂכִינָתוֹ אֶלָּא עַל הַמִּיּוֹחֲסִים שְׂבִי שְׂרָאֵל, that is, He (namely God) causes His Majesty to dwell only upon those of His own who are among the Israelites. This, however, is taken from the Talmudic tractate Berachóth, fol. 7, col. 1, where one reads as follows: שְׁלֹשָׁה דְּבָרִים בִּקְשׁ מֹשֶׁה מִלִּפְנֵי הַקָּדוֹשׁ וְנָתַן לוֹ בִּקְשׁ שְׁתִּשְׁרָה שְׂכִינָה עַל יִשְׂרָאֵל וְנָתַן לוֹ שֵׁן הֲלֹא בִּלְקִיטָה עָמְנוּ. בִּקְשׁ שְׁלֹא תִשְׁרָה שְׂכִינָה עַל אוֹמוֹת הָעוֹלָם וְנָתַן לוֹ שֵׁן וְנִפְלִינוּ אֲנִי וְעַמִּי. בִּקְשׁ לְהוֹדִיעוֹ דְּרָכָיו שֶׁל הַקָּדוֹשׁ וְנָתַן לוֹ שֵׁן הוֹדִיעֵנִי נָא אֶת דְּרָכָךְ: that is, Moses requested three things of God, which He granted him. He requested that the Divine Majesty should dwell over Israel, and He granted it to him, as it is said (Exod 33:16): "Is it not so, when You go with us?" He requested that the Divine Majesty should not dwell over the nations of the world, and He granted it to him, as it is said (in the aforementioned place, Exod 33:15): "So that I and Your people may be set apart." He desired of God that He might make His ways known to him, and He granted it to him, as it is said (in the mentioned place, v. 13): "Make Your ways known to me." On this matter one may also consult the tractate Bava Báthra, fol. 15, col. 2, and the Jalkut chadásch, fol. 19, col. 2, no. 11, under the title Ummoth haolam.

They also imagine that the world was created solely for their sake, concerning which the following is written in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 106. col. 4. in the Parascha Bammidbar: תְּכִלִּית בְּרִיאַת הָעוֹלָם לֹא הָיָה אֶלָּא בְּשֶׁבִיל יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאַעֲפִי שְׂכָל זֶה מִפְּרוֹשׁ יֵשׁ לְרֵאוֹת וְלִטְעוֹם בְּתוֹךְ זֶה הַמַּאֲמָר כִּי יָדוּעַ כִּי בְּנִתְיִנַת הַתּוֹרָה קָנוּ כָּל יִשְׂרָאֵל כָּל הַשְּׁלֵמוֹת שֶׁחֲסָרוּ אוֹמוֹת הָעוֹלָם לִפְנֵי שְׁלֹא רָצוּ לְקַבֵּל הַתּוֹרָה: that is, the purpose of the creation of the world was solely on account of Israel; yet although all of this is clear, one must still contemplate these words and taste them on the palate, for it is known that when the Law was given, all Israelites attained all the perfections that the nations of the world lack, because they were unwilling to receive the Law. And in the book Schené luchóth habberíth (or lúchos hábberis) one reads at fol. 145. col. 3.: בְּרִיאַת הָעוֹלָם הָיָה בְּשֶׁבִיל יִשְׂרָאֵל הֵם הַפְּרִי וְשֵׁאֵר הָאוֹמוֹת הֵם הַקְּלִיפָה לָהֶם that is, the world was created for the sake of the Israelites, and they are the fruit, while the remaining nations are their husks. We thus find that in truth there is no other people but Israel, and the remaining nations are their husks. Abarbanel also teaches in his commentary on the prophet Isaiah, fol. 63. col. 4., on Isa 41:16, as follows: יִשְׂרָאֵל הֵם תְּכִלִּית הָעוֹלָם הַשֶּׁפֶל הֵם כַּעֲרֵךְ הַחֹטֵה וְהַסַּעֲרָה וְהָאוֹמוֹת הֵם הַקֶּשׁ that is, the Israelites are the purpose of the lower world, and they are compared to wheat, while the nations are compared to chaff. And in Bammidbár rábba one reads at fol. 171. col. 1. in the Parascha Bammidbar: נמשלו ישראל כערימה של חטים מה החטים הללו נכנסות לאוצר במנין כך אמר הק"ב"ה שיהו ישראל נמנים בכל שעה לכך נאמר בסנך ערימת חטים אבל התבן והקש אינן נמנים ולא נמדדים כך עכ"ו נמשלו כתבן וכקש שנ' כקש לפני רוח: וכן ובית עשו לקש: למה שאין להק"ב הנייה מהם שנ' כל הגוים כאין נגדו אבל ישראל יש להק"ב הנייה מהם קורין שמע מתפללין ומסבכין that is, the Israelites are likened to a heap of wheat: just as wheat is brought into the treasury (that is, counted by the bushel and the measure) into the storehouse; so God says that the Israelites shall be counted every hour; therefore it is said (Song 7:3): Your belly is like a heap of wheat. But the straw and the stubble are neither counted nor measured. Thus the idolaters are compared to straw and stubble, as it is said (Ps 83:14): Like stubble before the wind. And likewise it is written (Obad 1:18): But the house of Esau shall be stubble, because God has no benefit from them, as it is said (Isa 40:17): All the nations are as nothing before Him. But from the Israelites God does derive benefit, for they recite the Shema, that is, the words (Deut 6:4): Hear, O Israel, etc. They pray and bless the name of the holy and blessed God every day; therefore they are counted every hour and compared to wheat, as it is said: Your belly is like a heap of wheat. Precisely the same is also found in the book Toledoth Jizchak fol. 84. col. 1. in the Parascha Bechykothai.

They also believe that the world cannot exist without them; concerning which, in the book Matteh Abaron, fol. 19, col. 2, it is written thus: כשם שאי אפשר לעולם בלא ארבע רוחות כך אי אפשר לעולם בלא ישראל נמצא אם אין לישראל עולם הזה לא יכול עשו להיות בחלקו כי אין לאומות קיום אם אין קיום לישראל בעולם, that is: Just as the world cannot exist without the four winds, so too it cannot exist without the Israelites. It follows that if the Israelites do not have this world, then Esau (by whom Christendom is understood, as will be seen below in the 17th chapter of this first part) cannot remain in his portion, for the nations cannot subsist if the Israelites are not sustained in the world. The same is also to be found in the aforementioned book Zeror hammor, in the Parashah Bammidbar, fol. 107, col. 2 and 4, and fol. 127, col. 3, and in Jalkut chadasch, fol. 49, col. 3, number 58, under the title Galuth, and in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 172, col. 3, in the Parashah Ekebb, as well as in the little book Othioth Rabbi Akiva, fol. 6, col. 4, and fol. 7, col. 1. Likewise, in Medrasch Tillim, fol. 4, col. 4, one reads: כשם שאי אפשר לעולם בלא חטין כך אי אפשר לעולם בלא ישראל, that is: Just as the world cannot exist without barley, so too it cannot exist without the Israelites. And in Jalkut Schimoni, number 176, fol. 28, col. 1, on the first book of Kings, it stands: ישראל נמשלו לחול ואומות העולם בסיד שנ' היו עמים משרפות: סיד, that is: The Israelites are compared to sand, but the nations of the world to lime, as it is said (Isa 33:12): For the nations shall be burned to lime. If you put no sand into the lime, it will not hold together; so too the nations of the world cannot subsist without the Israelites. And this is also to be found in Pesikta rabbetha, fol. 17, col. 3.

They also hold the belief that without them there would be no blessing, rain, or sunshine. Concerning the blessing, the following is found in the Talmudic tractate Jevamoth fol. 63. col. 1.: כל משפחות האדמה אפילו משפחות הדרות באדמה :אין מתברכות אלא בשביל ישראל כל גויי הארץ אפילו ספינות הבאות ממליא לאספמיא אינן that is: All the families of the earth, even the families that dwell upon the earth, are blessed for no other reason than on account of Israel. All the peoples of the earth, even the ships that come from France to Spain, are blessed for no other reason than on account of Israel. Concerning rain and sunshine, it is reported in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 153. col. 3. in the Parascha Bammidbar: אלמלא ישראל לא היה מטר יורד לעולם ולא השמש זורחת אם לא בשביל ישראל שנאמר אם לא בריתי וגו' that is: Were it not for the Israelites, no rain would come down into the world, and the sun would not rise, unless it were for their sake, as it is said (Jer 33:25): "If I do not maintain my covenant with day and night." Concerning all of this, the following is read in Medrasch Tillim fol. 47. col. 1. on Ps 109, as well as in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Psalms fol. 124. col. 2. numer. 868.: אלמלא ישראל לא היתה ברכה בעולם שני יצו יי את הברכה חילולי ישראל לא היו המאורות זורחים שני אם לא בריתי יומם ולילה ולא היה המטר יורד שני יפתח יי לך את אוצרו הטוב that is: Were it not for the Israelites, there would be no blessing in the world, as it is said (Deut 28:8): "The LORD will command the blessing." And were it not for the Israelites, the lights (namely the sun and moon) would not rise, as it is said (Jer 33:25): "If I do not maintain my covenant with day and night." Nor would any rain come down, as it is said (Deut 28:12): "The LORD will open for you His good treasury." Rabbi Samiga also writes in his book Mikrā hakkódesch, fol. 109. col. 1. in the 21st chapter: לא הגלה הק"ב את ישראל לבין האומות כדי שיתברכו האומות that is: The Holy and Blessed God drove the Israelites into exile among the nations for no other reason than that the nations might be blessed.

They are also caught up in the erroneous delusion that they are holy people, which is why they are called in the book Chissuk emunā, p. 80. קדושי אל Kedósche El, that is, the Holy Ones of God, and in the book Cad hakkemach f. 20. c. 4. the words of Dan 7:25, "He will destroy the saints of the Most High," are interpreted as referring to them, since it is written thereupon as follows: אלו קדושים תהיו that is, These (namely, the Holy Ones of God) are the Israelites, just as you say (from Lev 19:2): "You shall be holy." As indeed Rabbi Saadiah also agrees in his commentary on the aforementioned words of Dan 7:25. They also pray on this account on the first day of the New Year as follows: שומר גוי קדוש שמור שארית עם קדוש ואל יאבד גוי קדוש המשלשים בשלוש: that is, O Keeper of the holy people, preserve the remnant of the holy people, so that the holy people may not perish, which says three times: holy, holy, holy. They pray this same prayer also on all the remaining days of the year, as can be found in the large Tephilla fol. 28. col. 3. under the title Schacharith. And in the book Zerór hammór it stands at fol. 101. col. 2. in the Parascha Kedoshim as follows: נקראו ישראל קדושים וטהורים לפי שידוע שבמין שיש הבדל בכל הדברים שהשם ברא בין אלו לבין יש הפרד בישראל לשאר האומות כמו שנאמר that is: The Israelites are called holy and pure, since it is well known that just as there is a distinction between all things which God has created, so too there is a distinction between the Israelites and the remaining peoples, just as one says that plants are to be esteemed more highly than those things which have no sensation, and that living animals surpass plants, humans surpass living animals, but the Israelites are placed above the peoples of the world. And in the 58th chapter of the little book Pirke Rabbi Elieser one reads: מה הכושי משונה: מכל הבריות כך ישראל משונים במעשיהם הטובים מכל אומות העולם that is, Just as a Moor is distinguished from all creatures, so too are the Israelites distinguished from all the peoples of the world through their good works. How pleasing, however, their worship is to God the Lord is shown by Rabbi Joseph Albo in the 37th chapter, in the third part of his Sepher Ikkarim, with these words: מעט העבודה המגיע אליו מאומת ישראל יותר נחשב אצלו מהרבה מאומה אחרת או מכל האומות that is, A small service which is rendered to Him (namely, God) by the people of Israel is more precious to Him than much service from another people, or from all peoples.

They also believe that they are the cleverest and wisest people in the entire world. Thus it is stated in the book Zeror hammor fol. 131, col. 2, in the Parascha Vaëthchannan, that they (as may be seen in Exod 19:6) are a royal priesthood and a holy people; and the following passage comes after: וזה היתרון יש לישראל מכל האומות כאמרו אשריך ישראל מי כמוך עם נושע בה 'כי בכל שאר האומות אם ימצא בכולם איש יחידי מסוגל בחכמה וזאת פלא אבל בישראל הוא להפך כי הם עם חכם ונבון, that is: The Israelites have this advantage over all peoples, as it is said (Deut 33:29): Happy are you, O Israel, who is like you, a people saved by the Lord. For when among all the other peoples only a single person of particular wisdom is found, it is a wonder; but among the Israelites the opposite is to be seen, for they are a wise and understanding people. On this same subject, the following is written in the third column of that same place: זה פלא גמור כי בכל שאר האומות לא נמצא בהם אלא איש פרטי וישראל גוי גדול כולם חכמים כולם נבונים וכולם יודעים את התורה באופן שמקים המצות השם קרוב אליהם ועונה אותם בתפלתם, that is: This is a great wonder, that among all the other peoples only perhaps one particular man is found (who may be wise), whereas the Israelites, as a great people, are all wise and understanding, and all know the Law, so that God, on account of their observance of the commandments, is near to them and hears them in their prayer. Accordingly, it may be seen in the Bensh-Book fol. 38, col. 2, under the title Seder schel Pesach, that the Jews say of themselves: הרי אנו ובנינו משועבדים היינו לפרעה במצרים: אפילו כולנו חכמים כולנו נבונים כולנו זקנים, that is: Behold, we and our children were in bondage to Pharaoh in Egypt, although we are all wise, all understanding, all elders, and all know the Law.

Furthermore, they hold that they are God's kinsmen, concerning which, in the book Avodah (or Avodas hakkodesch, in the first part, which is called Chelek bajichud, in the fifth chapter, fol. 11. col. 2., over the words of Deut 4:7, "Where is there so glorious a people to whom the gods draw so near?", the following is written: קרובי ישראל עם קרוב חלילה : that is, He is our kinsman, and we are His kinsmen, just as (Ps 148:14) it is written: The children of Israel, the people that is near to Him. But far be it from us that we should be kinsmen of any power (or authority) or of any angel other than God Himself. No power (or authority) or angel is our kinsman, for (Deut 32:9 it is written) the LORD's portion is His people. Likewise, in the second part, which is called Chelek haavoda, in the 17th chapter, fol. 35. col. 3. of the aforementioned book Avodath hakkodesch, over the cited words of Deut 4:7, one reads: יש לו קורבה עמנו מצד היחס והדמיון שיש : that is, He has a kinship with us, in respect of the lineage and the likeness that He has with us. Indeed, they go so far as to claim that they are God's brothers, concerning which, in the Medrasch Tillim, fol. 49. col. 2., over the 118th Psalm, the following is read: ישראל עתידין לעמוד בדין לפני הק"ב והם : that is, The Israelites will stand in judgment before God and will be afraid, but the ministering angels will say to them: fear not, He is your fellow citizen, as (Isa 45:13) it is said: He will build my city and set my captives free. They will say again: fear not before the judgment, you do not know Him, He is your kinsman, etc. Thereafter they will speak to them once more: fear not before the judgment, He is your brother (as Ps 122:8 it is written:) For the sake of my brothers and friends. And what is more, He is your father, as (Deut 32:6) it is said: Is He not your father? And in the Schemoth rabba, in the 27th Parascha, fol. 117. col. 2., it is written: ה'בימים חביבים ישראל שנקראו רעים שנ : that is, The Israelites are beloved, for they are called friends (of God), as (Ps 122:8) it is said: For the sake of my brothers and friends. Rabbi Bechai likewise writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parascha Mischpatim, fol. 96. col. 4., as follows: ידוע כי ישראל נקראו רעים למקום: שו'למ'ען אחי ורעי that is, It is known that the Israelites are called God's friends, as (Ps 122:8) it is said: For the sake of my friends and brothers.

They also claim that they are all children of kings, for in the Talmudic tractate Shabbath, fol. 67, col. 1, and fol. 128, col. 1, it is written: כל ישראל בני מלכים, that is, All Israelites are children of kings; which is also to be found in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 27, col. 3, in the 48th chapter under the title Scháar olam hattohu.

On account of the aforementioned conceits which they hold about themselves, they thank God every morning that He made them Jews and not heathens or Christians, and each one says: ברוך אתה יי' אלהינו מלך העולם שלא: עשני גוי, that is, Blessed art thou, Lord our God, thou King of the world, that thou hast not made me a Goi or heathen. In some copies, however, it reads: שעשני ישראל, that is, Who has made me an Israelite. In others, however, one reads: שעשני יהודי, that is, Who has made me a Jew. And because they are descended from such a high lineage, no Jew may call another a servant, on pain of the ban, as can be seen in the book Shylchan aruch, in the section Jóre déa, num. 334, §. 40, fol. 306, col. 1, where mention is made of those who are to be placed under the ban, among whom is also included הקורא לחבירו עבד, i.e., he who calls his companion a servant; which is likewise to be found in the Sépher chasidim, num. 43, fol. 11, col. 1. They therefore wish, out of a ridiculous arrogance, not to be regarded as servants, even though they are under the yoke of other peoples; for this reason they also say every morning: ברוך אתה יי' אלהינו: מלך העולם שלא עשני עבד, that is, Blessed art thou, Lord our God, and King of the world, who hast not made me a servant.

On the other hand, they regard Christians in a mocking and contemptuous manner as their servants, as can be seen in their Selichóth (or Selichos), where on the first day of the New Year, in the prayer that begins לענינו עשק Leénenu áscheku, they lament and quote from Lam 5:8: עבדים משלו בנו, that is, "Servants rule over us," by which are understood all those peoples under whose yoke they have been and still are, as is found in Echa rábbathi, fol. 309, c. 1, where one reads: עבדים משלו בנו אלו מלכיות, that is, the words "Servants rule over us" signify the kingdoms or the monarchies. And in the aforementioned Selichóth, they pray in a prayer that begins תא שמע מרי עלמא Taschemá Máre alma, under the title Le jóm chamischi scheben rosch haschaná vejóm kippur, as is found in all copies, in the following manner: לי לעוצר ושדו לי חניא עבדא אסוסא רכיב ומרה אזיל ואיפכא מסתברא. מנייהו מלכי ואפרכי

וכולא סרדא, that is: The spider (understand: Christendom, as can be seen below in Chapter 19 of this first part, at the thirty-first name they give to it) devours me in order to drive me out, and tramples the remainder underfoot; and they cast me into a press and wage war against me. The servant (that is, Esau, by whom Christians are to be understood, as can be seen in the Amsterdam German translation) rides on horseback, and his master (that is, Jacob, by whom the Jews are understood) goes on foot, whereas it ought to be the other way around. From among them come kings and great lords, and nothing but dominions. In the old Nizzáchon, on page 243, it is also written thus: מה שמנבחים ואומרים שאין נכון לערל וטמא לשמש ליהודים אמור להם אדרבא אם לא ישרתו ליהודים הם הוי חייבים כליה ומיתה דכתיב בישעיה הנביא קומי אורי כי בא אורך וגו' כי הגוי ישרתו, that is: As for their barking and saying that it is not fitting for an uncircumcised and unclean person (understand: a Christian) to serve the Jews, say to them, on the contrary, if they do not serve the Jews, they are guilty of destruction and death, as is written in the prophet Isaiah (Isa 60:1): "Arise, be enlightened, for your light has come," etc. (and it follows there at v. 12:): "For the nations and kingdoms that will not serve you shall perish, and the nations shall be utterly laid waste." But if the name "servant" seems so contemptible to the Jews, and they do not wish to be called by that name among them, why then do they say at their Passover feast, as can be seen in the Haggáda, f. 20, c. 1, in the large Tephilla: השתא הכא השנה הבאה בארעא דישראל: השתא עבדי לשנה הבאה בני חורין, that is: Now we are here; but in the coming year we shall be in the land of Israel. Now we are servants; but next year we shall be free.

Since they consider themselves such excellent and distinguished people in their own minds, they hold that it is a very great sin when anything is done contrary to them. Hence it is written in the book Toledóth Jizchak, fol. 97, col. 1, in the Parascha Mattóth: הק"ב: העומד כנגד ישראל כאומר כנגד הק"ב, that is: Whoever rises up against an Israelite (to do him harm) does as much as if he rose up against God. This is also to be found in the book Jr gibbórim, fol. 110, col. 3, and in the Jalkut Schimóni on the Five Books of Moses, numero 247, fol. 71, col. 3. And in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 81, col. 2, in the Parascha Beschállach, one reads: כל הקמים על ישראל כאלו הם קמים כנגד השכינה, that is: All who revolt against Israel do as much as if they revolted against the Divine Majesty. Likewise, in the book Zerór hammôr, fol. 66, col. 1, in the Parascha Schemóth, it is written: מי שמזיק לישראל אינו יוצא לשלום, that is: Whoever causes harm to the Israelites does not come out well. And in the Talmudic tractate Sanhédrin, fol. 58, col. 2, one reads: גוי שהכה את ישראל חייב מיתה, that is: A Goi (that is, a Christian or pagan) who strikes an Israelite is guilty of death. This can also be found in the book Jad chasaka, in the second part, fol. 43, col. 1, in the fifth chapter, § 3, under the title Hilchóth chóbbel umássik. And immediately following in the aforementioned tractate Sanbédrin, fol. 58, col. 2: הכסור לועו של ישראל כאלו סוטר לועו של שכינה: that is: Whoever gives an Israelite a slap on the cheek (or a box on the ear) does as much as if he gave the Divine Majesty a slap on the cheek.

Furthermore, it is taught in the aforementioned tractate Sanbédrin, fol. 37. col. 1: כל המאבד נפש אחת מישראל מעלה עליו הכתוב כאלו אבד עולם מלא וכל המקיים כל המאבד נפש אחת מישראל מעלה עליו הכתוב כאלו אבד עולם מלא that is: anyone who kills a soul of Israel, it is reckoned by Scripture as though he had destroyed a full world; but anyone who preserves an Israelite soul, it is received by Scripture as though he had preserved a full world. This is also found in the Jalkut Schimóni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 4. col. 4, and in the Medrasch Mischle, fol. 65. col. 3, as well as in the book Pirke Rabbi Elieser, in the 48th chapter. And in the book Avodáth hakkódesch, in the second part, which is called Chelek haavóda, in the 34th chapter, fol. 49. col. 2, it is taught: כל המקיים נפש מישראל כאלו קיים כל התורה: that is, whoever preserves an Israelite soul does as much as if he had kept the entire Law. In the book Pesikta sotárta, fol. 44. col. 4, in the Parashah Behaalotechá, the following is also read: כל מי ששונא ישראל כאלו שונא למי שאמר: והיה העולם וגו': that is, anyone who hates an Israelite does as much as if he hated the one who spoke and the world came into being (that is, God), etc. And anyone who helps an Israelite does as much as if he helped the one who spoke and the world came into being. And this is also found in part in the aforementioned Jalkut Schimóni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 219. col. 1. num. 730.

They further teach that it is impossible for them to be mingled among other peoples, concerning which the book Avodáth hakkódesch, fol. 20. col. 1, in the 20th chapter of the first part, which is called Chelek haijichud, where it is written: אי אפשר לישראל לצאת מרשותו של הק"ה ולהתערב בשאר האומות לפי ששמו של הק"ה אי אפשר להשתנות בהם ואין עמו אל נכר גם הם לא יתערבו באומות הבאים מכה אל נכר: that is, It is impossible that the Israelites should go out from under the power of the holy and blessed God and be mingled among the remaining peoples, since the name of God is attributed to them and no foreign god is with Him. Likewise, they cannot be mingled among the peoples who descend from the power of the foreign god (that is, the devil, who is called the foreign god). This, however, is untrue, for history testifies that many Jews have accepted the Christian faith and have thus been mingled among the people of the Christians, as can be seen in the little book Schévet Jehúda, fol. 62, col. 1.

It is also read in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 4, col. 1, that God does not become angry with them, where the words read as follows: רבי חמא בר חנינא רמי כתיב חמה אין לי וכתיב נוקם יי 'ובעל חמה לא קשיא כאן בישראל כאן באומות העולם: that is, Rabbi Chama, the son of Channina, raises an objection (and says): It is written (Isa 27:4): Wrath is not in me; and (Nah 1:2) it is written: The Lord is a avenger and is wrathful. This objection is not weighty, for the former (namely, that there is no wrath in God) is to be understood of the Israelites, but the latter (that He is wrathful) is to be understood of the peoples of the world.

They also believe that they alone belong to God the Lord, while the remaining nations are the devil's portion, concerning which in the book Ir gibbórim fol. 90. col. 2. numero 30., on the words of Lev 16:18, "And Aaron shall cast lots over two goats, one lot for the Lord, and the other for Azazel," the following is written: רמז לישראל שנמשלו לשעיר עזים שנ 'שערך כעדר העזים' וזהאומות אף הם נמשלו לשעיר שנ 'הצפיר השעיר מלך יון וגו' לפיכך נתן גורל אחד ליי ויהינן ישראל שיעלו על גורלו של הק"ב שנ 'כי חלק יי 'עמו וכתוב יי 'מנת חלקי וכוסי אתה תומיך גורלי. וגורל אחד לעזאזל יהיו האומות ע"ז שנ 'שעליהם אמר דוד חללים שוכבי קבר וגו' that is, this is an allusion to the Israelites, who are compared to a he-goat, as it is said (Song 4:1): "Your hair is like a flock of goats." The nations, however, are also compared to a goat, as it is said (Dan 8:21): "And the he-goat is the king of Greece," etc. Therefore he (namely Aaron) gave one lot to the Lord, which represented the Israelites, who fell to the holy and blessed God as His lot, as it is said (Deut 32:9): "For the Lord's portion is His people." And it is written (Ps 16:5): "The Lord is my good and my portion; You uphold my allotted inheritance." The other lot, however, he gave to Azazel (that is, as the Jews understand it, to the chief devil Sammaël, who, as may be seen in Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzáchon, num. 87, is also said to be called Azazel), which represents the idolatrous nations, of whom David said (Ps 88:6): "Like the slain who lie in the grave, of whom You think no more, and who are cut off from Your hand." More on this, however, is to be found below in the 18th chapter of this first part.

Based on the above, they imagine that their prayers are very pleasing to God the Lord, concerning which one reads in the Jalkut chadasch fol. 122. col. 2. numero 30. under the title Mila as follows: ישראל שהם נימולים תפלתן נכנסת לפני : 'הק"ב כריח ניחוח שנאמר ואנחנו נברך יה מעתה ועד עולם הללוי that is, the prayer of the Israelites who are circumcised enters before God like a sweet fragrance, as it is said (Ps 115:18): "But we will bless the Lord, from this time forth and forevermore." They also believe that a crown is woven from those same prayers, concerning which it is written in Schemóth rábba, fol. 113. col. 1. in the twenty-first Parascha as follows: אמר רבי פנחס בשם רבי מאיר ורבי ירמיה בשם רבי חייא בר אבא בשעה שישראל מתפללין אין אתה מוצא שכולן מתפללין כאחד אלא כל כנסיה וכנסיה מתפללת בפני עצמה הכנסת הזו תחלה ואחר כך הכנסת האחרת ומאחר שכל הכנסת גומרת כל התפלות המלאך הממונה על התפלות נוטל כל התפלות שהתפללו בכל הכנסיות כולן ועושה אותן עטרות ונותן בראשו של הק"ה שני 'עדיך כל בשר יבאו ואין עדיך אלא עטרה שני 'כי כלם כעדי תלכשי וכן הוא אומר ישראל אשר בך אתפאר שהק"ה מתעטר בתפלותיהן של that is, Rabbi Pinchas said in the name of Rabbi Meir, and Rabbi Jeremias in the name of Rabbi Chija, the son of Abba: When the Israelites pray, you will not find that they all pray at the same time; rather, each individual congregation prays separately, this congregation first, and then another. And when each congregation has finished all its prayers, the angel who is appointed over all prayers takes all the prayers that they have prayed in each and every congregation, makes crowns out of them, and places them upon God's head, as it is said (Ps 65:3): עדיך כל בשר יבאו Adécha colbāsar jafōu, that is, "with your adornment" (as it is erroneously understood, since adécha here means: "to you") "all flesh comes"; and here adécha means nothing other than a crown (because עדי adi means an adornment or ornament, as it is said (Isa 49:18): "You shall be clothed with all of these as with an adi, that is, as an ornament"). And thus He says (namely God (Isa 49:3)): "Israel, through whom I am glorified," since the holy blessed God is crowned with the prayers of the Israelites, as it is said (Ezek 16:12): "And a crown of glory upon the head." The very same thing also appears in Rabbi Menachem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 54. col. 1. in the Parascha Vajera, as well as in the book Toledoth Jizchak fol. 17. col. 1. in the Parascha Bereschith, though with some variation.

What the name of that angel is who makes these crowns can be seen from the aforementioned commentary of Rabbi Menachem of Recanati, fol. 148. col. 2. in the Parascha Kedoshim, where one reads as follows: כל המלוּבש שעטנו בתפלתו סנדלפון המלאך הקוֹשֵׁר כתרים להק"ה מתפלתן של ישראל אינו מקבל תפלתו עם שאר התפלות, that is: Whoever is clothed in mixed fabric (such as wool and linen, of which Lev 19:19 speaks) during his prayer, his prayer is not accepted by the angel Sandalfon, who binds crowns together for the Holy and Blessed God from the prayers of the Israelites, along with the other prayers, because that person is regarded by him as equal to an idolatrous priest who gives strength to the unclean spirit. Concerning this angel, however, and the crowns which he makes from the prayers of the Jews and places upon God, more is to be found below in the 7th chapter of the 2nd part of this book.

But if the prayer of the Jews were so pleasing to God the Lord, and they were such holy and righteous people as they imagine themselves to be, then He would also hear them; for it is written (Ps 34:18): When they (namely the righteous) cry out, the Lord hears them and delivers them from all their distress. That He does not hear them, however, occurs, in their opinion, for this reason: because they no longer know the Schem hammphorasch; for in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Psalms, fol. 119, col. 1, numero 843, on Psalm 91, it is written thus: מפני מה ישראל מתפללין בעולם הזה ואינן נענין. על ידי שאינם יודעין שם המפורש אבל לעתיד לבוא הק"ב מודיעם שנאמר לכן ידע עמי שמי באותה שעה הם מתפללין אבל לעתיד לבוא הקדוש ברוך הוא מודיען כטו שנאמר לכן ידע עמי שמי באותה שעה הם מתפללין ונענין שנאמר יקראני ואענהו וגו' that is: Why do the Israelites pray in this world and yet are not heard? Because they do not know the Schem hammphorasch. But in the future, the holy blessed God will make it known to them, as it is said (Isa 52:6): Therefore my people shall know my name. Then they will pray and be heard, as it is said (Ps 91:15): He will call upon me, and I will answer him, etc. So also in the Medrasch Tillim, fol. 40, col. 4, and fol. 41, col. 1, on Psalm 91, the following is read concerning this: אמר רבי יהושע בן לוי בשם רבי פינחס בן יאיר מפני מה מתפללין ישראל בעולם הזה ואינן נענין על ידי שאינן יודעין בשם המפורש אבל לעתיד לבוא הקדוש ברוך הוא מודיען כטו שנאמר לכן ידע עמי שמי באותה שעה הם מתפללין ונענין שנאמר יקראני ואענהו that is: Rabbi Jehoscha, son of Levi, said in the name of Rabbi Pinchas, son of Jair: Why do the Israelites pray in this world (that is, at this time) and are not heard? Because they do not know the Schem-hammophoraschi. But in the future, the holy blessed God will make it known to them, for it is said (Isa 52:6): Therefore my people shall know my name. At that same time they will pray and be heard, for it is said (Ps 91:15): He will call upon me, and I will answer him.

In Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, at fol. 64, col. 4, and fol. 65, col. 1, in the Parashah Vayisblach Yaakov, a different reason is put forward for why the prayers of the Jews are not heard by God in the present day, and the words there read as follows: דע והבן כי כפי הכונה והמקום אשר הבקשה נאצלת משם תהיה כוונה המתפלל כמו שאמרו רבותינו זכרונם לברכה מפני מה אין ישראל נענין לפי שאינן יודעין להתפלל בשם ופירש החכם רבי עזרא ז"ל והוא הנכון בשם הראוי לאותו ענין ושלל תהא המחשבה זרה מייחור הכל. והבן זה מאוד כי יש בכל ענין שם שמורה עליו. יש ממונה על הסליחה והתפלה והרחמים יש על הדמעה, יש על הפגעים והצרות, יש על שאלת בנים, יש על המזונות, יש על הגבורה, יש על החכד, ואם אין אדם יודע לכוון בתפלתו באותו השם הממונה על מה שצריך לו, מי גרם לו שלא יפיק רצונו סכלותו ומיעוט השגתו וחושב בדעתו מחשבה רעה שהשם והעלה מנע ממנו חפצו ורצונו. ואינו אלא סכלותו כענין שנאמר אולת אדם תסלף דרכו וגומר. וחטאומיכם מנעו הטוב מכם אמנם פשיטה בק' בהן ובשמותיהן ויצטרך לבקש לפני השם בקשה או שאלה וישים דעתו וכונתו אל השם הממונה על שאלתו. לא די שיפיק חפצו ורצונו אלא שיהיה אהוב למעלה ונחמד למטה. 'משל לאוצר מלא כל טוב שיש בו כמה חדרים כל חדר מיוחד לדבר אחד - בחדר זה מאכל, בזה זהב, בזה מרגליות, בזה מלבוש, כשאדם צריך לאכול ואינו יודע החדר שהמאכל בו איפשר שימות ברעב והחדרים מלאים כל טוב לא מפני שמנעו ממנו בקשתו אלא שאינו יודע באי זה הוא חדר הצריך לו that is, Know and understand that the devotion

(or the intention) of the one praying must be directed according to the petition and the place from which the petition receives its influx (or from which what is prayed for is granted), just as our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have said: Why are the Israelites not heard (in their prayer)? Because they do not know how to pray by the Name. The wise Rabbi (Aben) Ezra, of blessed memory, has explained this, as is correct, that it is to be understood as referring to that Name which is suited to the particular matter (that is desired), and that one's thoughts must not deviate from the unification of all (that belongs thereto). Mark this well, therefore, that in every matter there is a Name which gives information concerning it. One is appointed (or set) over forgiveness, and over prayer, and over mercy; another over tears; another over accidents and distresses; another over the desire for children; another over food; another over power (or strength); another over goodness; and when a person does not know how, in his prayer, to direct his attention to that Name which is appointed over that which he needs, who then is to blame that he does not obtain his will? His foolishness and his limited capacity (are to blame). Yet he harbors wicked thoughts in his mind, that the praised God has denied him his desire and his will, when he ought rather to attribute it to his own foolishness; for it is said (Prov 19:3): The foolishness of a man perverts his way, etc. (And it is written in Jer 5:25:) And your sins turn away the good from you. But when someone is well versed in this matter and properly understands the Names, and has need to ask and petition God for something, and directs his mind and his devotion to that Name which is set (and appointed) over his petition (and that for which he makes supplication), he not only obtains his will and his desire, but is also beloved above (in heaven) and pleasing below (on earth). The matter is comparable to a treasury which is full of all manner of good things and has many chambers, each of which is dedicated to a particular thing. In this chamber there is food; in that one drink; in that one gold; in this one there are pearls; in that one clothing. Now if a person has need to eat and does not know the chamber in which the food is, he may well die of hunger, even though the chambers are full of good things: not because his petition should have been refused him, but because he does not know in which chamber the thing is that he requires. These are the words of the aforementioned Rabbi Menachem.

Since the Jews, by their own admission, are not heard by God, there is a great lamentation about this in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth, fol. 20, col. 1, in these words: אנו קא מצערנין נפשין ומצווה קא צווחין ולית דמשגח בן that is, We torment ourselves and cry out continually (to God), but there is no one who takes heed of us. So too it stands in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth, fol. 32, col. 2: מיום שחרב בית המקדש נפסקה חומת ברזל בין ישראל לאביהם שבשמים שנ' ואתה קיר ברזל ונתת אותה קיר ברזל ביננו ובין העיר that is, From the day on which the Temple was destroyed, an iron wall was set between Israel and their Father who is in heaven (by which they are separated from one another), as it is said (Ezek 4:1, 3): And you, son of man, take an iron pan and set it as an iron wall between yourself and the city.

Since this passage deals with the prayer practices of the Jews, I must also explain the reason why they customarily turn their faces toward Jerusalem when they perform their prayers. In the book Schääre Zédek fol. 22. col. 1. it is written on this matter as follows: אין תפלת התוהו לארץ עולה למעלה דרך ישר עד שהולכת לארץ ישראל ומשם לירושלים ומשם לבית המקדש כמו שכתוב בתפלת שלמה ע"ה וכשמגיעת לבית המקדש אז היא עולה למעלה לפיכך ישראל שהם בגלות הם מתפללים סביבות ירושלים בארבע כנפות הארץ ירושלים באמצע לפיכך כל אותן שבגלות לקצת מערב יתפללו כלפי מזרח וכן אותן שבצד מזרח יתפללו למערב וכן אותן שבצד צפון יתהפכו פניהם ויתפללו לדרום נמצאו כל ישראל משלחים תפילתם לירושלים ולבית המקדש כי משם תפילות עולות לדרך that is: the prayer which is offered outside the land (of Israel) does not ascend by the straight path until it has passed into the land of Israel (or the Promised Land), and from there to Jerusalem, and from there into the Temple, as is written in the prayer of Solomon, upon whom be peace (1 Kgs 8:30); and when it arrives at the Temple, then it ascends. For this reason, the Israelites who are in exilio, or in misery, pray facing Jerusalem from all around, from the four corners of the earth, with Jerusalem in the middle. Therefore, all those who dwell in misery toward the west pray toward the east; and likewise those who dwell toward the east pray toward the west; and in the same manner those who reside toward the north turn their faces toward the south; so it is found that all Israelites direct their prayer toward Jerusalem and into the Temple, since from there the prayers ascend to the blessed GOD.

The Jews are also accustomed, when they read or pray, to sway from one side to the other. As to why this occurs, I find two different opinions on the matter. The first is found in the second part of the book Cosri, numer. 79. and 80. p 141. and 142. in these words: אמר הכוזרי אשאל אותך התוע 'למה מתנענעים היהודים בקריאת העברית. אמר החבר אמרו כי בעבור העיר החום הטבעי ואינני סבור שהוא אלא מצד הענין שאנחנו בו מפני שהיו יכולים לקרוא רבים מהם כאחד היו יכול שיהבצו בהם עשרה או יותר על ספר אחד ובעבור זה היו ספרינו גדולים ויצטח כל אחד מהעשרה שיטה בכל עת לעיין התיבה וישוב הודו נטה ושב תמיד מפני אקוספו עוד ספר בארץ ויהיה זה הסבה הראשונה ואחר כן שב מנהג מפני ההסתכלות והראות בנדחק תמיד ולהתמזג למי שרואים אותם כאשר הוא טבעי במי אדם. וכל אחד וכל אחד קורא כל אחד בספרו ומקרבו אל עיניו או יקרב הוא אליו כפי רצונו מבלי שיצר עליו חבירו ואיננו צריך שיטה וישוב (to the Jewish Rabbi): I ask you, are you also aware of why the Jews sway when they read Hebrew? The Jewish master, or Rabbi, answered: it is said that this occurs in order to stir up the natural heat; I, however, hold that it occurs solely on account of the matter we are discussing. For since many of them were able to read at the same time (from one book), it could happen that ten or more gathered around a single book; for this reason our books were also large, and each one of the ten had need at all times to lean forward to see the words and then to go back again (to make room for others), so that he was constantly obliged to bend and draw back, since the book lay upon the ground, and this was the first cause. After this, on account of the leaning in, since they were constantly in motion, a habit arose from it, so that one conformed oneself to those whom one saw doing likewise, as is natural among human beings. Among other peoples, however, each person reads from his own book and holds it close to his eyes, or he draws near to it as he pleases, so that no one is a burden (or hindrance) to him, and he has no need to lean forward and draw back.

The second opinion is found in the Jalkut chadasch, where at fol. 105. col. 4. numero 24. under the title Jisrael the following is written: למה ישראל פעמים לומדים מתנועעים ואומות העולם אינם מתנועעים לפי שנשמותיהם של ישראל הן מאור של מעלה דכתיב נר יי' נשמת אדם והנר הנר טבעו תמיד שהוא מרחף ומתנועע סביב הפתילה ואינו נח לעולם כך ישראל שנשמותיהם נאצלה חצובה בנר יי' של מעלה לכך אינם מתנועעים תמיד that is: Why do the Israelites move when they study, and the peoples of the world do not move? Because the souls of the Israelites come from the upper light, as it is written (Prov 20:27): The soul of man is a light of the Lord; and behold, the nature of light is always such that it hovers around the wick and moves, and never stands still; thus the Israelites also move, whose souls come from the highest light of the Lord and cling to it continually when they study in the light of the Law; but the peoples of the world, whose souls do not come from the light of the Lord, do not move. Concerning this, there is also something written in the book Zeror hammor fol. 78. col. 4. in the Parascha Vajischma Jethro, as follows: בענין התנוענע יורה על מעלת ישראל כי הם באו מכח האש וכתוב נר אלהים נשמת אדם ואור הנר לעולם הוא מתנוענע ועולה וכן ישראל מכח האש מתנועעים דכתיב המזכירים את יי' אל דמי לכם וכתוב אלהים אל דמי לך. אבל אומות העולם הם רועכים ודוממים כמו העצם שהוא באש ששומד ואינו מתנוענע. That is: As regards the movement, it indicates the excellence of the Israelites, for they come from the power of fire; and it is written (Prov 20:27): The soul of man is a light of God. The flame of a light moves continually and rises upward; thus the Israelites also move by the power of fire, as it is written (Isa 62:6): You who make mention of the Lord, you shall not stand still (as it is understood here, though it actually means: you shall not be silent). So also it is written (Ps 83:2): O God, do not stand still (or: do not be silent). But the peoples of the world are extinguished and stand still, like a bone that lies in the fire, remaining motionless and not stirring. This, however, has remained with the Israelites from the time when the Law was given, as it is written (Exod 20:18): And the people saw it and moved. Concerning all of the above, something may also be read in the book Nischmath chajim, fol. 96. col. 2. and fol. 97. col. 1. in the first chapter of the third part.

Returning now to their claim of precedence over other peoples, which they believe themselves to possess: they hold that God proceeds with His judgment far more leniently toward them than toward other peoples. On this subject, the following is read in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 308, col. 3, numero 946, in the Parascha Haasinu: כשהק"ב דן את האומות שמחה: היא לפניו שנ' כי ידין עמו: כשהמקום דן את ישראל כביכול תהיה והוא לפניו שנאמר ועל עבדיו יתנחם ואין נחמה אלא דהויי: that is, when the holy and blessed God judges the peoples, it is a joy to Him, as it is said (Deut 32:36 and Ps 135:14): "For He will judge His people." But when God judges the Israelites, He repents of it, as it were, as it is said (in the aforementioned passage, Deut 32:36): "And He will relent concerning His servants," for the word nechama means nothing other than repentance. And in the Medrasch Tillim, fol. 10, col. 2, the following is written concerning the ninth Psalm: כשהק"ב דן את האומות: הוא דן אותם בלילה בשעה שהם ישנים מן העבירות ובשעה שהוא דן את ישראל הוא דן אותם בשעה שעוסקין בתורה: that is, Rabbi Levi has said: when the holy and blessed God judges the peoples, He judges them at night, when they are asleep from their sins; but when He judges the Israelites, He judges them while they are engaged in studying the Law. Likewise, in Bereschith rábba, fol. 74, col. 2, in the eighty-second Parascha, the following is written: בשעה שהק"ב דן את ישראל: דן אותן מעומד מקצר בדין ומפשר בדין אבל כשהוא דן את העכו"ם דן מיושב מדקדק בדין ומאריך בדין. That is: at the time when the holy and blessed God judges the Israelites, He judges them standing, and makes the judgment brief and lenient. But when He judges the idolaters, He judges them sitting, examines the matter closely, and proceeds at length with it.

They also hold that God provides for the Jews in a more direct manner, but for other nations in a more mediated manner, concerning which the book Maschmia jeschúa fol. 25. col. 2. teaches as follows: האל משגיח בכל האומות על ידי אמצעיים ומשגיח בישראל בעצמו מבלי אמצעי ולכן נקרא בערך העמים אלהי האלהים כי הוא that is, GOD provides for all nations through intermediaries, but He provides for the Israelites without an intermediary; therefore He is called, with respect to the nations, a God of gods, because He is a God over the gods who govern them.

Indeed, in the book Schir baschirím rábba, it is taught at fol. 273, col. 3, that God pays attention only to the Jews and cares for them, but regards the nations as nothing at all, where the words read as follows: כשם שאין בעל הבית משגיח לא: על משפלות של תבן ולא על הקש ולא על המוץ למה שאין נחשבים לכלום כך אין הק"ב משגיח על עכ"ם למה שאינן כלום שנ' כל הגוים כאין נגדו וגו' ועל מי

הוא משגיח על ישראל שני כי תשא את ראש בני ישראל וגו' שאו את ראש כל עדת בני ישראל that is: Just as a householder pays no attention to the baskets into which one puts dung and straw, nor to the stubble or chaff, because they are worth nothing, so too does the Holy and Blessed God pay no attention to the idolaters, because they are nothing, as it is said (Isa 40:17): All the heathen are before Him as nothing, etc. Whom then does He regard: the Israelites, as it is said (Exod 30:12): When you count the heads of the children of Israel, etc., and (Num 1:2): Take the sum of the whole congregation of the children of Israel. And in the book Cad hakkémach, at fol. 46, col. 1, on the words of Isa 40:15, "Behold, the heathen are counted as a drop from the bucket, and as a small dust that remains in the balance," it is taught thus: כל האומות אין נחשבין כלום לפני ישראל כשם שאין הטיפה נחשבת כלום כשנפלה מן הדלי ובעל הדלי לא יחשוב כלום לפני ישראל כשם שאין הטיפה נחשבת כלום כשנפלה מן הדלי ובעל הדלי לא יחשוב that is: All nations are counted as nothing in comparison to the Israelites, just as a drop is counted as nothing when it falls from the bucket, which the one to whom the bucket belongs disregards entirely, since the water in the bucket is the principal thing, etc. Something similar is also to be found in the book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 21, col. 1. So too is it found in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol.

1. col. 4. in the Parashah Bamidbar, on the words of Song 2:4, "He brought me into the wine cellar," it is written thus: למי הדבר דומה למלך שהיה לו אוצר מלא יין נכנס לבדוקן מצאו כולו חמיץ בא לצאת מתוך האוצר מצא שם חבית אחת של יין טוב אמר חבית זו חביבה עלי מן האוצר כך להק"ב"ה שבעים אומות ומכולן לא מצא הנאה אלא that is, to what is the matter to be compared: to a wealthy man who had a cellar full of wine, and when he went in to taste it, he found that it had all turned to vinegar. But when he went back out of the cellar, he found a barrel of good wine, and said: this barrel is dearer to me than the entire stock. Just so, God has the seventy nations; but from all of them He finds no benefit except from the Israelites. The word יין Jajin (which means wine) yields seventy through Gematria, corresponding to the number of the seventy nations. The very same is also to be found in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 202. col. 1.

They also compare themselves to fire, and the nations to thorns and thistles, concerning which it is written in the 40th chapter of the book Pirke Rabbi Eliezer as follows: למה הראה הק"ב למשה האש מתוך הסנה אלא האש אלו ישראל שנמשלו לאש שנ' 'והיה בית יעקב אש והסנה אלו אומות העולם שנמשלו כקוצים וכדרדרים וגו' that is, Why did God show Moses the fire from within the bush (as is to be read in Exod 3:2): (It happened) because the fire signifies the Israelites, who are compared to fire, as it is said (Obad 1:18): And the house of Jacob shall become a fire. But the bush signifies the nations of the world, who are likened to thorns and thistles. Likewise, the nations that are outside of Judaism are also compared to thorns and thistles in the Baal Turim on Gen 3:18, as well as in the 40th chapter of Rabbi Eliezer. But let this be enough on the Jews' vain boastfulness and their conceit founded upon nothing whatsoever.

Chapter XV.

In which it is shown how the Jews hate and despise all peoples of the world, but especially the Christians, and what hypocrites they are.

Rabbi Bechai writes in his book Cad hakkemach fol. 17. col. 2. as follows: מי שיש בו יראת השם יתעלה ישנא איש רע וגו' כי כיון שהוא איש רע מצוה לשנאתו וכן אמר דור עליו השלום הלא משנאיך י' אשנא וגו' וחסד לאמים ע"ג עובדי תורה ויהללו רשע ושומרי תורה יתגרו בהם כי הצדיק והרשע שני הפכו: that is, he who fears the praiseworthy God hates a wicked man, etc. For since that man is a wicked man, it is commanded to hate him. Thus also David, upon whom be peace (Ps 139:21), said: Do I not hate, O Lord, those who hate You? And Solomon, upon whom be peace (Prov 28:4), likewise said: Those who forsake the law praise the wicked; but those who keep it resist them. For the righteous and the wicked are two contrary things that hate one another, since every kind loves its own kind and hates that which is contrary to it. From these words we see that the Jews are commanded to hate wicked and godless people. Since they now regard all the peoples of the world as wicked and profligate persons, as will be demonstrated in what follows, it is no wonder that they hate them all collectively.

Abarbenel also teaches in his book Rosch amana fol. 5. col. 1., after he has set forth the thirteen articles of the Jewish faith, the following: אם לא יאמין האדם אלה העקרims כולם כראוי כבר יצא מן הכלל וכפר בעקר ונקרא מין ואפיקורוס וקוצץ בנטיעה ואשנא את האדם that is: When a person does not believe all these articles as is proper, he has already departed from the community (of the Israelites) and denies the foundation (of the faith), and is called a heretic and Epicurean, as well as a cutter of the plantings (the meaning of which can be seen in the aforementioned Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 12. col. 1.). One is also obligated to hate such a person, and it is fitting that one despise him and cast him into ruin; and of such a one it is also said (Ps 139:21): "Do I not hate, O Lord, those who hate You?" This also stands in the aforementioned book Rosch amana, fol. 9. col. 1. And it is evident from this that the Jews are obligated to regard those who do not accept their thirteen articles of faith as heretics and to hate them.

Furthermore, in the Talmudic tractate Schabbath, fol. 89. col. 1., the following is read: מאי הר סיני הר שירדה שנה לאומות העולם עליו that is, What does Har Sinai mean, that is, the mountain Sinai? (it means) a mountain upon which Sina, that is, hatred toward the nations of the world, came down. This is also to be found in the book Avodath hakkodesch fol. 91. col. 2. in the 34th chapter of the third part, and in the book Reschith chochma, fol. 412. in the 16th chapter under the title Or olam, as well as in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 80. col. 1. numero 284. From all of this it may be reasonably concluded that the Jews hate all nations; hence it also comes about that, out of such hatred, to which they are raised and trained from their youth, they speak all manner of evil of those nations and despise, mock, and hold them in contempt in every possible way.

They teach that non-Jews are not to be regarded as human beings, and the words of Ezek 34:31, "You now, my sheep of my pasture, you are adam, that is, human beings," are interpreted in the book Zerôr hammôr, fol. 2. col. 4., in the Parashah Bereschith, as follows: אתם קרויין אדם ואין אומות העולם קרויין אדם that is, You (Israelites) are called adam, that is, human beings, but the peoples of the world are not called adam, that is, human beings. This is also to be found in the great Jalkut Rubéni, fol. 150. col. 4., in the Parashah Chykkáth; and in the book Béer haggôla fol. 10. col. 3. And in the book Emek hammelech it is written on fol. 67. col. 4. as follows: אתם קרויין אדם ואין אומות העולם קרויין אדם א"עפי שהם מצד הגוף ומצד הרע של אדם הראשון שקבל זוהמא מהנחש לו ולעזרינו אחריו עד יערה עלינו ממרום רוח לנחמנו אין להם חלק בנשמת אדם הראשון הכלולת נשמת כל ישראל that is, You are called adam, that is, human beings, but the peoples of the world are not called human beings, although they descend from the side of the body and of the evil of the first man, who received the impurity from the serpent for himself and for his seed after him, until (God) shall pour out upon us from on high the Spirit to comfort us; and they have no share in the soul of the first man, which comprehends within itself all Israelite souls. So too it stands in the great Jalkut Rubéni, in the Parashah Lech lechá fol. 39. v. 2.: מי שאינו נימול ואינו שומר את השבת אינו נקרא אדם that is, One who is not circumcised and does not observe the Sabbath is not called a human being.

The reason why they do not regard the latter as human beings consists in this: because they believe that only the pure and holy souls, which are to be found, according to their erroneous opinion, among themselves alone, are called adam, that is, human beings, as can be read in the commentary of Rabbi Menachem of Recanati on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 14. col. 1., in the Parascha Bereschith, where the following is taught: לפי כוונת רבותינו ז"ל שם אדם: הנעשה בצלם אלהים לא נאמר על הגוף הבא מטפה סרוחה כי הגוף נקרא בשר אדם וגו' ואם

העור והבשר הוא מלבוש על כן רוח הפנימי הוא הנקרא אדם ולא העור והבשר, that is: According to the opinion of our Rabbis, of blessed memory, the name adam, that is, human being, which is made in the image of God, is not said of the body, which comes from a putrid drop (of seed); for the body is called the flesh of the human being, &c. Now since the skin and the flesh are a garment (with which the soul is clothed), the inward spirit, and not the skin and the flesh, is called adam, that is, human being. Upon this there follows in the same place, from the Zohar: אתם אדם ושאר עממי' לאו אינון אדם דוחא דסטר קדשא איקרי אדם. בשרא לבושא דאדם איהו ובכל אתר גופא דיליה לבושה דאדם ועל דא עור ובשר חלבישני. בשרא לבושא דאדם איהו ובכל אתר כתיב בשר אדם אדם לגו בשרא לבושא דאדם הגה לך בביאור כי שם אדם נופל על הצורה לא על החומר ועל כן אין אומות העולם קרויין אדם כי נשמתם מצד הטומאה אמנם ישראל שנשמתם מרוח קדשו שני' ממני פריך נמצא ופריו מתוק לחכי שהרמז בו לאילן הנקרא כל שמשם, that is: You (Israelites) are human beings, but the remaining peoples are not human beings. The spirit of the side of holiness is called human being, but his body is the garment of the human being; of this (it is written, Job 10:11:) Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh. The flesh is the garment of the human being, and in every place where it is written "the flesh of the human being," it is to be understood with reference to the inward human being, while the flesh is the garment of the human being. See, here you have it plainly, that the name "human being" belongs to the form and not to the matter; therefore the peoples of the world are not called human beings, because their souls derive from the unclean spirit; rather, the Israelites alone are so called, whose souls derive from His (namely God's) holy spirit, as it is said (Hos 14:9): From me your fruit is found. (And it is read in Song 2:3:) And his fruit is sweet to my palate; whereby reference is made to the tree called Col, from which the souls that are called adam and are in the image of God take flight. The very same thing also stands at fol. 137. col. 1. in the Parascha Schemini in the aforementioned Rabbi Menachem's commentary, as well as in the book Avodath hakkodesh fol. 84. col. 1. in the 25th chapter of the third part, and in the book Maarecheth haelabuth fol. 179. col. 1. Rabbi Bechai also writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 27. col. 2., in the Parascha Vajera, as follows: כבר דעת כי הנפש היא נקראת אדם לא הגוף, that is: It is already well known to you that the soul is called adam, that is, the human being, and not the body; for the body is nothing but a garment of the soul. With this Rabbi Meir also agrees in his book Avodath hakkodesh, fol. 40. col. 1., in the 20th chapter of the second part, as does Rabbi Menasseh ben Israel in the book Nishmath chajim fol. 69. col. 1. 2., in the 14th chapter of the second part. The same is also read in the Jalkut chadash fol. 154. col. 2. num. 12., under the title Neschamoth.

Concerning this impurity of the nations, the following is also written in the book Maarébeth ha'elabúth fol. 128. col. 2.: הנחש מטיל זוהמא על חוה ומזוהמתא : 2. col. 2. : והיא מקבלות האומות כח ועולים בה לגדולה ואינם נמחים. וידוע כי דם טהור ההוא. וכחם that is: The serpent cast a filth into Eve, and from that same filth the nations receive power, and rise thereby to greatness and glory, and are not destroyed. It is known, however, that they derive from that same side (namely the side of impurity), and are apportioned to the princes (that is, to the devils ruling over them, as may be seen below in the 18th chapter of this first part) and to the stars. And in fol. 172. col. 2. of the aforementioned book one reads: הנחש הקדמוני שהוא שרו של עשו that is, the nations suckle from the ancient serpent, which is the prince of Esau. In the book Avodáth hakkódesh, it is also taught at fol. 56. col. 3. 4. in the 44th chapter of the second part, in the following manner: אמר ר' ברכיה בשם ר' לוי אמר הקב"ה: אני לא שמחתי בעולמי ואומות העולם שמחים הוא מה שאמרנו כי כשאיו ישראל עושין רצונו של מקום ואין משלימין הכוונה העליונה כביכול יש עצב למעלה בסוד ויתעצב אל לבו וצד הרע שמח ומשם מתפשטת השמחה אל האומות הבאים מהצד ההוא ושמחים כי זה לעומת זה עשוה האלהים זו שמחה מצד הטוב וזו עצבון מצד הרע כשזה שמח זה עצב וכשזה עצב זה שמח that is, Rabbi Beráchja said in the name of Rabbi Levi that the holy and blessed God had spoken: I do not rejoice in my world, but the nations of the world are glad. And this is what we have said: that when the Israelites do not do God's will and do not fulfill the highest purpose (understand: God's will), there is, as it were, a sorrow above, according to the mystery of that which is written of God in Gen 6:6: And it grieved Him in His heart. But the side of evil (that is, of the unclean spirits) rejoices, and from thence joy is spread abroad to the nations who come from that same side, and they rejoice; for God has made the one over against the other. This is a joy on the side of the good, but that is a sorrow on the side of the evil. When the one rejoices, the other is sorrowful; but when the one is sorrowful, the other rejoices. In the book Zerór hammór, it is also written at fol. 148. col. 4. in the Parascha Kitavó in the following manner: אומות העולם הם משולים כנחש לפי שהם באים מזוהמת נחש הקדמוני that is, the nations of the world are compared to the serpent, because they derive from the impurity of the ancient serpent.

From all of this it is thus to be seen that the nations are supposed to derive from the unclean spirits. Concerning this, the following is also found in the Zohar, in the 68th column of the Sulzbach printing, in the Parascha Schemini: :שאר עמין עכו"ם אינון מסאבין ומסטרא דמסאבא קא אתיין וכל חד אתדבק באתריה: that is, The remaining idolatrous nations are unclean, and come from the unclean side, and each one cleaves to its place. And in the Sepher gilgulim it is read at fol. 1. col. 3.: דאלו עכו"ם אינם קרויים אדם פירוש לא יצאו אלא מהחלק הרע שנתערב באדם: הראשון: that is, The idolaters are not called human beings, that is, they derive from that evil part which was mingled with the first man. Thus the Jews, according to their own imagination, are called human beings solely on account of their presumed pure souls; but the remaining nations are not to be accorded this name, because their souls are supposed to derive from the unclean spirits, the devils, concerning which more is to be found below in the first chapter of the second part.

Since the Jews consider themselves alone to be human beings, the Talmud teaches that the remaining peoples are nothing but dumb cattle, as is written in the Tractate Bava Mezia fol. 114, col. 2: ר' שמעון בן יוחאי אומר קברי גויים אין: מ'טמאין שנ' ואתן צאני צאן מרעיתי אדם אתם אתם קרויים אדם ואין אומות העולם קרויין: that is: Rabbi Simeon, son of Jochai, says: the graves of the Gojim or heathens (by which all peoples apart from the Jews are understood) do not defile, because it is said (Ezek 34:31): "You, my sheep, the sheep of my pasture, you are human beings." You are called human beings, but the peoples of the world are called not human beings but cattle. So too it is reported in Médrasch Kobéleth, fol. 319, col. 4: אמר הקב"ה לא כשם שהעמדותי נביאים מישראל שהם קרויים: אדם שנ' אדם אתם לא כך העמדותי נביאים לעכו"ם שהם קרויים בהמה שנ' ובהמה רבה: that is: The holy and blessed God has said: I have not appointed prophets for the idolaters, who are called cattle, as it is said (Jonah 4:11): "And also much cattle," as I have appointed for the Israelites, who are called human beings, as it is said (Ezek 34:31): "You are human beings." And in the book Emek hammelech, concerning the words of Gen 9:2, "And the fear and dread of you shall be upon all beasts," one reads: המזיקין ואומות העולם הם בכלל החיות: that is: The devils and the peoples of the world are included among the animals. And in the Jalkut chadrasch, at fol. 154, col. 2, no. 7, under the title Neschamoth, one reads: נשמת חיים היא הנשמה הנאצלת מתחת כסא הכבוד ונפש חיה היא הכה שניתן לבהמה: וזוהמות האומות אין להם נפש רק אותו כח הבהומות והחיות וישראל עד י"ג שנה גם כן אין: that is: The soul of life is that soul which is hewn out (or formed) from beneath the throne of glory; but the living soul is that power which is given to cattle and animals; and the peoples have no soul other than that same power of the cattle and the animals. An Israelite also has, up to his thirteenth year, only that same power; but from the thirteenth year onward he becomes worthy of the soul of life, when he has merited it through the Law. On this subject something is also to be found in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 140, col. 1, etc. In the great Jalkut Rubeni it stands at fol. 9 (which, however, should be fol. 11), col. 4, as also in the small Jalkut Rubeni, under the title Hasdala, no. 2, from the book Pelia, concerning the words of Gen 1:26, "Let us make man," the following as well: עכ"ם נקראו בהמות ונקראים בשם אדם בשיתוף כענין הבהמות והחיות והעופות שכולם נקראו בהמות טהורות וטמאות כן הדין באדם כולם נקראים אדם בשם המין אלא שזה אדם

 ו that is: The idolaters (by which all peoples who are outside of Judaism are understood) are called cattle, but they are also called adam, that is, human beings, by a communication (or sharing of the word adam), just as cattle and animals and birds are all together called clean and unclean cattle; so too it is with (the word) adam, that is, human beings: they are all called human beings according to the name of the species, only that this one is a clean and that one an unclean human being. Now if this is the case, then the Israelites are distinguished from the peoples, as it is said (Lev 20:26): "And I have separated you from the peoples, that you should be mine." And since the matter is thus constituted, they are obliged to make a distinction (between themselves and other peoples), as it is said (Lev 20:25): "You shall also separate the clean cattle from the unclean."

So also in the aforementioned great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 10. (though it should be fol. 12.) col. 2. the following is read: ישראל נקרא אדם על שנפשו ירדה לו מאדם עליון אבל לעכ"ם שבא נפש מרוח הטומאה נקרא חזיר ואם כן גוף של עכ"ם הוא גוף that is, the Israelites are called human beings because their souls have descended from the highest human being, but the idolaters, whose souls derive from the unclean spirit, are called swine. If this is so, then the body of an idolater is the body and soul of a swine. For this reason Rabbi Bechai writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, in the Parascha Bereschith, fol.
 16.

1. col. 1. likewise: אין האדם נקרא אדם רק בסבת הנפש והשכל שאלמלא that is, Man is called man for no other reason than on account of the soul and reason; for if these were absent, he would be like cattle. And fol. 24. col. 2. in the Parashah Lech Lecha he states: הבהמות דמו לאומות העולם שנמשלו לבהמות that is, Cattle have a signification referring to the nations of the world, who are compared to cattle. He likewise teaches fol. 174. col. 3. in the Parashah Chukkath, in the following manner: לא נקראו that is, The nations are nowhere called human beings alone, unless Scripture has at the same time made mention of cattle. Hence it stands in the Talmudic tractate Yevamoth fol. 94. col. 2. in the Tosaphoth: זרע נכרי כבהמה that is, The seed of a foreigner (that is, of one who is not a Jew) is like the seed of cattle. For this reason it is also taught in the book Lektof, fol. 46. col. 1., that the houses of idolaters are to be regarded as the houses of animals. And in the little book Ben Sira it is found at fol. 8. col. 2. that King Nebuchadnezzar said to Ben Sira: אם תהיה לי חתן ותקח בתי לאשה: that is, If you will be my son-in-law and take my daughter as a wife, I will let you reign in my place. But the latter is said to have answered: אני בן אדם ואיני יכול לישא בהמה שנ' אשר: that is, I am a child of man and cannot marry cattle, as it is said (Ezek 23:20): Whose flesh is the flesh of donkeys, etc. So too does Abarbanel write in his book Markevot ha-Mishneh, in the Parashah Tavo, as follows: לפי שצפה ברוח הקודש שעתיד שמשון להיות משבט דן ויהיו כל צרותיו בעבור אשתו להיותה מעם נכרי גויה אשר לא אהבתהו באשה צנועה האוהבת בעלה אבל מסירתו ביד אויביו פעמים רבות לכן אמר ארור שוכב עם כל בהמה ידמה לנכרית שאינה בת ישראל שהיא כבהמה דעה שאין לה אהבה לבעלה that is, Because he (namely Moses) saw through the Holy Spirit that Samson would be of the tribe of Dan, and that all his tribulations would arise on account of his wife, she being a gentile woman from a foreign people who would not love him as a chaste wife loves her husband, but would deliver him into the hands of his enemies many times, he therefore said (Deut 27:21): Cursed be he who lies with any animal. By which he (Moses) means a foreign woman who is not a daughter of Israel, because she is like a vicious beast that has no love for its master. In the commentary of Rabbi Menahem of Recanati on the Five Books of Moses, it is also read at fol. 137. col. 3. 4. that Moses said to the Israelites as follows: דעו שתמסרו ביד ד' מלכיות ההוה: וזל' תתערבו בהם ואל תשיאו מהם ואל תשיאו להם שנ' אך את זה לא תאכלו אין אכילה האמורה כאן אלא ביאה כמה דאמר אמר אכלה ומחתה פיה that is, Know that you will be delivered into the power of the four monarchies; take heed, and do not mingle among them, take no wives from them, and give them no women in marriage, as it is said (Lev 11:4): But these you shall not eat; the eating spoken of here, however, signifies sexual intercourse, as it is said (Prov 30:20): She eats, and wipes her mouth. And immediately thereafter follows: מכשלים לא תאכלו שלא תשאו מהם כמה דאמר: והיו לבשר אחד וכנבלתם לא תגעו שלא תשאו להם שנ' כדינה כי נבלה עשה בשרא that is, Of their (namely the unclean animals mentioned in Lev 11:8) flesh you shall not eat, that is, you shall take none of them as wives, just as it is said (Gen 2:24): And they shall be one flesh. And you shall not touch their carcass, that is, you shall give them no women, as it is said (Gen 34:7): For he has committed a disgrace (in Hebrew it is called Nebalah, by which an allusion is made to the word nefelah, which means a carcass) in Israel. According to all this, therefore, women outside of Judaism are regarded as unclean animals.

Rabbi Salman Zevi does indeed claim, in his Jewish Theriac, in the fourth chapter, num. 13, that it is no concern of Christians when the peoples of the world are called cattle, since only the idolatrous peoples are meant by this, and he denies therewith that it is written in the Talmud that the peoples of the world are cattle. But here too he acts falsely and deceitfully, as is his custom, for by "the peoples of the world" are understood all people who are not Jews. Likewise, all Christians are regarded by the Jews as idolaters, as will be clearly demonstrated in the following 16th chapter of this first part: how then can he so shamelessly claim that it is no concern of Christians? Moreover, it stands quite plainly in the words cited shortly before from the Talmudic tractate Báva mezia, fol. 114, col. 2, that the peoples of the world are called not human beings but cattle; how then can he so brazenly deny that the word "cattle" is found therein?

Although the name Adam, or "man," is given here and there in Holy Scripture to those who did not belong to the Israelite church, as can be seen in Ps 105:14 and various other places, the Jews will nonetheless not concede that it is used there in its proper sense, but rather maintain that it is to be understood in those passages in a contemptuous manner. Hence, in the Talmudic tractate Avóda Sára, fol. 3, col. 1, in the Tosephoth, on the words of Ezek 34:31, "And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men," the following is written: אתם קרוים אדם ולא אומות העולם קרוים אדם ואשר רבינו תם דיש לחלק בין אדם להאדם ולא קשיא מהא דכתיב גבי חידם ואתה אתה בן אדם ולא אל ביד מחללך דאמר כן לקחתו אדם בלשון חשיבות אלא לגנותו בלשון בזיון ושפלות והא דכתיב בקום עליך אדם רוצה לומר אדם ולא מלך והא דכתיב ישעיהו נ"א: י"ב לי אדם שיהא מצוי, that is: "You are called men, but the peoples of the world are not called men"; and Rabbenu Tam says that a distinction is to be made between adam and adām (that is, between "man" and "man"); and that the objection drawn from what is written of Hiram (Ezek 28:9), "Thou art a man, and not God, in the hand of him that slayeth thee," carries no weight (even though he is called ben adam, that is, a son of man), for God does not say this in order to have called him a man in an honorable sense, but rather it was done in a contemptuous manner, to his shame and diminishment. Likewise, what is written in Ps 124:2, "When adam, that is, man, rose up against us," means no more than "a man, and not a king." As also what is written in Ps 118:6, "What can adam, that is, man, do unto me?" for this signifies a contemptible man. On this matter, something equally to the same effect may also be read in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 150, col. 4.

אמרו רז"ל: fol. 9, col. 1: In the book Ir gibborim, however, it is written thus at fol. 9, col. 1: אתם קרויין אדם ולא ע"א אע"פ שיש להם יש נפש המשכלת המדברת. מה בכך אם אין משתמשין בה' למה שנברא האדם בעבורו. וכן האומן אם יש לו כל כלי האומנות אינו נקרא על שם האומנות אם לא יוציא אותם אל הפועל ונשארו הכלים אצלו לבטלה. ואע"פ שאמרו רז"ל זכרונם לברכה ע"א אין קרויין אדם לא דברנו אלא בהנהו שהוא הולך כל אדם הנמשך אחר התאוות ההם יצא מכלל אדם ובא במדרגת בהמה שהרי אף לבהמה יש נשמת רוח חיים that is, our rabbis, of blessed memory, say: you (Jews) are called human beings, and not the idolaters, even though the latter also possess a rational and speaking soul. But what good is it to them, if they do not apply it to that for which the human being was created? Likewise, a craftsman, even if he already has all the tools of his trade, is not called by the name of his trade if he does not put them to use and the tools remain idle with him (that is, if he does not make use of them). Although, however, our rabbis, of blessed memory, say that the idolatrous peoples are not called human beings, they have said this only with respect to what commonly tends to occur, and the meaning is that every person who follows his lusts is excluded from the sum of human beings and is counted among the rank of cattle. For behold, cattle too have a soul of the living spirit, and just as its spirit descends downward, so too does the spirit of such a person descend downward.

Rabbi Jeschája teaches in his book Schené luchóth habbertíth (or luchós habbertís) fol. 250, col. 2, as follows: ויבואו אדם כמ"ש ויבואו ויראו אומות העולם אף שנתנו להם צורת אדם כמ"ש ויבואו ויראו that is: Although the nations of the world have the same form as the Israelites, they are nonetheless to be regarded as nothing more than an ape before a human being, just as it has been said; and they do not attain to the highest head (or summit). They are also the lowest or most base of human beings; and this is what (the scripture Dan 4:14, or according to others v. 17) says: And God sets the most base of men over it (the kingdom). The Israelites, however, are highly esteemed human beings, according to the mystery of the (word) adam, that is, "man," and they alone are called human beings.

Since the Jews regard all other peoples as equal to cattle and animals, they are also called wolves by them, as can be read in Rabbi Mosche de Mercardo's commentary on Ps 35, col. 1, concerning the words of Ps 31:22, "Blessed be the LORD, who has shown me His wondrous kindness," where he writes as follows: וזו ההתבוננות בעבור חסד נפלא שעושה עמנו בגלות זה בהיותנו סובבים מע 'אבים מידם, that is: This reflection concerns the wondrous kindness (which He, namely God, shows toward us in this exilio, or misery, in that we are surrounded by the seventy wolves, that is, the seventy peoples, and yet God delivers us from their hand. And at fol. 53, col. 2, the same author writes concerning Ps 60:11 as follows: 'זאבים וזה בין ע' זאבים, that is: In You alone do we trust, that You preserve us in life to this very day among the seventy wolves. And at fol. 103, col. 1, the following is read there concerning Ps 121:1: בין זאבים לחי' יכול לקיימי בחלה בין ע' זאבים, that is: My help is from the LORD alone, who made heaven and earth, for He alone can sustain me like a lamb among the seventy wolves. Likewise, the same is also to be found there at fol. 88, col. 2, concerning Ps 106:2. So too, in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 34, col. 1, in the Parascha Toledóth, the following is read: קיסר אמר לו אדריאנוס קיסר: הרבי יהושע בן לוי גדולה כחה של כבשה שעומדת בין שבעים זאבים אמר לו גדול הרועה שמצילה מידם ומשברם לפניהם שנ' 'כל כלי יוצר עליך לא יצליח וביאור דביאור הדבר עלי שם שופם שיאבדו מן העולם, that is: The Emperor Hadrian said to Rabbi Jeboschua ben Levi: great is the power of the sheep, that it stands firm among the seventy wolves. To which he replied: great is the Shepherd, who delivers it from their hand and breaks them, those seventy wolves, before them, namely the sheep, as it is said (Isa 54:17): For every weapon that is forged against you shall not prosper.

Although the Jews hate all peoples, this occurs especially toward the Christians, whom they call the children of Esau, and between them there is supposed to be a perpetual hatred, concerning which the following is read in Abarbanel's commentary on the 1st chapter of the Prophet Malachi, fol. 297. col. 1: רשו ויעקב היו אחים והיו צוררים זה את זה, כמו שגלתה התורה בתחלת בספור 'חרינתם ואמר ויתרצצו הבנים בקרבה לפי שתמיד היו באיבה ושנאה כשהיה קם זה נפל כנ שמלדה ומבטן ומדרין היו שונאים זה לזה עד שבהולדם היה יעקב ידו אווזת בעקב עשו להעיר שכן היו חמיד אדום וישראל מתקוטטים זה בזה כי נולדו שגיהם במזנים מתחלפים וסתרם תכלית דחילוף: that is, Esau and Jacob were brothers, and were enemies of one another, as the Law (of Moses) has revealed in the account of their conception; for it is said (Gen 25:22): And the children struggled together within her womb, because they were always to be in enmity and hatred toward one another, and when the one rises, the other must fall, seeing that from birth, from the mother's womb, and from conception they hated one another, so that Jacob, when they were born, held the heel of Esau with his hand, thereby signifying that the Edomites (that is, the Christians) and the Israelites would in such a manner always quarrel with one another, since both were born with different and entirely contrary temperaments.

Therefore, it is also written in the book Caphtor uphérech, fol. 40. col. 2. as follows: אמרו ז"ל מעשה אבות סימן לבנים וכל מה שאירע לאבות אירע לבנים בגלות: that is, our Rabbis, of blessed memory, say that what befell the fathers (in former times) was a sign (or prefiguration) for their children, and that everything which happened to the fathers also befell the children, and that the like occurs in the exilio or misery. The very same is also to be found in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 30. col. 4. in the Parascha Vajéze, and in the book Zijóni, fol. 15. col. 3. and Ir gibbórim, fol. 52. col. 3. Rabbi Bechai likewise teaches in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 42. col. 4. in the Parascha Vajischlach the following: דע כי יש בפרשה הזאת באור למה שארע ליעקב עם עשו אחיו: ורמז גם כן לדורות למה שעתיד שיארע לנו תמיד עם בני עשו וראוי לנו לאהזו דרכיו של יעקב שהתקין עצמו לשלשה דברים למלחמה לתפלה לדורון: that is, Know that in this Parascha (or section) there is an explanation of what befell Jacob with his brother Esau; and this also carries a meaning for the generations to come, concerning what shall in the future continually befall and happen to us at the hands of the children of Esau (that is, the Christians); and we must adopt the ways (or manners) of Jacob, who prepared himself for three things, namely war, prayer, and the gift.

The Jews' hatred toward Christians can also be seen from the fact that in Rabbi Behai's book Cad hakkemach fol. 20. col. 1., the words of Prov 30:28, "The spider worketh with her hands," are expounded as follows: שממית זו מלכות שמואית אדום מה שממית זו שמואה אף מלכות אדום שמואה שנ' ואת עשו שנאתי that is, the spider signifies the Edomite kingdom (that is, Christendom). Just as the spider is hated, so too is the Edomite kingdom hated, as it is said (Mal 1:3): "And Esau I hated." In the same place, the words of Prov 30:23, "A hateful woman (or despised woman) when she is married, and a maidservant when she becomes heir to her mistress," are also written upon as follows: שמואה זו אדום שנ' ואת שמואה זו עשו שנאתי ושפחה זו ישמעאל שהוא בן השפחה that is, the hateful one signifies Edom (that is, Christendom), as it is said (Mal 1:3): "And Esau I hated." The maidservant, however, signifies Ishmael, who is the son of a maidservant (namely, Hagar). By Ishmael, however, the Turkish people is understood; and this is also found in the aforementioned Behai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 220. col. 4. in the Parascha Nizzavim.

Just as the Jews hate all other peoples, so too do they regard them all collectively as their enemies. For it stands written in the book Toledoth Jizchak fol. 104. col. 2. as follows: כל האומות אויבים לישראל, that is, All peoples are the enemies of the Israelites. In particular, however, they regard the Christians as their enemies, and in the book Zeror hammor. fol. 125. col. 2. 3. in the Parascha Pinchas, the words of Ps 9:7, "O enemy! are the devastations then complete?" are explained thus: האויב זה עשו הרשע שהוא אויב לישראל ומבקש רעתם: that is, This (enemy) is the wicked Esau (that is, Christendom), who is the enemy of the Israelites and seeks their misfortune. Likewise, Abarbenel in his book Maschmia jeschua fol. 7. col. 2. expounds the words of Deut 32:42, "From the head onward shall there be vengeance of the enemy," as follows: באמרו אויב בלשון יחיד רמז לאדום אשר כלנו ואשר דמהו לנו כי הוא האחד המיוחד באויב, that is, When (the Scripture) makes mention of the enemy in the singulari numero, or singular number, thereby Edom (that is, Christendom) is signified, which has destroyed and exterminated us, for it has been our true enemy. In the same manner they are also understood to refer to Christendom in the aforementioned book Zeror hammor fol. 158. col. 2. in the Parascha Haasinu. In the large Tephilla we are also called their enemies at fol. 43. col. 2. under the title Jozet beschabbath rischon achar Jod Sain betammus, in a prayer which begins דכאני אויבי שקר וזכרך מפי לעקר: אל אל חי ארנן (El chai arannen), when they say: כסלא בני בהיכלך בלי לבקר וגומר, that is, My enemies, who are my enemies without cause, crush (that is, torment) me, in order to root out the remembrance of You from my mouth and to visit You in Your temple no more, etc. That the Christians are meant by this, however, is evident from the words immediately following, in which it is stated that such enemies reproach the Jews with the crucifixion of Christ. In the little book Abkath Rochel it also stands in the first part at the tenth sign: ששית שעתיד הק"ה לאבד את כל אויבי: עמו ויעשה בהם נקמות שנ' ונתתי נקמתי באדום ביד עמי ישראל, that is, Sixth, GOD will destroy all the enemies of His people and take vengeance upon them, as it is said (Ezek 25:14): And I will take my vengeance upon Edom through my people Israel. Likewise, we are also called enemies of the Jews in Rabbi Mosche de Mircado's commentary on the Psalms, fol. 33. col. 3., on the 30th Psalm. So too in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 86. col. 1. in the Parascha Vajischma Jethro, one reads as follows: ידוע כי זרעו של עשו קרן: מכאב לישראל בכל הדורות, that is, It is well known that the seed of Esau has been a painful thorn to the Israelites in every generation.

The Turks are also regarded by them as their enemies, who are often grouped together with the Christians, concerning which the aforementioned Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 220, col. 2, in the Parascha Nizzavim, contains the following: אנו משועבדים תחת האויבים השונאים: והשרד והפוגו הם אדום וישמעאל ואנחנו נפוצים ומפזרים בארצותם, that is, We (who are of the tribe of Judah and Benjamin) are subjected to the enemies, haters, and persecutors, namely the Edomites and Ishmaelites (that is, the Christians and Turks), and are scattered and dispersed throughout their lands. And in the third column of the same place, on the words of Deut 30:7, "Upon your enemies and upon your haters": אויביך ישמעאל שונאיך עשו: that is, "Your enemies" signifies the Ishmaelites; "your haters," however, signifies the children of Esau (that is, the Christians). The same is also to be found there in the fourth column, and in the book Cad hakkemach, fol. 19, col. 4, as well as in the Jalkut Rubeni, under the title Galuth, numero 14, and in the book Pesikta Sotarta, fol. 81, col. 4, alongside Rabbi Menachem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 164, col. 2, in the Parascha Bechukkothai.

Although they also regard the Turks as their enemies, they nevertheless believe that Christians are their worst enemies, as can be read in the book Toledoth Jizchak, fol. 36. col. 1. in the Parascha Vajischlach, where it is stated: תשׁו הוּא הָאֹיֵב הַגָּדוֹל וְהַמִּיֵּד לְכָל יִשְׂרָאֵל עַד הַמְּשִׁיחַ that is: Esau is the greatest and perpetual enemy of all Israelites until the Messiah shall come. And by Esau, Christendom is also understood here, as will be demonstrated below in the 17th chapter of this first part. Thus also writes Abarbanel in his commentary on the prophet Habakkuk, cap. 2. fol. 272. col. 1. as follows: בְּתִשׁוּבַת הַשֵּׁם לְנָבִיא זָכַר לֹו שְׁנֵי חֲזִיוֹנוֹת אֶחָד בַּמִּפְלַת בָּבֶל וְאֶחָד לַעֲתִיד לָבוֹא בַּמִּפְלַת הָאוֹמוֹת שֶׁהִצְרֹו לְיִשְׂרָאֵל that is: In the answer which God gave to the prophet, He made mention of two visions; the first concerns the fall of Babylon, but the other is of the time to come, concerning the fall of the nations that have afflicted Israel, among which the Edomite kingdom is the chief (or the foremost). Exactly the same is also to be found in his book Maschmia jeschúa fol. 13. col. 2. and fol. 61. col. 4. There is also written in the Polish Siddúrim fol. 84. col. 2. under the title Józer leschábbath schelítschne schevuóth, in a prayer which begins: אֱלֹהֵי אֶקְרָאךָ בַּמַּחֲשָׁכ׃ Elohái ekraachá bemáchalchak, the following: כִּי דַבְרֵי סָרָה וְצָר הָדוֹן נִגְדָה׃ that is: The days of wrath have reached me, and the Zar, that is, the enemy, contends with arrogance, because he speaks of apostasy (and wishes to persuade me to fall away from my faith). The word Zar, or enemy, however, is explained in the commentary by אומה הרשעה úmma hareshháa, that is, the godless people, by which Christians are understood, as will be demonstrated below in the following 15th chapter of this first part, at the seventeenth name which they give to them. Likewise, in the words immediately following, both in the prayer and in the commentary, Christians are mentioned, and it is stated that they boast of the Nazarene, that is, of Christ, from which it is plainly to be seen that by the Zar or enemy, Christians are understood. Indeed, they are also called, shortly thereafter in that very same prayer, הָאֹיֵב haójeb, that is, likewise the enemy. In the book Pesikta sotarta, this is read fol. 18. col. 2. in the Parascha Balak, on the words of Num 24:18, "Edom shall be a hereditary possession," as follows: וְהָיָה יְרוּשָׁה שִׁיחִיהָ אֹיְבוֹ מַחֲיֵי יַעֲקֹב׃ דְּוָא אֹיְבָם בַּמַּדְבָּר דְּכָתִיב וַיְבֹא עַמְלָק וַיִּלְחֶם עִם יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּרִפְיִדִים׃ הוּא אֹיְבָם בַּגְּלוּת הָרָאוּשׁוֹן שֶׁנֶּאֱמָר וְעַל הַפָּרָק׃ זֶה חִירָב בְּבֵית שְׁנֵי שְׁנֵי אֲמָר זָכַר ל' לְבָנֵי אָדָם אֵת יוֹם יְרוּשָׁלַם וְהוּא חִיָּה אִיְבָם בַּגְּלוּת שֶׁיִּגְאָמְרוּ דִּסְפָּר וְהַשְׁמִיד מַחֲיֵי וּמִין דְּוָרַךְ that is: He shall be a hereditary possession, because he (namely Esau) has been his (understand: Israel's) enemy from the lifetime of our father Jacob, as it is written in Gen 27:41: "And Esau hated Jacob." He was their enemy in the wilderness, as it is written (Exod 17:8): "Then came Amalek and fought with Israel in Rephidim." He was their enemy in the first captivity, as it is said (Obad 1:14): "You should not have stood at the crossroads." This occurred at the time of the second Temple, as it is said (Ps 137:7): "Lord, remember against the children of Edom the day of Jerusalem." He was also their enemy in the (last) captivity, as it is said (Dan 7:25): "And he shall think to change the times and the law."

Yes, they even consider us to be enemies of God, and in the aforementioned Abarbanel's commentary on the Prophet Zephaniah, cap. 3, fol. 276, col. 1, the following is read: הובנונ אמרו כי אז אהפך אל עמים שפה ברורה ולא אמר אל כל העמים: that is: Consider what he (namely the Lord, Zeph 3:9) says: "Then will I turn to the peoples a pure lip"; he did not say "to all peoples," because the Edomite people (that is, the Christian people) is not included in this promise, for they are enemies of God and of His law. In the Jalkut Shimoni on the Prophet Micah, fol. 82, col. 1, numero 553, the following is likewise written: עתיד הק"ב להשמיד את בני עשו שהם צרי ו להכרית בני ישמעאל שהם אויביו that is: The holy blessed God will destroy the children of Esau, who are His adversaries, and will exterminate the children of Ishmael, who are His enemies, as it is said (Mic 5:8, or according to others v. 9): "Your hand shall be lifted up against all your adversaries, and all your enemies shall be cut off." In the aforementioned book Maschmia Jeshua, fol. 44, col. 2, on the words of Isa 63:1, "Who is this that comes from Edom?", the following is likewise read: תבאר בנבואה הזאת עיקר הנקמה שיעשה השם באחרית: that is: In this prophecy the foundation of the vengeance is explained which God will execute in the last days against His adversaries and enemies, the children of Edom and the children of Ishmael. Concerning this, an equivalent passage may also be read in the book Zerór Hammor, fol. 160, col. 2, in the Parashah Haazinu.

The Jews also delude themselves into believing that those who are enemies of the Jews are also enemies of God, which is why Rabbi Bechai, in his oft-mentioned commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 226. col. 1., in the Parascha Haasinu, interprets the words of Deut 32:41, "So will I take vengeance on my enemies," as follows: אשיב להם גמול כאשר עשו לישראל כי המה אויבי הקב"ה: והקב"ה קראם צרי ולמעלה הזכיר מן ינכח עירמו ולישראל יחזור המנוח ולפיכך הסמך כי אמרם that is, "I will repay them as they have done to the Israelites; and the holy blessed God has called them His enemies; but above (v. 27.) He mentioned that their enemies might not hold themselves as strangers," where the little word "their" refers to the Israelites, "and Scripture teaches you that the enemies of Israel are the enemies of God."

Since the Jews hate all peoples in the manner described, they are also forbidden to follow the customs of those peoples, whatever those customs may consist of. Thus it is taught in the great Sepher mizvoth of Rabbi Mosche Mikkozi fol. 10. col. 4. as follows: שלא ללכת בחוקות הגוים ולא במלבושיהן ולא במנהגיהם שנ' לא תלכו בחוקות הגוי וגו' ובחוקותיהן לא תלכו ונא' השמר לך פן תנקש אחריהם וגו' הכל בענין אחד הוא מזהיר שיהא ישראל מובדלין מן הגוים במלבוש במנהג בדבור that is: one must not walk in the ordinances or manners of the heathens, neither in their clothing nor in their customs, as it is said (Lev 20:23): "And walk not in the ordinances of the people (or of the heathens)," etc. And Lev 18:3 says: "You shall not follow their ordinances." And (Deut 12:30) it is said: "Take heed that you do not fall into a snare by following them," etc. All of this has one and the same meaning, and (Scripture) warns that the Israelites shall be distinguished from the heathens in clothing, in custom or habit, and in speech. For this reason He (namely God, Lev 20:26) says: "And I have separated you from the peoples." On this matter Rabbi Mosche bar Majomon also writes in his book Jad chasaka, in the first part, fol. 40. col. 2., in the 11th chapter, §. 1., in the Tractate on idolatry, as follows: אין הולכין בחוקות גוים ולא מדמים להם לא במלבוש ולא בשער וכיוצא בהן שנ' ולא תלכו בחוקות הגוים ונא' ובחוקותיהם לא תלכו ונאמר השמר לך פן תנקש אחריהם הכל בענין אחד הוא מזהיר שלא ידמה להן אלא יהיה הישראל מובדל מהן וידוע במלבושו ובשאר מעשיו כמו שהוא מובדל מהן במדעו ובירועותיו וכן הוא אומר ואבדיל אתכם מן העמים. לא ילבש כמלבוש המיוחד להן ולא יגדל ציצית ראשו כמו ציצית ראשם ולא יגלה מן הצדדים ויניח השער באמצע כמו שהם עושין וזהו הנקרא בלורית ולא יגלה השער מכנגד פניו מאזן לאזן ויניח הפרע מלאחריו כדרך שעושין that is: one must not follow the ordinances of the Gojim, or heathens (by whom the Christians are to be understood), nor make oneself like them, neither in clothing nor in hair, and the like, as it is said (Lev 20:23): "And walk not in the ordinances of the heathens." And it is said (Lev 18:3): "You shall not follow their ordinances." And (Deut 12:30) it is said: "Take heed that you do not fall into a snare by following them," etc. All of this has one and the same meaning, and (Scripture) warns that the Israelites shall be distinguished from the heathens in clothing, in custom or habit, and in speech. For this reason He (namely God, Lev 20:26) says: "And I have separated you from the peoples." On this matter Rabbi Mosche bar Majomon also writes in his book Jad chasaka, in the first part, fol. 40. col. 2., in the 11th chapter, §. 1., in the Tractate on idolatry, as follows: אין הולכין בחוקות גוים ולא מדמים להם לא במלבוש ולא בשער וכיוצא בהן שנ' ולא תלכו בחוקות הגוים ונא' ובחוקותיהם לא תלכו ונאמר השמר לך פן תנקש אחריהם הכל בענין אחד הוא מזהיר שלא ידמה להן אלא יהיה הישראל מובדל מהן וידוע במלבושו ובשאר מעשיו כמו שהוא מובדל מהן במדעו ובירועותיו וכן הוא אומר ואבדיל אתכם מן העמים. לא ילבש כמלבוש המיוחד להן ולא יגדל ציצית ראשו how they style their hair and do other such things, and the like: that is, one must not follow the ordinances of the Gojim, or heathens (by whom the Christians are to be understood), nor make oneself like them, neither in clothing nor in hair, and the like, as it is said (Lev 20:23): "And walk not in the ordinances of the heathens." And it is said (Lev 18:3): "You shall not follow their ordinances." And (Deut 12:30) it is said: "Take heed that you do not fall into the snare by following them." All of this has one meaning, and (Scripture) warns that one must not make oneself like them, and that an Israelite shall be distinguished from them and recognized by his clothing and his other deeds, just as he is separated from them in his knowledge and his opinions. For this reason He (namely God, Lev 20:26) says: "And I have separated you from the peoples." He shall not put on any garment made according to their particular fashion, nor let the hair-locks of his head grow long like their hair-locks, nor shave himself on the sides and leave the hair standing in the middle as they do, which is called בלורית belurith (or belúris); nor cut the hair on the front of his head from one ear to the other and let the hair stand at the back, as they do; nor build places after the manner of the buildings of idolatrous churches, so that many may enter into them, as they do. These are the words of Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon; and all of this is likewise to be found in the book Schylchan áruach, in the part Jóre déa fol. 141. col. 2. numero 178, in precisely the same words.

In the book Col bo, however, where this is likewise read at numero 108, fol. 109, col. 1, the following is added: מלך לישב לפני מלך ישראל שהוא קרוב למלכות וצריך לישב לפני מלך ויהיה לו גנאי אם לא ידמה להם במלבוש ובשער מותר ללבוש כמלבושן ולגלח כנגד פניו כמו שהם עושים : that is: An Israelite, however, who must be near the king and remain before him, and for whom it would be a disgrace if he did not conform to them in clothing and hair, is permitted to put on a garment such as their garments are, and to cut his hair toward the face (or at the forehead) as they are accustomed to do. We thus see from this the true reason why the Jews among us dress differently from us, also have themselves shaved differently from us, and speak the German language in a different manner than we are accustomed to do, namely so that they may thereby distinguish themselves from us as the supposed heathens.

On account of the distinction they make between themselves and us, they also presume to imagine that they are a holy and pure people, while we are a godless and impure people; that they are proper human beings, while we are to be regarded as mere cattle, as has been demonstrated in the preceding section. I must also point out here that when they make mention of Christians, or of another people, and of Jews at the same time, they customarily add the word להבדיל lehafdil, which means as much as: a distinction is to be made, by which they intend to convey that, even though Christians or another people and Jews are placed together and mentioned at the same time, a very great distinction is nonetheless to be made between them, and that the Jews are far to be preferred over the Christians or other peoples. An example of this is found in the Maase-Book, in the 240th chapter, in the fable about Rabbi Amram cited above in the eleventh chapter, who is said to have been transported dead, entirely alone in a small boat from Cologne, and brought to Mainz: and there one reads: דא קאם דיא גאנצע שטאט צו לויפן אן ריין יהודים חוץ {להבדיל} {that is, "There came the whole city running to the Rhine, Jews and Christians leháfðil," that is, among whom a distinction is nonetheless to be made. So also in the godless little book Toledóth Jéshu, paginâ 21, it is written thus: ויהי אחרי הדברים האלה ויגדל מריבה בין המצרים ובין יהודים {להבדיל} {that is, "And it came to pass after these things that the strife greatly increased between the Christians and the Jews, leháfðil," that is, among whom a distinction is to be made. In the preface of the German-Hebrew little book Mikvéh Jisraël it is reported that Rabbi Menasse ben Israël wrote it, and who translated it into German, as well as that one may see therein where the ten tribes, together with the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, went; and thereafter follows: חוץ רצון זעלביג וועט וואויל בעפעסטיגט מיט ניינציג שרייבערס ווו וואויל פון חכמי אומות העולם {להבדיל} {פון חכמי ישראל} {that is, "And the same will be well confirmed by ninety writers, as well from the wise men of the peoples of the world as from the wise men of Israel, leháfðil," among whom a distinction is to be made. And in the German-Hebrew little book Maasêôth Benjamin, fol. 61, col. 2, it is reported of Rabbi Daniël that he is the most distinguished Jew in the Promised Land, and it continues further: ער האט גרושי חשיבות ביא דעם מלך ער האט פול יהודים אונטער זיין האנט ער האט דען מלך איין מצוה לאזן אויגאנגן חומ 'חוקן זיין קינער לוחה געהן דיא זיאי פיר דעם זעלביגן רבי דניאל זאלן אויף שטין חומ 'מיט כבוד חנטאן וואו {להבדיל} {אונד} {יהודים} {וואו} {מירט קענן וואו} {אונד} {ישמעאלים} {להבדיל} {that is, "He is held in great esteem by the king; he has many Jews under his authority; and the king has also issued a decree, and commanded his children as well, that they shall rise before the said Rabbi Daniel and show him honor in whatever way they can, both Jews and Ishmaelites (or Turks), leháfðil," among whom a distinction is nonetheless to be made. We thus see from this that Friederich Samuel Brentz wrote the truth when, in the fourth chapter of his work The Stripped Jewish Serpent-Skin, paginâ 20, he writes as follows: "When a Jew says something about another Jew and immediately names a Christian, the Jew says בין להבדיל לטהור leháfðil ben táme letábor, that is, 'Let there be a distinction between the pure and the impure'; whereby he calls the Christian the impure one and the Jew the pure one." Likewise, the converted Dieterich Schwab in his Jewish Cloak, in the eighth chapter of the first part, paginâ 65, reported nothing false when he writes: "When they (namely the Jews) acquire a governing authority that is favorable and well-disposed toward them, they then say: 'What a well-mannered authority this is, it gladly accepts gifts, it is just like the Jews, lehafdil, yet with a distinction,' by which word they wish to indicate that they are still better than such an authority, however high its rank may be."

Because of this supposed distinction between themselves and other peoples, they are also accustomed to say: ברוך אתה יי' אלהינו מלך העולם המבדיל בין קדש לחול בין אור לחשך בין ישראל לעמים בין יום השביעי לששת ימי המעשה בין קדושת שבת לקדושת יום טוב הבדלת ואת יום השביעי מששת ימי המעשה קדשת והבדלת את עמך ישראל בקדושתך: that is, "Blessed are You, Lord our God, You King of the world, who makes a distinction between the holy and the unholy, between light and darkness, between Israel and the peoples, between the seventh day and the six working days. You have made a distinction between the holiness of the Sabbath and the holiness of a feast day, and have sanctified the seventh day above the six working days. You have set apart and sanctified Your people Israel in Your holiness": as may be seen in the Benschbuch fol. 36. col. 1. under the title Kiddusch lejom tof, and fol. 37. col. 2. under the title Seder schel Pesach. They also pray daily in the morning in a prayer which begins: וּבָא לִצִּיּוֹן גּוֹאֵל Uvá lezijon Goël, as may be read in the large Tephilla fol. 32. col. 1., in the following manner: ברוך הוא אלהינו שבראנו לכבודו והבדילנו מן התועים ונתן לנו תורת אמת וחיי עולם נטע בתוכנו that is, "Blessed be our God, who has created us for His glory, and separated us from the Töim, that is, the erring ones (namely the Gojim, that is, the Christians, who, as may be seen in the following seventeenth chapter under the twenty-sixth name they give us, are called Töim, and other peoples), and has given us the true Law, and has planted eternal life within us." This is also to be found in the aforementioned book fol. 74. col. 3. under the title Mincha schel Schabbath in the prayer mentioned above.

It is also forbidden for Jews to instruct a Goi or Christian in the Law, or to hold a conversation with one on matters of religion. Regarding instruction in the Law, this is forbidden in the Talmudic Tractate Chagiga fol. 13. col. 1. where it is written: אמר רבי אממי אין מוסרין דברי תורה לגוי: that is, Rabbi Ammi has said, one does not give (or betray) to a Goi the words of the Law. And in the Tosephóth thereon one reads: אסור משום מגד דבריו ליעקב: that is, It is forbidden, because (as Ps 147:19 states:) He makes His words known to Jacob. This is also to be found in the Tractate Bâva kâmma fol. 38. col. 1. in the Tosephóth, in these words: המלמד תורה לגוי עובר בעשה דמגיד דבריו ליעקב: that is, Whoever teaches a Goi the Law transgresses an affirmative commandment, for he makes His words known to Jacob, and consequently not to the Gojim. In the Jalkut châdasch, fol. 171. col. 2. numero 71. under the title Tôra, the following is also taught: לגר אסור לגלות סתרי תורה כלל וכלל: ומי שמגלה לגוי כאלו: that is, It is forbidden to reveal the secrets of the Law to a Goi in any way whatsoever; and whoever discloses them to a Goi does as much as if he had destroyed the entire world, and denies the holy name, that is, God.

Rabbi Elias, however, was of a different opinion, as he confesses in his book Masoreth hammasoreth, in the preface written in verse, fol. 9. col. 1., that he had instructed Gojim, or Christians, in the Law; and he excuses this with the following words: רק שדברי תורה לגוי חכמים אינם אוסרין. רק עקרי דבריהם עומדין. על דברים ששייך בהן מסירה. כגון מעשה בראשית ומעשה מרכבה וספר יצירה. שאין מנלין אלא לצנועים. אנשים חכמים וידועים. אשר מבני ישראל המה. וכן כצורך אבן במרגמה אשר על תלמיד שאינו הגון דרשוהו. ולזורק אבן למרקוליס רמזהו. ואמרו כל המלמד תורה לתלמיד שאינו הגון. ירד שאולה ביגון. וחם ושלום תפח שנ' תאכלהו אש לא נפח. לא דברו אלא בישראל. ולא באדומי או ישמעאלי. ועוד מה שאמרו בגמרא. אין מוסרין סתרי תורה אלא למי שיש בו חמשה עניינים זקן ונשוא פנים וכולי כדאיתא בישיעה חי לנו בו ראה שחכמים לא גזרו. שהלמוד לגוי יהיה עברה. כי אפילו לפי דבריהם. כותר ללמד עמהם. שבע מצוות בני נח. וזה לי לפי כחי כי איך אפשר זה להודיעם חוץ שבע מצוות להשמיעם. אם לא ידעו בראשון להבין את הלשון. וגם יש לי להתלות. בהרבה אילנות גדולות. אנשים שהיו לפני. אשר קטנם

עבה, that is: The sages forbid (in the words cited above from Chagiga fol. 13. col. 1.) only that one should not give the words of the Law to a Goi (or Christian); but they do not say that one may not teach them: rather, the main substance of their pronouncement concerns those things which must not be transmitted, namely the work of creation, and the work of the Chariot (treated in Ezek 1), as well as the book Jezira, which are revealed to none other than the modest, wise, and conscientious persons among the children of Israel. Likewise they interpreted the words (of Prov 26:8), "He who confers great honor upon a fool is like one who binds a stone in a sling," as referring to a disciple who is not worthy, and compared one who has such a disciple to one who throws a stone at Markolis; and they said therewith that whoever teaches a disciple who is not fit must descend into the pit in sorrow and the spirit of his soul must burst asunder, as it is said (Job 20:26): "A fire that is not blown shall consume him." But they spoke of this only with respect to an Israelite, and not with respect to an Edomite (that is, a Christian) or an Ishmaelite (that is, a Turk). Beyond what they stated in the Gemara, that one should not transmit the secrets of the Law to anyone except one who possesses the five qualities (namely, that he be) old and well-regarded, etc., as it stands in Isa 9:15, this proof is sufficient for us to show that the sages did not judge it to be a sin to instruct a Goi (or Christian), since even according to their own pronouncement it is permitted to study the seven commandments of Noah together with the Gojim, which also serves me as a justification of the authority (and permission). For how is it possible to make these seven commandments known to them, and to cause them to hear the same, if they do not first understand the language? I therefore follow in this matter many distinguished men, whose little finger is thicker than my loins (that is, who are far more excellent than I), whose names I am not even worthy to mention, and who have taught more Gojim (or Christians) than I, some of whom are still in part among the living, while others are in part, as to their souls, in Paradise. These are the words of Elias the Levite. He erred, however, in claiming that the Talmud does not state, on the part of their sages, that it is forbidden to teach a Goi, since this is clearly to be seen in the previously cited Tosephóth of the tractate Bava kámma fol. 38. col. 1.

That it is also forbidden for them to engage in a conversation about religion is to be seen at fol. 77. col. 2. in the Piske Tosephóth of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, number 43, where one reads: לא ישא ויתן עם המינין מהורתן דאתי : לאימשוכי : that is, one shall have nothing to do with heretics concerning their religion, because one is thereby enticed (and led astray).

Furthermore, it is forbidden for Jews to rent a house to a Christian, which according to some rabbis' opinion is to be understood only of the Promised Land, but according to others also of all other lands; and they prove this from the words of Deut 7:26: "You shall not bring an abomination into your house." Concerning which Rabbi Bechai, in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 198. col. 1. in the Parascha Ekef, writes as follows: מכאן למדו חכמים . ז"ל בדרך אסמכתא שאסור להשכיר ביתו לגוי לבית דירה מפני שהגוי מכניס לתוכו ע"ז וישראל זה המשכיר עובר שהדי שכירות אינו קונה הקרקע לשנויי וקרקע לאו של גוי הוא אלא של ישראל הוא לפיכך עובר עליו אבל מצינו קצת מן הגאונים זל שכתבו שאין זה אלא בארץ ישראל לפי ששם עקר ע"ז וכן נראה בירושלמי וכן אנו נוהגים בזה התר עכשו . אבל הרמב"ן ז"ל כתב בעל נפש צריך לפרש מלהשכיר אפילו חוצה לארץ . that is: From this our sages, of blessed memory, have taught by way of a weak proof that it is forbidden to rent one's house to a Goi or Christian as a dwelling, because the Goi brings an idol into it; and an Israelite who rents it out transgresses (this commandment), for, behold, through a lease the lessee does not acquire the land itself, and the land is not the Goi's but the Israelite's, and therefore he transgresses (this commandment) by it. We find, however, some among our doctors, of blessed memory, who have written that this is to be observed only in the land of Israel, where the chief seat of idolatry is to be found (and against which one must take particular care), and so it appears in the Jerusalem Talmud; and so we are accustomed to permit it at the present time. But Rabbi Moses bar Nachman, of blessed memory, has written that a courageous or pious man ought to refrain from renting (a house to a Goi) even outside the land of Israel. On this matter one may also consult the book Col bo, fol. 108. col. 2. numero 97, under the title Avóda sára; and in the Sepher mizvóth gadól, fol. 10.

col. 4.; as well as in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 15. col. 1. and fol. 20. col. 2., and also fol. 21. col. 1. Since, then, it is forbidden to the Jews by their rabbis in such a manner to rent a house to a Christian, Christian authorities would have all the more reason to forbid Christians from renting a house to any Jew, seeing that he blasphemes Christ the Lord within it, curses and despises Christians, and holds everything that is Christian in contempt.

Furthermore, it is forbidden for the Jews to allow an idolatrous person to live in their land when they have the upper hand; from which it follows that they would also not allow any Christian to live there, since they regard us all as idolatrous people. This prohibition is to be read in Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon's Sepher mizvóth, fol. 85. col. 3., where he states: מצוה נ"א הזהירנו מהושיב עובדי עבודה זרה בארצנו כדי שלא נלמוד כפירתם כאמרו לא ישבו בארצך פן יחטיאו וגו' ואלו רצה הגוי לעמוד בארצנו אינו מותר לנו עד שיקבל עליו שלא לעבוד ע"ז ואולם עובדי ע"ז לא ישכנו עמנו ולא נמכור להם נחלה ולא נשכיר להם בית ובבצור אמר לנו הפי' לא תחן להם חכמה בקרקע: that is: The fifty-first commandment. (Scripture) warns us that we shall not allow any idolatrous people to dwell in our land, so that we do not learn their unbelief from them, when it (Exod 23:33) says: They shall not dwell in your land, lest you sin against me. But if a Goi or heathen wishes to remain in our land, it is not permitted to us (to tolerate him therein) until he takes it upon himself (and gives assurance) that he will not practice idolatry; the idolaters, however, shall not dwell among us. We must also neither sell them any inheritance nor lend them any house. The commentary also states plainly: you shall give them no dwelling upon the ground (or soil). The same author also writes in his book Jad chásáka, in the first part, fol. 40. col. 2., in the 10th chapter, §. 6. of the tractate on idolatry, as follows: בזמן שיד ישראל תקיפה עליהם: אסור לנו להניח עובד כו"ם בינינו אפילו יושב שיבת עראי או עובר ממקום למקום בסחורה: לא יעבור בארצנו עד שיקבל עליו שבע מצוות שנצטוו בני נח שנ' לא ישבו בארצך: that is: At the time when the Israelites have the upper hand over them (namely, the nations), it is forbidden to allow an idolatrous person among us, even if he is staying only incidentally or by chance (and not permanently among us), or is passing through from one place to another with goods; he shall not pass through our land until he takes upon himself the seven commandments that were enjoined upon the children of Noah (to observe them), as it is said (Exod 23:33): They shall not dwell in your land. The high Christian authorities, however, would have more than sufficient cause not to allow any Jew to live among Christians, since among them the Jews engage in all manner of godless conduct, which is described throughout this book.

Beyond the above, they are also forbidden from taking a Christian woman as a wet nurse. On this subject, the book called Brandspiegel writes as follows in אוב 'דיא האלטן גויה זויגאמן דאס זייא טוהן זעהר: fol. 68. col. 1.: the 18th chapter, fol. 68. col. 1.: אונרעכט או ווייט אן קיין אידן קיין יודין האבן דען דיא מילך פון דר גויה קומט פון טרפה עסן און 'דאס קינד זויגט פון איר און 'ורשטופט אים זיין הערץ און 'איז צו בזורגן עס ווערט ניקס גוטס אומס אים עס ווערט פרייא און 'הוט נישט פֿורכט גוטס און 'ווערד נישט קונן תורה לערנן עס ווירט איין הערץ ורסטאנד אז איין חמור דען דיא כותיים זיין גיגליכן צו איינע חמור דאס דרסן דיא חכמים דאז אברהם האט גזאגט צו זיינע יונגן שבו לכם פה עם החמור דאס איז טייטש זויאט איין איר דעם אייזל דאס איינר איר זייט איין גלייך זייט איין גלייך וויא איין אייזל: that is, those who keep Christian wet nurses do very wrong, provided a Jewish woman can be had, for the milk of the Gója (that is, a heathen or Christian woman) comes from eating forbidden foods, and the child suckles from her and has its heart stopped up; and one must fear that nothing good will come of it, that it will become insolent and not God-fearing, that it will not be able to learn the Law, but will have a heart and understanding like an ass, for the Cutheans (that is, the Gójim) are compared to asses. Our sages interpret this to mean that Abraham said to his servants in the parashah Vajera (Gen 22:5): Stay here with the ass; which signifies as much as if he had said: You are a people just like an ass. These are the words from the Brandspiegel. One could, however, with far greater justification say that those supposed sages who interpret the words of Holy Scripture so foolishly are themselves true, witless asses, even though they were not suckled by any Christian woman. In the book Schulchan aruch, in the section Jore dea, however, it is permitted in a certain manner at fol. 121. col. 2. numero 124, where the words read as follows: עכו"ם לא תילד לישראלית בינה ואפילו אם הוא מומחית וכן לא תניק לבן ישראל בביתה אפילו אחרים עומדים על גבה אבל בבית ישראל מותרת לילד ולהניק אם אחרים עומדים על גבה: that is, an idolatrous woman (by which a Christian woman is to be understood) shall not serve as midwife to a Jewish woman, being entirely alone with her, even if she is already well experienced in the matter; likewise she shall not suckle a Jewish child in her own house, even if others are present: in a Jew's house, however, she is permitted to perform the service of a midwife and to nurse, provided other people are standing by or are going in and out. The child, however, shall not be left alone with her at night.

Thereupon the following is further stated in the same place: ישראלית לא תניק 'מיום שנברא העולם לא היתה אשה יולדת לצי שנה שנ: as follows: ואם שרה הבת צ' 'שנה תלד וראו כל מלכי הארץ ותמהו ולא האמינו מה עשה הק"ה הוביש חוסי דיי נשיהם ומביאים הילדים לשרה להניקם שנ 'וידעו כל עצי השדה אלו אומות העולם

כי אני י' השפילתי עץ גבוה זה נמרוד הגבהתי עץ שפל זה אברהם אבינו הובשתי עץ לח אלה נשי אומות העולם הפדחתי עץ יבש זה שרה אמש היו כולן מביאין בניהן אצל שרה והיתה מניקה אותן שנ' הניקה בנים שרה, that is: From the time when the world was created, no woman had given birth in her ninetieth year of age, as it is said (Gen 17:17): Shall Sarah, who is ninety years old, bear a child? But all the kings of the earth saw it, and marveled, and would not believe it. What did the Holy and Blessed God do? He caused the veins of the breasts of their wives to dry up, and they brought their children to Sarah to nurse them, as it is said (Ezek 17:24): And all the trees of the field shall know; these trees are the nations of the world, that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, which is Nimrod; and have exalted the low tree, which is Abraham our father; and have dried up the green tree, which signifies the wives of the nations of the world; and have made the dry tree to flourish, which signifies Sarah our mother. And they all brought their children to Sarah, and she nursed them, as it is said (Gen 21:7): Sarah has nursed children.

This is, however, a foolish proof that Sarah should have nursed many children, simply because it is written: "And Sarah has nursed children," and not "a child"; for among the Hebrews it is customary that the pluralis numerus is used in place of the singularis, that is, the plural number is used in place of the singular. Thus it is read in Gen 46:7 that Jacob took his daughters and his daughters' children with him into Egypt, when in fact he had only one daughter, namely Dinah, as can be seen in v. 15 of that same passage, and one son's daughter, namely Serah, as can be read in v. 17. A similar example is also to be found there in v. 23, where it is read: "The children (or sons) of Dan, Hushim," when Dan had only one son, namely Hushim. And the very same thing is to be seen in Num 26:8. Thus it is also said here that Sarah nursed children, even though she had and nursed only one son.

A Jewish midwife is also not permitted to serve a Christian woman; therefore it is written in the book Aggúda fol. 60. col. 4. numero 17.: בת ישראל לא תיילד: לנכחית מפני שמיילדת בן לעבודת אלילים, that is: a Jewish woman shall not serve any Christian woman as a midwife, because she thereby causes a child to be born into idolatry. And in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára it is read at fol. 26. col. 1.: מפני שחשודין על שפיכת דמים: בנכרית לא תיילד את בת ישראל, that is: a foreign woman (understand: a Christian woman, or any other woman who is outside of Judaism) shall not serve any Jewish woman as a midwife, because such women are suspected of bloodshed (and it is to be feared that they might kill the child). However, some rabbis do permit this to be done, so that the Christians will not on that account become enemies of the Jews; therefore it is written in the Sepher mizvóth gadól, fol. 10. col. 2. and in the book Col bo, fol.

108. col. 2. numero 97. as follows: בת ישראל לא תיילד את נכרית לפי שמילדת בן : לע"ז הנ"מ בלי בהנם : אבל בשכר מותר משום איבה לה, that is: a Jewish woman shall not allow herself to be employed as a midwife for any foreign woman, because she thereby causes a child to be born into idolatry. These words, however, are to be understood as meaning that it is not permitted to do so free of charge; for doing it for payment is permitted, on account of the enmity (which would otherwise arise against the Jews). On this matter, nearly the same thing is also to be read in the book Schylchan áruach, in the section Jóre déa, numero 154. fol. 121. col. 2. And in the book Col bo it is written at fol. 108. col. 2. numero 97.: בת ישראל לא תיילד לנכרי לפי שמילדת בן לעבודת זרה והני מלי בהנם אבל בשכר מותר אבל נכרית מילדת בת ישראל בזמן שאחרות עומדות על גבה אבל לא בינה לבינה ולמא קטלא לה, that is: a Jewish woman shall not serve any foreign woman as a midwife, because she thereby causes a child to be born into idolatry; and these words are to be understood as meaning that it shall not be done free of charge, for doing it for payment is permitted. A foreign woman, however, may serve a Jewish woman as a midwife when other women are present; but not when she is alone with her, lest she take her life.

One can see from this, then, how little trust the Jews place in other people. For this reason, the following is also taught in the Sepher mizvóth gadól, fol. 156. col. 3.: תניא במסכת עבודה זרה (ע"ב דף כ"ה) (לא יתלוה עמהם בדרך פגע גוי בדרך : מחזירו לימינו היו עולין במעלה או היו יורדין בירידה לא יהיה ישראל למטה וגוי למעלה אלא : ישראל למעלה וגוי למטה שמא יפול עליו דבר להמיתו ולא ישח לפניו שמא ירוץ גולגלתו : that is, we learn in the (Talmudic) tractate Avóda sára, fol. 25. col. 2.: A (Jew) shall not join company with the Gojim, or heathens, on the road. If he encounters a Goi, or heathen, on the road, he lets him walk on his right-hand side. If they are climbing or descending together, the Jew shall not be below and the Goi above, but rather the Jew above and the Goi below, so that he might not throw something upon him to kill him. He shall also not bow down before him, lest he smash his skull. The Jews thus imagine that Christians harbor the same reckless dispositions toward them as they themselves harbor toward Christians, as shall be shown below in the third chapter of the second part.

Among the Jews, a Goi or Christian is also not considered competent to give testimony; for this reason, the book Schylchan áruach, in the section Chóschén hammischpat, fol. 40. col. 2. numero 34. §. 19., teaches: גוי ועבד פסולים לעדות : that is, A Goi and a servant are incompetent to give testimony. Rabbi Mordochai Japhe likewise writes in his book Lefúséh malchúth, under the title Hilchóth edúth (or *Hilchos édu*s) numero 34. §. 19., as follows: גוי ועבד פסולים : that is, A Goi and a servant are incompetent to give testimony. A Goi is incompetent because it is written (Deut 19:18): When the witness has given false testimony against his brother. Learn from this that a brother is required for testimony, but the Goi is not a brother. Rabbi Salman Zevi does indeed deny this in the fourth chapter of his Jewish Theriac, fol. 24. col. 2. numero 12; however, he did so, as is his custom, against his better knowledge and conscience.

It is also forbidden for Jews to praise a Goi or Christian; for this reason, the book Schulchan aruch, in the section Jore déa, fol. 120. col. 2. numero 151. §. 14., reads as follows: זה (אפילו לומר כמה נאה עכ"ם) that is, It is forbidden to praise the Gójim or Christians, even to say: how beautiful is this idolater in his appearance. Still less should one praise his works, or hold anything belonging to him in affection. The same is also to be found in the Sepher mizvóth gadól of Rabbi Mosche Mikkózi, fol. 10. col. 3., and in the book Col bo fol. 108. col. 4. numero 97. under the title Avóda sara, and in the book Jad chasaka, in the first section, in the 10th chapter, §. 4. of the Treatise on Idolatry, as well as in the book Toledóth Adam vechávva, fol. 160. col. 2. in the sixth section, under the title Nathif schifa éser.

The Jews also teach that the almsgiving of Christians and other peoples, and the kindness and mercy they show, is pure sin. This is written in the book Váve baammúdim, fol. 17, col. 4, in the 15th chapter, as follows: אמר להן רבי יוחנן בן זכאי לתלמידיו מהו שאמר הכתוב צדקה תרומם גוי וחסד לאומים חטאת צדקה תרומם גוי אלו ישראל דכתיב ומי כעמך ישראל גוי אחד בארץ וחסד לאומים חטאת כל צדקה וחסד : that is, Rabbi Jochanan, son of Saccai, said to his disciples: What is the meaning of that which Scripture (Prov 14:34) states: "Almsgiving" (which otherwise means "righteousness," and the Hebrew word signifies both) "exalts the people, but the mercy of the nations is sin." By the words "Almsgiving exalts the people," the Israelites are meant, as it is written (1 Chr 17:21): "Who is like Your people Israel, a people unique on the earth?" And by the words "But the mercy of the nations is sin," it is given to be understood that all almsgiving which the peoples of the world give, and all mercy (or beneficence) which they show, is counted as sin for them, because they do it only in order to make themselves great thereby and to make a show of it. This is also found in the book Cad bakkémach, fol. 62, col. 3, as well as in the Talmudic tractate Báva báthra, fol. 10, col. 2. Likewise, in the book Ir gibbórim, fol. 13, col. 4, the following is written concerning the Law, almsgiving, and prayer: לא חפץ הק"ב לזכות בג' כתרין אלו כי אם ישראל ולא לשום אומה. דתורה כאמרו רז"ל בן נח שעסק בתורה חייב מיתה כו' צדקה תרומם גוי . . . פירשו רז"ל אלו ישראל וחסד לאומים חטאת כל צדקה 'שעובדי אלילים עושין חטאת היא להם וכו'.

תפו 'תפלה כא"ל הקול קול יעקב אין לך תפלה נשמעת שלא יהיה בה מזרעו של יעקב that is, the holy and blessed GOD has not wished to make any other people worthy of these three crowns except the Israelites. As regards the Law, the matter stands as our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have said: A son of Noah (that is, one who is not a Jew, for all people outside of Judaism are called by the Jews children of Noah) who studies in the Law is guilty of death, etc. As regards almsgiving, the matter stands as is said in (Prov 14:34): Almsgiving exalts the people; and our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have interpreted this to mean that this refers to the Israelites. (And concerning the words) But the mercy of the nations is sin; (they have turned it so that) all almsgiving which the idolaters give is a sin for them, etc. As regards prayer, the matter stands as our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have said (from Gen 27:22): The voice is Jacob's voice. There is no prayer that is heard unless someone from the seed of Jacob is among those who offer the prayer. But how can it be said here that a Jew's prayer is heard, when they, as has been demonstrated above on pp. 581 and 582, by their own admission, are not heard by God, because they do not know the Schem hammechorasch.

They also do not consider Christians and other peoples worthy enough to receive alms from them. On this matter, the book Schulchan aruch, in the section Jóre déa, fol. 230. col. 1, numero 254, reads as follows: אסור לישראל ליטול צדקה מן העכ"ם בפרהסיא ואם אינו יכול לחיות בצדקה של ישראל ואינו יכול ליטלה מהעכ"ם בצנעה הרי זה מותר : מלך או שר גוי ששלח ממון לישראל לצדקה אין מחזירין אותו משום שלום מלכות אלא נוטלין ממנו ונותן לעניי עכ"ם בסתר כדי שלא ישמע המלך : that is, it is forbidden for an Israelite to receive alms from an idolatrous person publicly; but if he cannot live from the alms of Israelites and cannot receive them from idolaters in secret, then it is permitted to him. When a heathen (or Christian) king or prince sends money to an Israelite as alms, it is not returned to him for the sake of the peace one wishes to maintain with the king (or prince), but rather one accepts it and gives it secretly to the idolatrous poor, so that the king may not learn of it. This, however, is taken from the tractate Báva báthra, cited shortly before, fol. 10. col. 2., where it is reported that the mother of Sapor, king of Persia, had sent four hundred pennies (each of which was worth half a quarter-thaler) to Rabbi Ammi, but he did not accept them; when she sent them to Rabba, however, he accepted them in order to maintain peace with the queen.

On the other hand, Jews are permitted to give alms to a Christian; however, this is done not out of love or compassion toward that person, but only for the sake of maintaining peace. Therefore, the following is taught in the book Jad chasaka, in the first part, fol. 40, col. 2, cap. 10, §. 5: מפרנסי עניי עכ"ם עם עניי

That is: one feeds the poor idolaters together with the poor Israelites, for the sake of peace. Likewise, one does not prevent the poor idolaters from gleaning the fallen ears of grain, nor from gathering the fruit that has remained standing at the edges of the fields (concerning which, see Lev 19:9), for the sake of peace. Something on this subject is also to be found in Jalkut chadasch, fol. 58, col. 4, numero 11, under the title Gemiluth chasadim, and in the book Schulchan aruch, in the section Jore dea, fol. 226, col. 2, numero 251, §. 1; and this is taken from the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 61, col. 1, where the following is also added: ומבקרין חולי נכרים עם חולי ישראל וקוברין מתי נכרים עם מתי ישראל מפני דרכי שלום that is: one also visits the sick among the foreigners (or Gentiles) together with the sick among the Israelites, and buries the dead of the foreigners together with the dead of the Israelites, for the sake of peace.

That it does not happen out of compassion when they assist Christians with alms or otherwise do them a favor is evident from the book Jad chasaka, in the first part, fol. 40. col. 1, in the 10th chapter, §. 1, where the following is taught: that is: It is forbidden to have compassion on the idolaters, because (Deut 7:2) it is said: You shall show them no favor. So too in the Medrasch Tillim, fol. 26. col. 4, and in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Psalms, fol. 102. col. 4, numero 727, on the words of Ps 36:11 [Extend your goodness to those who know you], it is read thus: אמר רבי יצחק אל תהי מושך חסד לאומות that is: Rabbi Isaac has said: Show the nations of the world no goodness or mercy. The like is also to be found in Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon's Sepher mizvoth, fol. 85. col. 3, where it is written: מצוה נ' הוזהרנו מלחמול כלל על עובדי זרה that is: The fiftieth commandment is that (Holy Scripture) warns us that we are not to have any compassion whatsoever on the idolaters. From this it is thus plainly to be seen that the Jews do nothing good for a Christian or any other person out of sincere goodwill, nor show them any favor, and that everything they do happens out of sheer hypocrisy, so that they may obtain the goodwill of Christians or other people.

Against this, the Jews might object that I am doing them an injustice by accusing them of hypocrisy, since hypocrisy is so strictly forbidden among them. For in the book Reschith chochma, fol. 412. col. 1., in the 16th chapter, under the title Or olam, from the Talmudic tractate Sota, fol. 41. col. 2., it is written thus: אמר רבי אלעזר כל אדם שיש בו חנופה נופל בגיהנם that is: Every person in whom there is hypocrisy falls into hell. Further, it stands in the same place: לעולם יפרוש אדם מן החנופה. לפי שהיא שקולה כנגד עבודת זרה וגילוי עריות ושפיכות דמים, that is: A person should at all times keep away from hypocrisy, since it is held to be equal to idolatry, fornication, and bloodshed. Something equivalent to this is also to be found in the book Lef arje, fol. 78. col. 2. And in the book Brandspiegel, in the 52nd chapter, fol. 189. col. 2., one reads: עס איז קיין גרעסער זינד ווען אן דען זייטן חניפה טרייבט וגו' that is: It is a great sin when one practices hypocrisy toward people. Likewise, in the aforementioned passage of the tractate Sota, fol. 41. col. 2., it is taught: כל אדם שיש בו חנופה אפילו עוברין שבמעי: that is: A hypocritical person is cursed even by the children who are still in their mothers' wombs. And further things of the same kind are reported there, as well as at fol. 42. col. 1. And in the Jalkut Schimoni on Job, it is taught at fol. 149. col. 3. numero 906.: ארבע 'כתות אין מקבלין פני שכינה כת: חנפים וכת שקרים וכת מספרי לשון הרע וכת לצים that is: Four groups do not come before the face of God: the group of hypocrites, the group of mockers, the group of liars, and the group of slanderers. Beyond the above, in the Sepher mizvoth gadol, fol. 58. col. 3., under the title Hilchoth genefa ugezela, one reads: גרסינן בפרק גיד הנשה אמר שמואל אסור לגנוב דעת הבריות ואפילו דעת הגוי that is: We learn in the seventh chapter of the Talmudic tractate Chullin (fol. 49. col. 1.) that Rabbi Samuel said it is forbidden to steal the opinion of people, and indeed even the opinion of the Gojim, or heathens, that is, to cause them to believe this or that which is nonetheless not the case, as hypocrites are accustomed to do.

To this, however, I reply that this prohibition of hypocrisy is to be understood solely in such a way that no Jew should behave hypocritically toward another Jew, and that consequently it is not at all intended to teach that one must also conduct oneself honestly toward Christians. I prove this from the fact that hypocrisy toward Christians and other peoples is permitted to them, for in the book Ir gibborim, fol. 36. col. 1. numero 55. it is written as follows: מותר להחניף לרשע מפני היראה כדאיתא בפרקי 'דחכי אלעזר אמר יעקב לעשו: כה אמר עבדך יעקב אמר הקב"ה ליעקב עשית קדש חול אמר לו מחניף אני לרשע שלא יהרגני מכאן אמרו מחנפים לרשעים בעולם הזה מפני דרכי שלום. ואמר ר' שמעון מותר להחניף לרשעים בעולם הזה שנ' לא יאמר עוד לנבל נדיב ולכלי לא יאמר שוע מכלל דבעולם הזה שרי: that is, it is permitted to behave hypocritically toward a wicked person out of fear (which one has of him), as it is written in the chapters of Rabbi Eliezer (in the 37th chapter). When Jacob had said to Esau (Gen 32:4), "Thus your servant Jacob has spoken," the holy and blessed God said to Jacob: "You have made something holy into something unholy" (that is, you have defiled yourself, who are holy, by calling yourself Esau's servant); but he answered Him: "I am only flattering the wicked man so that he does not kill me." Hence it is said: one flatters the wicked in this world for the sake of peace. Rabbi Simeon also said: it is permitted to practice hypocrisy toward the wicked in this world, as it is said (Isa 32:5): "A fool shall no longer be called a prince, nor a miser called generous." On this matter Rabbi Bechai also writes in his book Cad bakkémach, fol. 30. col. 1. as follows: שיתנהג: אחד והוא מותרת בענין אדם עם הרשע בדרך מוסר ויכבדו ויעמוד מפניו ויאמר לו שהוא אוהב אותו זה מצינו שהוא מותר כשהוא צריך אליו ומפני היראה שכן מצינו ביעקב שאמר לעשו הרשע כי על כן ראיתי פניך וגו' ואמר רבי יוחנן אמר מותר להחניף את הרשעים בעולם הזה שנ' כי על כן ראיתי פניך וגו' that is, we find that flattery is permitted in one respect, namely that a person should conduct himself toward a wicked man in a courteous manner, honor him, rise before him, and tell him that he loves him. We find that this is permitted when one has need of him and fears him. For thus we find it in the case of Jacob, who said to the wicked Esau (as is to be read in Gen 33:10): "For I have seen your face as one sees the face of God." Rabbi Jochanan has said: it is permitted to flatter the wicked in this world, as it is said (Gen 33:10): "For I have seen your face," etc. The same is likewise to be found in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 42. col. 2. in the Parashah Vajischlach, and in the Jalkut Schimóni on Isaiah, fol. 47. col. 3. numero 302, and in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 21. col. 2. in the Parashah Vajéra, and in the book Orchóth Zaddikim fol. 15. col. 2. in the 24th chapter, as well as in the Talmudic tractate Sóta, fol. 41. col. 2.

Regarding the honor which one should show to the wicked, according to the aforementioned teaching of the book Cad bakkémach, fol. 30. col. 1., it is written in the mentioned passage of the book Orchóth Zaddikim, fol. 15. col. 2. as follows: המכבד הרשעים הבשעים מחמת היד שלום לא ידבר טוב הרשע ולא ינהג בכבודו: על דרך שיחשבו בני אדם שהוא נכבד בעיניו ואין לחלוק לו כבוד אלא כדרך בני אדם המכבדים העשירים בעבור כי צלחה ידם ולא מפני שהן ערכם ואף בזה יש חטא ואשמרה כי לא הותר לכבד הרשעים אלא מחמת מורא שירא שיזיק לו הרשע ויגרום לו הפסד בזמן שיד הרשעים תקיפה על כן הותר דאס לכבודו דרך שמכבדין בני אדם בעלי זרוע אך לא יחשבו ולא ידבר דאס: that is, he who honors the wicked for the sake of peace shall speak nothing good of the wicked, and shall also conduct himself in the honor he shows him in such a way that people cannot think that the wicked man is held in high esteem by him. He shall likewise show such a one no honor other than in the manner in which one honors the rich, because they are prosperous, but not because they are otherwise so worthy: although even in this a sin is committed, for it is not permitted to honor the wicked except on account of fear, in that one fears the wicked man will cause him harm and bring about some loss, when the wicked have the upper hand; therefore it is permitted to honor such a one in the same way that people are accustomed to honor those who are powerful. He shall, however, speak nothing good of such a wicked man in the presence of other people.

Since Christians are regarded by the Jews as idolatrous and godless people, as will be clearly demonstrated below in the 16th chapter of this first part, it is also permitted to them to use hypocrisy toward such people, and to honor them only with forced gestures and words; and they know how to practice this so masterfully toward those of whom they have need, or whom they must fear, that many a Christian regards such a Jew, who gives him the smoothest words and knows how to present himself as very humble and courteous, as an honest and refined person. He will, however, certainly be shamefully deceived in his opinion; for even though the Jew's false tongue gives smooth words, and the outward gestures indicate nothing but good, yet in the heart there is nothing hidden but poison and irreconcilable hatred, and it can be said of them from Jer 12:6: "Trust them not, even when they speak in a friendly manner with you." And from Pss 55:22: "Their mouth is smoother than butter, and yet they have war in mind; their words are gentler than oil, and yet they are drawn swords." Which last words can very fittingly be applied to them, for they wish to make war upon all Christians at the coming of their supposed Messiah and to shed their blood, as can be seen in detail below in the 14th chapter of the second part. How then can one expect anything good from such arch-enemies, who daily harbor an ardent desire to defile their godless hands with the innocent blood of Christians, or hope for an honest and upright disposition in them, even when they present themselves as entirely friendly and let the sheepskin show on the outside, while inwardly they are ravening wolves, and they are called in Isa 10:6 a hypocritical people? Their Talmud likewise permits them to deceive someone with flattering words; as it is written in the Tractate Báva báthra fol. 123. col. 1.: אין עם נבר תתבר : ומי שרי להו לצדיקי לכנויי ברמאותא : ועם עקש תתפל : that is, "Is it then permitted to the righteous to deal deceitfully (with the godless)? Yes, certainly (for it is written in 2 Sam 22:27:) With the pure you show yourself pure, and with the perverse you show yourself perverse."

Since now, as shown by the foregoing, Jews are permitted to behave hypocritically toward Christians, we must also consider what is to be made of the greeting they customarily give them. In the Talmudic tractate Berachoth it is written at fol. 17, col. 1 as follows: מרגלא בפומי דאבבי לעולם יהא אדם ערום ביראה מענה רך משיב חמה ומרבה שלום עם אחיו ועם קרוביו ועם כל אדם ואפילו עם נכרי בשוק כדי שיהא אהוב למעלה ונחמד למטה ויהא מקובל על הבריות אמרו עליו על רבן יוחנן : בן זכאי שלא הקדימו אדם שלום מעולם ואפילו נכרי בשוק that is, It was a pearl in the mouth of Abaye (when he said:) A person should always be cunning in the fear (of God, since it is written in Prov 15:1:) A soft answer turns away wrath, and he should greet his brothers and relatives, as well as all people, and even a stranger (that is, one who is not a Jew,) in the street, so that he may be beloved above (in heaven) and esteemed below (on earth), and be pleasing to all creatures. It is said of Rabbi Jochanan, the son of Saccai, that no person, not even a stranger, ever greeted him first in the street. So too is it read in the fourth chapter of Pirke Avoth: רבי מתיא בן חרש אומר הוי מקדים בשלום כל אדם : that is, Rabbi Mathja, the son of Charasch, says: Greet every person first.

From this, one might conjecture that the Jews are commanded to greet Christians and other peoples with a sincere heart; but the matter is entirely otherwise, for their greeting does not come from a good heart, but is done solely to the end that they may obtain the favor of Christians and live peaceably with them, so that nothing adverse may befall them from those same people. I demonstrate this from the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 61. col. 1., where the following is taught: מחזיקין ידי נכרים בשביעי אבל לא ידי ישראל ושואלין בשלום מפני : דרכי שלום : that is, one strengthens the hands of strangers (that is, of the Gójim) on the seventh day (that is, one helps them and lends them a hand,) but not the hands of the Israelites; likewise one greets them for the sake of peace. This is also to be found in the book Menoráth hammáor, fol. 86. col. 3. 4., in the third chapter, under the title Kelál Scheni; Perek Schelisch, ner Schisch, chélek rischon. So too it is written in Rabbi Mordecai Jaffe's book Lefúsch málchuth, numero 148. §. 10., in the section called Lefúsch atéret sabáf, as follows: מן הדין היה אסור ליתן שלום לגוי מפני שהשלום שמו של הקב"ה ולא יטיל שם שמים על הגוי אבל : אח"כ מותר לשאול בשלום מפני דרכי שלום : that is, it ought rightly to be forbidden to give a Goi or heathen the Schalóm, that is, peace (that is, to greet him, for Schalóm among the Hebrews also signifies a greeting), since Schalóm, or peace, is a name of God, and one ought not to impart the name of God to them; yet our sages, of blessed memory, have said that it is permitted to greet them (and to wish them peace) for the sake of peace. From all of this the purpose of their greeting is plainly to be seen, namely that it occurs only for the preservation of peace and out of pure hypocrisy. Hence it is also taught in the book Sohar fol. 59. col. 1. as follows: גדול השלום שלא נתן בחלקן של רשעים כי שלום אין זה חלקו : ואסור ליתן לו שלום כי אם בלשון לעז וגו' ר"ל שאסור לומר שמו ית' שלום לרשעים : that is, the Schalom, or peace, is a great matter, which has not been given to the wicked as their portion, for peace does not befit him (the wicked one); and it is forbidden to wish him peace in any other way than in a foreign tongue (by which all languages other than Hebrew are understood, etc.) That is, it is forbidden to say the name of God, Schalóm or peace, to the wicked. On this same point, an equivalent teaching is also found in the Tosephtoth of the aforementioned Talmudic tractate Gittin, fol. 62. col. 1.

That there must be no sincerity in their greetings, they learn from their godless Talmud, in the last-mentioned passage of the tractate Gittin, where it reads as follows: אין כופלים שלום לנכרי רב חסדא מקדים ויהיב להו שלמא רב כהנא : אמר ליה שלמא למר : that is, one does not greet a stranger (or Goi) twice in succession. Rav Chasda greeted him first. Rav Cabana said to him (namely to the Goi): May the Lord have peace, or be greeted. For Rav Cabana did not understand his greeting to mean that the peace should concern that Goi who came to him, and that he should be greeted by him; rather, by "the Lord" he meant his teacher, and wished him well-being and prosperity in this manner, as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi himself explains in his commentary on this passage, when he states: לא היה מתכוין לברכו אלא לכו היה לרבו : that is, his intention was not to bless him (and to wish the Goi well), but rather his thoughts were directed toward his teacher, which is also interpreted in this way in the Tosephoth on the same passage. Thus the aforementioned Rav Cabana, with his false greeting, will have deceived many a person, just as a rabbi in Amsterdam also sought to deceive me with these very same words.

Such hypocrisy is also taught in the Jalkut Rubeni gadol, fol. 62. col. 2., in the Parascha Vajischlach, from the Sohar, where, concerning the words (Gen 33:3) And he went before them, and bowed himself to the ground seven times, the following is written: האיד סגיד ליה לההוא רשע והא כתיב לא תשתחוה לאל נכר ועשו כאל אחר הוי אלא הוא עבר לפיהם שכינתא נקרא הוא הוי הוא עבר לפניהם. וסגיד יעקב לשכינה דלא כתיב וישתחו לעשו וכו' ומן מצינו בדוד שנתן שלום לנבל וכו' לנבל וכו' להק"ב בה נתן דוד שלום ולא לנבל, that is: How could he (namely Jacob) have bowed before that wicked one (Esau) and shown him honor? For it is written (Ps 81:10): You shall not worship a foreign god, nor bow before him. And Esau is indeed like another (or foreign) god. The words "And he went before them" are therefore to be understood as meaning that the Divine Majesty is here called "He," so that it was the Divine Majesty that passed before them, and Jacob bowed before God (and not before Esau); for it is not written that he bowed before Esau, etc. Thus we also find concerning David (1 Sam 25:5) that he had Nabal greeted, etc. But David did not greet Nabal; he greeted God. In this manner, Nabal too was deceived by David, in that he supposed David had sent him a greeting, when in fact, according to this Jewish madness, the greeting was not meant for him at all. And the Jews will know well how to conduct themselves in their greetings to Christians according to these examples, so that many a Christian is led astray by them in this fashion.

But this is still not enough for the wicked Jews; rather, they also curse, disgrace, and revile a Christian in place of what is supposed to be a greeting, as is shown by the convert Friedrich Samuel Brenz in his Jüdischer abgestreifter Schlangenbalg ("Jewish Shed Snakeskin"), p. 18, in the fourth chapter, where he writes as follows: When a Christian enters a Jew's house, the Jew says ארוור הבא ôrur hábbo, that is, "cursed be he who comes"; or he also says Lot welcome, and says it so quickly that the Christian cannot notice whether he said God or Lot: for he does not consider the Christian worthy enough that he should use the name of God toward him. He also greets him with שד shed welcome, that is, welcome to you in the devil's name. So courteously does the Jew receive Christians. And p. 19, shortly thereafter, he further reports: When the Christian then leaves the Jew's house again, the Jew says: לשם שדים ומלאכי Lech leschéim schédim umaláche chabbólo, that is, "Go hence in the name of the devils and of the angel of destruction": &c. He further reports in the same place: When a Jew enters a Christian's house, and the Christian receives him or bids him welcome, the Jew in turn says, Lot thank you. This is that which Friedrich Samuel Brenz charges the Jews with.

Regarding the curse that the Jews use in place of a greeting, which he mentions, his account is confirmed in the little book Schévet Jehúda, fol. 36. col. 2., in which one reads that Nicolaus Valentinus addressed a king in Spain as follows: שמעתי עליך מלכנו שרצון חכמתך לצאת למלחמה על אויבך ולמה ילך אדוננו אל האויבים אשר מחוץ ויניח אותם שבפנים והם היהודים אשר גדלה שנאתם אלינו וכתוב בספריהם שאסור לתת לנו שלום ומפי המכיר אותם שמעתי שהנוצרי אין ראוי שיקבל מן היהודי אלא באמצע ופירושו כי כשהגוי בא לעומת היהודי או אומר על הנוצרי בא בשעה רעה והתקרב אצלו אומר לו שלום עליך אדוני האל יחיך ובהתרחק ממנו אומר לו לך כקורח that is, I have heard of Your Royal Majesty that you are minded to go to war against your enemies; but why would you march against foreign enemies and let those within the land go free, namely the Jews, whose hatred toward us is great, and in whose books it is written that it is forbidden to greet us? I have also learned from one who knows them well that (they teach) a Christian is worthy of being greeted only in a middling manner, which is to be understood as follows: when the Goi (or Christian) is coming toward the Jew (and is still on the way), he says to him, "May you arrive at an unlucky hour"; but when he draws near to him, he says to him, "My lord be greeted, and may God let him live"; and when he departs from him again, he says to him, "Go to hell like Korach, and into the sea like Pharaoh."

That such a godless practice must exist among the Jews is evident from the Sepher chasidim, numerò 51, fol. 12, col. 2, where Rabbi Jehuda writes as follows: אסור להנהיג עצמו בדברי חלקות ופיתוי ולא יהיה אחד בפה ואחד בלב אלא תוכו כפיו והענין שבלב הוא הדבר שבפה ואסור לגנוב דעת הבריות ואפילו דעתו של נכרי ואותן שמחנפין את הנכרים בשעת שאלת שלומם והנכרי סבור שאמר לו טובה חוטאים כי אין לך גניבת דעת גדול מזה: that is, it is forbidden to employ flattering and seductive words, and there shall not be one thing in the mouth and another in the heart, but rather the inward part shall agree with the mouth; and that which one holds in the heart shall also be spoken with the mouth: and it is forbidden to steal the minds of men, yes, even the mind of a stranger (that is, of one who is not a Jew), (that is, to make him believe something that in reality is otherwise.) For this reason, those who revile (or despise) strangers when they greet them commit sin, inasmuch as such a stranger supposes that something good has been said (and wished) to him, for there is no greater theft of the mind than this. Certainly, had Rabbi Jebuda not known that such a godless practice was prevalent among the Jews, he would not have forbidden it. As for the fact that he forbids dissimulation and hypocrisy even toward Christians, whereas the same is permitted to Jews in the Talmud and their most distinguished books, as has been reported above in this chapter, he held in this matter a wholly singular opinion, in which he departed from the evil Jewish manner. I very much doubt, however, whether any Jew will give his approval to him in this.

Regarding the aforementioned words Sched willkommen, or "devil welcome," with which the Jews are accustomed to receive a Christian in their homes, Antonius Margarita writes about this as well in his work on the Jewish faith, in the third chapter, paginâ 18, as follows: the German Jews have the custom that when they receive a Christian, they do not say "Be welcome to God," but rather שד Sched willkommen, that is, "devil, be welcome." The very same thing is also confirmed in the converted Ferdinand Hessen's "Judengeissel" in the eleventh chapter of the third part. They thus corrupt the word, saying Sched, which means a devil; and I myself was previously welcomed in this manner by a Jew in his house in the Jewish lane here in Frankfurt, so that there is absolutely no reason to doubt this matter. That they also say Lot willkommen instead of "God welcome," I believe to be entirely certain, for it was shown in the immediately preceding passage that it is forbidden to them to use the name of God toward a Goi, and for this reason they quickly say Lot in place of "Gott," so that one should not notice it. It may also well be, however, that the word Lot, when they use it in this manner, is meant to signify "cursed," for in the Chaldean language לוט Lut means to curse, and in the Talmud it signifies one who is accursed: which is all the more credible because Friedrich Samuel Brentz, as was mentioned previously, reports that they say to a Christian who comes to them, Orur hábho, that is, "Cursed be he who comes." Thus Lot willkommen would mean as much as "Cursed one, be welcome," just as they say "Devil, be welcome." As for the aforementioned Friedrich Samuel Brentz's report that the godless Jews say to those who depart from their houses that they should go in the devil's name, I can attest to this from my own experience; for a Jew here in Frankfurt, after he had accompanied me to the door of his house with every show of courtesy, had scarcely let me walk four steps from the house before he carelessly uttered these godless words against me, and said quite clearly, so that I was able to hear them: לך לשם של שדים Lech leschéim schel schédim, that is, "Go hence in the name of the devils." However, although I subsequently came to the villain's house many times on account of certain Hebrew books that I desired, I gave him not the slightest indication that I had heard it. Now, since that man always showed himself friendly and courteous toward me whenever I came to him, and yet cursed me in such a godless manner when he believed I would not hear it, the shameful Jewish hypocrisy and their frivolous disposition toward us Christians is all the more apparent from this. This hardened people believes it is not well done if they do not curse us in every possible way and wish us all manner of evil, as will be demonstrated in detail in the second chapter of the second part.

It was also shown shortly before, from the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 62. col. 1., that the following is taught there: אין כופלין שלום לנכרי, that is, one does not greet a stranger (or Goi) twice; and in the aforementioned book Lefüsch málchuth, numero 148. §. 10., in that section which is called Lefüsch atéreth sáhaf, it is also written thus: אסור לכפול לו שלום לעולם כדי שלא להזכיר עליו שם שמים ב' פעמים לפיכך טוב להקדים לו שלום כדי שלא יתחיל הגוי ויצטרך לכפול לו כשישאל הגוי בשלומו יצטרך להשיב לו שלום ואם כן יצטרך הוא לחזור ולשאל בשלום הגויים גם כן לומר שלום עליך שכך הוא מנהג העולם כדרך ארץ, that is: it is always forbidden to greet him (namely the Goi) twice (in succession), so that one need not invoke the name of God twice on his account; for this reason it is better to greet him first, so that the Goi does not begin, and the Jew is not compelled to greet him twice; for when the Goi greets him, he is obliged to return the greeting; and if that is the case, he (the Jew) will be compelled to greet the Goi in return as well, and to say to him, peace be upon you (that is, be welcome), for this is the common custom of the world. That the Jews observe and keep this commandment toward Christians, I have myself noted among them on many occasions. Once, when I was at the home of the aforementioned Jew, who had told me that I should go in the devil's name, visiting his house in the evening, and when I was departing and had wished him a good evening in his sitting room, he thanked me and wished me a good evening as well, and accompanied me to his door, where I wished him a good evening once more and then gradually went on my way; but because he had not thanked me a second time, his maidservant immediately asked him why he had not done so; to which he replied that I had surely heard it well enough: אין כופלין שלום לגוי, En cófelin schalom legói, that is, one does not greet a Goi twice.

The Jews are also accustomed to displaying their abominable hatred toward Christians even further, in that they frequently, when they see a Christian, utter the word כפרה Cappará or Cappóro, which means an atonement, or the words מיתה משונה mitha (or misa) meschúnna, which signify a sudden death, or indeed all of these words together, against that person, thereby wishing that such a Christian might be a sacrifice for their sins and might die a swift death. All converted Jews attest to this unanimously, and it is to be found in Antonius

Margarita's book on the Jewish faith, in the fifth chapter, paginâ 71, where he writes: In this manner (which he has described in the preceding section) they also commonly curse the Christians, and say to them כפרה מיתה משונה Cappóro, míso meschúnno. The convert Ferdinandus likewise confirms this in the first part of his Jewish Scourge, in the fourth chapter, when he addresses the Jews as follows: First, you call them (namely the Christians) Gójim, that is, an unworthy and despised people. Or, if you call someone by the name Peter or Johannes, you say these words: Cappóro, míso meschúnno, which is to say, Johannes must be sacrificed for your sins. The convert Friedrich Samuel Brenz also writes of this in his Jewish Serpent-Skin, paginâ 12, in the third chapter, as follows: When they (the Jews) name a Christian, they always append these words to it: Térefá or Cappóro. The word Térefá means unclean, and the word Cappóro (means) that the same person shall be a sacrifice for his sin. In the fourth chapter, paginâ 19, he also reports that when a Jew comes into a Christian's house and the Christian gives him harsh words, he says, as a רשע róscho (that is, as a godless person is this one) to Cappóro, that is, the scoundrel shall be a sacrifice for his sin. I myself have often heard the word Cappóro used by them in this manner, and it is no wonder at all that they employ it in such a way against Christians, since they hold that the Christians must bear all their sins, as will be demonstrated below in the second chapter of the second part.

What they are accustomed to say when they see many Christians or other peoples gathered together is to be found in the book Toledóth Adam vechávva, where at fol. 104. col. 1. in the second part, under the title Nathíf Schelóscha éser, the following is written: ה'רואה אוכלוסי ישראל אומר ברוך חכם הרזים פירוש ס: רבא. וכול 'אומרה אומרי העולם אומר בושא אפכם מאד תפנה יולדתכם הנה אחרית גוים. וכול 'אומרה אומרי העולם אומר בושא אפכם מאד תפנה יולדתכם הנה אחרית גוים : מְדַבֵּר צִיָּה נִעְרָה : that is, whoever sees a crowd of Israelites says: blessed be He who is wise in secrets, which signifies sixty times ten thousand. But if he sees a crowd of the peoples of the world, he says (from Jer 50:12): "Your mother is greatly ashamed; she who bore you is brought to confusion: the end of the nations is a wilderness, dry and desolate." This is also to be found in the book Col bo fol. 98. col. 3. numero 87. It may also well be true what the convert Dieterich Schwab writes in his Jüdischer Deckmantel in the 8th chapter of the first part, when he reports: when the Jews see a crowd of Christians or their children assembled, they say: "See how harbe mamserim, what a crowd of whoreson children these are, a pegira or déver, a pestilence upon the Kelofim dogs; there are indeed baavónos harábbim of them, God have mercy, dajénu, enough." By this their hostile disposition is once again brought to light.

When a Christian, or any other person who is not a Jew, dies, they say mockingly that he has "gepegert" (i.e., croaked/carcassed), as Samuel Friedrich

Brentz indicates in the fourth chapter of his Abgestreiffter Jüdischer Schlangenbalg (Stripped Jewish Snakeskin), p. 17. In the Hebrew language, פֶּגֶר Péger means a carcass, and Elias writes about it in his Tischbi, fol. 70, col. 1, under the radice or root word פָּגַר Pagár, as follows: פֶּל לָשׁוֹן פֶּגֶר הַנִּמְצָא בַּמִּקְרָא אֵינוֹ בָּא רַק עַל גְּוֹת: אָדָם מֵת וְלֹא עַל שְׂאֵר בְּעָלֵי חַיִּים רַק בַּמָּקוֹם אֶחָד וְהוּא נִיֶּרֶד הָעֵיט עַל הַפְּגָרִים שֶׁהֵם הָיוּ פְּגָרֵי בְּהֵמוֹת וְעוֹף דַּע כִּי כָּל לָשׁוֹן פֶּגֶר לֹא נִמְצָא רַק עַל פְּגָרֵי אָנָּשִׁים וְשָׂעִים לָכֵן אֵין מִזְכִּירוֹן פְּגָרֵי בְּהֵמוֹת וְעוֹף דַּע כִּי כָּל לָשׁוֹן פֶּגֶר, that is, the word Péger, wherever it is found in Scripture, means nothing other than the body of a deceased person, and is used of the remaining living animals in only one place (namely Gen 15:11), where one reads: "And the birds of prey came down upon the pegarim," that is, upon the carcasses, which were carcasses of cattle. Furthermore, know that the word Péger is found only in reference to the dead bodies of wicked men, and therefore it is mentioned only in connection with the death of the wicked. From this word Péger the Jews form a verb, namely pegern, which means to die and to become a dead body or carcass, and it is evident from the words of Elias that the Jews regard those of whom they say that they have "gepepert" as wicked people. Hence the word פְּגָרִים pegarim, that is, carcasses, is also applied to Christians who are buried in churches, as can be found in the old Nizzáchon, p. 242, because they regard Christians collectively as wicked people. The word *pegere*n, however, is found in the German-Hebrew booklet called Sepher gelilóth, gelilóth erez Jisrael, where it is written on the sixth leaf, col. 1, that the grave of Ezra had formerly been broken open, and when a shepherd lay down to sleep upon it, it appeared to him in a dream that Ezra said to him: I, Ezra the Scribe, lie buried here; go to the Jews so that they may take me away from this place and lay me in another place; and if the prince of the city will not permit it, tell him that the entire city will "auspeperen" (be wiped out like carcasses). The shepherd then went to the Jews and told them, and they went with him to the prince, whereupon the shepherd recounted to the prince what had happened to him; but the prince would not allow him to be taken out of his land. Shortly thereafter a plague came upon the place, and nearly half of the idolatrous people had been "wegpepert" (carried off like carcasses). The same account is also found in the book Zeéna ureéna, fol. 76, col. 2, in the Parascha Scholách lechá. In the Sépher Juchasin, however, fol. 131, col. 2, the Hebrew form in the conjugation Niphal, נִפְגַּר Nipbgar, is found in its place with the same meaning, where it is reported of a Sadducee by the name of Ben Altiras: וְתַפְגַּר בֶּן אֶל תִּירָאס: לַגִּהֵינִם, that is, "And Ben Altiras has 'gepepert' into hell." Otherwise the Jews use this word of cattle when they die; accordingly it stands in the Maase Buch, in the 155th chapter: אֵיךְ הָאֵב אֵיין שׁוֹף הוּט אֵיין יוֹנֵס לַעֲמֵלִין גִּיהָאט חוּב 'דו שׁוֹף חוּ: גִּלְיִיד גִּפְגֶּרֶט: that is, "I had a sheep that had a young little lamb, and the sheep had straightway 'gepepert'."

Wicked Jews cannot leave dead Christians or other peoples without insult either, but must also display their hatred toward them even when they lie in their graves. Therefore it stands in the book Col bo, fol. 78. col. 2. numero 87. and in the book Toledóth Adam vechávva, fol. 104. col. 1. 2.: הרואה קברי אומות העולם אומר בושה אמכם מאד חפרה יולדתכם וגו' ויש מי שאומרים מתים כל יחיו רפאים כל יקומו וגו' הרואה קברי ישראל אומר יחיו מתיך נבלותי יקומו חו that is: Whoever sees the graves of the peoples of the world says (from Jer 50:12): "Your mother is greatly ashamed; she who bore you has been put to shame, etc." But some say (from Isa 26:14): "They are dead and shall not live again; they have perished and shall not rise again." Whoever, however, sees the graves of the Israelites says (from Isa 26:19): "Your dead shall live, and my dead bodies shall rise again." And this is taken from the Talmudic tractate Berachoth fol. 58. col. 2.

Chapter XVI.

Since in the preceding chapter the great hatred which the Jews bear toward Christians has been sufficiently demonstrated, one can easily conclude from this that they also give them very contemptible and mocking names. But so that the gracious reader may know all the names by which they customarily call us, I will indicate both the good and the bad ones, so that whenever one of them occurs either in conversation among Jews or in their books, one may know with certainty whether we are meant by it or not. Without further circumlocution, however, proceeding to the matter itself: they call us, first of all, נוצרים Nózerim, that is, Nazarenes. Concerning this, the following is written in Eliae Tischbi, fol. 59, col. 1: הנוצרים אומרים שישו נולד בבית לחם ונתגדל בעיר הנקראה בלשונם נצ'ורת ובלשוננו נצר וגו' ולכן קוראים אנחנו הגוים המאמינים בדעתו נוצרים, that is: The Nazarenes (or Christians) say that Jesus was born in Bethlehem and was raised in the city which in their language is called Nazareth, but in our language Nezer, etc. For this reason we call those Gentiles (or peoples) who believe in his teaching Nazarenes. Rabbi Abraham Perizol likewise writes in his book Maggen Abraham, in the 59th chapter, as follows: נתברר כי זאת האומה נקראת נוצרים על שם ישו הנוצרי, that is: It is clear that this people is called Nazarenes after the name of Jesus the Nazarene. We can well accept being called by this name, for Christians were already called thus in the time of the holy Apostles, as can be seen in Acts 24:5. Abarbenel, however, teaches in his commentary on Jer 4:16, on the words "There come Nózerim (that is, guardians, or according to others, destroyers) from a distant land," the following: למה קרא את הרומיים נצרים הוא לפי שנצר הוא מענין חרבן וכבר הביא רד"ק בשרשיו והביא ממנו ונצורי ישראל להשיב כעיר נצורה ונצורת לב שהם כולן ענין חרבן ומפני שהיו הרומיים כובשי ממלכות מחריבי ארצות לכן קראם נצרים כלומר מחריבים מצורף למה שיורה עליו הנראה שצפה הנביא ברוח הקדש שהרומיים עתידים להאמין בישוע הנוצרי, that is: Why did he (namely the prophet) call the Romans Nózerim? Because Nazár also means to destroy, and Rabbi David Kimchi in his lexicon (which is called Sepher Scharaschim) cited the words of Isa 49:6, ונצורי ישראל להשיב, Unczuré Jisraël lebaschif, that is: And to restore the destroyed of Israel; and the words of Isa 1:8, Keir nezúra, that is: Like a devastated city; as well as the words of Prov 7:10, Unezuráth lef, that is: And she who was disordered in heart; all in this sense, all of which carry the meaning of destruction. Since the Romans had subjugated kingdoms and laid waste to lands, he therefore called them Nózerim, that is, destroyers. To this is added, moreover, that in all likelihood the prophet saw through the Holy Spirit that the Romans would believe in Jesus the Nazarene and would therefore be called Nózerim or Nazarenes. He teaches the very same thing in his aforementioned commentary on Jer 31:6, fol. 130, col. 2, and in the book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 37, col. 1. In the commentary of Rabbi Moshe bar Maimon on the Mishnah of the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, we are called, at fol. 78, col. 4, אומה נוצרית, Umma Nózerith, that is, the Nazarene people, as can be seen in the Talmud printed in Amsterdam. An individual Christian, however, is called Nózeri.

Second, they call us רומיים Romijim, that is, Romans. Therefore Abarbanel writes in the book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 36, col. 4: הנצרים הם הרומיים בני אדום, that is, the Nazarenes (or Christians) are the Romans, the children of Edom. And shortly thereafter he teaches, concerning the words of Deut 28:49, "The LORD will send a nation against you from afar," as follows: פירשוהו המפרשים: כולם על הרומיים הנקראים היום אצלנו נצרים, that is, all commentators have interpreted this as referring to the Romans, who are called by us today Nózerim, that is, Christians. And in fol. 59, col. 4 of the aforementioned book he states: הגלות האחרון הזה שמו הרומיים בני אדום שהם כלל הנצרים, that is, this long-enduring exilium, or misery, was caused by the Romans, the children of Edom, by whom all Christians are to be understood. He also writes in his book Majene jeschúa fol. 16, col. 2, under the second Majan in the third Támar, on this matter in the following manner: הרומיים והנצרים עם היותם להם שמות מתחלפים הנה עם אחד ושפה אחת להם הוא לשון הלאטין אבל מפני שהיתה רומי העיר רבתי עם שרתי במדינות לא לבד בממשלה והשלטונות והמלוכה בכפה אבל גם נעשתה להם ראש בהנהגת דתם ואמונתם כי שם ישבו כסאות למשפט האפיפיור ומשם רועה כל אומת אדום לכן נקראו הנצרים בכלל רומיים, that is, although the Romans and Christians have different names, they are nevertheless one people and have one language, namely Latin. But since Rome was a populous city and a princess among the lands, not only on account of its dominion, power, and rule under heaven, but also because it was made the head in the governance of their religion and their faith, in that the seats of the Pope for judgment are established there, from which he governs the entire Edomite people, the Christians are therefore collectively called Romans. So too it is written in the 59th chapter of the book Maggen Abraham by Rabbi Abraham Perizol: רומיים אשר נקראים נצרים, that is, the Romans, who are called Christians.

Third, they call us כותיים Cuthijim (or Cusijim), that is, Cutheans. In ancient times the Samaritans were called Cutheans, after the region of Cutha (concerning which one may read in 2 Kgs 17:24), as can be seen in the thirty-eighth chapter of the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer; for this reason Elias also writes in his Tischbi, fol. 43, col. 1, under the word Cuth, as follows: רבותינו זכרונם לברכה קראו לשומרונים כותיים לפי שבאים מכותה שנ' ויביא מלך אשור מבבל ומכותה ומעזה ומחמת וספרים ויושב בערי שומרון וגו' ונקראו כותיים יותר משאר שמות האומות הנזכרים בפסוק אולי לפי שהם היו הרבים לכך נקראו כולם כותיים והיחיד מהם נקרא כותי, that is: Our rabbis, of blessed memory, called the Samaritans Cutheans, because they came from Cutha, as it is said (2 Kgs 17:24): But the king of Assyria brought people from Babylon, from Cutha, from Ava, from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and settled them in the cities of Samaria, etc. They are called Cutheans (after the people of Cutha) rather than by the names of the other peoples mentioned in Scripture, because those from Cutha were the most numerous; therefore they were all called Cuthijim, that is, Cutheans, while a single individual among them was called Cuthi. That Christians are called this by the Jews can be seen in Rabbi Lippmann's Sepher Nizzachon, number 46, page 28, where, commenting on the words of Gen 49:10, "The scepter shall not depart from Judah," he writes as follows: הנה הכותים אומרים ששילה זהו הנוצרי, 'וכפרשים שלא יסור שבט מיהודה עד ביאת הנוצרי ואז יסור וגו' וקראו כותיים, that is: Behold, the Cutheans say that by Shiloh the Nazarene (that is, Christ) is to be understood, and they interpret the matter to mean that the scepter was not to depart from Judah until the Nazarene had come, after which it departed and was taken from the tribe of Judah. This name is likewise given to them in the Maase-Book, in the two hundred and fortieth chapter, as can be seen above on pages 514 and 515, and in the book Agudda, fol. 59, col. 3, in the tractate Avoda sara, number 1, as can be found above in the thirteenth chapter, page 561. A Christian man is called כותי Cuthi or Cusi, and a Christian woman כותית Cuthith or Cusis. For this reason it stands written in the aforementioned book Agudda, fol. 60, col. 2, number 7, as follows: אסור למכור לכותי לבונה דמידי דתקרובת הוא וכו' וכן שעה, אסור למכור ביום איד, that is: It is forbidden to sell frankincense to a Cuthi (that is, a Christian, meaning a Christian clergyman, as can be seen above on page 532), because it is something that is offered as a sacrifice, etc. Likewise it is forbidden to sell them wax on Candlemas, etc.; but on the remaining days it is permitted to sell them wax. Frankincense, however, may be sold to the other Cutheans (or Christians). And in the aforementioned Maase-Book, in the two hundred and ninth chapter, a cathedral provost of Paris is twice called כותי Cuthi, with the added note that he had become a Jew on the advice of a devil. In the one hundred and eighty-seventh chapter, however, a Christian woman who had served a Jew named Rabbi Shimon on his Sabbath is called כותית Cuthith or Culis, and שבת כותית Schabbath Cuthith or Schabbas Culis, that is, a Sabbath-Christian, one who served on the Sabbath and heated the room, several times. In Abarbanel's book Majene jeschúa, however, fol. 27, col. 4, the Italians in particular are called כותיים Cuthijim, that is, Cutheans.

Otherwise, the name Cuthijim or Cuthean is often placed in the Rabbinical books in lieu of the word Gójim, which means heathens, and by it all peoples who are outside of Judaism are signified, as occurs in countless places in Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's book Jad chasáka, whereas in other books, where the very same subject matter is treated, Goi is found in place of Cutbi, and Gójim in place of Cuthijim. For this reason it is written in the book Jad chasáka, in the second part, fol. 175. col. 2. in the 11th chapter, num. 8. under the title Hilchóth maachalóth asuróth: מ"מ עובד עכו"מ (that is, Wherever the word Cuthean is mentioned without qualification, it signifies an idolatrous person, that is, a Goi).

Fourth, they call us כתים Kittim, that is, Chittites, or Kittites. In the first book of Moses it is read at Gen 10:4 that Javan had a son who was called Kittim. In the book Tóledoth Jizchak, however, it is written at fol. 32, col. 1, in the Parascha Tóledoth Jizchak: רומי שהגלחנו היא מזרע כתים (that is, Rome, which brought us into captivity, is of the seed of the Kittites). And in Rabbi Lipmann's Sépher Nizzáchon it is taught at numero 8, at the end, p. 14: ידוע שהכתים הם רומיים (that is, It is known that the Chittites or Kittites are the Romans). This is also to be found in Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman's commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 123, col. 4, in the Parascha Balak. Rabbi Bechai also writes in his commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 180, col. 4, in the aforementioned Parascha Balak, as follows: כיתים הוא מלכות רומי מזרע עשו, i.e., Kittim signifies the Roman Empire, which descends from the seed of Esau. And at fol. 181, col. 1, he further teaches there: כיתים הם רומיים היא מלכות אדום: שהיא החיה הרביעית, i.e., Kittim signifies the Romans, and the Edomite kingdom, which is the fourth beast. In the first part of the Prague Machsor it is also read at fol. 32, col. 1, in the commentary: כיתים הם אומה הרשעה, i.e., By the Kittites is understood the godless people. By the godless people, however, the Christians are meant, as shall be demonstrated below in this chapter. And still more concerning the name Kittim can be found in Abarbanel's book Muschmia jeschúa, fol. 19, col. 2.

Fifth, they call us בני עשו Bené Esav, that is, Esau's children; and because Esau was also called Edom, as can be read in Gen 25:30, since he said to Jacob: "Let me taste min haadóm hassèh," that is, of this red thing, namely of the red lentil dish, as can be seen in v. 34 (concerning which Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 35, col. 1, as well as Bereschith rabba, fol. 68, col. 3, in the 75th Parashah, may be consulted), for adóm means "red" in Hebrew; so they also call us בני אדום Bené Edom, that is, Edom's children; as well as אדומיים Edomijim, that is, Edomites; זרע אדום Séra Edom, that is, the seed of Edom; זרע עשו Séra Esav, that is, Esau's seed; אומה של עשו Umma schel Esav, that is, the Esauite people; as well as אומת אדום Ummáth Edom, that is, the Edomite people. The name Bené Esav, that is, Esau's children, is very common, and in the book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 19, col. 4, the following is taught concerning it: כל הנוצרים המאמינים בדת ישוע הנוצרי הם בלי ספק בני אדום בני עשו, that is, all the Christians who believe in the law of Jesus the Nazarene are without any doubt the children of Edom and Esau. And in the old Nizzáchon, p. 170, the Christians are mentioned, and it is reported of them: הם לא נקראו יעקב ולא מבני בניו המה כי בני עשו הם ונקראים אדום, that is, they are not called Jacob, nor do they descend from his grandchildren, for they are Esau's children and are called Edom.

The name Bené Edom, that is, Edom's children, also appears very frequently in Jewish books, and in the old Nizzáchon, p. 166, the following is written concerning it: אם תאמר ישראל והו קרישטנהייט תשובת הלא זה השם נקרא לנו מימי אבנו ועל שמו נקראנו ישראל אבל הם לא מחלצי יעקב יצאו כי בני אדום המה, that is: If you (Christian) say that by Israel the Christian community is to be understood, then I answer: have not we (Jews) been called by this name since the days of our father Jacob, and been named Israel after his name? But they (the Christians) did not come from his loins; for they are bené Edom, that is, Edom's children. Likewise, in the book Chisluk emuná, p. 352, the following is read: אמר אוכלי בשר החזיר השקץ והעכבר על בני אדום שהם הנצרים האוכלים אותו, that is: He (namely the prophet Isaiah) has spoken (in his 66th chapter, v. 17, the words) those who eat swine's flesh, abomination, and mice, of the bené Edom, that is, the children of Edom, the Christians, who eat swine's flesh; for the Ishmaelites (or Turks) do not eat it. On this subject, something similar is also to be read in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 220, col. 4, in the Parascha Nizzavím. In the book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 18, col. 3, certain prophecies of Holy Scripture are mentioned by Abarbenel, with the following note added: יסוד הבנת זאת הנבואה ונבואות אחרות שבאו בדברי הנביאים: אדום, that is: The foundation for understanding this and other prophecies that appear in the writings of the prophets consists in this, that Rome, and all the peoples of Italy, and likewise all Christians in general, are bené Edom, that is, Edom's children. These same words were also repeated by him in his commentary on Isa 34, fol. 53, col. 4. Furthermore, in the aforementioned book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 59, col. 1, concerning the words of Isa 34:5, "For my sword is drunk in heaven," the following is written: הנבואה ההיא עתה להתקיים ועל רומי וכלל הנצרים הנקראים בני אדום, that is: This prophecy will yet be carried into effect, and it was spoken of Rome and all Christians in general, who are called bené Edom, that is, Edom's children.

The name אדומים Edomijim, that is, Edomites, is found in the aforementioned Abarbanel's commentary on Isa cap. 43, fol. 66, col. 2, where it is written that according to Christian teaching there are three covenants, namely ברית דם שלקחו להם היהודים בכרית מילה וברית מים שלקחו האדומיים בטבילתם וברית האש שהם דתיה לומר ההחדיים לקחו להם מפני מאטיאו השליה שצוה אותם עליו that is, the covenant of blood, which the Jews received through the covenant of circumcision; and the covenant of water, which the Edomijim, that is, the Edomites, received through their baptism; as also the covenant of fire, which they, namely the Abyssinians, received from the Apostle Matthæus, who enjoined it upon them.

The name זרע אדום Séra Edom, that is, the seed of Edom, is found in the aforementioned Abarbanel's commentary on Jer cap. 49, fol. 148, col. 2; and the name זרע עשו Séra Esav, that is, the seed of Esau, in the oft-mentioned book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 19, col. 3, 4, as also in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 46, col. 2, in the Parascha Vajischlach; and the name אומה של עשו Umma schel Esav, that is, the Esavian people, in the small Jalkut Rubéni, under the title Bechorá, numero 8, as also in the large Jalkut Rubéni, fol. 51, col. 2, in the Parascha Toledóth; the name אומת אדום Ummáth Edom, that is, the Edomite people, however, is found in Rabbi Joseph Albo's Sepher Ikkarim, in the 42nd chapter of the fourth part, fol. 162, col. 2.

The Christians who are in Abyssinia, however, are to be excluded from this and are not to be counted among the children of Edom, concerning which Abarbanel, in his aforementioned book Maschmía Jeschúa, fol. 43. col. 4., on the words of Ezek 32:30, "Yea, all the princes of the north must go thither, and all the Zidonians," writes as follows: המפרשים פירשהו על מלכי בבל וצידוני אמרו שהם מצידון ואני אחשוב שנסיכי צפון וכל צידוני הם משפחות היהודיים אשר מארץ הודו שהם מכלל הנוצרים ולא יוכללו בשם אדום אשר יחס לרומי ולכל הגוים אשר תחת הנהגתה ודתה והם הנקראים היום ממלכות הפרישטו זואן ואינם נכנעים לאפיפיור אבל הם מדת ישוע הנוצרי that is: the commentators have explained this passage with reference to the kings of Babylon; but as for the Zidonians, they have said that these were from Zidon; I, however, hold that these princes of the north and all the Zidonians were from the Abyssinian families who came from the land of Abyssinia, which (Abyssinians) belong to the sum total of Christians, but are not comprehended under the name of the children of Edom, which name is ascribed to Rome and to all peoples standing under its government and religion; and these are those who are called in our day the kingdom of Prester John, who are not subject to the Pope, yet are devoted to the religion of Jesus the Nazarene.

Concerning the reasons why they call us children of Edom or Esau, I find three of them in their books. The first is because we believe in Christ, who is supposed to be called Esau, concerning which Abarbanel writes in his book Maschmía Jeschúa, fol. 19. col. 4. in a godless and blasphemous manner as follows: חכמי האמת קבלו שנפש עשו נתגלגלה בישוע הנוצרי ולכן היה כמדברות איש שדה: והיה איש ריב ומדון לחכמי הפרושים ואולי שעל זה נקרא ישוע שאותיותיו הם אותיות שם עשו במלואו ומפני זה כל המחזיקים בדתו ואמונתו ועובדים אותו היה ראוי שיקראו בני אדם : that is, the theologians or divines have learned through a tradition, or oral teaching, that the soul of Esau passed into Jesus the Nazarene; for this reason he dwelt in the wilderness and was a man of the field, and quarreled and contended with the wise men of the Pharisees.

Perhaps he is also called ישוע Jeschúa for this reason, because his letters are the letters of the name עשו Esav, when it is written in full (with the Yod or J); therefore it was fitting that all those who adopt his religion and faith should be called children of Edom, because ישוע Jeschúa is עשו Esav, and Esau means Edom. The very same thing is also found somewhat more elaborately in his commentary on Esaïam fol. 54. col. 3. 4.

The second reason is that the Edomites, who dwelt close to the land of Israel, are said to have been the first to receive faith in Jesus from the Apostles, and the Romans in turn to have received it from Edomite priests. Concerning this, the following is read in the book Chissuk emuná, p. 65: כל האומות הנוצרים: ובראשם החטיים הכתוב קורא אתם בכל מקום אדם או בת אדם מצד שקבלו אמונת ישו הנוצרי על ידי כומר אדומי ועל שם אפפוריוס הראשון וסיעתו שהיו מאדום ואע"פ שאומת אדם בכללותם שבו לדת ישראל בימי הורקנוס מלך ישראל אשר הכריחם על ככה כמוזכר ביוסיפון פרק כ"ח עם כל זה אחר חורבן בראותם השפלות האומרה ישראלית קבלו אמונת ישו קודם שאר כל האומות על כן כל האומות ההן נקראו בשם אדם על שם האומה שנתערבו בה כאשר האומות שנהפכו לדת ישמעאלים נקראים גם כן ישמעאלים על שם המחזיק באמתת הדת: that is, Scripture calls all Christian peoples in every place, and especially the Romans, Edom or the daughter of Edom, because they received faith in Jesus the Nazarene through an Edomite priest; and likewise because the first Pope and his companions were Edomites. And although the entire Edomite people adopted the Israelite religion in the time of Hyrceanus, king of Israel, who compelled them to do so, as is recorded in the 28th chapter of Josephus, yet after the destruction, when there was no longer anyone to hold them under compulsion and they saw the wretched condition of the Israelite people, they adopted faith in Jesus before all other peoples. For this reason, all those peoples are called Edomites after the name of the people with whom they intermingled, just as those peoples who have gone over to the Ishmaelite faith are likewise called Ishmaelites, after the name of him who first adopted that faith and was an Ishmaelite. Rabbi Joseph Albo likewise agrees with this in his Sepher Ikkarim, where he writes in the 42nd chapter of the fourth part, fol. 162, col. 2, as follows: אע"פ שבתים הם מזרע יון אפשר שהם חזרת וי רביעית לפי שהם מלכו בעולם אחר כלות מלכות חיונם ונקראו הכתוב בת אדום מצד שקבלו האמונה על יד כומר אדומי כי האדומיים קבלו אמונת ישו בתחלה וכל האומות יקראו על שם האומה שנתערבו בה כמו שהמומרים לדת ישראל יקראו ישראלים או יהודים אע"פ שהם משאר האומות האומות וגוי: that is, Although the Chittites (that is, the Romans or Italians) are of the seed of Javan, they may nonetheless be the fourth beast (of which Dan 7:7 speaks), since it ruled in the world after the Greek kingdom came to an end; and Scripture calls that same beast a daughter of Edom, because they (the Romans) learned the (Christian) faith through an Edomite priest. For the Edomites were the first to adopt faith in Jesus; and all peoples are called after the name of that people among whom they are mingled. Just as those who adopt the Israelite faith are called Israelites or Jews, even though they have come from other peoples, so too are the Romans called Edomites, etc.

Concerning this, Abarbenel also writes in his book Maschmia jeschua fol. 19. col. 3. in the following manner: ואמנם מפני הדת והאמונה אומר אני שראוי היה לקרוא הנוצרים בני אדום וזרע עשו לפי שהאומות יכנו אותם הנביאים כפי מעשיהם הלא תראה שהנביא ישעיה קרא לבני דורו קציני סדום עם עמורה ויחזקאל אמר כנגד ישראל זאת חטאת סדום אחותך ולא היה ישראל אח סדום במשפחתם כי אם במעשיהם that is: Truly I say that it is fitting to call the Christians children of Edom and seed of Esau, since the prophets give names to peoples according to their deeds. Do you not see that the prophet Isaiah called the children of his time (in the first chapter, at the 10th verse) princes of Sodom and the people of Gomorrah; so too did Ezekiel (in the 16th chapter, v. 49) say against the Israelites: "That was the iniquity of your sister Sodom," even though Israel was not Sodom's brother by lineage, but rather by their deeds. And in the following fourth column, as well as fol. 20. col. 1., it is written thus: כתב הרמב"ן שהאדומיים שהיו שכנים לארץ ישראל: המה קכלו ראשונה על עצמם אמונת ישוע הנצרי כי מהיותם נימולים מימי הורקנוס היו תמיד מתחברים לאנשי ירושלים ולכן שלוחי ישוע הנצרי ותלמידיו בברתם מירושלם הלכו לארץ אדום ופתו את האדומיים עד שהכניסו אותם בדתם ואחריהם נמשכו הרומיים ולכן נקראו כלם אדום בשם האומה שקבלה ראשונה האמונה ההיא ואין ספי שלא גזרו זה הרמב"ן מלבו אבל הנה הדבר הזה מקובל אצלו ואולי ראה אותו בספר דברי הימים ההם that is: Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman wrote that the Edomites, who were neighbors of the land of Israel, were the first to accept the faith in Jesus the Nazarene, for since they had allowed themselves to be circumcised from the time of Hyrcanus, they were always in fellowship with the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Therefore, when the apostles and disciples of Jesus the Nazarene fled from Jerusalem, they went into the land of Edom and led the Edomites astray, until they brought them into their religion. The Romans then followed after them, and for this reason they are all called Edomites, after the name of that people which first accepted that faith. And it is certainly to be believed that Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman did not devise this from his own mind, but rather learned it through tradition, that is, oral teaching. Perhaps he saw it in a chronicle of those times. The aforementioned Abarbenel also reports further in his commentary on Isaiah fol. 54. col. 1. concerning this as follows: ע"ד שהרומיים הם בני אדום ושקבלו דת ישו נוצרי מפי כומר אדומי לפי שהאדומיים החזיקו בדתו ראשונה ולדבריהם וכן שאזכור אחר זה הנה לא נתנו טענה ולא ראייה לכך: Although Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman, as well as Rabbi David Kimchi, wrote that the Romans are children of Edom and learned the religion of Jesus the Nazarene from the mouth of an Edomite priest, because the Edomites were the first to accept the faith in him, as I will mention in what follows, they nevertheless did not prove and substantiate their assertion. In what follows thereafter, however, he seeks to demonstrate this at length. So too does Aben Ezra write in his commentary on Isa 63:1, on the words "Who is this that comes from Edom?", in the following manner: זאת היא מלכות רומי וקוסט'נסניא ונקראו אדומיים בעבור שנכנסו בתורת אדום ואת התורה הנזכרה נקראה על שם אדום שהאדומיים האמינו בתחלה בתורת האיש הידוע that is: This (namely the word Edom) signifies the Roman and Constantinopolitan Empire, and they are called Edomites because they adopted the Edomite religion. That religion, however, bears the name of Edom because the Edomites were the first to believe in the law of the well-known man (namely Jesus).

The third reason is that kings from the lineage of Esau ruled in Rome and held dominion over all the lands of Christendom, and the Edomites, on account of such kings, are said to have migrated from their land into Italy and other Christian countries. For this reason, Abarbenel writes in his book Maschmia jeschúa, fol. 20. col. 1. that it had been commonly known to everyone at the time of the Second Temple, and after it, that Rome was inhabited by the children of Edom; and that no one had denied this, and he continues: מבואר הוא שהיה הדבר פשוט וברור אצלם שאדומיים נתיישבו ונתפשטו ומלכו על רומי וכל הארצות האיטליא ושאר הארצות הנקראות היום ארצות הנוצרים ולכן קראום כולם בני אדום : that is, it is thus plain as day that the matter was entirely clear and well known to those people (namely, the people who lived at the time of the Second Temple and thereafter) that the Edomites had settled and spread themselves in Rome and in all the lands of Italy, as well as in the remaining territories which are today called the Christian lands, and that they had ruled there; for this reason they called them all children of Edom; and the prophetic pronouncements have in part necessarily come upon them, and in part will yet come upon them. On this same subject, something equally consistent is to be read in his commentary on Isa, fol. 54. col. 4. Likewise, in his commentary on Ezek 35, fol. 201. col. 3. 4., the following is read: הוכחתי

Furthermore, the aforementioned Abarbenel expresses himself as follows in his commentary on the Prophet Obadiah, fol. 255, col. 1: כבר הודעתי פעמים: שארזים מהם יצאו המלכים אשר מלכו באיטליא ואשר בנו רומי רבתי בגוים שרתי במדינות ותמלאה איטליא וכל ארץ יון מבני אדום וגם כל ארצות המערב ומפני זה קנו הנביאים האומה כולה בשם אדום ועשו לפי שהוא היה התחלת היחס וקראו בשם אדום אם אדום שהיא ארצם that is: I have already made known several times that from the land of Edom, which lies near Jerusalem, kings came who ruled in Italy and built the populous city of Rome, the princess of the provinces, and thus Italy and all of Greece, together with all the lands toward the west, became filled with the children of Edom. For this reason the prophets called the entire people by the name of Edom and Esau, since that was the origin of the lineage, and they gave the name Edom not only to those whose land was near Jerusalem, but also to the Romans, who sprang from them and are derived from them, since Scripture has called them all, and each one of them, by the name of Edom. More on this subject can also be read in his commentary on the Prophet Isaiah, fol. 53, col. 4, and fol. 54, col. 1, 2, 3, 4. Likewise, in the book Chissuk-emuna, page 66, the following is written on this matter: חמצא כי צפו בן אליפז בן עשו אשר נקרא שמו אדום הוא המלוך תחלה בבקעת כנפניא על כל ארץ כתיים שהם החתים ועל כל ארץ איטליא כמבואר ביוסיפון פרק ב' ו'להיותו הוא ארומי על כן האומות הרומיים עם כל הנוצרים הנלוים אליהם נקראים אדומיים על שם מלכם הראשון כמו שעשרת השבטים כלם הכתוב קורא בשם אפרים על שם אדומיים that is: You find that Zepho, the son of Eliphaz, the son of Esau, who is called Edom, was the first to rule in the valleys of Campania, over all the lands of the Chittites, who are the Romans, and over the entire territory of Italy, as is evident from the second chapter of Josephus. Now since that same Zepho was an Edomite, the Romans, together with all the Christians who are joined to them, are called Edomites after the name of their first king, just as Scripture calls all ten tribes by the name of Ephraim, because their first king, Jeroboam, was of the tribe of Ephraim.

How Zepho came to Italy is recounted in the aforementioned book Maschmia jeschua, fol. 19, col. 2, as follows: יוסף בן גוריון כתב שכאשר עלה יוסף ואחיו ממצרים לקבור את יעקב אביהם חיל גדול מהמצריים עמהם יצאו אליהם בדרך אלוף עשו וילחמו עמהם ותגבור יד יוסף עליהם וילכוד את צפו בן אליפז בן עשו ואת בחוריו ויביאם אסורים מצרימה ויברח צפו ואנשיו ממצרים ויבאו אל אפריקא אל אנג'אס מלך קארטאגנא ואפריקא ויקבל את צפו בכבוד גדול וישימהו שר צבאו והיה צפו לוחם מלחמות המלך כנגד הכתים הם אנשי איטליא שהיו אויבים לאנשי אפריקא וקארט'גנא ואחרי כן ברח צפו משם ויבא בארץ הכתים היא איטליא הוא וכל אנשיו ויקבלו אותו בשמחה רבה וישימהו לשר צבאם וילחם בנחרי אפיקודו וקארט'אגניה וינצחו מנצח וכן כבש את בני חובל היושבים פשישא והנה הכתים בראותם הצלחותיו בכל מלחמות וכל מעשה תקפו וגבורתו המליכוהו עליהם ויקראו את שמו צפואגוס כי כנהו בשם כתב שכת' 'שהיו עובדים בימים ההם בחשבם שהיה בו כחו ורוחניותו וימלוך על הכתים חמשים שנה בבקעת קאנפניאאה והוא היה המלך הראשון אשר מלך באיטליא. ובפי דעת רבים מהמספרים הוא אשר בנה גינו'בא וקראה על שמו ונקבר שמה היא קבורת גאנוס הידועה עד היום הזה ואחרי מלך בנו וכן נמשכו המלכים אחרים מזרעו. ובפי קבלת ח"ל היה אחד מהם אלוף מגדיאל שהתחיל ראשונה בישוב רומי המדינה קודם מא חסולו אשר בנה חומותיה והציב דלתיה הר לך עדות ברורה מדברי יוספון שהוא שהיה ראש המלכים גם אצלם שבארץ כתים מלכו מבני אדום ואין ספק שבמלך שמה מלכם אחתיים יבאו That is: עמים רבים מארץ אדום להתישב באיטליא בסבת המלכים המולכים בה וידנו Josephus, the son of Gorion, writes that when Joseph and his brothers, together with a great multitude of people, went out of Egypt to bury their father Jacob, the princes of Esau came out to meet them on the way and fought against them; Joseph, however, gained the upper hand, and took Zepho, who was the son of Eliphaz and the grandson of Esau, along with his young men, captive, and led them bound into Egypt. But Zepho fled with his men out of Egypt and came into Africa, to Angias, the king of Carthage and Africa, who received him with great honor and made him his general or field commander. Zepho also waged the king's war against the Chittites, that is, the Italians, who were enemies of the Africans and Carthaginians. After this, Zepho fled from there and came with all his men into the land of the Chittites, that is, into Italy; and when they received him with great joy and made him their commander-in-chief, he fought against the African and Carthaginian armies so that they were put to flight before him; he also subdued the sons of Tubal, who had dwelt in Pisa. When the Chittites saw his good fortune in the wars and all his valiant deeds, they made him their king and called his name Zepho-Janus, for they named him after the planet Saturn, which they had served at that time, because they held that the power and spiritual essence of that planet dwelt in him (Zepho); and he reigned fifty years over the Chittites in the valley of Campania, and was the first king who had ruled in Italy. According to the opinion of many narrators (or historians), he also built the city of Genoa, named it after himself, and was buried there, which is the tomb of Janus known to this day; and his son reigned after him, and other kings of his lineage likewise followed him in the reign. According to the tradition or oral teaching of our sages, of blessed memory, the prince Magdiel (who is mentioned in Gen 36:43) was one of these, who first began to inhabit the city of Rome before Romulus came, built its walls, and set up its gates. See, here you have a clear testimony from the words of the foremost historian Josephus, who is also regarded by them (namely the Christians) as the best historian, that in the land of the Chittites some of the children of Edom ruled. And there is no doubt that, since Edomite kings ruled there, many peoples from the land of Edom will also have come to dwell in Italy on account of the kings who reigned therein, and will have multiplied and increased very greatly, so that Italy became full of them, etc. The very same thing also stands in the aforementioned Abarbanel's commentary on Isaiah, fol. 54, col. 1, 2, 3, 4, and it is without doubt taken from the Parashah Vajechi and the Parashah Schemoth of the book called Sepher bajaschar (ספר הישר), where the matter is recounted at length.

That the Jews commit a gross error in their teaching that we are supposed to be Edomites is maintained with sufficient proofs in Hulsius's Theologia Judaica from p. 116 to p. 142, as well as in Galatinus, in the twenty-eighth chapter of his fourth book. We, on the other hand, may well say that the Jews may rightly be called Edomites. For just as the princes at Jerusalem are called princes of Sodom in Isa 1:10, and the people of Judah are called the people of Gomorrah, because in their godless life and conduct they had made themselves equal to those of Sodom and Gomorrah; and just as it was said in Ezek 16:3 to the godless Jews: "Your lineage and your birth are from the land of the Canaanites; your father was an Amorite and your mother a Hittite," because they had followed the godless works of those peoples whom the Lord had cursed: so likewise do the godless Jews follow the wicked deeds of the Edomites, who in former times hated and persecuted the Jewish church and were its sworn enemies; and they continue to do so even now, in that they hate and assail the Christian church and everything that is Christian in the most extreme manner, and, were it within their power and their strength, would murder all Christians in a most wretched and barbarous fashion, which they intend, as has already been mentioned more than once, to carry out at the coming of their vainly hoped-for Messiah, and for which bloodbath they carry a fervent longing, as will be reported in detail below in the fourteenth chapter of the second part.

Since Esau, as mentioned, is what the Jews call us Christians (that is, children of Esau), we must look a little more closely at what they write and teach about Esau, so that we may learn from it what a splendid origin they ascribe to us. As regards his birth, he is said to have been born under the planet Mars, as may be read in the commentary of Rabbi Bechai on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 35, col. 1, in the Parashah Toledoth, where it is written as follows: אמר הליעטני נא מן האדום הזה כלומר מן התבשיל האדום הזה המושך כח מן האדום הוא כוכב מאדים ששמו אדום אשר בו נולד והוא היה כוכב שלו ומזלו על כן היה שופך דמים ונתנה לו ברכת החרב: that is, He (namely Esau) said (to Jacob, Gen 25:30): Let me taste of this red thing, that is, of this red dish, which draws its power from the Red One, namely the planet Mars, which is called red; in which he was born; and this was his planet and his constellation, and therefore he was a shedder of blood, and the blessing of the sword was given to him.

He is also said to have descended from the impurity of the devil, concerning which the book Schene luchoth habberith (or luchos habberis) fol. 232. col. 3. reads as follows: עשו הוא אדום והוא מזוהמת נחש הקדמוני that is, Esau is Edom, and he descended from the filth of the accursed ancient serpent. And at fol. 241. col. 3. of the aforementioned book it is stated: עשו הוא אדום הוא הנחש ששאב כל that is, Esau is Edom: he is the serpent who drew unto himself all the impurity of the serpents (namely of the chief devil Sammaël), so that Jacob might remain pure. Concerning this, something is also to be found in the Jalkut chadrasch fol. 3. col. 2. numero 8. and fol. 6. col. 3. numero 78. under the heading Adam. Likewise, at fol. 244. col. 2. of the said book Schené luchoth habberith it is taught: כשהביא אדם וחוה זוהמת הנחש מחמת חטאם בא הנחש על חוה והטיל בה זוהמא וממנה יצא קין כמו שאמרו בוהר וזוהר קין דמסאבותא אבל הבל נתקדש הוא גלגול שת ואח"כ מר"ע כי קין עור פניו ומ"מ נחפסטה that is, When Adam and Eve had brought about the filthiness of the serpents on account of their sin, the serpent lay with Eve and cast into her an impurity, from which Cain descended, as is stated in the Sohar; and he is called the nest of filthiness: Abel, however, was sanctified, whose soul passed into Seth and thereafter into Moses our teacher, upon whom be peace, whose facial skin shone with radiance. Nevertheless, the impurity and the evil nature spread throughout all generations; yet the chief work of impurity came into Esau, and Jacob remained pure and clean. For this reason Esau is also called in the great Jalkut Rubeni fol. 49. col. 3. in the Parascha Toledoth עשו של ע"מ that is, the dross or scum of Sammaël, the prince of Esau. In the Sepher gilgulim there stands at fol. 27. col. 2. in the 34th Cap. the following concerning this matter as well: כבר ידעת כמו שקין נתאחו בו זוהמת הנחש כן נתאחו בעשו וכמ"ש בפ' that is, It is already known to you that just as Cain was afflicted with the impurity of the serpents, so too was Esau seized by it: just as it was stated in the Parascha Toledoth fol. 26. that Esau had been seized from the side of the serpents.

Therefore, in Rabbi Menachem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 199, col. 2, in the Parascha Vehajà êkef, the following is also read: בְּעֵשׂוֹ כָּתִיב הַלְעִיטָנִי נָא וְהִנַּחַשׁ הַמְסִיָּה שְׂרִי בִמְעִי וְנִקְרָא רֶשַׁע that is, Concerning Esau it is written (Gen 25:30) that he said to Jacob: Let me taste; and the seducing serpent dwells in his bowels, and he is called a wicked man. In the small Jalkut Rubeni, under number 88, under the title Malach, from the Zijóni, concerning the words of Num 24:20, "Amalek is the firstborn (or foremost) among the nations," the following is written: וְכָתְבוּ הַמְּקֻבְּלִים כִּי הָיָה לוֹ דְמוּת נָחַשׁ עַל עֲמֶלֶק that is, Amalek is the root of the ancient serpent; and the Kabbalists have written that Esau bore the image of the serpent on his hip. The very same thing is also found in the large Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 50, col. 1, in the Parascha Toledoth. In the aforementioned book Scheué luchóth habberíth, Rabbi Jefchája teaches on this matter as follows, fol. 233, col. 3: עֲשׂוֹ הָרָשָׁע הוּא הָרִמָּאִי that is, The wicked Esau was the deceiver and the German, and our father Jacob did not begin the deception first, etc. His power is the serpent, which is more cunning than all things, and it was engraved upon his hip. This is also read at fol. 243, col. 3 in the same work. Furthermore, fol. 237, col. 4 of the same work states: כְּמוֹ שִׁיעָקֵב חֲקוּק בְּכֶסֶּא כֵן עֲשׂוֹ חֲקוּק בְּסַמָּאֵל וּשְׁמוֹתֵיהֶן יוֹכִיחוּ עֲשׂוֹ הוּא אֶדוֹם תַּכְתּוּב סַמָּאֵל וְתַמְצָא כִּי שְׁמוֹתֵיהֶן מְעֻרְבִין כִּי אוֹתִיּוֹת הַקְּצוּוֹת מִד' אֱלֹהִים גַּם כֵּן סַמָּאֵל וְאוֹתִיּוֹת הַפְּנִימִיּוֹת הוּא אֶדוֹם that is, Just as Jacob is engraved upon the throne (of the glory of God), so Esau is engraved upon Sammaël, and their names demonstrate this. Esau is Edom. Write Sammaël, and you will find that their names (namely those of Esau and Sammaël) are intermingled with one another; for the four outermost letters also form Sammaël, while the four innermost letters form Edom. Rabbi Jefchája intends by this to convey that when the name סַמָּאֵל Sammaël and אֶדוֹם are written intermingled in the following manner,

E	D	O	M

the four outermost letters, when read crosswise, also form Sammael, while the four innermost letters form Edom, by which it is signified that Esau was engraved upon Sammael. For this reason, in the booklet Schechéchat léket, number 8, under the title Juacob, concerning the words of Jacob in Gen 33:10,

"For I saw your face as though I had seen the face of God," the following is read: דעשו דיוקנא דאתחזי ליה סמאל ממש that is, he saw in the face of Esau precisely the same form as if Sammael himself had appeared to him; which same Sammael, as may be seen in the book Maarĕbeth haĕlahúth, fol. 213, col. 2, is called אל אחר El ácher, that is, the other God, and in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 141, col. 1, is called אל נכר El néchar, that is, the foreign God.

Since Esau, as mentioned, had drawn to himself all the impurity which the chief devil Sammael is said to have cast into Eve, and also bore his image at his side, the Jews accordingly give him all manner of shameful names that belong to the devil, as though he himself had been the devil in person. They call him, first, סמאל Sammael, as can be seen in the book Megallé amykkóth fol. 165, in the 191st Ofan, where one reads: יוסף הוא סטנו של עשו שהוא סמאל that is, Joseph is an adversary of Esau, who is Sammael. And in the book Emek hammélech it stands at fol. 18, col. 4, in the 9th Capit., under the title Scháar tikkúne battesxbúva, concerning Prov 30:21-22, written thus: תחת שלש אלה רגזה ארץ that is, The upper land is moved by these three things; by a servant, when he rules; this is Sammael, as (of Esau, Gen 27:40) it is said: You shall serve your brother, ער.

Second, he is called שטן Satan, as is found in the book Zerór hammór fol. 29, col. 4, in the Parascha Toledóth, where concerning the words of Gen 27:1, And he called Esau his elder son, it is written thus: הוא שטן נחש ההולך לשוט that is, This (elder son) is Satan, he is the serpent that goes about upon the earth. And at fol. 109, col. 3, in the Parascha Nasó, one reads: אמר בעשו that is, Of Esau, who is Satan, Scripture records (Gen 25:30) that he said, Let me taste of that red thing, for his desire was only for tasting, eating, and drinking wine.

Third, he is called נחש הקדמוני Náchasch hakkadmóni, that is, the ancient serpent. Hence it stands in the aforementioned book Zerór hammór fol. 27. col. 2. in the Parascha Toledóth: יצחק יצא ממנו עשו הוא סמאל הוא נחש הקדמוני that is, From Isaac came Esau, who is the Sammaël and Náchasch hakkadmóni, that is, the ancient serpent. He is also called simply Náchasch, that is, a serpent, and for this reason the following is read in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 109. col. 3. num. 76. under the title Keschafim: נא "ש הצילני נא" נחש וגם נקרא אדם רע וגם נקרא נחש וז"ש הצילני נא נחש ונוטריקון נחש אדם, i.e., The wicked Esau is called the evil man; likewise he is called a serpent; and this is what (Jacob, Gen 32:11) said: Deliver me נא na, i.e., now (and the little word) na is rendered, by Notarikon (that is, where each letter signifies a separate word), נחש náchasch, i.e., a serpent, and אדם adám, i.e., a man. By which it is given to be understood that the man Esau is a serpent.

The very same thing is also to be found in the great Jalkut Rubéni, f. 59. c. 4. in the Parascha Vajischlach.

Fourth, he is called in Bereschith rabba fol. 59, on the first page, in the commentary Mattenóth Kebúnna גבר שדין Géfer schédin, that is, a devil's man, which is also read at the end of the Jalkut Schimóni on the books of Moses, fol. 33, col. 3, num. 114, where he is also called at the margin בעל שדים Baal Schédim, which likewise means a devil's man; and this occurs in both places for the reason that, as is read in Gen 27:11, Jacob said to his mother: Behold, my brother Esau is איש שער isch sair, that is, a rough (or hairy) man, and the word Sáir here, according to the opinion of the Jews, means a devil, as it is taken in Isa 13:20, where it is written: And the Seirim, that is, field-spirits or devils, shall leap there. It is therefore clearly to be seen from all of this that when the Jews call us children of Esau, it is just as much as if they called us children of the devil.

Otherwise, he is also called, fifthly, ערב óref, that is, a raven, in the book Megálle amykkóth, fol. 10, col. 3, in the fortieth furnace, as well as in the Jalkut chadasch fol. 109, col. 2, numero 73, under the title Keschafim; and sixthly, חזיר Chasir, that is, a swine, as is to be seen at numero 79 of the aforementioned title Keschafim; or חזיר מיער Chasir mijáar, that is, a wild boar, concerning which last name it is written as follows in the book Schené luchóth habberith fol. 265, col. 2: עשו נקרא חזיר מיער כי הוא פשוט טלפיו להראות שיש בו סימן טהרה והוא נחש: שמאל that is, Esau is called a wild boar, for he stretches out his (cloven) hooves in order to show that there is a sign of purity in him (for in Lev 11:3, the animals that have cloven hooves and chew the cud are held to be clean). But he is Esau, he is the serpent, from the tutelage of Samael.

Seventh, he is called שַׁעִיר Sair, that is, a goat, as can be found in Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 36, col. 2, in the Parascha Toledoth, and in the Jalkut Shimoni on the aforementioned Books of Moses, fol. 33, col. 3, numero 115; and in the great Jalkut Rubeni it stands at fol. 60, col. 1, in the Parascha Vajischlach, on the words of Gen 33:16, "So Esau returned that day on his way to Seir," written thus: הוּא שַׁעִיר שְׁנֵיתָן לְעִזָּאֵל: that is, he was the Sair, or goat, who was given to Azazel, concerning which Lev 16:8 is to be consulted. He is likewise called a goat in the first part of the Prague Machzor, fol. 57, col. 2, under the title Musaph schel rosch haschana jom scheni, where in a prayer beginning Aballela Elohai, aschira yllo, it is written thus: שַׁעִיר הַתְּנִיף לְהוֹדוֹ, בְּצִידוֹ that is, the goat, or hairy one, practiced deceit toward his father with his venison; and in the commentary thereon it stands: הוּא עֶשָׂו זֶה שַׁעִיר, that is, this goat, or hairy one, is Esau.

Eighth, he is called שׁוֹר הַמִּוּעָד Schor hammuad, that is, the ox inclined to goring, as can be read in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 8, col. 1, at the end of the 41st chapter, under the title Schaar Schaaschue hammelech, and fol. 77, col. 4, in the 41st chapter, under the title Schaar Abba veema, as well as in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 59, col. 1, in the Parascha Vajischlach.

Ninth, he is called יִשְׂרָאֵל מְשֻׁמָּד Jisrael meschummad, that is, the apostate Israelite, concerning which the following is written in the aforementioned commentary of Rabbi Bechai on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 56, col. 1: קָרָא מְשֻׁמָּד יִשְׂרָאֵל לְעֵשָׂו הַתְּלִמּוּד, that is, the Talmud has called Esau the apostate Israelite; and this name is also to be found in the book Sera Abraham, fol. 37, col. 2, 3.

Tenth, he is called נָבָל Nabal, that is, a fool or simpleton, and the following is written concerning this in the book Medrasch Tillim, fol. 12, col. 4, on the words of Ps 14:1, "The fool says in his heart": אָמַר נָבָל זֶה עָשָׂו הָרָשָׁע שֶׁהוּא אוֹמֵר: אֶחָד בִּפְהוֹ וְאֶחָד בְּלִבּוֹ וְזֶה עָשָׂו הָרָשָׁע וְלָמָּה נִקְרָא שְׁמוֹ נָבָל תִּנִּי? הַיּוֹדֵה בְּשֵׁם רַבִּי שְׁמוּאֵל אָמַר עַל שְׁמֵלֵא כָּל הָעוֹלָם כְּלוּ וְנָבְלוּ, that is: (By the words "the fool says," the wicked Esau is signified, who says one thing with his mouth and thinks another in his heart, etc. In another interpretation, the words "the fool says in his heart" are expounded to signify the wicked Esau. But why is he called a fool? Rabbi Jehuda says in the name of Rabbi Samuel that it is because he has filled the entire world with folly.

Finally, eleventh, he is called אֲדֻמּוֹנִי Admóni, that is, the red or reddish one, because it is written of him in Gen 25:25: "The first who came out was reddish."

The reason why he was ruddy is found in the Jalkut Chadush fol. 91. col. 3. numero 167. and in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 50. col. 1. in the Parascha Toledoth, with these words: וַיֵּצֵא הָרֵאשׁוֹן אֲדֻמּוֹנִי שֶׁתָּהָה דָּמִי אִמּוֹ דֵּם נִידְתָּה: that is, he came out ruddy because he had drunk, in his mother's womb, the blood of her monthly impurity. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, however, teaches in his commentary on Gen 25:27 that he was called ruddy because he would shed blood. In the commentary of Rabbi Menachem of Recanati on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 57. col. 4. in the Parascha Toledoth, yet another reason is brought forward and stated: עָשָׂו הָרָשָׁע נִמְשָׁךְ אַחֲרַי פְּעוּלַת הַדִּין וְזֶהוּ סוּד וְעַל חֶרֶבךָ: that is, the wicked Esau followed after the works of judgment, and this is the mystery (of the words Gen 27:40) "By your sword you shall live," and therefore he was ruddy. Abarbanel, however, sets forth yet another reason in his commentary on Isa, chap. 35, fol. 54. col. 4., and states that he was ruddy because he was born under the planet Mars, and his words read as follows: אמרו בבראשית רבה ויצא הראשון אדמוני כתיב מדוע אדום ללבושך הוא אדום ותכשילי אדום וארצו אדומה וגבוריו אדומים לבושיהם אדומים ופורע ממנו אדום בלבוש אדום: הוא אדום שנאמר ויצא הראשון אדמוני. תבשיליו אדום שנאמר הלעיטני נא מן האדום ארצו אדומה שנא 'ארצה שעיר שדה אדום. גבוריו אדומים שנ' מגן גבורהו מאדם. לבושיהם אדומים שנאמר אנשי חיל מתולעים: ופורע ממנו אדום שנאמר דודי צה ואדום בלבוש אדום מדוע אדום ללבושך. העירו בזה הבחינות אשר בעבורם נקרא עשו וכל הנקראים בשמו אדום והוא לפי שהיה מושל עליו מאדים ולכן נולד אדמוני ונפשו מאכל אדום מאה כי המזון ראוי שידמה למזון והארץ אשר גר בה היתה תחת מאדים וגם אלו. כך הגברים אשר יצאו ממנו ומלכו באיטליא כולם היו ממשלת מאדים כל חות נפש וכל נוגע בחלל והם מלכי איטליא that is, (our sages) וקיסרי רומי לבושי תולעת שנ' כי כן היה מנהגם ברומי עד היום הזה have said in Beresbit Rabbah (fol. 57. col. 2. in the 63rd Parascha), from Gen 25:25, "And the first came out ruddy," and from Isa 63:2, where it is written: "Why is your garment red?" He (Esau) was red, his food was red, his land was red, his heroes were red, their garments were red, and he who will take vengeance upon him (Esau) is red, clothed in a red garment. He (namely Esau) was red, for it is said (Gen 25:25): "And the first came out ruddy." His food was red, for it is said (Gen 25:30): "Let me taste of the red." His land was red, for it is said (Gen 32:3): "Into the land of Seir, the field of Edom." His heroes were red, for it is said (Nah 2:3 or 4): "The shields of his mighty men are red." Their garments were red, for it is said (in the aforementioned place, Nah 2:3 or 4): "His warriors are clothed in scarlet." And he who takes vengeance upon him is red, for it is said (Song 5:10): "My beloved is white and ruddy." Clothed in a red garment (for Isa 63:2 says): "Why then is your garment so red?" By this, (our sages) wished to set forth the considerations on account of which Esau and his entire people, as well as all those who are named after him, are called red, namely because the planet Mars ruled over him (Esau), and therefore he was born ruddy and his soul craved red food; for it is fitting that the food should resemble the one who is fed. Likewise, his land, in which he dwelt, was under the planet Mars. In the same way, the heroes who subsequently descended from him and ruled in Italy were all together under the dominion of Mars, destroyers of men and leaders of the wounded; and these were the kings of Italy and the Roman emperors, who clothed themselves in scarlet, for such was the custom in Rome down to the present day. On this matter, the commentary of Rabbi Bahya on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 35. col. 1. in the Parascha Toledoth, may also be consulted.

Because the preceding passage mentions the sword of Esau, I must also take this occasion to show what kind of sword it is said to have been. In the small Jalkut Rubeni, numero 5, under the title Massikim, the following is written about it from the Midrash: מתושלח היה לו חרב ושם המפורש חקוק עליו והיה מפיל: that is: Methuselah had a sword upon which the Shem hammephorasch (that is, the name of God, Jehovah) was inscribed, and with it he had slain a thousand devils, &c. When Abraham then inherited this sword, he bequeathed it to Isaac, and Isaac in turn bequeathed it to Jacob; but Esau desired that same sword, and it was given to him in exchange for the right of his birthright.

Further, it is taught in the Jews' books concerning Esau that he committed five kinds of sin in a single day, of which the following is written in the frequently mentioned commentary of Rabbi Bechai on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 35, col. 1, in the Parascha Toledoth: עברו חמשה עבירות עבד דרשו רז"ל חמשה עבירות עבד אותו רשע באותו יום בא על נערה המאורסה הרג את הנפש, וכפר בתחיית המתים, וכפר ב'עיקר ושט את הבכורה וגו' that is: Our rabbis, of blessed memory, teach that this wicked man (namely Esau) committed five sins in a single day; that he lay with a betrothed virgin, killed a person, denied the resurrection of the dead, denied the foundation of faith, and despised the right of the firstborn. This is also to be found in Jonathan's Chaldean translation of Gen 25:29, as well as in the Midrasch Tillim, fol. 10, col. 1, and likewise in the Talmudic tractate Bava Bathra, fol. 16, col. 2. Moreover, all of his children are said to have been bastards, of which the following is written in the book Mattath Jah, fol. 17, col. 2, in the Parascha Vajeschef: ובניו של יעקב היה מצד בניו שהיו כשרים : של עשו היו מזמרים : that is: The glory of Jacob consisted in regard to his children, who were upright and honorable, whereas the children of Esau were bastards.

He is also said to have already been devoted to idolatry in the womb, concerning which it is written in Beresith Rabba, fol. 56. col. 2. in the 63rd Parasha, on the words of Gen 25:22, And the children struggled together within her, as follows: בשעה שהיתה עומדת על ב"כ ובתי מדרשות ויעקב מפרכס לצאת בשעה שהיה בטרה אצרך בבטן ידעתיך: ובשעה שהיא עוברת על בתי ע"ז עשו רץ ומפרכס לצאת הה' : that is, at the time when she (namely Rebecca) stood near the synagogues or the schools, Jacob stirred and wanted to come out, and this is what is written (Jer 1:5): Before I formed you in the womb I knew you. But when she passed by the houses (or temples) of idolaters, Esau moved and stirred to come out; and this is what is written (Ps 58:4): The wicked are estranged (or alienated) from the womb. The very same thing is found in the Yalkut Shimoni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 32. col. 2. numero 110, and in the oft-mentioned commentary of Rabbi Bechai, fol. 34. col. 3. in the Parasha Toledoth.

Since Esau is mentioned here, we also want to examine what garments he is said to have possessed, which are mentioned in Gen 27:15, and which his mother put on Jacob. In the book Zeéna ureéna, fol. 5, col. 1, in the Parascha

Beresbith, it is written that this was the very coat which God made for Adam, of which Gen 3:21 speaks, and upon which all the wild animals and birds of the world are said to have been embroidered and sewn; concerning which the book Zeror hammór, fol. 28, col. 3, in the Parascha Toledoth, contains the following written passage: כבר אמרו חכמים ז"ל שהיו אלה הבגדים של אדם הראשון וכו' והיו עליהם מצויירם כל החיות והעופות באלו היו חיים ובאו לידי נמרוד ולכן נקרא נמרוד גבור ציד לפי שכל החיות והחיות והעופות היו באים מעצמם אצל המלבוש ומיד אותם נמרוד חמדם עשו הרשע והרג לנמרוד וגזלם ממנו ולכן נקרא איש יודע ציד גם כן ואותו היום that is: Our sages of blessed memory have said that those garments belonged to the first man Adam, and that upon them all wild animals and birds were painted as though they were alive; and that they came into the hands of Nimrod, which is why Nimrod (Gen 10:9) is called a mighty hunter, since all wild animals and birds came of their own accord to such garments, and Nimrod caught them. But after the wicked Esau took a liking to them, he killed Nimrod and robbed him of them, and for that reason he too is called (Gen 25:27) one who understood hunting. On that same day, however (the day on which his mother put his garments on Jacob), God caused him not to put them on and to remain away on the hunt for a long time, so that Jacob might receive the blessings. Concerning this, the same account is to be found in the Sobar printed at Sulzbach, in the Parascha Toledoth, in the 333rd column; and in the great Jalkut Rubéni, fol. 52, col. 1, in the said Parascha; and in the aforementioned commentary of Rabbi Bechai, fol. 14, col. 1, in the Parascha Bereshith; and in the book Nézach Jisrael, fol. 26, col. 2-3, in the 16th chapter; as well as in the 24th chapter of the chapters of Rabbi Eliefer.

Furthermore, it is read in Gen 25:28 that Isaac loved Esau; why this should have occurred, however, is to be seen in the small Jalkut Rubéni, number 11, under the title Gebinnom, and in the large Jalkut Rubéni, fol. 51, col. 4, where it is reported that Isaac had foreseen that his children would sin against GOD, and that their sins were to be atoned for through the exilium, or captivity, under the children of Esau; for this reason he had rejoiced and loved Esau, since the Israelites would in this manner be freed from Hell.

Concerning the death of Esau, it is found in the Médrasch Tillim, fol. 17, col. 4, on the 18th Psalm, as well as in the Jalkut Schimóni, on the Books of Samuel, fol. 25, col. 4, number 163, that when Isaac was buried in the double cave, which is mentioned in Gen 23:19, Esau also attended the burial, and when the sons of Jacob had gone out of the cave and left their father, who was weeping, standing alone, Esau crept in to him; whereupon Judah immediately followed after him, so that he might not kill his father, and found that he had intended to kill his father, and therefore dispatched him from behind. But in the book

Maór hakkáton, it is read at fol. 42, col. 2, in the Parascha Terúma, that Chuschim, the son of Dan, beat him to death with a club, because he had wanted to prevent Jacob from being buried in the double cave; and this is taken from the Talmudic tractate Sota, fol. 13, col. 1. But let this be enough here concerning Esau. We must now return to the names by which the Jews are accustomed to call us.

Sixth, they call us תולדות שׁעיר Toledóth or Tolédos Seïr, that is, the generations of Seïr, and אומת שׁעיר Ummáth or ummas Seïr, that is, the people of Seïr, as well as נכדי שׁעיר Néchde Seïr, that is, the descendants of Seïr, because the land in which Esau dwelt was called Seïr, as can be seen in Gen 32:3 and Deut 2:12; and שׁעירים Seïrim, that is, those of Seïr. The name Toledóth Seïr, that is, the generation of Seïr, appears in the first part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 142, col. 1, under the title Józer le jóm ríschon schel Súccoath, in the prayer which begins Koscht Scheïnath ez, with these words: תאבד תולדות שׁעיר, that is, Blot out the generations of Seïr; whereas in the Machsor printed here in Frankfurt in the year 1690, one reads: תאבד תולדות אויבך, that is, Destroy the generations of your enemies. Both expressions, however, signify the Christians, since these are regarded by the Jews as enemies of God, as has been demonstrated above in Chapter 15, p. 604. The name Ummáth Seïr, that is, the people of Seïr, appears in the book Maggen Abraham, in the second chapter, where one reads: אומת שׁעיר היא אדום, that is, The people of Seïr signifies Edom. The name Néchde Seïr, however, is found in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 86, col. 1, in the prayer which begins Schem jikkará bichtifáto, where it is written as follows: נכדי שׁעיר בהכותו באויביו יתן נקמתו, that is, When He (namely God) shall smite the descendants of Seïr (and bring about the aforementioned bloodbath), He will take vengeance upon His enemies. These words, however, have been omitted entirely from the aforementioned Machsor printed here in Frankfurt, out of fear. The name Seïrim, that is, those of Seïr, appears in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 52, col. 2, under the title Jozer lejóm ríschon schel pésach, in the prayer which begins Schelachaich Pardes ע״, with these words: אני ישנה בראת עיר משעירים, that is, I sleep (that is, I remain so long in exile or misery) until I shall come into the city (Jerusalem) from the Seïrim (that is, from those of Seïr).

Seventh, they call us בני עמלק Bené Amalek, that is, Amalek's children, and זרע עמלק Séra Amalek, that is, Amalek's seed, and אומת עמלק Ummáth Amalek, that is, Amalek's people, or the Amalekite nation, as well as עמלקים Amalèkim, that is, Amalekites. The name Bené Amalek, that is, Amalek's children, is found in the Machsor printed in folio at Venice, in a prayer beginning אמרה בשחי Amàrer bischi, under the title באב לתשעה Letischa beaf. Likewise, the name Séra

Amalek, that is, Amalek's seed, is found in the second part of the Wilmsersdorf Machsor, fol. 60, col. 2, in the commentary, where it is written: עתיד הקב"ה לתקוע שלש תקיעות אחת לתחיית המתים ואחת להכרית זרעו של עמלק ואחת לקבץ גלויות, that is, the Holy and Blessed GOD will sound the trumpet three times: once for the resurrection of the dead; a second time to exterminate Séra Amalek, that is, the seed of Amalek; and a third time to gather together the Jews who are in captivity. But in place of the words עמלק של זרעו, that is, to exterminate the seed of Amalek, the Prague Machsor, first part, fol. 17, col. 2, reads עשו זרעו של עשו, that is, to exterminate the seed of Esau, since both names are taken in the same sense. Beyond this, the same name is also found in the aforementioned Venice Machsor, first part, under the title ערבית למוצאי שבת Arafith lemozäé Schabbáth, on the last leaf of that title, and in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 16, col. 2, in the commentary, under the title Józer lepharascháth sechór, as well as in the book Pesikta rábbetha, fol. 19, col. 4. The name Amalekim, that is, Amalekites, however, appears in the little book Schévet Jehúda, fol. 75, col. 1, where one reads as follows: העלילו יהודי ולא יצא עוד וגו' - יהודי ולא יצא עוד וגו', that is, the Amalekites have falsely accused (the Jews), claiming that a Christian entered a Jewish house and never came out again, etc. Now since Amalek was Esau's grandson, as can be seen in Gen 36:12, it amounts to the same thing as if they called us Esau's children, or Esau's seed, or Edomites, for the name Esau is often used among the Jews in place of Amalek, and Amalek in place of Esau, as will be clearly seen from what follows.

In the Jalkut Shimoni, on Obadiab, fol. 80, col. 3, numero 549, the following is read: אין הכס שלם ולא השם שלם עד שיכרית זרעו של עשו, that is: The throne (of God) will not be complete, nor His name whole, until He shall have destroyed the seed of Esau; which is also to be found in Abarbanel's Commentario on Obadiab, fol. 256, col. 4. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi likewise writes in his commentary on the words of Exod 17:16, "The hand is upon the throne of the Lord, that the Lord will wage war against Amalek from generation to generation," as follows: נשבע הקב"ה שאין שמו שלם ואין כסאו שלם עד שימחה שמו של עשו, that is: The holy and blessed God has sworn that His name shall not be whole, nor His throne (or seat) complete, until the name of Esau shall have been entirely blotted out; and when his name shall have been blotted out, then the name shall be whole and the throne complete. And in his commentary on the words of Obad 1:21, "And saviors shall come up upon Mount Zion to judge the mountain of Esau," he writes as follows: לימדך שאין מלכותו שלימה עד שיפרע מעשו הרשע, that is: This teaches you that His (namely God's) kingdom shall not be complete until He shall have taken vengeance upon the wicked Esau. In place of the name of Esau, however, the name Amalek is read by others in this matter; hence it stands in the book Pesikta Rabbatha, fol. 19, col. 4, as follows: 'אמר ר' לוי בשם ר' חמא בר חנינא כביכול כל זמן שזרעו של עמלק בעולם לא השם שלם ולא הכס שלם נעקר זרעו של עמלק, that is: Rabbi Levi has said in the name of Rabbi Chama, of the house of Rabbi Channina: so long as the seed of Amalek is in the world, so is, so to speak, the name (of God) not complete, and the throne not whole either; but when the seed of Amalek shall have been rooted out, then the name shall be complete and the throne whole. In this same manner it is also read in Rabbi Moshe de Mercado's commentary on the Psalms, fol. 18, col. 4, on Ps 9:2: שאין הכסא שלם ועד שימחה שם זכר של עמלק שנ' כי יד על כס יי, that is: The name is not complete, nor the throne whole, until the name and the memory of Amalek shall have been blotted out, as it is said (Exod 17:16): "The hand is upon the throne of the Lord." In the Prague Machzor, in the first part, fol. 56, col. 2, and in the second part, fol. 16, col. 2, in the commentary, as also in the book Midrash Tillim, fol. 10, col. 2, on Ps 9, and in the book Avodat Hakodesh, under the title Chelek Hattachlith, in the 41st chapter, fol. 97, col. 3-4, and in Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 56, col. 4, at the end of the Parasbat Besbalach, the like is found, and Amalek is read in place of Esau, so that from all this it sufficiently appears that one of these two names is taken in place of the other.

The truth of this can also be plainly gathered from the following. In the book Zerór hammór, at fol. 125. col. 2., in the Parascha Pinchas, it is stated that the he-goats mentioned in Num 29:16, 19, 22, 25, etc. signify the kingdoms (or monarchies), and the following is added: וכן רמז השעיר לעשו מלך אדום שהוא איש שעיר והם עתידים להיות נעקרים מהעולם לפי שבאו מכה נחש הקדמוני אשר כתב בו על גחונך תלך בלא רגלים לפי שהשקר אין לו רגלים ולכן אנן בטוחים שאף על פי שאלו המלכויות היו חזקים ועזים כאלה וכאלון פתע פתאום ישרבו ויאבדו ולכן כתב בעמלק ואחריתו עדי אובד ועליו אמר האויב תמו חרבות הוא עשו הרשע שהוא אויב לישראל ומבקש רעתם וגו' that is: the goat also has a meaning referring to Esau, the Edomite king, who is a hairy man, and those same ones (namely the Edomites, that is, the Christians) will be rooted out from the world, because they descend from the power of the ancient serpent (that is, the devil, as may be read in the following seventeenth chapter), of which it is written (Gen 3:14): "Upon your belly you shall go, without feet," since the lie has no feet. Therefore we hope that, although those kingdoms are mighty and strong like an oak and a pine tree, they will nonetheless be swiftly and suddenly broken and will perish. For this reason it is written of Amalek (Deut 24:20): "And his end is unto destruction." Of this it is also said (Ps 9:7): "O enemy, are the desolations then complete?" And this enemy is the wicked Esau (understand: Christendom), who is the enemy of the Israelites and seeks their misfortune (as was shown above in the 15th chapter, p. 602 and 603). But a time will come when they (the Christians) will perish, and this is what is said (Ps 9:7): "Their memory has perished with them," since their memory will vanish in those same days. In these words it is once again plainly to be seen that by Esau and Amalek one people, namely the Christians, is to be understood, for it is stated that Esau shall be exterminated, because it is written of Amalek that his end is unto destruction.

So it is also written in Abarbanel's commentary on Obadiah, fol. 255, col. 2, on the words of v. 9, "That every one of the mount of Esau may be cut off by slaughter," as follows: הנה לומר שיכרית איש מכל אותם המתיחסים ונקראים ומסתעפים מהר עשו והם כלל הנוצרים ותהיה כריתתם מקטל כלומר מהריגה עצומה שתהיה בהם כי לא יישארו באדום ממלחמה העתידה עוללות כמו שנשארה ממלחמות האחרות וגו' that is: the meaning of these words is that all who trace their lineage from the mount of Esau and are named after it, namely the Christians, are all together to be exterminated by slaughter, that is, by a mighty massacre that shall come upon them, for in the coming war no one from Edom shall remain, as some have remained from the other wars, etc. In the Prague Machzor, however, in the second part, fol. 12, col. 2, the same is stated concerning Amalek in the commentary.

Furthermore, in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 15, col. 2, at the end, in the commentary under the title Jozer lepharaschath Sechor, the following is read: מרשע מושל (know that by Amaleck the Wicked is meant) עמלק הרשע: that is, the wicked Amaleck rules over the entire world. This, however, is said in other places of Christendom, that it rules everywhere; and concerning this it stands written in the Prague Machsor, in the first part, fol. 31, col. 2, under the title Musaph schel rosch haschána jom ébad, as follows: גברת ממלכות זהו אדום הרשעה שהיא מלכות גוברת שמלכותה פשטה בכל העולם: that is, by the mistress of kingdoms is understood the wicked realm (Christendom), whose kingdom has spread throughout the entire world. In Schemóth rábba, however, it is found at fol. 117, col. 1, in the 27th Parascha, still more plainly, that Esau and Amaleck are one and the same, in these words: ביתרו מה כתיב ויאמר שאול אל הקיני: בעשו כתיב זכור את אשר עשה לך עמלק אתה מוצא דברים רבים כתובים בעשו לגנאי ובחובים ביתרו לשבח וגו' עשו שמע ביציאתן של ישראל ונלחם עמהם שנאמר: that is, what stands written concerning Jethro (1 Sam 15:6): And Saul sent word to the Kenite. But concerning Esau it stands written (Deut 25:17): Remember what Amaleck did to you. You find many things written to the dishonor of Esau, but to the praise of Jethro, etc. Esau heard that the Israelites had gone out of Egypt and fought against them, as it is said (Exod 17:8): Then came Amaleck. And in the book Zerór hammór it stands written at fol. 146, col. 2, at the end of the Parascha Ki téze: הוא זוכר מה שעשה לך עמלק: that is, Remember what Amaleck did to you, who is a symbol for the Jézer bará, that is, the evil inclination, which is called Amaleck, and Esau is the father of Edom.

So also in the small Jalkut Rubéni, numero 33, under the title Sammaël, the following is read from the book Pelía: הוא עמלק המלחמה: that is, the war in the fourth exilio, or exile, will be waged against Sammaël, that is, Esau, and such a war will be hard and mighty, for it is written (Deut 25:19): You shall blot out the memory of Amalek. Therefore Rabbi Bechhai teaches in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 85, col. 3, in the Parascha Beschállach, as follows: אין לך אומה בעולם שלא יהיה לו חלק בהקב"ה אבל עמלק ועשו לא יהיה להם חלק וזכרון עם שאר האומות הנשארים הוא שכתוב ולא יהיה שריד לבית עשו באור הכתוב כי משאר האומות יהיו שרידים ופליטים שישארו מהם לעבוד את ה' ואין בו מרעו של עשו אך ימחו מן העולם כענין שכתוב כי מחה אמה את זכר עמלק ואז יהיה השם והכסא על השלימות שהרי ג' אותיות שהן א'ל'ף ה"א ו"ו הם תשלום הכסא והשם: that is, there is no nation in the world that will not have (at the coming of the Messiah) a share in the holy and blessed God; but Amalek and Esau will have no share among the remaining nations that shall be left over, nor will they be remembered any longer, and this is what is written (Obad 1:18): And there shall be no survivor of the house of Esau. The explanation of this saying consists in this: that survivors from the other nations will remain to serve the Lord, but not from the seed of Esau; rather, these shall be exterminated from the world, just as it is written (Exod 17:14): For I will utterly blot out the memory of Amalek; and then the name and the throne (of God) shall be complete, for the three letters Aleph, He, and Vau make the throne and the name complete. All of this is also to be found in the book Zeëna ureëna, fol. 45, col. 1, at the end of the Parascha Beschallach. These last words, however, are to be understood as follows: that the throne of God, which in Exod 17:16 is called כס Kes, without the letter Aleph, instead of כס Kisse, with the Aleph, and the name of God, which is likewise read there as יה Jah, instead of יהוה Jehova, with the omission of the letters He and Vau, shall, at the coming of the Messiah, after all Christians have been exterminated and killed, regain their completeness, and instead of כס Kes shall then be said כס Kisse, and instead of יה Jah shall be said יהוה Jehova.

Since it is now established that both the name Amalek and the name Esau refer to the descendants of Esau and to Christians, Rabbi Menachem of Recanati writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 96, col. 1, in the Parashah Vajishma Jethro, as follows: בימות המשיח ימחה זרעו של עשו ושל: that is, "In the days of the Messiah, the seed of Esau and of Amalek will be blotted out on account of the power of the Israelites, which will be mighty above" (that is, in heaven), "etc." Likewise, in the aforementioned book Zeëna ureëna, fol. 45, col. 2, in the said Parashah Vajishma Jethro, the following is read: עס איז וויסיג/ דס עסו איז גיווען קיין רשע צו: that is, "It is known that Esau has shown himself wicked toward Israel in all generations and at all times, whether in the first war of Amalek (of which one may read in Exod 17:8, or elsewhere); for no one ever made war against Israel for the first time except Esau, that is, Amalek, who was the first to begin it; and likewise the last war will be with Esau in the days of the Messiah."

זרים sarim, that is, foreigners; but a single one is called נכרי Nóchri, or נכר Néchar, or בן נכר Ben néchar, or זר Sar, that is, a foreigner. What the word Nochri means is taught by Rabbi Abraham Perizol in his book Maggen Abraham, in the 72nd chapter, when he states: מלת נברי היא היפך היא שאינו שומר: ברית אחוה ולא שומר דעות דעתו ותורתו נבדלה ונפרשה ובדעות ובאמונות העיקר 'במלת נכרי הנה שאינו בלתי נימול שהערל נקרא נכרי ונכר כאמרו כל בן נכר ערל לב וערל בשר: that is, the word Nóchri, or foreigner, is the opposite of the word brother, for he (namely the foreigner) does not keep the covenant of brotherhood and does not hold his brother's opinions. Likewise his law is separated and distinguished in its opinions and beliefs; and the word Nóchri, or foreigner, signifies principally one who is not circumcised, for an uncircumcised person is called Nóchri and Néchar, that is, a foreigner, as it is said (Ezek 44:9): No ben néchar, that is, foreigner of uncircumcised heart and uncircumcised flesh, shall enter my sanctuary. So too is it read in the old Nizzáchon, p. 139: כתיב לאחיק לא תשיך אבל לנכרי ר"ל שאינו נימול תשיך: that is, it is written (Deut 23:19-20): You shall not charge usury to your brother, but to the Nóchri, that is, the foreigner who is not circumcised, you shall charge usury. From this we see that an uncircumcised person is called Nóchri, or a foreigner, and that is why every Christian is called such by the Jews, because he is not circumcised. In the Talmudic tractate Berachóth, fol. 47, col. 2, it is stated concerning a proselyte or associate of the Jews: לעולם אינו גר עד שימול ויטבול: that is, he is by no means a Jewish associate until he is circumcised and washed; but as long as he has not been washed, he is a Nóchri, that is, a foreigner. Rabbi Bechai has also written in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 207, col. 3, in the Parashah Schóphetim, on the words of Deut 17:15, "You shall set over yourself a king from among your brothers," in the following manner: מכאן יש ללמוד שכל מי שאינו אחיק אינו ישראל וכל מי שאינו

ישראל נקרא נכרי: that is, from this it is to be learned that everyone who is not your brother is no Israelite, and everyone who is no Israelite is called a foreigner. Thus, according to the teaching of Rabbi Bechai, the foreigner is set in opposition to an Israelite, so that an Israelite is no foreigner and a foreigner is no Israelite; and for this reason he also teaches, fol. 213, col. 4, in the aforementioned book, in the Parashah Ki téze: לנכרי תשיך ולא לישראל: that is, you shall charge usury to the foreigner, and not to the Israelite. The like is also to be found in the Sepher Chasidim, numbers 1014, 1017, and 1018, where יהודים Jebúdim and נכרים nóchrim, that is, Jews and foreigners, as well as נכרי nóchri and ישראל Jisrael, that is, a foreigner and an Israelite, are set against one another. Accordingly, Abarbenel, in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 360, col. 4, explains the words of Deut 15:3, "From a foreigner you may exact payment," as follows: רוצה לומר את הנכרי אשר לא מבני ישראל הוא תוכל: that is, by this is meant that from a foreigner who is not of the Israelites you may exact that which you have lent him.

Against this, it could be objected that the aforementioned Abarbenel, in his cited commentary fol. 382. col. 2., actually denies that someone of the lineage of Esau, that is, a Christian, is called Nóchri, when he writes: אין הנכרי נקרא כל איש אשר לא מזרע היהודים הוא ואמנם לזרע אדום לא יאמר נכרי כי הוא נקרא אח שנ' לא תתעב אדומי כי אחיך הוא. ונכלל בלא תשיך לאחיך. וכן ישמעאל ושאר האומות לא נקראו 'בשם נכרי'. ולנכרי שהוא מז' אומות אינו מגונה לקחת רבית ממנו וגו' that is: Not every person who is not of Jewish lineage is called a nóchri or a foreigner, for certainly the seed of Edom (understand: the Christians) is not called nóchri, inasmuch as it is called a brother, as it is said (Deut 23:7): You shall not abhor an Edomite, for he is your brother; and it is included under the words (Deut 23:19): You shall not charge interest to your brother. Likewise, the Ishmaelites (that is, the Turks) and the remaining peoples are not called by the name nóchri. But to take usury from a foreigner who is of the seven peoples (who dwelt in the land of Canaan before the Israelites, and whom God commanded to exterminate) is not shameful, etc.

Further, it can be said that the same author, in his book Markéveth hammischne, fol. 77, col. 4, in the Parascha Téze, also teaches that by the nóchrim, or foreigners, only those who have fallen away from the Jewish faith are to be understood, where his words read as follows: אפילו שנהיה שהרבית מצד עצמו מגונה הנה לא התיר הש"י כי אם בנכרי ואין הנכרי נקרא כל איש אשר לא מזרע היהודים הוא אבל הוא האיש שהתנכר לאביו שבשמים ועבר בריתו והם המשומדים והיוצאים מכלל הדת ואמנם לזרע אדום לא יאמר נכרי כי הוא נקרא אח שנ' לא תתעב אדומי כי אחיך הוא ונכלל בלא תשיך לאחיך וכן ישמעאל ושאר האומות לא נקראו בשם נכרי כי אם בשם גוים או בשמותם הפרטיים. אבל נכרי סתם לא יאמר כפי דברי חז"ל אלא למי שהתנכר לאביו

שבשמים, ולנכרי שהתנכר לאלהיו אינו מגונה לקחת רבית ממנו ולעשות לו שלא בהוגן כיון שהוא עשה שלא בהוגן ולא יבא בצדקת הש"י ולא יזכה בחסד התורה אחרי אשר כפר בה: that is, even if we acknowledge that usury is in itself a shameful thing, the blessed God has nonetheless permitted it to be practiced only against a nóchri, that is, a foreigner. Not every person, however, is called a foreigner merely because he is not of Jewish descent; rather, it denotes one who shows himself a stranger toward his Father in Heaven, namely those who have abandoned the Jewish faith and fallen away from the religion. The seed of Edom, however (by which Christians are understood), is not called nochri, or foreign, for it is called a brother, as it is said (Deut 23:8): "You shall not abhor an Edomite, for he is your brother"; and that seed is included under the words (Deut 23:20): "You shall not charge interest to your brother." Likewise, the Ishmaelites (or Turks) and the remaining peoples are not called by the name nochri, that is, foreign, but rather Gojim, that is, heathens, or by their particular names. According to the testimony of our Sages, of blessed memory, only he is called nochri, that is, foreign, who shows himself a stranger toward his Father who is in Heaven. To take usury from a nochri, or foreigner, who holds himself a stranger toward his God, and to deal with him in an unseemly manner, is no disgrace, since he has not done what is fitting; and one does not deal with him according to the righteousness of God. He is likewise not worthy of the mercy of the Law (which is enjoined in the Law), seeing that he has denied it. These are the words of Abarbanel.

I respond to this, however, with the answer that this was not the genuine and true opinion of Abarbanel, which becomes clear from what follows, where he states: והתשובה הזאת היתה מאתי משום דרכי שלום that is, "This answer, however, was given by me for the sake of peace," by which he intended to indicate that he had written it solely so that Christians would not be regarded as nochrims or foreigners, in order that the Jews might live peaceably among them and not be hated by them, should they hear that they are regarded by the Jews as foreigners who conduct themselves as strangers toward God. For had it been his genuine and earnest conviction, he would not have written, as can be seen shortly before in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 360, col. 4, on Deut 15:3, that the word nochri, or "foreigner," which appears there, denotes one who is not of the Israelites, by which he has made it plainly clear that every person who is not an Israelite or Jew is a nochri or foreigner, and thus no Christian is excluded.

But suppose he did mean it seriously, that Christians are not to be regarded as foreigners, for the reason he cited from Deut 23:7: in that case he would have held an opinion not approved by any other Jews, and one in which no one agrees with him. For although one reads in the booklet Schévet Jebúda fol. 7. col. 2. that a certain man named Thomas held a conversation with a king of Spain called Alphonsus, and said to him: ויכוח היה לי בזה עם שר אחד מבני אברבנאל: בא משביליא מולדתו ואמר כי המכיר בלשון עברי לא יקשה לזה כי המבדל יש ללשון נכרי או לשון נוצרי או גוי כי הנכרי הוא שהתנכר ליוצרו ואינו מאמין בעיקרי הדת אבל הנוצרי בין שמאמין בחדוש העולם והפלאות וההשגחה לא יקרא נכרי that is, I have had a disputation about this matter (namely, concerning the ox of a Jew that kills the ox of a nóchri or foreigner) with a prince from among the sons of Abarbanel (when he had come from Seville, his native city), and he said to me that it does not seem difficult to one who understands the Hebrew language that there is a distinction between the word Nóchri, that is, foreigner, and the word Nózeri, that is, Christian, or Goi, that is, heathen; for he who shows himself a stranger toward his Creator and does not believe the principal articles of religion is called nóchri or a foreigner; but a Christian is not called nóchri or a foreigner, because he believes in the creation of the world and in miracles, as well as in (divine) Providenz, or Providence. Although, I say, this stands in the booklet Schévet Jebúda, it was nevertheless not said in earnest, but only out of hypocrisy and flattery, for the sake of peaceful coexistence and to avoid the hostility of Christians, by one of the sons of Abarbanel, just as has happened with various other matters mentioned in the aforementioned booklet Schévet Jebúda, which have been pointed out by me in this book.

The truth of this my statement can also easily be gathered from the fact that in 1 Kgs 8:41, someone who was not an Israelite is called nóchri, that is, a foreigner, where the word nóchri in the Chaldean translation is rendered בר עממין bar ammin, i.e., a son of the peoples (of whom, besides the Jews, seventy are said to exist in the world): how then could one of Abarbanel's sons have understood it in earnest any differently than it is taken in Holy Scripture? Furthermore, the two words nóchri and Goi are often used interchangeably, and it is written in the Talmudic tractate Gittin, fol. 70, col. 1: רב שימי בר אשי: that is, Rabbi Schimi, son of Aschi, did it to a Nochri, that is, a foreigner, in that he hanged him. In the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara, however, fol. 26, col. 2, in the Tosephóth, where the very same matter is repeated, the word Goi appears in place of the word Nóchri. And in Mr. Doctor Wagenseil's refutation of the Lipmannian poem, p. 600, the following is read from the manuscript book Ez chajim: תשיך: תשיך: שן 'לנכרי תשיך: that is, it is an affirmative commandment to practice usury against a Goi or heathen, as it is said (Deut 23:20): "You shall charge interest to the nóchri or foreigner." The same is also to be found in the Sépher Toledóth Adam vechávva, fol. 149, col. 4. Now just as a Christian is called Goi by the Jews, so too is he called nóchri by them; for this reason Rabbi Eliefer as well, fol. 134, col. 4, in his book *Maaséh basché*m, calls all Christians Nóchrím, that is, foreigners, as can be clearly seen below at the beginning of the fourth chapter of the second part.

Regarding the brotherhood between the Edomites and Israelites, which Abarbanel mentions, something quite different is taught on this subject in the old Nizzáchon, pages 138 and 139, where the following is written: ואם תאמר גם בני עשו נקראים אחים שני לא תתעב אדומי כי אחיך הוא ויש לומר אמת הוא שהיו אחים מקדם ונאסרה הרבית מהם עד זמן שפסל את עצמו ועתה נחשבו לזרים בראותם שחרב בית המקדש ולא באו לעזרה שני ביום עמדך מנגד וגו' עד כאחד מהם וכ"ש אשר הם בעצמם עזרו להחריבה שני וזכור יי לבני אדום את יום ירושלים וגו' וגם שמחשבין עצמן לבני נכר שאינם בני ישראל וגו' that is: If you wish to say that the children of Esau are also called brothers, as it is said (Deut 23:7): "You shall not abhor an Edomite, for he is your brother," the answer is this: it is true that they were brothers in former times, and it was forbidden to take usury from them, until they made themselves unworthy of having that commandment observed toward them, and are now regarded as זרים, färim, that is, strangers; for when they saw that the Temple had been destroyed, they did not come to its aid, as it is said (Obad 1:11): "In the day that you stood against him," etc., down to the words, "you were even as one of them." How much more, then, are they to be regarded as strangers, since they themselves helped to destroy the Temple, as it is said (Ps 137:7): "Lord, remember the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem," etc. In addition, they regard themselves as bené néchar, that is, strangers, because they are not circumcised, etc. From all of this it is thus evident that it was not Abarbanel's genuine opinion that Christians are not nóckrim, or strangers; or, if it were indeed his genuine opinion (which, however, it is not), that he held in this matter a singular view at odds with the testimony of all other Jews.

Regarding the aforementioned name bené néchar, that is, foreign children: those who were not of Jewish descent are called by this name in Neh 9:2, where it is written: "And they separated the seed of Israel from all bené néchar, that is, foreign children." The same can also be seen in Ps 124:7. For this reason, Christians are likewise called by this name by the Jews, and Abarbanel writes the following on this subject in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 153, col. 1, in the Parascha Bo: בן נכר הוא שְׂאֵמֻנְתּוֹ הוּא נֶכֶר בֵּין שְׁיִיָּהּ נֶכֶרִי, that is: A ben néchar, that is, a foreigner, denotes one who is foreign in his faith, whether he be a foreigner or an apostate Israelite. As for the name זרים sarim, which likewise means foreign: it can be seen from the words cited shortly before from the old Nizzáchon, paginâ 139, and from Bechai, fol. 1213, that they are called by this name.

Ninth, they call us גוים Gojim, that is, heathens, and a single one גוי Goi, that is, a heathen; a woman, however, גויה Gója, that is, a heathen woman; and two or more women גויית Gójoth or Gójos, that is, heathen women. Elias writes about this in his Tischbi, fol. 14, col. 2, as follows: כָּל אִישׁ שֶׁאִינוּ מִיִּשְׂרָאֵל קָרְאוּ לוֹ: גוֹי פְּלומֶר שֶׁהוּא מִגּוֹי אֲחֵר וְאֵם נִקְבָּה הִיא קָרְאוּ לָהּ גוֹיָה וּבְלִשׁוֹן רַבּוֹת גּוֹיִת אַף עַל פִּי שְׁלֹא גוֹי פְּלומֶר שֶׁהוּא מִגּוֹי אֲחֵר וְאֵם נִקְבָּה הִיא קָרְאוּ לָהּ גוֹיָה וּבְלִשׁוֹן רַבּוֹת גּוֹיִת אַף עַל פִּי שְׁלֹא יִתְּכֵן בְּלִשׁוֹן, that is: Every man who is not of the Israelites is called Goi, because he is from another people; but if it is a woman, she is called Gója; and if there are many of them (namely, of the women), they are called Gójoth, although this does not sit well in the (Hebrew) language. This is also to be found in Rabbi Solomon ben Mélech's book Michlal jóphi, fol. 7, col. 3, on Gen 20. In the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, the word Goi means a people, and is used of both the Jewish and the heathen people: of the former in Exod 19:6, Josh 5:8, 2 Sam 7:23, and Ezek 37:22, as well as in several other places; of the latter in Deut 28:36, 49, 50, Isa 55:5, and Jer 2:11, and in very many other places as well. However, a single person is nowhere called Goi, as is done by the Jews contrary to the proper meaning of this word. Now when the word Goi is set in opposition to a Jew, it means among them a heathen or unbeliever who lives outside of Judaism, in which sense it is found very frequently in Jewish books, as can be seen hundreds of times in the book Colbo. And a Christian who serves the Jews on their Sabbath is called שבת גוי Schabbás goi, and a Christian woman שבת גויה Schabbás gója, as I myself have heard from them. The Jews are also accustomed at times, for the sake of distinction, to call a Christian גוי נוצרי Goi Nözeri, that is, a Nazarene (or Christian) Goi, as can be read in the 72nd chapter of the book Maggen Abraham, which Rabbi Abraham ham Perizol composed, where he teaches that it is permitted to take usury from a Christian, and he goes on to say: חֲכָמֵינוּ הַקְדוּשִׁים רָאוּ אִמְתַּת הַדָּבָר: הַזֶּה לְהַתִּיר הָרַבִּית לְיִשְׂרָאֵל וּלְקַחְתּוֹ מִן הַגּוֹי הַנָּצְרִי, that is: Our holy sages have seen the truth of this matter, to permit an Israelite to take usury and to collect it from a Christian Goi. This is also found in Elias's book Masôreth hammasôreth, paginâ 8, in the preface, which is called Hakdâma bacharúfith, where it indicates who gave him occasion to write that book, and he states there as follows: הִנְנִי נֹשְׁבַע בְּיוֹצְרִי כִּי גוֹי אֶחָד נָצְרִי לֹהֵא הֵעִירָנִי, that is: Behold, I swear by my Creator that a Nazarene (or Christian) Goi aroused me to do so.

Regarding the plural form, or the plural number of the word Goi, namely Gójim, it is applied to the Israelites in Gen 17:4-5 and Ezek 2:3, although in the latter passage it can be understood to mean that they were so called on account of their godless deeds, by which they had shown themselves equal to the heathens; in general, however, in the Old Testament it refers to the unbelieving peoples and heathens, as can be seen in Deut 4:38, Ps 2:1, and Jer 9:26, just as in the New Testament the Greek word ἔθνη, éthne, has the same meaning in Matt 6:32 and 10:5, 18, Acts 9:15, and many other places. It is in this sense that the Jews also take the word Gójim when they call Christians by that name. That they call us this is clearly evident from what was cited above in Chapter 11, page 532, from fol. 104, col. 1, numero 97 of the book Col bo. So too does Abarbenel write in his commentary on the words of Joel 2:17, "Let not your inheritance be put to shame, that the Gójim (or heathens) should rule over them," in the following manner: למשול לחרפה למשול אי אפשר לפרש אל תתן נחלתך לחרפה למשול: במ, גוים כי אם על הגלות הארוך הזה אשר אנחנו בו לחרפה ביד אדום, that is: "One cannot interpret the words 'Let not your inheritance be put to shame, that the heathens should rule over them' in any other way than as referring to this long exilio, or misery, in which we are in the power of Edom (that is, of Christendom)." And at fol. 242, col. 3, the aforementioned Abarbenel writes on the words of Joel 3:2, "I will gather all the heathens together," as follows: אני כבר כתבתי במקום הנזכר למעלה שלא יאמר הנביא כל הגוים כי אם על אדום וישמעאל שהם שתי כתות אמונת הגוים שכוללים כל יושבי תבל ושוכני ארץ היום הזה, that is: "I have already written in the aforementioned place that by 'all the heathens' the prophet understands the Edomites (that is, the Christians) and the Ishmaelites (that is, the Turks), who together make up the two camps of the faith of the heathens, which today encompass all the inhabitants of the world and the possessors of the earth." In the Sepher juchasin, however, at fol. 148, col. 2, the Christians alone are called Gojim, and the Turks Jischmaelim, that is, Ishmaelites, where it is reported that a king of England had been in the Holy Land together with Philippo, the king of France, and the following is added: ונתפטר עם צלח אל דין עד מלאת חמש שנים שלא יעלו למלחמה בארץ ישראל לא הגוים: ולא הישמעאלים: that is: "And he came to an agreement with Saladin that for five years after the expiration of that time, neither the Gojim (that is, Christians) nor the Ishmaelites (that is, Turks) should march into the land of Israel to wage war." Something similar is also to be found in the Talmudic tractate Schábbath, fol. 11, col. 1, where it is stated that it is good to live נוח תחת גוי ולא תחת גוי, that is, under the Ishmaelite (or Turk) and not under the Goi, that is, the Edomite, as Rabbi Solomon explains it there, by which the Christians are meant.

Furthermore, a distinction is also made by the Jews between Gojim, heathens, and úmmim, peoples, and it stands in the Jalkut chádascb fol. 20. numero 20. under the title Ummóth (or úmmos) baólam, as follows: גוים הם שעבדו את : ישראל אומים הם שלא שעבדו בישראל : that is, those who have brought Israel into their servitude are called Gojim; those, however, who have not brought them into servitude are called úmmim. And this is also to be found in the aforementioned Jalkut chádascb fol. 51. col. 2. numero 92., where one reads: את ישראל נקראו גוים ואותן שלא שעבדו בהם נקראו אומים (sic) האומות שעשעבדו : that is, those peoples who have brought the Israelites into servitude are called Gojim; those, however, who have not brought them into servitude are called úmmim. On this matter, the same is also to be read in the Jalkut Schimóni on the Psalms, fol. 126. col. 2. numero 875.

Rabbi Bechai also writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 22. col. 4. and fol. 23. col. 1., in the Parascha Lech lécha, on the words of Gen 14:1, "And Tidal, king of the nations," as follows: ת"ו גוים זה מלכות אדום שהומלך על עמים רבים שונים אשר מנוהו עליהם לראש ולקצין והוא מלך רומי שהיא עיר מקובצת that is, by the king of the nations is meant the Edomite king, who was made king over many and various peoples who set him as head and prince over them; and this same one is the king of the city of Rome, which is a city assembled from many peoples, from the Chittim and other Gojim, that is, heathens. In Beréschith rábba, however, the following is read: that is, by Tidal, the king of the nations, is meant the Edomite kingdom (that is, Christendom), which exercises tyranny over all the peoples of the world. Rabbi Salman Zevi does indeed wish to maintain, in his Jewish Theriac, in the second chapter, number 31, fol. 15. col. 2., that the word Goi, or Gojim, means nothing evil, and that no one need be ashamed on account of it; but this too is one of his false tricks. One need only ask a Jew whether he is a Goi: he will certainly answer immediately with a no, and thereby make it understood that this name carries a contemptuous meaning.

Tenth, they call us בני עדינה Bené Adina, that is, Children of the Voluptuous. The Babylonian Empire is called Adina in Isa 47:8, that is, one who is given over to pleasures; but the Jews apply this name to Christendom, and it stands in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 82, col. 1, in the commentary: אדום הרשעה, עדינה, that is, the Adina signifies the godless Edom (understand: Christendom), of which more is to be found below in the 17th chapter. Therefore, in the Selichoth or Selichos, in the prayer which begins אלה אזכרה Elle eskerá venáfshi &c., under the title לערב leéref rosch baschána uleérefjom Kippur, fol. 39, col. 1, in the old Prague printing, one reads as follows: חתנו בני עדינה להלחמה הרעו לנו מכל מלכי ארמה, that is, the Bené Adina, or Children of the Voluptuous, have broken us with the waging of war; they have done us more evil than all the kings on earth. In the Frankfurt printing, however, from the year 425, that is, according to our reckoning the year 1665, in place of להלחמה lehillachamá stands the word שוממה Schoméma, and the Jews' German translation of it, printed at Amsterdam in the year 430, that is, according to our reckoning in the year 1670, fol. 30, col. 2, reads as follows: They (the Edomites) have broken us, they who are called the gentle ones (that is, the tender and voluptuous); these same ones now lay waste. Here we see plainly, therefore, that in this translation the words bené Adina are explained by means of Edom, which among the Jews signifies Christendom.

Eleventh, they call us אום מדקה ואכלה Om máddeka veáchela, that is, the crushing and devouring people, or מדקים Maddikim, that is, crushers. In the prophet Daniel, it is said in chapter 7, v. 7, of the fourth beast that it had great teeth and devoured all around it and crushed, etc. Now because the Jews understand by this fourth beast the Roman Empire, and by the Roman Empire Christendom, they accordingly call Christians by the aforementioned name; and so they pray at their Passover feast in the prayer that begins ליל שמורים Lel schimmúrim, under the title פסח מרעיר לראשון של פסח Máarif lerischon schel Pésach, as follows: רעוץ ירעוץ אום מדקה ואכלה שנית בו להגאלה, that is, He will crush the crushing and devouring people, so that we may be redeemed a second time in it (namely, the night of watching, of which one may read in Exod 12:42). And the Jews hold that just as their forefathers were redeemed out of Egypt, so too shall they be redeemed a second time out of Christendom, as shall be shown in detail below in the fourteenth chapter of the second part.

The word Maddikim, however, is to be found in the Selichoth, in the Prague printing fol. 17. col. 2. and in the Frankfurt printing fol. 16. col. 1., in the prayer which begins איתך קויתי וגו' Ivviticha Kivviticha, etc., under the title ליום רביעי lejóm revii. Likewise, in the second part of the Prague Machsor fol. 77. col. 2., under the title פסח מרעיר לראשון של פסח Józer leschábbath dechól hammóëd, in the prayer which begins ברח דודי וגו' Berásch Dodi, etc., the following is read: הנה אכלנו בכל פה Behold, those who crush us devour us with full mouth. That Christians are meant by this is to be seen in the commentary thereon, where it is explained as follows: זו מלכות אדום הרשעה שנ' אכלה ומדקה ושאר ברגלה רפסה פירוש שאוכלים ממונינו עד שנשארנו ריקים דקים ומה שאינו שוה להם ליקה לדוגאום רופסים ברגלים, that is: These (Maddikim, or crushers) signify the godless Edomite kingdom (understand: Christendom), as it is said (Dan 7:7): It devoured and crushed, and what remained it trampled with its feet; that is, they (the Christians) devour our goods so that we become empty and thin; but what does not suit them to take for their own benefit, that they trample with their feet. One must, however, turn the matter around and say that it is the Jews who devour the goods of Christians, in that through their godless fleeing, usury, and deceptions they strip the poor Christians of their goods, so that these become entirely thin and empty and fall into the deepest poverty.

Twelfth, they call us צורים Zorim, that is, those of Zor. In Holy Scripture, צור denotes the city of Tyre, as can be seen in Josh 19:29 and 2 Sam 24:7 and various other places. The Jews, however, also call Christendom צור Zor, as can be seen in the book Cad hakkémach fol. 48. col. 1., where, concerning the word Zor as it is read in Isa 23:5, the following is written: הרי צור מלכות אדום היא, that is, Behold, Zor signifies the Edomite Kingdom (that is, Christendom). Rabbi Jacob de Mircádo likewise teaches this in his commentary on the Psalms, on the words of Ps 45:13, "The daughter of Zor," as follows: בת צור לעם אדום, that is, This is a surname of the Edomite (or Christian) people, concerning which more is to be found below in the following Chapter 17. For this reason, Christians are also called Zorim from the word Zor, that is, those of Zor, as can be read in the Prague Machsor, in the second part, fol. 70. col. 1., under the title Józer lejóm schéni schel Pésach, in the prayer that begins קמ' קהלך קמצנת וג Kám kehálach kizzázta &c., where mention is made of those plagues that came upon Egypt, followed by: ראה יצאו כן צורים, that is, Thus shall the Zorim, that is, those of Zor, also see it (that it will befall them in precisely the same manner). And these words are explained in the commentary thereon in that same place as follows: כארש ראו המצריים כן יראו מלכות אדום הרשעה: שנ' כשמע: למצרים כן יחילו כשמע צור, that is, Just as the Egyptians saw it, so too shall those who belong to the godless Edomite Kingdom (namely, the Christians) see it, as it is said (Isa 23:5): Just as people were terrified when they heard of Egypt, so too shall they be terrified when they hear of Zor. We are likewise called Zorim in the Machsor printed at Wilmersdorf, in the first part, under the title Jozer librih mila, fol. 315. col. 1.

Thirteenth, they call us הגי העז Haggói haás, that is, the strong (or hard or cruel) people; or עזים Assim, that is, the strong (or hard or cruel ones). The former appears in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 85, col. 2, under the title יוצר ליום שביעי של פסח Jozer legom schevii schel Pésach, in the prayer which begins הצדק ידועים אלי Ele hazédek jeduúm, and in the commentary thereon one reads: הגוי העז זהו אדום הרשעה והיא החשובה באומות העולם, that is, the strong (hard or cruel) people signifies the godless Edom (meaning Christendom), which is the foremost among the nations of the world. The latter, however, is found in the Benschbuch, fol. 17, col. 2, under the title זמירות Semiróth (or Semiros) lemozaë schábbath, in the prayer which begins עזור בא את Addir ajom venora, where the words read as follows: הנשארים: יוצר הרים / פדה עמך מעזים צאנך מיד גוזזים, that is, Help now the remaining ones, O Lord! Thou Creator of the mountains; deliver Thy people from the Assim, that is, the strong (or cruel ones), Thy sheep from the hand of the shearers.

Fourteenth, they call us עריצים Arizim, that is, the violent ones or tyrants, and this is read in the first part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 101. col. 1. under the title שחרית של יום כפור Schacharith schel jom kippur, in the prayer which begins 'וכל תוקף יאמן וג' Ufēcól tokef jeamén &c., where the words read as follows: המון עריצים לאבדון בהכחיד, that is, When You will root out the Arizim, that is, the tyrants, to destruction. In the commentary thereon, the word "tyrants" is explained to mean: אומות הגוברים עלינו, that is, the peoples who have power over us, by which the Christians who rule over them are meant. Likewise, in the daily prayer book, under the title הושענא רבה Hoschúna rábba, in the prayer which begins אנא אפן חן וג' Ana efon chin &c., it reads thus: אנא סגב אשלי נטעך, that is, I beseech You, strengthen the trees of Your planting (meaning the Israelites) when You will move (that is, overthrow and destroy) the Arizim, that is, the tyrants. In the German translation of the prayers, however, which was printed here in Frankfurt in the year 447, that is, by our reckoning in the year 1687, in octavo, the word Arizim is rendered at fol. 88. col. 2. as starcke reschoim, that is, the godless. As for the tyranny which the Jews attribute to the Christians, it is written in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 54. col. 2. under the title Jozer lejom rischon schel Pessach, in the commentary thereon, as follows: מלכות אדום כותבת טרוניא על כל האומות, that is, The Edomite kingdom (namely, Christendom) exercises tyranny against all peoples. Likewise, in the Talmudic tractate Pessachim, the following is read concerning the tyranny of the Roman Empire: ידוע הק"ב את ישראל שאינו יכולין, that is, The Holy and blessed GOD knew that the Israelites would not be able to endure the cruel decrees of the Romans, and therefore He caused them to be led away captive to Babylon.

Fifteenth, they call us Arélim, that is, the uncircumcised; one alone, however, is called Arel or Erel, that is, an uncircumcised one, and I have heard this from the Jews many hundreds of times. That we are called Arélim can be seen from Abarbanel's commentary on the prophet Ezekiel, chap. 32, fol. 198, col. 1, where he writes the following concerning the word Arélim that appears there: ערלים הם הנוצרים כי מפני שהיו הנוצרים ערלי לב וערלי בשר תפש הנביא ברוח נבואתו שבזמן ההוא יהיו בני מצרים ורוב אנשי המזרח והצפון נימולים כדת ישמעאל, that is: By the arélim, that is, the uncircumcised, the Christians are to be understood; for because the Christians are uncircumcised in heart and in flesh, and the prophet saw through the spirit of prophecy that at that time (when the prophecy was to be fulfilled) the Egyptians together with most of the people toward the east and north would be circumcised according to the Ishmaelite (that is, Turkish) religion, he therefore called the Christians the uncircumcised in this prophecy. We are likewise called by this name several more times in the second column of that same passage, which is equally to be found in the little book Schévet Jebúda, fol. 44, col. 2, and fol. 77, col. 2, and fol. 85, col. 1, and in the book Májene jeschúa, fol. 73, col. 4, in the eleventh Májan, in the fifth Támar, as well as in the Sépher jûchasin, fol. 151, col. 2, and fol. 160, col. 2. For this reason, the territory of Christendom is called by Aben Ezra, in his commentary on Exod 4:22, ארץ ערלים Erez arélim, that is, the land of the arélim, that is, of the uncircumcised; and Christ is called in his commentary on Dan 11:14, אלהי הערלים Elohé baarélim, that is, the God of the uncircumcised. Likewise, in the book Chilluk emunâ, paginâ 211, concerning the words of Isa 52:13, "Behold, my servant shall prosper," etc., the following is written: הרצון בו הנה ישכיל עבדי ישראל בצאתו וישמעאל אדום ומגלות אדום, that is: By this is meant, "Behold, my servant Israel shall prosper," when he goes forth from the captivity of Edom and Ishmael, who are called uncircumcised and unclean. And in the aforementioned Abarbanel's commentary on Isaiah, fol. 77, col. 3, concerning the words of chap. 52:1, "Henceforth no uncircumcised or unclean one shall rule over you," the following is read: רמז למלכות אדום שהם הערלים ולמלכות ישמעאל שהם טמאים במעשיהם הרעים עם היותם מראים עצמם טהורים ברחיצותיהם כי היו המושלים בירושלם פעם אדום שהוא הערל ופעם ישמעאל שהוא הטמא, that is: This is an allusion to the Edomite kingdom, which are the uncircumcised, and to the Ishmaelite (or Turkish) kingdom, which are unclean in their evil deeds, even though they make themselves appear clean through their washings; for at one time Edom, which is the uncircumcised one, and at another time Ishmael, which is the unclean one, has ruled over Jerusalem.

It is true that the name "uncircumcised" has been regarded as a term of contempt in Holy Scripture, as can be seen in 1 Sam 14:6, 17:26, and 31:4; but so that one may rightly understand how greatly we are despised by the Jews through this name, one must consider what they write about the foreskin and the uncircumcised. Regarding the foreskin, Rabbi Menachem of Recanati teaches in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 47, col. 1, in the Parascha Lech lechâ, as follows: הערלה מאוסה וטמאה מכל טומאות שבעולם, that is: The foreskin is despised and more impure than all impurities that exist in the world. And shortly thereafter follows: הערלה רומזת לכחות הטומאה, that is: The foreskin has a signification pointing to the powers of impurity (that is, to the unclean spirits). In the book Akédath Jizchak, fol. 47, col. 1, the following is also found, drawn from the Talmudic tractate Nedarim, fol. 31, col. 2: מאוסה הערלה שנתגנו בה רשעים שנ' כי כל הגוים ערלים, that is: The foreskin is despised, because the wicked are dishonored (or shamed) by it, as it is said (Jer 9:26): For all the nations are uncircumcised. Further, in the aforementioned book Akédath Jizchak, fol. 47, col. 2, one reads: הערלה עצמה כטבור או איזה דבר שרוע שנולד ממותר החומר שהוא גנאי באדם, that is: The foreskin itself is like a navel, or some other superfluous thing, which is generated from excess matter and is a disgrace to a person. Furthermore, the following stands in the same place: הערלה מום גדול בגוף האדם אשר בעודה בו אי אפשר להגיע אל שלמותו המיוחדת שלא

וכו', that is: The foreskin is a great defect (or blemish) on the body of a person; as long as it remains upon him, he cannot attain his proper perfections, and the Divine Majesty will not dwell fully upon him. In the book Pirke Rabbi Elieser, the following is also written on this subject in the 92nd chapter: הָעֶרְלָה טוּמְאָה מִכָּל הַטּוּמְאוֹת שֶׁנֶּאֱמָר 'לֹא יוֹסִיף יָבֹא בָּהּ עוֹד עֶרְל וְטָמֵא שֶׁהָעֶרְלָה מוֹם, that is: The foreskin is an impurity above all impurities, as it is said (Isa 52:1): No uncircumcised or unclean person shall come into you anymore; for the foreskin is a blemish above all blemishes. Likewise, in Bamidbar rabba, fol. 203, col. 2, in the 12th Parascha, one reads: הָעֶרְלָה מוֹם, that is: The foreskin is a blemish on the body. And in the Talmudic tractate Pesachim, fol. 92, col. 1, one finds: הַפּוֹרֵשׁ מִן הָעֶרְלָה כְּפוֹרֵשׁ מִן הַקֶּבֶר, that is: He who separates himself from the foreskin does just as much as if he were separating himself from a grave (in which an unclean corpse lies). In the small Jalkut Rubeni, under the title Orla ערלה, numero 2 (from the book Schääre ora, fol. 41), it is stated that when God had said to Abraham, "Walk before Me and be upright," Abraham asked: "O Lord of the world, how then shall I be upright?" But God gave him this answer: בִּשְׁעָה שֶׁמִּתְכַּרֵּית הָעֶרְלָה שֶׁבְּגוּפְךָ שֶׁהִיא חֵלֶק, that is: When you cut away the foreskin from your body, which is the portion of idolatrous people, then you will be upright. From this it is thus evident that only idolatrous people are supposed to be uncircumcised.

In the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 58, col. 2, in the Parascha Vajeze, it is also read from the book Gale rasja that God said to the chief devil Sammaël: הַחֵלֶק שֶׁלְּךָ יִהְיוּ הָעֶרְלוֹת, that is, Your portion shall be the foreskins; which is also to be found in the small Jalkut Rubeni, under the title Mila, number 34, and in the little book Tuf haarez, fol. 32, col. 3-4, in a dialogue between God and Sammaël. Indeed, the aforementioned devil Sammaël is himself also called ערלה Orla, that is, the foreskin, as it stands in the book Emek hammelech, fol. 37, col. 2: הָעֶרְלָה הִיא קְלִיפַת אֲדָמָה, that is, The Orla is the Kelifa or rind of Edom, for the aforementioned Sammaël is called the Kelifa of Edom, as shall be demonstrated below in the 18th chapter of this first part. But if the foreskins fall to the devil's share, how does that accord with what is read in Schir baschirim rabba, fol. 266, col. 2, namely that God took such great pleasure in their smell, since it is written there as follows: וּבְנֵי בֵיתוֹ עָשָׂה עֶרְלוֹתֵיהֶן גִּבְעָה חֲזָרָה עָלֵיהֶן הַחֲמָה הַתְּלִיעוּ וְעָלָה רִיחָן לִפְנֵי הַקֶּבֶ"ה כְּרִים קִטְרֶת הַסַּמִּים וְכָרִים קוֹמֵץ הַלְבוּנָה שֶׁעַל גִּבֵּי הָאֲשִׁים וְאָמַר הַקֶּבֶ"ה לְכַשִּׁיבָאוּ בְּנֵי שָׁל זֶה לִידֵי... עֲבִירוֹת וּמַעֲשִׂים רָעִים אֲנִי נֹזֵקִר לָהֶם זֶה הָרִים וְאֶתְמַלֵּא רַחֲמִים עָלֵיהֶם וְהוֹפֵךְ לָהֶם מִדַּת הַדִּין that is: at the time when our father Abraham had circumcised himself and his household, he laid their foreskins in a heap; but when the sun had shone upon them, worms had grown therein, and their odor rose up before the holy and blessed God like the odor of the smoke of spices, and like the odor of a handful of frankincense upon the burnt offerings; and God said: when the children of that man shall sin and do evil works, I will remember this odor on their behalf, and will be filled with mercy toward them, and will also transform the attribute of judgment into the attribute of mercy. This same thing is also read in Bereschith rabba, fol. 42. col. 4. in the 47th Parascha; and in Schir haschirim rabba, immediately following the foregoing, still more of the same kind is to be found. Should God, then, have taken such great pleasure in the odor of that which belongs to the devil? The foolish Jews ought to be ashamed to write such a thing, since it redounds to the great dishonor of God.

Since the foreskin is supposed to be such an unclean and shameful thing, it is easy to imagine how greatly the uncircumcised must be despised among the Jews. Thus Rabbi Elieser also writes in his aforementioned Chapter 29: מי שאוכל עם הערל כאלו אוכל עם הכלב מה הכלב שלא נימול כך הערל שלא נימול וכל הנגע בערל כנוגע במת וכל הרוחץ עמו כרוחץ עם המצורע שהם בחייהם כמתים ובמותם כנבלת השדה ואין תפלתו נכנסת לפני הק"ב ועליהם הוא אומר לא המתים יהללו יה that is, whoever eats with an uncircumcised person does as much as if he were eating with a dog; just as a dog is not circumcised, so likewise is he who has the foreskin also not circumcised. Whoever also touches an uncircumcised person does as much as if he were touching a corpse. Whoever also washes himself with such a person does as much as if he were washing himself with a leper, for they are in their life as though dead; but when they die, they are like carrion in the field, and their prayer does not come before God. Of them it is also said (Ps 115:17): The dead will not praise the Lord. So also in the great Jalkut Reubeni fol. 37, col. 2, in the Parascha Lech lecha, from the Sohar, on the words of Gen 15:1, "After these things it came to pass that the word of the Lord came to Abraham in a machaseb," that is, a vision, the following is written: יש חלוק בין מראה למחזה מראה הוא לשון הקודש מחזה דא תרגום על כן באברהם קודם שנימול היה דבר יי' אל אברם במחזה כדי שלא ירעו המלאכים שהק"ב מדבר עם אברהם עם ערל והמלאכים אינם משגיחים בתרגום וגן בבלעם כתיב ומחזה שדי יחזה כדי שלא יראו המלאכים שהק"ב מדבר עם הערל אבל לאחר שנימול אברהם דבר אתו אלהים that is, there is a distinction between the word מראה märe and מחזה machaseb (each of which means a vision), and märe is Hebrew, while máchaseb is Chaldean; therefore, before Abraham had been circumcised, the word of the Lord came to him through a máchaseb, so that the angels would not know that God had spoken with Abraham as an uncircumcised man, for the angels pay no attention to the Chaldean language (when it is spoken). Likewise it is also said of Balaam (Num 24:16): Máchaseb scháddai jéchese, that is, "He who sees the vision of the Almighty," so that the angels would not see that God was speaking with an uncircumcised man. But after Abraham was circumcised, God spoke with him in such a way that the angels too could know of it. Thus, according to this Jewish foolishness, God must have been obliged to conceal Himself from the angels whenever He spoke with an uncircumcised person, since the angels hate the uncircumcised. Such a foolish fable is also found in the small Jalkut Rubeéni under the title Mila, number 14, and in the Jalkut chádascb fol. 13, col. 4, number 51, under the title Abraham, and fol. 153, col. 2, number 5, under the title Nebhúa, as well as in the book Lesárjeh, fol. 11, col. 4.

That the uncircumcised are hated by the angels is written in the aforementioned Jalkut chádascb fol. 117. col. 3. num. 55. under the title Maláchim as follows: המלאכים שונאים את הערל ואינם חפצים שדבר עמו הק"ה לכך כשדבר הק"ה עם אברהם קודם שנימול דיבר עמו בלשון תרגום שלא יבינו המלאכים וכן בבלעם: that is, the angels hate an uncircumcised person and take no pleasure in it when God speaks with him; therefore, when God had spoken with Abraham before he was circumcised, He spoke with him in the Chaldean tongue so that the angels would not understand it; this is why (Gen 15:1) the word mácbaseb is used, meaning "vision," which is Chaldean, and the same was the case with Balaam. Abraham is also said to have fallen upon his face for this reason, as is mentioned in Gen 17:3, because he was not yet circumcised, as can be read in the book Zerór hammór fol. 15. col. 4. in the Parascha Lech lechá, where it is written as follows: נפל אברהם על פניו כי לפי שהיה ערל לא היה לו כח: that is, Abraham fell upon his face, for because he was uncircumcised he had no strength to stand upon his feet to speak with God. As for why God said to Abraham in Gen 17:1, "Walk before me and be devout" (or upright, or perfect), the following reason is given in the Jalkut chádascb fol. 103. col. 2. numero 12. under the title Jisraél: כל מי שאינו מהול אינו זוכה לילך אחרי השכינה ולכך כתיב גבי אברהם התהלך לפני והיה תמים ולא כתיב היה מתהלך לפני אלא ויהי לו כל זמן שאינו מהול התהלך לפני שלא תסתכל בי אבל לאחר שחזיה תמים שתמול תלך אחרי השכינה. והנה בנה כתיב נח איש צדיק תמים וגו' את האלהים התהלך וגו' לפי שהיה נימול: that is, every person who is not circumcised is not worthy to walk behind the Divine Majesty; therefore it is written of Abraham: "Walk before me and be perfect," and it is not written "Be perfect and walk before me," so that you may not look upon me. But when you are perfect and circumcised (and thus no longer have the deficiency of the foreskin), then you shall walk behind the Divine Majesty. See, it is also said of Noah (Gen 6:9): "Noah was a righteous man, blameless, etc., and he walked with God," because he was circumcised. This same thing is also to be found in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 29. col. 2. in the Parascha Noach. God is also said not to dwell among the uncircumcised, concerning which it is written in the little book Tuf haarez, fol. 13. col. 1. as follows: אין השכינה שוכת בערלים: that is, the Divine Majesty does not dwell among the uncircumcised.

Regarding the above, the Jews also teach that the uncircumcised bear the covenant of the devil, concerning which the following is read in the great Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 39. col. 1. in the Parascha Lech lecha, from the book Zijoni: דע כי 'שדי הוא חותם של הק"ב: וכאשר זרועותיו וראשו של אדם זקופים נראה דמות שין ש' וכאשר זרוע שמאל פשוט וימינו נח נראה דמות ד' וברית מילה כיו"ד הי' 'שדי ולאומות אין 'שדי: that is, Know that the name Schaddai (which means almighty, and has three letters, namely the Schin or Sch, Daleth or D, and Jod or I) is the seal of the holy and blessed God. When both of a man's arms and his head are directed straight upward, one sees, as it were, the form of the letter ש Schin or Sch; and when the left arm is stretched straight out while the right one rests (and hangs downward), one sees, as it were, the form of the letter ד Daleth or D; but the covenant of circumcision is like the letter י Jod or I, through which the name שדי Schaddai (that is, almighty) is formed. The nations, however, do not have the covenant of circumcision, and they lack the letter Jod or I, so there remains שד Sched, which means the devil. This is also found in the book Maarebethi ha'elabúth, fol. 181. col. 2. and in the Jalkut chádasch fol. 121. col. 3. numero 9. under the title Mila. In the aforementioned Jalkut chádasch, the following is also written concerning this matter at fol. 122. col. 1. num. 19. under the said title: כל שלא נימול נרשם בסטרא אחרא והרושם שלו: ב' 'אותיות שד ולאחר שנימול ניתוסף לו יו"ד ונעשה שדי: that is, Every one who is not circumcised is marked with Sitra áchera, that is, the other side (by which the devil is understood, as may be seen in the small Jalkut Rubéni under the title Sammuël, numero 42). His mark, however, consists of two letters (namely Schin or Sch, and Daleth or D), which make שד Sched, meaning the devil. But when he has been circumcised, a Jod or I is added to it, from which שדי Scháddai is formed. Rabbi Bechai likewise writes in his commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 25. col. 2. in the Parascha Lech lechá, concerning the letter Jod or I, which is joined to the Schin and Daleth, in the following manner: האות הזה נתפרסמה מעלתם של ישראל והיותם נבדלים משאר האומות ערלי לב וערלי בשר עם: that is, Through this sign (or this letter) the excellence of the Israelites is revealed, and that they are distinguished from the other nations, who are uncircumcised in heart and flesh; as also that those (nations) are on the side of the devils, but the Israelites on the side of El Scháddai, that is, of almighty God. More on this subject may also be read in the Sohar in the Parascha Lech lechá.

Further, the Jews teach that all the uncircumcised are damned and go to Hell, concerning which the following is taught in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 26, col. 1, in the Parascha Vájera: גדולה מילה שכל מי שהוא מהול אינו יורד לגיהנם כתיב ביום ההוא כרתה 'א אברם ברית וכתיב התם וביום השמיני ימול ומי יורד לגיהנם מי שכתוב אחריו את הקני ואת הקנזי ואת הקדמוני

גו 'שכולם ערלי לב וכל הערלים יורדים לגיהנם וגו' that is: Circumcision is a great matter, for no circumcised person goes to Hell. It is written there (Gen 15:18): On that same day the LORD made a covenant with Abraham. And there (Lev 12:3) it is written: And on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised. Who then goes down into Hell? Those who are mentioned immediately thereafter (Gen 15:19): the Kenites, the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites, for they are all uncircumcised in heart; for all the uncircumcised go to Hell. More on this subject can be read in chapter 4 of Part 2. In the book Ben dáach or dáas, which is a commentary on the Psalms, the following is also read at fol. 5, col. 1, on Ps 2:1: נתקוטטו אדם שימול נרשם עליו שם של שדי ועל זה נתקוטטו יעקב ועשו בנחלת ב' עולמות כפירש רש"י בפרשת תולדות יצחק כי יעקב היה מהול במעי אמו כמו שדרשו חז"ל על פסוק ויעקב איש תם היה נחתם באות יוד משם של שדי שהוא המילה ורצה לירש עה"ב שנברא גם ביוד ועשו אמר כי גם לי גט לך לא יהיה ועל כן מצינו תמיד שהעכו"ם היו גוזים מקורם על ישראל שלא ימולו. ולמה כמצווה זו יותר משאר מצוות שבתורה: אלא זהו הדבר אשר דברנו בהיות שהמילה גורמת לחיי עולם הבא כי אל חי חלקנו צוה להציל ידידות שארנו משחת למען בריתו אשר שם בבשרנו על כן הם גוזרים שלא ימולו : that is: The man who is circumcised is marked with the name Schaddai, that is, of the Almighty; for this reason (the two brothers) Jacob and Esau quarreled with one another over the inheritance of the two worlds (namely this one and the world to come), as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi has expounded in his commentary on the Parascha Toledoth Jizchak (namely on Gen 25:22): for Jacob had been circumcised in his mother's womb, as our sages, of blessed memory, expounded upon the words (Gen 25:27) "But Jacob was a plain man," namely that he had been marked with the letter Jod from the name Schaddai, which letter is the circumcision, and that he had wished to inherit the world to come, which was also created through the Jod; but Esau said, neither I nor you shall have it (that is, the world to come, meaning eternal life). For this reason we find at all times that the idolaters issued a decree or ruling against the Israelites that they should not be circumcised. But why did they issue their decrees against this commandment more than against the other commandments contained in the Law? The reason is that which we have stated: because circumcision brings about eternal life, for the living God, who is our portion, commanded that our beloved children be rescued (through circumcision) from destruction, for the sake of His covenant which He made in our flesh; therefore they issue the decrees or orders that they shall not be circumcised, so that Hell may be their portion together with them, and that we may have no share in eternal life. As for who those are who have forbidden circumcision, this can be seen in the Talmudic tractate Rosch haschana, fol. 19, col. 1, where it is recorded that the Roman Empire, by which Christendom is understood, did this.

Since the Jews believe that they are saved through circumcision, they also customarily circumcise their little sons who die before circumcision, concerning which the following is read in the aforementioned passage of Rabbi Bechai, fol. 26. col. 1., shortly after what precedes it: 'המת שלא הגיע ימיו למצות מילה שמהלין אותו בקבר וגו' ; that is, Therefore all Israelites have the custom of circumcising in the grave a little boy who dies and does not reach the time of the commandment of circumcision (namely, the eighth day).

We see, therefore, from the above alone that Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his Jewish Theriaca, chapter four, numero 5. fol. 24. col. 1., has once again dealt in falsehood when he states that it is no disgrace to call someone an Erel, that is, an uncircumcised person.

Regarding the circumcision of other peoples: it is not considered a circumcision by the Jews, for it is written in the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara fol. 27. col. 1. in the Tosephoth as follows: כל הגוים ערלים ואין מילתם חשובה: לקרותה מילה: that is, All heathens (or peoples) are uncircumcised, and their circumcision is not regarded highly enough to be called a circumcision. The circumcision of the Turks, however (as may be seen in the book Zerór hammór fol. 18. col. 4. in the Parashah Lech lechá), is regarded as nothing, because they only cut away the foreskin but do not, with sharp and pointed fingernails, tear apart and strip back the stunted little membrane on the member of the circumcised child, so that the front part of the member is entirely exposed, as the Jews do, which is called פריעה Periah, that is, an uncovering. For this reason it is also taught in the cited passage of the book Zerór hammór as follows: מל ולא פרע כאילו לא מל: i.e., Whoever circumcises and does not uncover (the front part) in the said manner does as much as if he had not circumcised at all. So too is it read in the book Menoráth hammáor, fol. 23. col. 2. under the title Ner schelischí, Pérek schéni, Kelál ríschon, chélek ríschon: גדולה מילה שעליה חתום בבשר ישראל שמו של שדי בעזרי"ם דמות שי"ן וכזרוע דמות דל"ת ובמילה דמות יו"ד והישמעאלים אינם בכלל זה שמל ולא פרע כאלו לא מל. ופריעה בגימטריא שס"ה נמצא שמי שיש בו פריעה כאלו קיים שס"ה מצוות לא תעשה: that is, Circumcision is a great matter, for through it the name of Schaddai, that is, of the Almighty, is inscribed in the flesh of the Israelites. In the nostrils is the form of the letter Schin, and in the arm the form of the Daleth, and in the circumcision the figure of the letter Jod. The Ishmaelites, however, are not included among these, for whoever circumcises and does not uncover (the front part of the member) does as much as if he had not circumcised at all. The word פריעה Periah yields, through the Gematria, 365, from which it follows that the one upon whom the uncovering has been performed is in such a condition as if he had observed the 365 Præcepta negativa, or prohibitory commandments.

Since the mention of the foreskin occurs here, I must point out a great and shameful lie about King Nebuchadnezzar, which is written in the Talmudic tractate Shabbath, fol. 149, col. 2, where one reads of him that he committed sodomy with all the kings, and the following passage comes after it: בשעה שבקש אותו רשע לעשות לאותו צדיק כך נמשכה ערלתו שלש מאות אמה היתה מחזרת על כל המסיבה קלת שנאמר שבעת קלון מכבוד שתה גם אתה והערל בגימטריא ג' מאות הוי: that is, at the time when that wicked one (Nebuchadnezzar) wished to deal thus with that righteous one (namely, King Zedekiah), his foreskin was drawn out three hundred cubits long (or grew to that length), and it encircled all the kings who were seated at table with him, as it is said (Hab 2:16): "You have been filled with shame instead of glory; drink also yourself, and let your foreskin be seen." The word ערל Arel yields three hundred by Gematria (by which the three hundred cubits are signified.) This foolish fable also appears in the Yalkut Shimoni on Isaiah, fol. 44, col. 3, numero 286. Nebuchadnezzar would thus have had quite enough to carry with such a foreskin.

Beyond this, I must also report that, according to Jewish teaching, thirteen men are said to have been born into the world without a foreskin, and this is read in the Midrasch Tillim, fol. 10. col. 2., on the ninth Psalm, where, concerning the words of Gen 25:23, "Two nations are in your womb, and two kinds of people shall be separated from your body," the following is written: מכאן אנו לומדים שעלד יעקב מהול וגו' זה אחד מי"ג שנולדו מהולים אדם הראשון שת חנוך נח שם תרח. יעקב יוסף משה שמואל דוד ישעיה וירמיה. אדם תחלת בריאתו של הק"ב ה' שת שנ' ויוולד בדמותו בצלמו. חנוך שנ' וייתהלך חנוך ונאמר בתהלך נח לגזרה שוה. נח שנ' צדיק תמים. שם שנ' אלה תולדות שם שכל מי שנאפל שמו נולד מהול שם שם. נח נת תרח. יעקב שנ' יעקב איש תם ויאמר יעקב יעקב. יוסף שנ' אלה תולדות יעקב יוסף מלמד i. שנולד מהול כמהוהו. משה שנ' ותרא אותו כי טוב הוא כי נולד מהול. שמואל שמואל ד י:ישעיה שנ' י' מבטן קראני. ירמיה שנ' בטרם אצרך מבטן. דוד שנ' מכתם לדוד סר חם: From this we learn that Jacob was born circumcised, &c. And he is one of the thirteen who were born circumcised into the world. (Those same persons, however, were:) the first man (Adam), Seth, Enoch, Noah, Shem, Terah, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Samuel, David, Isaiah, and Jeremiah. Adam was the beginning of the creation of the holy and blessed God. Seth (was born circumcised) because (Gen 5:3) it is said: "And he begat (a son) after his likeness, after his image." Enoch (was born circumcised) because (Gen 5:22) it is said: "And Enoch walked before God," and (Gen 6:9) it is said: "And Noah walked before God," from which two passages an argumentum à pari, that is, a proof by analogy, is drawn. Noah (was born circumcised) because (Gen

6:9) it is said: "Noah was a righteous man and blameless." Shem (was born circumcised) because (Gen 11:10) it is said: "These are the generations of Shem." For whoever's name appears doubled (in a single verse one after the other, as the name Shem does here) was born circumcised: therefore (Gen 10:10) Shem, and (Gen 6:9) Noah, and (Gen 11:27) Terah. Jacob (was born circumcised) because (Gen 25:27) it is said: Jacob was an upright man. And likewise (Gen 30:36) Jacob is mentioned again. Joseph (was born circumcised) because (Gen 37:2) it is said: And these are the generations of Jacob: Joseph, &c. This teaches us that he was born circumcised, just as the same (namely, Jacob, was born circumcised). Moses (was born circumcised) because (Exod 3:4) Moses is mentioned, and (Exod 2:2) it is said: "And she saw him, that he was a fine (child)," meaning that he was born circumcised. Samuel (was born circumcised) because (1 Sam 3:10) Samuel appears twice. Isaiah (was born circumcised) because (Isa 49:1) it is said: "The Lord called me from the womb." Jeremiah (was born circumcised) because (Jer 1:5) it is said: "Before I formed you in the womb." David (was born circumcised) because (Ps 16:1) it is said: לדוד מכתם Michtam le David, that is, a golden jewel of David, where Michtam signifies as much as מך mach, that is, humble, and תם tam, that is, upright. From this one can see once again in how tasteless and foolish a manner the Jews adduce Holy Scripture as proof of their imagined follies. In Rabbi Nathan's Avoth, which in the Amsterdam Talmud stands after the tractate Avóda sára, there are also mentioned, at fol. 2. col. 1. 2., those who are said to have been born circumcised, among whom Job, Balaam, and Zerubbabel are included. On this subject, the book Jalkut chádascb fol. 122. col. 1. numero 24. may also be consulted.

Just as the Jews despise the foreskin, so on the other hand they extol circumcision. Thus it is written in the book Menórath hammaór fol. 23. col. 1. under the title Ner schelifschí, Pérek Schéni, Kelál rischon, chélek rischon, from the Talmudic tractate Nedarim fol. 31. col. 2. and fol. 32. col. 1.:

דבי מאיר אומר גדולה היא מילה שכל מצות שעשה אברהם אבינו לא נקרא שלם עד שמל שנ' היתהלך לפני ה' והיה תמים ואומר ואת בריתי אקים את יצחק ד"א גדולה היא מילה שאלמלא היא לא ברא הקב"ה את עולמו שנ' אם לא בריתי וגו' : ר' אומר גדולה היא מילה ששקולה כנגד כל המצוות שבתורה שנ' הנה דם הברית אשר כרת יי' עמכם על כל הדברים :

that is: Rabbi Meir says, circumcision is a great matter, for on account of all the commandments that Abraham our father performed, he was not called perfect until he had circumcised himself, as it is said (Gen 17:1): Walk before Me and be perfect (or upright). And further (v. 21) it is stated: But My covenant I will establish with Isaac. In another manner it is said: circumcision is a great matter, for if it did not exist, the Holy and Blessed GOD would not have created His world, as it is said (Jer 33:25): If not My covenant, &c. The Rabbi says, circumcision is a great matter, since it is held equal to all the commandments of the Law, as it is said (Exod 24:8): Behold, this is the blood of the covenant which the LORD makes with you, concerning all these words. And in the second column of the same place one reads: גדולה מילה שהיא שקולה דכתיב כל התורה דכתיב that is, Circumcision is something great, since it is held equal to the entire Law, as it is written (Deut 30:12): Mi ja'aleh l'anu haschamaiemah, that is, Who will ascend into heaven for us? And the first letters of those four Hebrew words form מילה milah, which means circumcision. In the book Zerór hammór this is also written concerning this matter at fol. 19. col. 1. in the Parascha Lech lechá as follows: אמרו במדרש הנעלם על פסוק מי יעלה לנו השמימה בראשי תיבות מ"לה ובסוף תיבות ה' להורות כי במצות מילה אנו דבקים בשם ה' that is, In the Medrasch néelam it is said concerning the words, Who will ascend into heaven for us?, that the first letters form milah, but the last letters form Jehova, in order to indicate that through the commandment of circumcision we cleave to the name Jehova. Furthermore, in the aforementioned book Menoráth hammaór, in the passage cited above, it is written: גדולה מילה שבזכותה מקבלין ישראל פני שכינה שנ' מ'בשרי אחזה אלוה ר"ל בזכות that is, Circumcision is a great matter, for through its merit the Israelites behold the Divine Majesty, as it is said (Job 19:26): From my flesh I shall see GOD, that is, by virtue of the merit of circumcision I shall see GOD. Further, one reads there: גדולה מילה שבזכותה הק"ב שומע תפלתן של ישראל כי אתה שומע תפלת כל פה. ואינו שומע פה דגוים אלא וזכר לדבר מה שאנו אומרים בתפלה כי אתה שומע תפלת כל פה. that is, Circumcision is a great matter, since the Holy Blessed GOD hears the prayer of the Israelites through its merit. A memorial of this matter is what we say in the prayer: For You hear the prayer of every פה Peh, that is, mouth; He does not, however, hear the mouth of the Gójim (that is, of the Christians), but only that of the Israelites, on account of the merit of circumcision. פה Peh amounts by Gemátria to as much as מילה (namely 85), which signifies: He hears the prayer of every circumcised person.

God is also said to have helped Abraham hold the foreskin when he circumcised himself, concerning which it is written in Bereschith rabba, in the 49th Parascha, fol. 44, col. 2, as follows: 'אמר לו הק"ב להאברהם דיי לעבד שיהי כרבו : אמר לפניו ומי ימול אותי אמר אתה בעצמך מיד נטל אברהם סכין והיה אוחו בערלו ו'בא לחתך והיה מתירא שהיה זקן מה עשה הק"ב' שלח ידו ואוחז עמו והיה אברהם חותך שנ' אתה הוא ה' האלהים אשר בחרת באברהם וגו' 'וכרות לו הברית אין כתיב כאן אלא ו'כרור עמו : that is, the Holy Blessed God said to Abraham: it is enough for a servant that he be like his master. Then Abraham said to Him: who then will circumcise me? But He (namely God) answered him: you yourself shall do it. Thereupon Abraham immediately took a knife, grasped his foreskin, and was about to cut it off; but he was afraid, because he was an old man. What did God do? He stretched out His hand and held it together with him, and Abraham cut it off, as it is said (Neh 9:7): You are the Lord GOD, who chose Abraham, etc. Likewise, it does not say (in the eighth verse that follows): and made a covenant with him; but rather, and cut a covenant with him, or cut with him, which teaches us that GOD also held the foreskin.

Since the Jews, when they circumcise a child (which they call Judschen), throw the foreskin into a small bowl with sand, I must also explain why this is done, and I find four reasons for it. The first is that the foreskin is supposed to be an unholy thing, concerning which one reads in the Sepher bachajim, in the second part, fol. 12. col. 1. cap. 2. numero 2.: וערלה לבדה נתנה לחלק הטומאה ואדם נשאר : That is, the foreskin alone is given in part to uncleanness (that is, to the unclean spirits), and the person remains (after it has been cut away from him) as a part of God from above; therefore the foreskin is buried in Chol, that is, sand, because it is Chol, that is, an unholy and not a holy thing.

The second reason is to signify that their seed shall be multiplied like the sand of the sea and like the dust of the earth; accordingly, what immediately follows the foregoing passage in the aforementioned Sepher bachajim reads: פשוטו טומנים אותה בחול על שם ושמתי את זרעך כחול הים : that is, to speak of it plainly, it is buried in the sand because it is written (Gen 32:12): And I will make your seed like the sand of the sea. And in the Jalkut chadasch, it states at fol. 121. col. 4. numerô 14. that this is done: שנמשלו שני' כעפר הארץ that is, because they (namely, the Israelites) are compared to dust, as it is said (Gen 28:14): And your seed shall be like the dust upon the earth. Concerning which, an equivalent passage is also to be found in the previously cited location in the book Menoráth hammáor fol. 23. col. 2.*

The third reason is found in the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the 29th chapter, where it is written as follows: כשבאו ישראל לארץ ישראל אמר הק"ה : ליהושע אי אתה יודע שאין ישראל נימולין כתקנין חזור ומול אותם פעם שנית שנ' מול את בני ישראל שנית וקבץ כל הערלות עד שעשה אותם כגבעה שנ' וימל את בני ישראל אל גבעת הערלות והיו ישראל לוקחין את הערלה ואת הדם ומכסין אותן בעפר המדבר וכשבא בלעם הקוסם ראה את כל המדבר מלא מערלתן של ישראל אמר מי יוכל לעמוד בזכות ברית דם מילה שהוא מכוסה בעפר שנ' מי מנה עפר יעקב מכאן אמרו חכמים מכסין את ערלה הדם that is: After the Israelites had come into the land of Israel, God spoke to Joshua: are you not aware that the Israelites have not been circumcised as is proper? Go and circumcise them a second time, as it is said (Josh 5:2): Circumcise the children of Israel a second time. And he gathered all the foreskins (which he had cut off) together until he had made from them, as it were, a hill, as it is said (ibid., v. 3): And he circumcised the children of Israel at the hill of Araloth (that is, of the foreskins, for the place was thus named after the circumcision of the foreskins), and the Israelites took the foreskins and the blood and covered them with the dust of the wilderness. When Balaam the soothsayer then came and saw the entire wilderness full of the foreskins of the Israelites, he said: who could stand on account of the merit of the covenant of the blood of circumcision, which is covered with dust? as it is said (Num 23:10): Who can count the dust of Jacob? From this, say our sages, one covers the bloody foreskin with the dust of the earth. But not only this: they (meaning the Israelites) are also compared to dust, as it is said (Gen 28:14): And your seed shall become like the dust of the earth. This same passage is also found in the Jalkut chadash, fol. 121, col. 3, numero 14, under the title Mila, and in the Jalkut Shimoni on Joshua, fol. 4, col. 1, numero 15.

The fourth reason is so that the old serpent may be fed with dust or sand, concerning which one reads in the book Zerór hammôr fol. 8. col. 3., in the Parascha Bereschith, on the words of Gen 3:14, "And thou shalt eat dust all the days of thy life," as follows: להודות שהוא החטיא לאדם וסבב לו שימות ויחזור עפר כדכתיב כי עפר אתה וגו' ולזה היה עונשו מדה כנגד מדה שיאכל עפר כדכתיב ונחש עפר לחמו ולכן אנו משימין כלי עם עפר בשעת המילה ליתן שם הערלה שזכורת מנ"ש דכתיב בערלות פלשתים וימלאום למלך וכתיב וימלאום עפר והטעם לפי שהנחש צוה לכרות הערלה להחליש אותו ולהחליש כח הטומאה של נחש וכתיב אם רעב שונאך האכילוהו לחם ולכן אנו משימין עפר (that is: This has been said in order to show that it (namely the serpent) caused Adam to sin, and that it brought about that he had to die and return to dust, as it is written (Gen 3:19): "For thou art dust," etc. For this reason it was punished in such a manner that like was repaid with like, and it must eat dust, as it is written (Isa 65:25): "And the serpent shall eat dust." For this reason we place a vessel with dust at the circumcision, in order to lay therein the foreskin that has been cut off, and this is demonstrated by an argumentum á pari, or a proof from analogy; for it is written concerning the foreskins of the Philistines (1 Sam 18:27): "And they presented them in full number to the king" (that is, they delivered to him the full count of the foreskins); and (Gen 26:15) it is written: "And they filled them with earth." The reason, however, is that God commanded the foreskin to be cut off so that that member might be weakened and the power of the impurity of the serpent enfeebled. So it is also written (Prov 25:21): "If thine enemy be hungry, feed him with bread (or food)." Therefore we set out dust, which is its (namely the serpent's) food.) Concerning this, something may also be read in the aforementioned book Zerór hammôr, fol. 19. col. 1., in the Parascha Lech lechá, and fol. 143. col. 1., in the Parascha Ki téze, as well as in the Jalkut chádasch fol. 121. col. 3. 4. numéro 10 and 16. So it is also written in the Sohar on Bammidbar, or the fourth book of Moses, in the 421st column, in the Parascha Pinchas: תקנו לשויה ערלה במנא דעפרא לקיים ונחש עפר לחמו: (that is, our Sages) have ordained that the foreskin shall be placed in a vessel with dust, in order thereby to confirm (the words of Isa 65:25): "The serpent shall eat dust."

When a circumcision takes place among the Jews, they customarily set out a chair for the prophet Elijah each time, so that he may sit upon it, and they say aloud: "This is the chair of the prophet Elijah." Why this is done is written in chapter 29 of the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer as follows: כל מי שהוא בורח נמלט: עמד לאלהיו זכור לטוב וברוח שארץ ישראל ונמלט שנ' ויקם ויאכל וישתה: נגלה עליו. הק"ב ואמר לו מה לך פה אליהו אמר לו קנא קנאתי וגו': 'אמר לו הק"ב לעולם אתה מקנא קנאת בשטים על גלוי עריות שנ' פינחס בן אלעזר וכאן אתה מקנא חייב שאין ישראל עושין ברית מילה עד שאתה רואה בעיניך מכאן התקינו חכמים שיהו עושין מושב כבוד that is: Every one who flees shall be saved. Elijah arose and fled from the land of Israel and was saved (when Jezebel sought to have him killed), as it is said (1 Kgs 19:8-10). And he arose and ate and drank. At that time God revealed Himself to him and said to him: What are you doing here, Elijah? But he answered: I have been zealous, etc. Then God said to him: You are always zealous; you were zealous in Shittim on account of fornication, as it is said (Num 25:7): Phinehas the son of Eleazar; and here you are zealous again. I swear by your life that the Israelites shall not perform the covenant of circumcision unless you see it with your own eyes. Therefore the sages ordained that an honorable chair shall be set out for the angel of the covenant (namely, for Elijah), as it is said (Mal 3:1): And the angel of the covenant whom you desire. This is also found in the Jalkut Schimoni on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 243, col. 3, numero 766, and on Joshua, fol. 4, col. 1, numero 15, and in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 25, col. 4, numero 31, under the title Mila, as well as in the last-cited column of the book Menorath hammáor.

Regarding the aforementioned name Arélim, that is, the uncircumcised who are yet to return, which the Jews give to us: we must indeed confess that we are uncircumcised in the flesh, but this matters nothing, for the holy Apostle Paul says in the Epistle to the Romans, Rom 2:28-29: "That is not circumcision which is outwardly in the flesh; but the circumcision of the heart is circumcision." And in the Epistle to the Galatians, Gal 5:6, he says: "In Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision avails anything, but faith working through love." And Gal 6:15, he says again: "In Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision avails anything, but a new creature." He likewise teaches in 1 Cor 7:19: "Circumcision is nothing, but keeping the commandments of God." It is therefore sufficient if only our hearts are circumcised and we lead a God-fearing life and a good walk, as we are commanded in God's Word, even if we are uncircumcised in the flesh. Indeed, Rabbi Lipmann also writes in his Sepher Nizzáchon, p. 19, numero 21, in the following manner: ולגלג הנוצרי לאמור הנקבות שאין להן מילה אין להן דין יהודי ולא דעו שאין האמונה תלויה במילה כי אם בלב. מי שאינו מאמין בשורה אין מילתו משווה אותו ל'יהודי גם המאמין כשורה הרי הוא יהודי אפילו אינו נימול אלא שיש בידו עבירה וגו' that is: A Christian mocked and said that women are not to be regarded as Jewesses because they are not circumcised. They (namely the Christians) however do not know that faith does not depend on circumcision but on the heart. One who believes nothing rightly is not made a Jew by circumcision; but whoever believes rightly is a Jew, even if he is not circumcised, though he does commit a sin in that case. From this we see that, even according to Rabbi Lipmann's teaching, faith does not depend on circumcision but on the heart.

Since circumcision of the heart is a circumcision, as the Apostle Paul shows in Rom 2:29, and since the Jews have uncircumcised hearts, they may rightly be called Arelim, that is, the uncircumcised. That they have uncircumcised hearts is to be seen in the prophet Jeremiah, cap. 9:26, where it is written: All the heathen have an uncircumcised foreskin, but the whole house of Israel has an uncircumcised heart. For this reason, Rabbi Bechai also writes in his commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 220, col. 3, in the Parashah Nizzavim, on the words of Deut 30:6, "And the Lord your God will circumcise your heart, and the heart of your seed," in the following manner: כתב הרמב"ן ז"ל שיסיר מהם ערלת הלב כי החמדה ושאר התאוות הן ערלה ללב והחומר והנטיה אל התאוות נקרא ערל כענין שכתוב וכל בית ישראל ערלי לב וכל מי שאינו חומד ולא מתאוה נקרא מול לב וגו' וזהו שאמר ירמיה הנה ימים באים נאם יי' וכרת את בית ישראל ואת בית יהודה ברית חדשה לא כברית אשר כרתי וגו' זאת הברית אשר אכרות את בית ישראל אחרי הימים ההם נתתי את תורתם בקרבם ועל לבם אכתבנה וכתבת התורה על הלב הוא ביטול יצר הרע והסרת לב that is, Rabbi Moshe bar Nachman, of blessed memory, has said that He (namely God) will remove the foreskin of the heart from them, for lust and the remaining desires are the foreskin upon the heart. Whoever is given over to desires is called Arel, that is, an uncircumcised one, just as it is written (Jer 9:26): The whole house of Israel has an uncircumcised heart. But whoever has no desires is called circumcised in heart, &c. And this is what Jeremiah (cap. 31:31-33) says: Behold, the time is coming, says the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not like the covenant that I made, &c. But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after this time; I will give my law into their inward parts, and write it upon their hearts. The writing of the law upon the heart, however, is the rooting out of the evil nature and disposition, and a driving away of all lusts, which is the circumcision of the heart. These are the words of Rabbi Bechai. But since lusts and desires are not to be taken from the Jews until the time of their Messiah, for whom they wait in vain, as Rabbi Menachem of Recanati teaches in his commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 217, col. 3-4, in the aforementioned Parashah Nizzavim, and as will be sufficiently demonstrated below in the fifteenth chapter of the second part, it follows that they are still entirely uncircumcised in their hearts; for this reason they also pray to God, as found in the first part of the Prague Machzor, fol. 125, col. 2, under the title Musaph schel jom Kippur, in the prayer that begins Elohénu velobé avothénu al taasvénu, as follows: מול את לבבנו לאהבה וליראה את שמך, that is, circumcise our hearts, that we may love and fear Your name. This also occurs in their other prayers, through which they acknowledge and confess their uncircumcision.

Sixteenth, they call us ממזרים Mamserim, that is, bastards or whores' children; a single one, however, they call ממזר Mamser, and Dieterich Schwab writes about this in the 8th chapter of the first part of his Jewish Cloak, p. 65, as follows: When the Jews see a crowd of Christians or Christian children gathered together, they say: כמה הרבה ממזרים kärbe mamserim, what a crowd of whores' children those are. That we are called this by them can be seen from the 178th chapter of the Maase-Book, where a murdered Christian is called ממזר Péger mamser once, that is, the carcass of a whore's child, and is called Mamser three times. So too it was shown above in the 12th chapter, p. 540, that baptism is called a Mamser Schemad, for they call Christian children in particular Mamserim, as the aforementioned Dieterich Schwab indicates in the cited 8th chapter, p. 66. Likewise, the converted Bleibtreu, residing here in Frankfurt, once complained to me that a godless villain from the Jewish alley had asked him how many mamserim or bastards he had, by which he meant his children. And this confirms what Samuel Friedrich Brenz indicates in the second chapter of his Jewish Stripped Snakeskin, p. 9, when he reports: If a Christian has many children, they say (namely the Jews) that he has many Mamserim, that is, many whores' children.

It is no wonder, however, when they call Christians Mamserim, since they hold that our marriages are not to be regarded as marriages at all, as has been demonstrated above in Chapter 8, page 432. Rabbi Salman Zevi does indeed wish to deny, in his Jewish Theriac, fol. 12, col. 2, in the second chapter, numero 21, that we are called Mamserim by them, and he claims that the aforementioned Brentz must have understood the words מעם זר Meám sar, that is, "from a foreign people," as Mamser; but this is a frivolous and cunning wickedness on the part of Rabbi Salman, who, in keeping with his custom, has sought all manner of crafty evasions in order to whitewash and defend the malicious deeds of the Jews. Thus he has likewise denied in that same place that Mamser means a whoreson, and has claimed that it means a foreigner, and has sought to prove this from Zech 9:6, where one reads: And the Mamser shall dwell in Ashdod, where the word Mamser, in the opinion of some interpreters, means "foreigner." Rabbi Aben Esra, however, writes in his Commentario on that passage as follows: אמר ר' יהודה בן בלעם כי הוא שם לגוי: ולפי דעתי הוא ממזר מהערייות, that is, Rabbi Jebuda, the son of Bileam, has said that it is the name of a people, but in my opinion it means a whoreson, who is born of whoredom. One may also consult Rabbi David Kimchi's Commentarius on the same passage. Rabbi Levi ben Gersom likewise writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 332, col. 4, in the Parascha Teze, on the words of Deut 23:2, No Mamser, that is, whoreson, shall enter into the congregation of the Lord, in the following manner: ידוע כי הולד שיחיה לאיש מאשתו הוא בנו ואמנם מי שיש לו ממי שאין לו אישות בה בשום פנים הוא הנקרא ממזר, that is, it is known that when a man has a child by his wife, it is his child, and it is called a son. But if a man begets a child by a person who is in no way joined to him in marriage, it is called Mamser, that is, a bastard. Rabbi Bechai likewise teaches in his oft-mentioned commentary, fol. 213, col. 3, in the Parascha Ki téze, as follows: לשון ממזר הוא מי שנולד מן העריות, that is, the word Mamser denotes one who is begotten through whoredom. How then can Rabbi Salman Zevi deny that Mamser means a whoreson?

Seventeenth, they call us האומה הרשעה haùmma bareschâa, that is, the godless people; or אומת אדום הרשעה Ummáth Edom bareschâa, that is, the godless Edomite people; or רשעים Reschóim, that is, godless ones. The first appears in the book Májene jeschúa, fol. 76, col. 3, in the eleventh Májan, in the eighth Támar, where one reads: סמוך לגאולה יהיה התפשטות האומה הרשעה היא אדום, that is, Shortly before the redemption, the godless people, namely Edom, will spread itself abroad. And something similar is likewise to be found there at fol. 47, col. 3, in the eighth Májan, in the ninth Tamar, concerning which something may also be read above at page 635, under the fourth name they give us. The second is found in the book Maschmia jeschúa, fol. 60, col. 1, on the words of Obad 1:2, Behold, I have made thee small among the heathen, where the words read as follows: התחיל הנביא לדבר כנגד אומת אדום הרשעה הרה הרשעה באמרו: 'הנה כימים הקדומים בהתחלת ענייך לא היית מולך בכל העולם כי קטן נתתיך בגוים וגו', that is, The prophet began to speak against the godless Edomite people when he says: In former times, at the beginning of your existence, you did not rule over the entire world; for I had made you small among the heathen, etc. The third appears in Rabbi Mosche de Mircado's commentary on the Psalms, where at fol. 79, col. 3, on Ps 94:1-3, it is stated: 'שינקום מאויביו בזה המזמור מתפלל לה', that is, In this psalm he (namely David) entreats the Lord to take vengeance upon his enemies, the godless heathen. And shortly thereafter he writes on the words of v. 3, How long, etc.: 'על רשעי אדום דבר', that is, This he speaks against the godless Edomites. Furthermore, he teaches on the words of v. 4, And speak so arrogantly, concerning the Christians: 'ביבועו הזכיר היותם רשעים בתכלית הרשע במחשבה דבור ומעשה', d. i., He (namely King David) states that they speak arrogantly, because they are exceedingly godless in their thoughts, words, and deeds.

Eighteenth, they call us ummah hammekullala, that is, the accursed people, or עם המקולל Am hammekullal, which has the very same meaning. The first is found in Abarbanel's book Maschmia jeschua, fol. 30. col. 2., and the following is written there concerning God's vengeance against Christendom: 'תהיה נקמת השם יותר באומת אדום מבשאר האומות ולא תזכה אותה אומה': that is, the vengeance of God will come more upon the Edomite people than upon other peoples, and that same ummah hammekullaleth, that is, accursed people, will not be worthy of that which other peoples will be worthy of. The very same can also be read in the aforementioned Abarbanel's commentary on Isaiah, fol. 93. col. 4. The second is found in the book Cad hakkémach fol. 20. col. 1., and it is written concerning the words of Isa 34:5, "My sword is drunk in heaven, and behold it shall come down upon Edom and upon the banished people," that by the banished people one is to understand as much as if Am hammekullal, that is, the accursed people, had been said. Likewise it is also read in Abarbanel's commentary on Malachi, fol. 297. col. 3., that the Christians will one day experience that they are cursed and accursed by God. The Jews, however, err very greatly in this, that they regard us as an accursed people, for Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, as is to be read in Gal 3:13, and He has been made unto us by God righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, as is taught in 1 Cor 1:30. On the other hand, however, they ought to know that they are an accursed people, inasmuch as they hate and curse Christ, for the holy Apostle Paul in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, chap. 16, v.

He teaches in 1 Cor 16:22: "If anyone does not love the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be accursed." So too Rabbi Isaac Karo acknowledges in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, which is called Toledóth Jizchak, fol. 109, col. 2, in the Parascha ki távo, that all the curses of the Law have come upon the Jews, where he writes as follows: 'לפי שנתארך הגלות הזה כל כך באו עליהם כל הקללות שהם שבמשנה תורה', that is: Because this captivity (among the Christians) has lasted so very long, all those curses which are written in the Fifth Book of Moses have come upon them (namely, the Jews).

Nineteenth, they call us מינים Minim, that is, heretics; a single one, however, is called מין Min. Concerning the origin of this name, Elias writes in his Tischbi, fol. 53. col. 2. as follows: נמצא בספרי היונים שהיה אדם אחד שהיה שמו מאני ולא היה that is, In the books of the Greeks it is found that there was a man whose name was Manes, and who had no religion, and after his name all who follow him are called Minim or Mineer (that is, heretics). On this point, the book Ammúde Gólah fol. 123. may also be consulted. And in the little book Michtam le-David, one reads at fol. 81. col. 2.: ראש המינים שהיה כופר באחדות השם ית' היה נקרא בשמו מאני ועל שמו אותן מין קראו: that is, The first heretic, who denied the unity of the blessed God, was called Manes, and after the name of this Manes, every person who denies the unity of the blessed God has been called Min. Rabbi Lipmann, however, teaches in his Sépher Nizzáchon, numero 76. p. 46. how many kinds of Minim or heretics there are, and states: אלו הן חמשה מיני מינים האחד אומר שאין נמצא אלוה ואין לעולם מנהיג: השני אומר שישנו מנהיג אלא שישנו יותר על אחד: השלישי שאומר שיש אחד אלא שהוא גוף ובעל תמונה: הרביעי שאומר שאינו לבדו ראשון וצור לכל: החמישי העובד אלוהות זולתו להיות מליץ בינו ובין אדון כל that is, These are the five kinds of heretics. The first kind says that there is no God and that no one governs the world. The second kind says that there is indeed someone who governs, but that there are more than one. The third states that there is indeed only one who governs, but that He has a body and a form. The fourth says that He is not alone the first and a rock of all things. The fifth, however, is that kind which serves another God, so that this other might be an advocate between him and the Lord of all things.

That we are called Minim or heretics is to be seen in the aforementioned book of Rabbi Lipmann, p. 7, numero 4, where he writes the following concerning the words of Gen 1:1, "In the beginning God created": כאוטעו: המינים לומר בראשית זהו ה"ש" הנקרא ראשון והוא ברא אלהים ומפרשים הדבר על ישו הנוצרי, that is: Here the Minim or heretics err in understanding "the beginning" to mean God, who is called the First, and that this same one created God, which they interpret as referring to Jesus the Nazarene. Likewise it stands in Medrasch Tillim, fol. 4, col. 3, concerning the words of Ps 2:7, "Thou art my Son", as follows: 'מכאן תשובה למינים שהם אומרים יש לו בן וגו' that is: Here is an answer to be taken against the Minim, that is, the heretics, who say that He (namely God) has a Son, &c. Abarbanel also writes in his book Markéveth hammischneh, fol. 110, col. 3, in per Parascha Haasinu, concerning the words of Deut 32:21, "With a foolish (or senseless) people will I provoke them to anger", in the following manner: כבר כתב רבינו משה בר נחמן שזה נאמר על עשו שהיה נבל ולא זכר ברית אחים ויותר נראה לפרש נבל שהוא מין ואפיקורוס ועל הצר קראו הרומיים גוי נבל רוצה לומר גוי מין ונבל באמונתו שמאמין האלהות בבשר ודם וכן דרשו ביהודה, בספרי בלא עם אלו חמותיים וכן הוא אומר נשמעו צרי יהודה that is: Our teacher Rabbi Moses bar Nachman has already written that this was said of Esau, who was a fool and did not remember the brotherly covenant. It seems to me, however, that the word "foolish" is better interpreted as referring to a Min, that is, a heretic and Epicurus, that is, an Epicurean; and in this manner the Romans (that is, the Christians) are called a foolish people, that is, a heretical and senseless people in their faith, who believe that the Godhead is flesh and blood (that is, a human being). Likewise, in the book Siphre, the words "with that which is not a people" are interpreted as referring to the Cutheans, in accordance with what is said in Ezra 4:1, "Now when the adversaries of Judah heard." The words "with a foolish people," however, are understood as referring to the heretics, as it is said in Ps 14:1: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." These are the words of Abarbanel. In the old Nizzachon it is also written concerning the words of Gen 14:18, "And Melchizedek the king of Salem brought forth bread and wine, and he was the priest of the most high God", as follows: אומרים המינים שהוא רמז לישו, that is: The heretics say that it is an allusion to Jesus. The like is also to be found at p. 12, 17, 24, 37, 83, 116, and 126 in the aforementioned old Nizzachon; and at p. 146 we are called מינים ארורים Minim arurim, that is, accursed heretics therein.

In particular, Jews who have abandoned their religion are called Minim, which is why the following is read in the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara, fol. 26. col. 2. in the Tosephoth: איזהו מין זה העובד ע"ז משמע דישאל משומד ל"ע נקרא מין, that is: Who is a Min or heretic? The one who practices idolatry. This teaches us that an Israelite who has apostatized to idolatry is called a Min, concerning which more is to be found in that same place. For this reason, the converted Nicholas is called a Min, that is, a heretic, in the disputation he held with Rabbi Jeziel, on pages 6, 8, 17, and 22, which name is also given to the converted Paul in the disputation he held with Rabbi Nachman, on pages 42, 44, 49, and 60. And although it is read in the aforementioned Tractat Avoda sara, fol. 26. col. 2. in the Tosephoth, as well as in the Tractat Chollin, fol. 13. col. 2.: אין מינים באומות, that is, Among the peoples (who live outside of Judaism) there are no Minim, or heretics, one must nevertheless not be swayed by this, for they regard us all as Minim, as has been demonstrated clearly enough in the preceding.

Twentieth, they call us כופרים Copherim, that is, deniers, namely of God and of the divine law. Rabbi Lipmann teaches in his Sepher Nizzachon, numero 76,

p. 46, how many kinds of Copherim there are, and writes: חמשה מיני כופרים הן: הא 'כופר בתורה אפילו תיבה אחת: השני הכופר בפירושה היא התורה שבעל פה כמו צדוק וביתוס: השלישי כמו הכותיים והישמעאלים: הרביעי הכופר בתחיית המתים: החמשי הכופר that is, there are five kinds of Copherim, or deniers. The first kind consists of those who deny the law, or even so much as a single word of it. To the second kind belongs whoever denies the interpretation of the law, that is, the oral law (which is contained in the Talmud), as Zadok and Bajethos did. The third kind consists of such people as the Cutheans (that is, the Christians) and the Ishmaelites (that is, the Turks) are, who teach that the law of Moses had to come to an end and that another had to be given in its place. To the fourth kind belongs whoever denies the resurrection of the dead. To the fifth, however, belongs whoever does not acknowledge the coming of the Redeemer, namely the Messiah. We thus see from this that we are regarded as Copherim because we teach that the Old Testament has been abolished and that the New Testament has been given in its place. It is also read in the old Nizzachon, p. 181, that we are deniers of God because we believe that Christ the Lord is God, and it stands there as follows: הם אומרים כי אלהים הוא אם כן הם כופרים כי 'שהרי: כתוב בתורה ראו עתה כי אני הוא ואין אלהים עמדי אני אמית ואחיה מחצתי ואני ארפא: that is, they (the Christians) say that he (namely Christ) is God, but in doing so they deny God, for behold, it is written in the law (Deut 32:39): See now that I am He, and there is no God beside me. I kill and make alive, I wound and I heal.

They also hold us to be Copherim, because we (according to their teaching) are given over to idolatry; for in the book Markéveth hammischneb, fol. 43. col. 3. in the Parascha Reeb, it is taught: העובד עבודה זרה ככופר בכל התורה כולה: that is, whoever practices idolatry does as much as if he denied the entire Law. The same is also to be found in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 198. col. 2. in the Parascha Ekef. In the aforementioned Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzachon, one also reads, concerning the words of Gen 1:1, "In the beginning God created": טועי והכופרים לדקדק אל יחד ומעתה אלהים לשון: רבים, that is, the Copherim (namely, the Christians) are mistaken in that they wish to dispute with subtlety (and maintain) that the word אל El (which means God) is the singularis, or the singular, whereas the word אלהים Elohim (which also means God, and stands in the cited passage) is the pluralis numerus, or the plural number. And at p. 35, numero 56, the aforementioned Rabbi Lipmann remarks, concerning the words of Gen 15:25, "And the Lord showed him a tree," that the Christians say it was a cross, and writes thereupon: דאס הכופרים סמכו לדבריהם עץ בגימטריא צלם, that is, and the Copherim, or deniers, prove their assertion thereby, since the word עץ Ez (which means wood) produces, through Gematria, צלם Zélem (which means a cross), for each amounts to the number

160. In the same manner we are named in the first part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 34. col. 1. in the Commentario, where it is taught: כופרים היינו אומה הרשעה, that is, the Copherim are the godless people, by which the Christians are meant, as has been reported above at p. 689, under the seventeenth name they give us. Beyond the above, there is also found in the book Cad hakkémach, fol. 78. col. 2., concerning the words of Song 7:11, Nalina bakkepharim, that is, "We will lodge in the villages," the following written: אל תקרי בכפרים אלא בכופרים אלא, that is, read not bakkepharim, that is, in the villages, but bakkopherim, that is, among the deniers. I will show you the children of Esau, upon whom you have poured out good things, and they deny you. This is also found in the book Avodáth hakkódesh, in the fourth part, in the 18th chapter, fol. 121. col. 4., and it is taken from the Talmudic tractate Erúvin, fol. 21. col. 2.

Twenty-first, they call us אפיקורוסין Epicúrosin, that is, Epicureans; but a single person is called אפיקורוס Epicúros, that is, an Epicurean. Elias writes in his book Tischbi, fol. 73. col. 1. in der Radice פקר, or on the root word פקר Pakár, concerning the origin of this word, as follows: היו שני אנשים שלא היו בעלי דת והנמשכים אחריהם נקראים מינים ואפיקורוסין, that is, Manes and Epicurus were two men who had no religion, and those who follow after them are called Minim, or Mineer, and Epicureans. Abarbenel, however, teaches on this matter in his book Rosch amana, fol. 3. col. 1., after he has set forth the thirteen articles of faith of the Jewish religion, as follows: אם לא יאמין האדם אלה העקרים כלם כראוי כבר יצא מן הכלל וכפר בעקר ונקרא מין ואפיקורוס וקוצץ בנטיעות וחייב אדם לשנתו ולאבדו ועליו נאמר הלא משנאך יי' אשנא, that is, when a person does not believe all these principal articles as is proper, he is already excluded from the community (of the Israelites), and he denies the foundation, and is called a Min, that is, a heretic, and an Epicúros, that is, an Epicurean, as well as a cutter of the plantings (concerning which expression, and what it signifies, Rabbi Bechai may be consulted in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 12. col. 1. in the Parascha Bereschith, and fol. 111. col. 1. 2.). One is also obligated to hate, despise, and remove such a person from the community. Of such a person it is also said (Ps 139:21): "Should I not, O Lord, hate those who hate You?" Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon agrees with this in his book Babo Mose, p. 169, and also reports on the matter in his book Jad chasaka, in the fourth part, in the tractate Mamrim, cap. 3. §. 1. fol. 269. col. 1., as follows: מי שאינו מודה בתורה שבעל פה אינו זקן ממרה האמור בתורה אלא הרי זה בכלל האפיקורוסים, that is, he who does not acknowledge the oral law is not an elder rebel (or one who is obstinate) of the kind mentioned in the law, but is rather counted among the Epicureans. There are, however, said to be two kinds of Epicureans, as may be read in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin, fol. 38. col. 2., namely אפיקורוס גוי, that is, a heathen Epicurean, and אפיקורוס ישראל, that is, an Israelite Epicurean.

That we are called by this name can be seen from the old Nizzachon, where on p. 186 it is written: הוי שקוד ללמוד תורה כדי שתשיב לאפיקורוס, that is: Be diligent in learning the Law, so that you may answer the Epicurean; which words are taken from the aforementioned passage of the tractate Sanhedrin, namely fol. 38, col. 2. Who, however, is meant by this, the words immediately following make plainly clear, in which a disputation is conducted against the Christians. Something similar is also to be found in the book Chissuk emuna, p. 9. Likewise, Rabbi Lipmann begins his Carmen, or poem, which he calls Sichron Sepher Nizzachon and which he composed against the Christian religion, with these words: מה אשיב לאפיקורוס הבא להאביד ולהרוס תורת שומרי אמונים ועל הייחוד מדבר גבוהים, that is: What shall I answer the Epicurean, who comes to corrupt and destroy the Law of those who observe faithfulness (that is, Jews), and who speaks lofty words against the unity of God. Beyond this, Abarbanel has refuted the opinion and interpretation of the Christians concerning Dan 9:24-27 in his book Majene jeschua, fol. 66, col. 4, and fol. 67, col. 1, 2, 3, in the tenth Majan, in the eighth Tamar, and has stated in the fourth column that this was done at length, כדי להשיב את האפיקורוס פן יהיה חכם, that is, to answer the Epicurean, so that he does not think himself to be wise. The same author also calls us Epicureans in his book Markeveth hammischneh, fol. 110, col. 3, as can be seen above on p. 692 from his cited words.

Twenty-second, they call us פוקרים Pokerim, or מפקירים Mafkirim, that is, heretics who hold an erroneous doctrine. The first instance appears in Rabbi Lipmann's Sépher Nizzáchon, p. 160, numero 292, where he writes the following concerning the words of Ps 110:1, "The Lord said ladoní, that is, to my Lord, etc.": כל אלו מפרשים הנוצרים על הנצרי ולא עוד אלא לאדוני הניקוד בחיירי"ק קורין: "הפוקרין בפת"ח ואומרים על חול שהוא קדוש, that is, all of this the Christians interpret of the Nazarene (namely, Christ), and moreover the Pokerim (or heretics) do not only do this, but the word ladoní, which is pointed with a Chirek, they also read with a Pathach (and thus ladonái instead of ladoní), and they turn the common name Adoni into the sacred name Adonai. In this same manner we are also called by that name at numero 209 in the same book. The second instance is found in Abarbanel's book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 23, col. 1, where he writes the following concerning the words of Isa 51:4, "Hearken unto me, my people; listen to me, my nation, for a law shall go forth from me, and I will make my justice to rest as a light for the peoples": אין פירושו שתצא תורה: חדשה מאתו יתעלה בזמן הגאולה כדברי המפקירים כי תורתנו היא נצחית ולא תשתנה, that is, this must not be interpreted to mean that a new law will go forth from the praised God at the time of redemption, as the Mafkirim, that is, heretics say, for our law is eternal and will not be changed.

Twenty-third, they call us עורים Iverim, that is, blind, and this is found in Abarbanel's commentary on Isaiah, fol. 64, col. 3, where he teaches the following concerning the words of Isa 42:7, "That thou mayest open the eyes of the blind": אמר לפקוח עינים עורות שהגוים הם כעורים שאינם רואים אמתת האמונה: האלהית, d. i. He says, that thou mayest open the eyes of the blind, because the Gojim (understand: the Christians) are like the blind, for they do not see the truth of the divine faith. So also writes Rabbi David Kimchi in his Teshuvot (or Teshuvot), that is, Responses, which he composed against the Christians, and which are printed at the end of Rabbi Lipmann's Sepher Nizzachon, appended at the back, published at Nuremberg, p. 20, after he has purportedly refuted the Christians' interpretation of Ps 110:1, in the following manner: יפקו עינים עיניהם ויאמרו אך שקר נחלו אבותינו, that is, Let the blind open their eyes, and say (from Jer 16:19): Our fathers have possessed false gods.

We can say with the greatest justification that the Jews are spiritually stone-blind, as the ravings brought to light in this book abundantly testify. Indeed, some Jewish teachers themselves confess their blindness; for Abarbanel writes in his commentary on Isa ch. 34, fol. 53, col. 3, as follows: הנה אלהיכם נקם יבא רחמה לומר עתיד אלהיכם לבוא בנקם גדול וגמול אלהים על אשר סבלתם עול הגלות הוא יבא ויושיעכם ואו בתשועתו תפקחנה עיני ישראל שהם עורים מתוקף צרותיהם, that is: (The words of Isa 35:4) "Behold, your God comes for vengeance" mean: Your God will come with great vengeance and mighty retribution, because you have borne the yoke of the exilii, or misery. He will come and redeem you; then the eyes of the Israelites, which are blind on account of their severe afflictions, will be opened through His salvation. Rabbi David Kimchi also states in his commentary on the words of Isa 42:16, "I will lead the blind on the way," that this is to be understood as referring to the Israelites, and he writes: ישראל שהם יבא ויושיעכם ואו בתשועתו תפקחנה עיני ישראל, that is: The Israelites, who are as blind in the exilio, or misery, I will lead, &c. And on Isa 35:6 he likewise teaches that by the blind, the deaf, the lame, and the mute, the Israelites in their present misery are to be understood. The Chaldean translation, however, reads there as follows: בכך יתפתחו עיני בית ישראל דאינון כסמן מן אורייתא ואדניהון דכחשרון לקבלא למלי נביא יצחק, that is: Then the eyes of the house of Israel will be opened, they who are as blind in the Law; and their ears, which are as deaf to receiving the words of the prophet, will hear.

Twenty-fourth, they call us גוי נָפֵל Goi náfal, that is, the foolish people, or כסילים Sechalim vetippeschim, that is, fools and simpletons, or כסילים

Kesilim, which has the same meaning. The first of these is found in Rabbi Bechái's book Cad hakkémach fol. 20. col. 4., where, commenting on the words of Ps 74:22, "Remember the reproach that the fools bring upon You daily," he writes as follows: קרא מלכות אדום נבל וגו' הוא הוא הזה הרביעית שהתפלל עליה גער חית קנה וגו' ועליו שהזכיר משה עליו השלום בני נבל אמצעכם כי נבל יקרא מי שאינו זוכר ברית אהים, that is: He (namely King David) called the Edomite kingdom (meaning Christendom) a fool or simpleton, ע'c., and this is the same fourth beast against which he (Ps 68:31) prayed: "Rebuke the beast in the reeds, ע'c." Of this same beast, Moses, upon whom be peace, also spoke (Deut 32:21): "I will provoke them to anger with a Goi náfal, that is, a foolish people"; for whoever does not remember the covenant of brotherhood is called Náfal, that is, a fool. This is also found in the aforementioned Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 225. col. 1., in the Parascha Haasinu. Likewise, in Abarbanel's book Markéveth hammischné, fol. 110. col. 3., in the said Parascha Haasinu, we are called Goi náfal, and in his book Maschmia jeschúa, fol. 79. col. 4., Christendom is called Náfal, that is, a fool. In the old Nizzáchon, at page 51, commenting on the words of Deut 32:21, "I will provoke them to jealousy with those who are not a people, and with a foolish nation I will anger them," the following is written: חרי קרא אתכם לא עם וגוי נבל כי אין לכם בושת פנים שאתם אומרים על מי שאמר והיה העולם שהוא חי וקיים לנצח אתם אומרים עליו שקבל מיתה ויסורין בשבילכם, that is: Behold, he (namely Moses) has called you (Christians) not a people, and a foolish people, because you are not ashamed to say that He through whose word the world was created, who lives and endures eternally, died for your sake and suffered on your behalf. Likewise, we are also called, in the Selichóth (or Selichos), under the title Lejórn revii schebén rosch haschaná vejóm Kippur, in the prayer that begins: Ach bechá mikvéh Jisraël, גוי נבל ועם גנא Goi náfal veám gannái, that is, the foolish and shameful people.

Regarding the second matter: it is found in Rabbi Lipmann's Sépher Nizzáchon, page 79, no. 124, where he expounds at length on the words of Deut 4:39, "Know therefore this day, and consider it in your heart, that the Lord is God," and thereupon states: וכל זה הארכתני להוציא המינות מלב הסכלים : והטפשים האומרים ידענו מדוה יוצרנו והוא בתוארנו וזהו באמונת הנוצרים : that is, I have set all of this forth at length in order to drive the Minuth or Minus, that is, the heresy, out of the hearts of the Sechalim and Tippeschím, that is, of the fools and simpletons, who say: we know the nature of our Creator, that He has our form, and this is found in the faith of the Christians.

Regarding the third matter: it is read in Bammidbar rabba, fol. 198, col. 3, in the eleventh Parascha, where, concerning the words of Prov 3:35, "But shame shall be the promotion of fools," it is written: אלו אדומים כמה דתימא : that is, These are the Edomites, as it is said (Obad 1:8): "And I will destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau." Likewise, in the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the nineteenth chapter, it is read: אדם בקי באמונת העולם הזאת כסיל that is, The most experienced (or most capable) person among the peoples of the world is a fool. Why? Because he does not know the words of the Law, as it is said (Ps 92:6): "And a fool does not understand this."

give strength to His king (the Messiah). When He will cause the pure ones (namely the Israelites) to reign, He will rule over all. This, however, is to be understood as referring to the time when the supposed Jewish Messiah is to come, at which time all dominion is to be taken from the Christians and they are to be utterly exterminated from the world, of which the fourteenth chapter of the second part is to treat in detail. Beyond this, the Christians are also called זדים Sédim, that is, the Arrogant, in the Polish Siddúrim, fol. 74. col. 1., under the title Ofan leschábbath Schelischbith, in a prayer beginning: ארזית ודחיו Arajóth biddíchu pesúra, and at fol. 90. col. 2. under the title Józer leschábbath chamischí ácher happésach, in a prayer whose opening reads: אלהים לא Elohim lo eda sulathécha.

Twenty-sixth, they call us טועים Tóim, that is, the Erring, as can be read in the book Maggen Abraham, in the 73rd chapter, where, concerning the words of Isa 52:13, "Behold, my servant shall deal wisely," it is written: הטועים פרשו that is, The Erring have interpreted this (Parascha) concerning their Messiah, etc. But Rabbi Joseph ben Caspi has dared to say that those who interpret this Parascha concerning the King Messiah (who may come soon and in our days) are the cause of the Erring explaining it concerning Jesus. We are likewise so named in the written Commentary of Rabbi David Kimchi on Mic 5:2, as can be seen in the late Mr. Doctor Pocock's Notis miscellaneis, p. 431, appended to Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's book Bábe Móse. Beyond this, we are also called תועי רוח Toë ruach, that is, Erring in Spirit, in Aben Ezra's commentary on Gen 18, at the beginning, in the old Venice printing, where one reads: תועי רוח אמרו כי השם גי אנשים הוא: that is, Those erring in spirit say that God consists in three persons, that He is one and three, and that the three are not separated (or divided) from one another. And in his commentary on Gen 37:35, the Latin translator, who is called Vulgatus Interpres, is named המתורגם לתועים that is, the translator of the Tóim, or of the Erring.

Twenty-seventh, they call us לצים Lézim, that is, Mockers, as can be seen under the preceding twenty-fifth name above, or מלעיגים Maligim, that is, Scorners, as is to be found in Rabbi Lipmann's Sèpher Nizzáchon numero 287, at the beginning, p. 157.

Twenty-eighth, they call us טמאים Teméim, that is, the Unclean, as can be read in Rabbi Menáchem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 145, col. 3, in the Parasha Acharé moth, where it is written as follows: לא מצא השם חלק בַּאֲמוֹת וּמַחֲזִיזוֹת בַּקִּי שְׂרָאֵל וּבְאֶרֶץ יִשְׂרָאֵל לִפִּי שֶׁהוּא טָהוֹר וְטָהוֹר: that is, the praised God found no portion among the peoples (of the world) and the lands, except among Israel and the land of Israel, because He is בקרבתם רוח רעה כי הם תואבים להשלמת יצירתם: that is, it is already known to you that a Goi (that is, a Christian or pagan), as long as he lives, is unclean and causes uncleanness, on account of the uncleanness (that is, the unclean spirit) that dwells within him. But when he dies, that same spirit comes to an end (since it departs), and therefore he does not cause uncleanness in the tent. For this is a foundational principle among us: that the graves of the Gojim (that is, of Christians or pagans) do not cause uncleanness in the tent, because (in the aforementioned passage, Num 19:14) it is said, "When a man dies," but the nations of the world are not called men. With an Israelite, however, it is the complete opposite, for during his lifetime a holy spirit dwells within him, but when he dies he is unclean and causes uncleanness; and in this matter there is a great mystery, for when the unclean spirit sees a pure vessel that is empty of the holy spirit (that is, of the holy soul), it comes and dwells therein, and everything within it is unclean and causes uncleanness. For this reason it is customary to guard the bodies of the dead, so that no evil spirit may enter into them, for those same evil spirits desire to complete their creation, in that they wish to become holy and thus perfect by dwelling in a body in which a holy spirit had resided. Immediately following this, more on the same subject is given; and something similar can also be found in the Jalkut chadasch, fol. 103, col. 4, number 21, under the title Jisrael, as well as in the book Schichchath leket, number 6, under the title Mitha (or misa).

By "impurity," however, or the "unclean spirit" that is said to dwell in the Gojim during their lifetimes, one is to understand those souls which are said to derive from the devil, as may be seen in the first chapter of the second part. Accordingly, the aforementioned Rabbi Menachem teaches further in the cited book, fol. 185, col. 4, in the Parascha Balak, from the Sohar, as follows: כוונתו שראל לימינא בקדושתו ישראל ושאר עמין דאית לעילא אית לתתא: אית ימינא ואית שמאלא דמלכא קדישא, שאר עמין לשמאלא לסטרא דרוח מסבא: that is, "Just as it is above, so it is also below. There is a right and there is a left (side): there are the Israelites and there are the nations. The Israelites are on the right side, in the holiness of the holy King, but the remaining nations are on the left side of the unclean spirit." And at fol. 186, col. 1, he writes further thereupon: זכאה חולקיהו דישראל דעלייהו כתיב כי יעקב בחר לו יה ישראל לסגולתו הנה רמז כן בבאור כי: that is, "The portion of the Israelites is pure, for of them it is written (Ps 135:4): 'The LORD has chosen Jacob for Himself, Israel as His own possession.' See, it is here plainly signified that the nations of the world are attached to the place of fear and of power, and that their works and their governance are from the unclean spirit." Now it has also been shown quite well above, in the 15th chapter, pages 591 and 592, etc., as well as in this chapter, p. 672, etc., in connection with the fifteenth name given to us, where the matter of the foreskin was treated, that something has been indicated regarding the impurity which our declared enemies, the Jews, ascribe to us. And from all of this it is plain enough that the Jews regard us as unclean. Therefore one must pay no heed whatsoever to what is read in the little book Schévet Jehúda, fol. 9, col. 1, namely that a Jewish Medicus, when it had been put to him that the Jews consider Christians to be unclean, drank from the water in which the feet of the King of Spain had been washed, and thereby wished to give it to be understood that this was a false accusation; for the Jews employ all manner of means so that their wicked minds and improper teachings against us may not come to light.

Twenty-ninth, they call us מתים Methím or Melim, that is, the Dead, and in the Talmudic tractate Berachôth, fol. 18. col. 2., over the words of Eccl 9:5, "But the dead know nothing," it is written thus: אלו רשעים שבחיהן קרוין מתים that is, these (dead) are the wicked, who are called dead during their lifetime. And in the first column of the same place, on the contrary, over the preceding words, "For the living know that they will die," it stands thus: אלו צדיקים שבמיתתן חיים נקראו חיים that is, these (living) are the righteous, who are called living in their death. This is also to be found in Rabbi Moses bar Maimon's book Bábo Móse, p. 157., as well as in the Jalkut chadasch fol. 79. col. 2. num. 62. under the title Chattáim. They call us the Dead, however, because they consider us to be wicked and, in a spiritual sense, dead, and it is taught in the Prague Machsor in the first part, fol. 59. col. 2. in the commentario: מתים אלו אומות העולם that is, by Methim or the Dead, the nations of the world are to be understood.

Thirtieth, they call us חזיר אוכלי בשר óchele bésar chásir, that is, devourers of swine's flesh, and this is read in the book Chissuk emuná p. 352. over the words of Isa 65:4, "They eat swine's flesh," where the words read as follows: אמר אוכלי בשר החזיר על בני אדום שהם הנוצרים האוכלים בשר החזיר כי הישמעאליים אינם אוכלים אותו that is, the words "they eat swine's flesh" are spoken of the children of Edom, who are the Christians and who eat swine's flesh, for the Ishmaelites (or Turks) do not eat it. The like is also to be found in Abarbanel's commentary on the aforementioned passage of Isa, as well as in the book Cad hakkémach, fol. 20. col. 1.

On this occasion, I must report here what the Jews write about pigs and about the eating of pork. In the book Maarébeth ha'elabúth (or Maaréches ha'elobus), it is read at fol. 179, col. 1, in the Chiját, as follows: אמרו בספר הזוהר גופא דאיניש איקרי לבושא דאדם וכן אף בכוחות הטומאת הבשר חזיר לבוש שלהם נקראת חזיר: that is, in the book Sohar it is said that the body of a human being is called the garment of man; likewise, among the powers of impurity, the flesh of a pig, which is its garment, is called flesh, but the form of it, which derives from the unclean spirit (the devil), is called pig. This is also to be found in Rabbi Menáchem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 14, col. 1, in the Parascha Bereschith. From which it is evident that the form or shape of the pig is supposed to derive from the devil. Concerning the eating of pork, it is reported in Rabbi Lipmann's Sèpher Nizzáchon, numero 242: אין אכילה מנודה כאכילת חזיר שהרי ארי"ל עשרה קבי צרעת: that is, there is no more filthy (or shameful) eating than the eating of pork, for behold, our rabbis, of blessed memory, have said (in the Talmudic tractate Kiddúschin, fol. 49, col. 2) that ten measures of leprosy came into the world, and pigs received nine of them, but the entire rest of the world received one. Rabbi Bechai likewise writes in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 132, col. 3, in the Parascha Schemini, concerning pig's milk, as follows: ראיתי בקצת ספרי הרפואות שאם ינק: that is, I have seen in several medical books that when a nursing child suckles pig's milk, that child will become leprous.

Since a pig is supposed to be such a filthy and unclean animal, the rabbis won't even call it by its name, but sometimes refer to it only as dávar ácher, that is, "another thing." Hence it is written in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth, fol. 43. col. 2.: תלה ליה קורא לדבר אחר ואיהו ידיה עביד: that is: Hang the tip of a palm branch on the dávar ácher, that is, on the other thing (namely, the pig), and it will still do what is its nature, namely, wallow about in the filth. Elias writes in his Tischbí, fol. 19. col. 1. 2., under the word dávar, the following words: קורין לחזיר דבר אחר ונראה לי הטעם כדי שלא לזכור שמו בפני התינוקות וידרשו וישאלו עליו ויבאו לידי אכילה כמו שאין זוכרין שם לחם בפסח מטעם זה, that is: A pig is called dávar ácher, and it seems to me that the reason for this is so that its name not be mentioned in front of children, lest they ask about it and thereby come to eat of it, just as at the Passover feast no mention is made of bread for this same reason. Likewise, leprosy is also called dávar ácher, that is, "the other thing," in the Talmudic tractate Gittin fol. 70. col. 1. Furthermore, a pig is also called othó (or otó) min, that is, "that same kind" or "that species," and one reads in the Médrasch Kobeleth fol. 326. col. 4.: אכלין מן ההוא מינא, that is: They ate of that species; and this is explained in the commentary on it, which is called Mattenóth Kebúnna, as follows: ואוכלים מן אותו מין כלומר מבשר חזיר כמו שקורין אותו דבר אחר כן קורא אותו ההוא מינא, that is: They ate of ótho min, that is, of that species, namely of pork. Just as the pig is called dávar ácher, so it is also called babú min, that is, "that species."

But if pork were such a thoroughly filthy thing, as the Jews claim, why do they write that God permitted their forefathers to eat it at the time of the conquest of the land of Canaan; that He permits it to those who go to war; and that He will permit it in the future at the time of the Messiah? That the Israelites ate it during the conquest of the land of Canaan is found in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 196. col. 3., in the Parashah Vaëthchannán, where, concerning the words of Deut 6:11, "And houses full of all good things, which thou didst not fill," the following is written: דרשו ר"ז אפילו קוחלי דחזירי אפילו כרמים נטועים ערלה הכל התיר להם וכן הותרו תורה שהתירו כל האסורים ביוצאי מלחמה עד שבע שנים שכבשו חוץ מע"ז שלא התירו להם: that is, our Rabbis, of blessed memory, have taught that even the haunches of swine, and indeed also the foreskin of planted vineyards (that is, the grapes which grew in the new vineyards during the first three years, as may be seen in Lev 19:23), are to be understood as included therein, and that all of these things were permitted to them. And thus the right of the Law entailed that all forbidden things were permitted to those who had gone to war, for up to seven years during which they had subdued the land, with the exception of idolatry, which was not allowed to them.

That it is permitted to those who go to war is evident from what follows immediately after, and the words read as follows: הרמב"ם ז"ל כתב בהלכות מלכים ומלחמותיהם, חלוצי צבא כשיכנסו בגבול הגוים מותר להם לאכול נבלות וטרפות, או בשר חזיר : חזיר אם הוא רעב ולא מצא מה יאכל אלא מאכלות אסורות ושותה יין נסך : that is, Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon has written in the tractate on kings and their wars (in his book Jad chasaka fol. 289. col. 2. in the 8th chapter, number 1.): when soldiers enter into the territories of the heathens, it is permitted to them to eat carrion and what has been torn apart (by wild animals), as well as pork, when they are hungry and can find nothing to eat but forbidden foods, and to drink heathen wine.

That this will also be permitted in the future is evident from the Jalkut chadasch fol. 182. col. 3. numero 36. under the title Likkutim, where the following is written: מה שאמרו שעתיד חזיר לחזור להתירו הוא : that is, What they (namely the Rabbis) have said, that the pig will again be permitted (to eat), is for this reason: because it currently has only one sign (of cleanliness) and has split hooves, but in the future it will also chew its cud. Abarbanel teaches in his book Rosch amana fol. 18. col. 2. in the 13th chapter on this matter as follows: למה נקרא שמו חזיר מפני שעתיד הקב"ה להתירו לישראל וגו' מפני המלחמות. לזוורא שעה יתירה ה"ב לישראל כמו שהתיר להם בזמן כבוש הארץ וכמו שאמרו ובתים מלאים כל טוב חזיר ה"ב לישראל : that is, Why is the pig called Chasir? (It is so named from Chasar, which means "to return") because the holy blessed

God will give it back to the Israelites again, וְעַתָּה. The holy blessed God will permit it to the Israelites (to eat) for a time on account of the wars, just as He permitted it to them at the time when they had conquered the land (Canaan): as they (namely the Rabbis) have said that through the words (Deut 6:11) "And houses full of all good things," the hams of pigs are also included in the meaning; therefore they say that (God) will give it back (and permit it to be eaten). But in the Midrash Tehillim it is written at fol. 57. col. 3. on the words Ps 146:7, Jehova mattir assurim, which here mean: "The Lord looseth those who are bound (or imprisoned)," as follows: מהו מתיר אסורים יש אומרים כל הבהמה : ונטמאת בעולם הזה מטהר אותה הק"ב לעתיד לבא : that is, What do the words mattir asurim mean? There are some who say that the holy blessed God will in the future purify all animals that are unclean in this world (that is, in this present age). According to this, the words Jehova mattir asurim therefore mean as much as: the Lord permits the forbidden things.

Since the pigs are mentioned here, I must also point out that the prophet Daniel, according to the Talmud's teaching, is supposed to have purchased pigs for King Nebuchadnezzar in Egypt and brought them to Babylon, concerning which the following is written in the tractate Sanhedrin fol. 93, col. 1: אלו אנשים שנעשה להם מופת הוי אומר זה חנניה מישאל ועזריה. דניאל להיכא אזל אמר רב למיכרא נהרא רבא בטבריא ושמואל אמר לאיתויי ביזרא דאספסתא. ורבי יוחנן אמר לאיתויי חזירי דאלכסנדריא של מצרים איני והניא תדוס הרופא אמר אין פרה וחזירה יוצאה מאלכסנדריא של מצרים שאין חותכין האם שלה בשביל שלא תלד. וזכירי אייתי בלא דעתהון That is: Who are those men to whom a miracle happened? Say, it was Ananias, Misael, and Azarias. Where then had Daniel gone (when his companions were thrown into the fiery furnace)? Rab said (he had gone away) to dig a great river through Tiberias. Samuel said he had fetched seed (of a certain herb) for fodder (for the cattle). Rabbi Jochanan said (he had traveled away) to bring pigs from Alexandria, which is in Egypt. How so: have we not taught in the Baraita that Thodos the physician said that no cow or sow had ever come out of Alexandria, which is in Egypt, without its womb having been cut out so that it could not give birth. (To this the answer is:) he brought young pigs, so that they (namely the Egyptians) did not know about it, and thus he led them away secretly. Now if the pious and holy prophet Daniel dealt with pigs in such a manner, then they cannot possibly be such shameful and unclean animals as they are described and regarded by the Jews, for otherwise he would have had nothing to do with them. But this too is one of the Talmudic falsehoods, for Daniel was not employed for such purposes.

Thirty-first, they call us עובדי עבודה זרה Ovede avóda sára, that is, idolaters, or those who practice idolatry. In the book Schéva tal, at fol. 78, col. 4, as well as at fol. 80, col. 2, all peoples who are outside of Judaism are called Ovedé avóda sára, that is, idolaters. And in the book Nischmách (or Nischmas) chájim, Rabbi Menasse ben Israel writes at fol. 47, col. 1, in the 17th chapter of the first part, as follows: ישראל נקראו עבדים למקום וכמו שלמר הכתוב כי לי כל בני ישראל: that is: The Israelites are called servants of God, as the Scripture (Lev 25:55) says: "For the children of Israel are my servants"; but the peoples of the world serve images and boast of idols, etc. In particular, however, we Christians are accused of idolatry, as can be seen in the book Col bo, in which the following is taught at fol. 104, col. 3, num. 96: חומץ מן הגוים אסור בהנאה לפי שתחלתו יין נסך. וכל מגע וגוי שאינו עובד: עבודה זרה אינו נאסר אלא בשתיה ואם נגע שלא בכוונה מותר אף בשתיה: והישמעאלים אינן עובדים עבודה זרה. הם הנוצרים עובדי עבודה זרה. that is: Vinegar belonging to the Gojim (that is, Christians or heathens) is not permitted to be used for any benefit, because it was originally jen nesch (that is, libation wine, or wine that was offered to idols). And everything that a Goi (or heathen) touches, who does not practice idolatry, is forbidden only for drinking; but if he touches it without deliberate intent, it is also permitted for drinking. As for the Ishmaelites (or Turks), they do not commit idolatry; but the Christians are Ovedé avoda sara, that is, idolaters. Likewise, in the same place at fol. 108, col. 4, numero 97, under the title Avoda sara, it reads: הנוצרים עובדי עבודה זרה הם: that is: The Christians are Ovedé avoda sara, that is, idolatrous people, and the first day (of the week, namely Sunday) is their day of ruin, that is, their feast day. So also in the Sepher Toledoth Adam vechavva, in the first part, fol. 50, col. 1, it is taught: כתב הרמ"ב כי הנוצרים עובדי עבודה זרה: that is: Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon has written that the Christians are Ovedé avoda sara, that is, idolatrous people, and that their wine is forbidden for drinking, but that deriving benefit from it is permitted. As for the aforementioned Rabbi Mosche bar Majemon, this is found in his book Jad chabaka, in the 11th chapter, §7, of the tractate Avoda sara, in the handwritten but not in the printed copies. He also teaches this in his commentary on the Mishnah of the Talmudic tractate Avoda sara, as can be seen at fol. 78, col. 3, in the Talmud printed at Amsterdam, in the following manner: דע שזאת האומה הנוצרים הטועים אחר ישו אפילו שהתורתם משתנות כולם עובדי עבודה זרה: that is: Know that the people of the Christians, who err after Jesus, even though their religions differ, are nonetheless all Ovedé avoda sara. And in the Jalkut Rubeni gadol, it is reported at fol. 101, col. 1, in the Parashah Jethro: ע' שרים... כנגדם ע' משפחות שהעמים עובדים מינים רבים של ע' הם משתפים השם עם אותם ע' כגון עשו וישמעאל. עשו אמר שהוא מאמין בה"קבה וכן ישמעאל וזו: that is: There are seventy princes, and just as many families (or peoples in the world), half of whom serve many kinds of idols and associate God with those same idols, as Esau and Ishmael (that is, the Christians and Turks) do. Esau says that he believes in the holy and blessed God, and Ishmael does likewise, etc.

The Jews claim that, because we worship Christ the Lord, we regard a mere human being as God, and thus commit idolatry. For this reason, Rabbi Bechai writes in his book Cad hakkémach, fol. 62, col. 2, on the words of Ps 124:1, "If the Lord had not been on our side, when men rose up against us," in the following manner: אמר זה על מלכות אדום הרשעה הזכירם בלשון אדם על שם שהם עובדים אדם. וכן מה שאמר ישעיה חדלו לכם מן האדם ירמז לאומות אדום ויתנבא כי עתידה מלכות אדום לומר זה לזה חדלו לכם מן העבודה שהורגלתם בה לעבודת האדם שלא היה אלוה that is: (King David) said this concerning the wicked Edomite kingdom (that is, Christendom), and he refers to them (namely, the Christians) by the word "men," because they serve a man (that is, Christ). Likewise, what Isaiah said (cap. 2:22), "Cease therefore from man," has a meaning directed at the Edomite (that is, Christian) faith, and the prophet prophesied that the Edomite kingdom (understand: the Christians) would say to one another: Cease from the service by which we have been accustomed to serve a man who was no God but a man like all other men, who had breath in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of? More on this subject can also be read in the old Nizzáchon, pages 80 and 81. Abarbenel likewise, in his book Markèveth hammischneh, fol. 110, col. 3, in the Parascha Haasínu, attacks the Christians and reproaches them for holding flesh and blood to be a God. And in the Bensch-Book it stands at fol. 23, col. 2: יהודי נוצרי ערבי בינה /לא תראית לאל כל תמונה /דרכיו משפט אל אמונה הללויה: גוף אין לו גם דם ובשר /ובידי אדם לא נמסר /דברי אדם לא נמסר /אמת שבטים שנים עשר הללויה that is: O you Jew, Christian, and Arab! Consider that no image is to be seen of God. His ways are right. He is the faithful God, Hallelujah. He has no body, nor flesh and blood; and therefore He cannot be delivered into the hands of any man (as JESUS was delivered). This is the faith of the twelve tribes. Hallelujah.

The foolish and blind Jews ought, however, to consider that we regard Christ as God and worship Him not with respect to His human nature, but with respect to His divine nature, according to which He has been begotten of the Father from eternity. How then can they with any justification reproach us for worshipping a mere man?

Furthermore, the aforementioned Rabbi Bechai writes in the said book Cad hakkémach fol. 20. col. 3. on the words of Ps 42:2, "My soul thirsts for God, for the living God," that it is said: כנגד מלכות אדום שעוברין לאל אחר, that is, "Against the Edomite kingdom" (that is, the Christians) "who serve another God." Thereupon he further remarks on the words of v. 4, "My tears are my food day and night, while they say to me daily: Where is now your God?" as follows: יאמר הנה מלכות אדום מתמדים עלי כל היום חרופים וגדופים כמתמדת הלחם יומם ולילה ואומרים לי איה אלהיך ואני הידוע כי אלהינו חי ואלהיהם מת says: Behold, the Edomite kingdom" (that is, Christendom) "blasphemes and reviles me daily, day and night, as bread endures continually, and says to me: Where is your God? But I know that my God lives, whereas their God has died." In like manner, Christ the Lord is also called a dead God in the little book Schevet Jebuda fol. 77. col. 1., and the words there read as follows: שנת קע"ז תפשה השלטונא אשת פחת מון פורט כל היהודים אשר בטלושה הם ונשיהם ובניהם וגזרה עליהם שמד להפר ברית ולהחליף חי במת והעמידה אנשים לבד וסף וכל מי שהיה וגו' משש שנים ולמטה ניתן ביד הגלחים להטבילם בעד כרחם וגו' i.e., In the year 177 (that is, according to our reckoning, in the year of Christ 1417), the regent, the wife of the Duke of Montfort, had all the Jews in Toulouse, together with their wives and children, taken into custody, and decreed a persecution against them, such that they were to annul the covenant (with God) and exchange the living (God) for the dead (God); she had the men set apart, but the small children, and all who were six years of age and younger, were given into the hands of the Gallachim (or priests) to be baptized against their will, etc.

Therefore it is written in the old Nizzáchon, p. 83, as follows: מה שאין הגויים יכולים להוציא לא חי"ת ולא עי"ן מגרונם י"א לפי שאינן מאטינין בחי עולמים : ועוד יש לומר שקללת דוד היתה זאת להם על שהם משתחוים לעצבים ולצלמים שנ' ולא יהגו בגרונם : That is to say: That the Goyim (or Christians) cannot pronounce the letters Cheth and Ayin through their throats; this occurs, according to some, because they do not believe in the Che olamim, that is, in Him who lives eternally. Furthermore, it is also to be said that this comes to them from the curse which David pronounced against them, because they bow down before idols and images, as it is said (Ps 115:7): "And they do not speak through their throat. Those who make them are like them" (and they likewise cannot pronounce the said two letters). ❧.

But how can the senseless Jews regard Christ as a dead God, seeing that He suffered and died not according to His divine nature but according to His human nature, as was prophesied in Isa 53, and since the Godhead can neither suffer nor die? Beyond the above, still more concerning the idolatry of which the Jews accuse the Christians can be read in Abarbanel's commentary on the prophet Habakkuk, cap. 2, fol. 272, col. 4, and in his book Markéveth hammischne, fol. 21, col. 1, in the Parascha Vaethchannän, and fol. 77, col. 2-3, in the Parascha Távo, as well as in the old Nizzáchon, p. 135.

has denied the truth, as is his custom, when he reports that all Jewish legal scholars write that Christians are not idolatrous people, since they teach: גוים בזמן הזה לא עובדי עבודה זרה נינהו, that is, the Gójim are not idolatrous at this time. It is indeed true that this is written by the rabbis, and for this reason it is also read in Rabbi Menáchem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 203, col. 1, 2, in the Parascha Reéh: אמרו רז"ל גוים שבחוצה לארץ לא עובדי ע"ז הן, that is, our rabbis, of blessed memory, say that the Gójim who are outside the (promised) land are not idolatrous people. On the same matter, something equivalent is to be found in the book Col bo, fol. 104, col. 2, numero 96, under the title Hilchóth (or Hilchos) jen nésech, and in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 2, col. 1, in the Tósephoth, and fol. 81, col. 4, in Rabbi Ascher's commentary, as well as in the Sepher Tóledoth Adam vechávva, fol. 158, under the title Nathíf schísa ásar, chélek chamischí. This, however, is not to be understood as though they were declaring us free from all idolatry, for in the Talmudic tractate Chóllin, fol. 13, col. 2, from which all of this is taken, the words read as follows: אמר רבי חייא בר אבא אמר רבי יוחנן נכרים שבחוצה לארץ לא עובדי ע"ז הן אלא מנהג אבותיהן בידיהן, that is, Rabbi Chija bar Abba says that Rabbi Jochanan said that the foreigners who are found outside the land (of Israel) are not idolatrous, yet they follow the custom of their fathers. By which it is implied that they are indeed also idolatrous, yet do not commit idolatry as great as that which was practiced by their ancient forebears. This becomes still clearer from what the highly learned Mr. Wülfer has cited in his annotations on Rabbi Salman Zevi's Jewish Theriaca, p. 143, from the commentary on the book Arba Turím, which is called Beth (or Bes) Joseph, where the words read as follows: האידנא מותר וטעמו משום דלאו עובדי ע"ז הם כלומר דאינם יודעים בטיב ע"ז כל כך, that is, at the present time it is permitted to trade with the Gojim (or Christians on their feast days), since they are not idolatrous, that is, since they do not know the nature of idolatry so well and do not commit idolatry as great as the pagans of old did. The remaining ten proofs which the aforementioned Rabbi Salman Zevi adduces in the cited passage in order to maintain that we are not regarded by the Jews as idolatrous people, I do not wish to set down and refute here, so as to avoid prolixity, for the contrary is sufficiently evident from what has gone before, and can be judged still further from what follows.

Thirty-second, they call us עובדי התלוי Ovede battalúi or battólui, that is, servants (or worshippers) of the Hanged One, and this is found in the book Cad hakkémach fol. 19. col. 4., where, concerning the words of Ps 80:14, יכרסמנה חזיר מער jearseménnah chásir mijáar, that is, "A wild boar will root it up" (namely, the vine), the following is written: העין תלויה כן הם עובדי התלוי, that is, "The letter Ain is hanged (in the word mijáar, suspended above it), because they (the Christians) are servants of the Hanged One (Christ).\" The Thirty-fourth, they call us כלבים Kelafim or Kelófim, that is, dogs; but a single one כלב Kélef, that is, a dog. Hence Rabbi Lipmann begins the preface of his book Sepher Nizzáchons from Ps 3:2 and Ps 22:17 with these words: ה מה רבו צרי רבים קמים עלי כי סבבוני כלבים עדת מרעים הקיפוני, מיני מינים בני מאמינים וכופרים צדוקים ונצרים, that is: "Ah, Lord, how very many are my enemies! They rise up against me. For dogs have surrounded me, and the company of evildoers has encircled me. Various kinds of heretics; children of believing people (that is, apostate Jews who have believing parents) and deniers (of God and of the divine law); Sadducees and Christians." Rabbi Mosche de Mircádo likewise writes in his commentary on the Psalms, on the aforementioned words of Ps 22:17, "For dogs have surrounded me," in the following manner: ושעם תארו למלכות זו בשם כלבים כי ידוע אם הרבה כלבים ירדפו אחרי איש אחד וירא האיש מהם ויבקש לנוס לא יעזבוהו וידבקוהו אך אם ירצה להנצל יעמוד באכזריות לב לעיניהם ומיד יעזבוהו כן מלכות הזה כי כל חפצם ותאותם הוא שאעמוד לעםם ואעשה כמעשיהם ואז לא יבחו לנגדי בגורותם ואך בעבור שאני אסור מנגדם ואברה מאורחותם על כן סבבוני, that is: "The reason why this kingdom (namely, the Christian one) is described by the name of dogs is this: because it is well known that when many dogs pursue a single man, and that man is afraid of them and seeks to flee, they will not leave him but will cling to him; but if he wishes to be freed from them, he must stand boldly before them, and then they will immediately leave him. So too does this kingdom behave; for all their desire and longing is directed toward having me stand among them and act according to their deeds, and then they will not bark against me through their decrees; but because I withdraw from them and flee from their ways, they therefore surround me." Abarbenel likewise gives us this title in his book Majene jescháa, fol. 5, col. 2, in the preface, where he notes that the Promised Land is at one time in the power of the Edomites, that is, the Christians, and at another time in the power of the Ishmaelites, or the Turks, and writes thereupon כלם קלבים אלמים, that is: "They are all dumb dogs." We are likewise called dogs in the Séfer bachájim of Rabbi Chajim ben Bezaleel, in the first part, in the second chapter, §. 6.

Furthermore, in the Talmudic tractate Megilla fol. 7. col. 2., concerning the words of Exod 12:16, "And on the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and on the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation for you" (that you shall assemble together on the same), "No work shall be done on them, except that which every person must eat, that alone may be done for you", the following is taught: לָכֶם לֹא לְנִכְרִים לָכֶם וְלֹא לְקָלִבִּים, that is, (it says twice) "for you, and not for the Nochrim or foreigners; for you, and not for the dogs, shall the convocation be." In Rabbi Moses bar Nachman's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, at fol. 50. col. 4. in the Parascha Bo, where the same passage occurs, in place of the word Nochrim (foreigners), the word Gójim is read, and it stands there as follows: לָכֶם וְלֹא לַגִּיּוֹם לָכֶם וְלֹא לַכְּלָבִים, that is, "For you, and not for the Gojim (or Christians); for you, and not for the dogs." This can also be read in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary on the aforementioned words of Exod 12:16, in the old Venice edition. However, in the Five Books of Moses printed at Amsterdam, with the three Chaldean translations and the commentary of the aforementioned Rabbi Solomon, there stands only לָכֶם וְלֹא לַגִּיּוֹם, that is, "For you, and not for the Gojim or Christians," and the words "for you, and not for the dogs" have been omitted out of fear.

Furthermore, in the Jálkut Schimóni on the Psalms, fol. 91. col. 1. numero 628, concerning the words of Ps 4:8, "You gladden my heart at the time when they have much new wine and grain," the following is read: ואומרים ישראל ומה אומות העולם ע"י שעשו ז' מצות השפעת להם שלה בער"ה אנו שנצטיינו תר"י ג מצות עא"כ שחשפיע לנו טובות לפיכך על שלוחן אנו שמחין שנ' נתת שמחה בלבי תו' רבי יהושע בן לוי אמר משל למלך שעשה סעודה והכניס את האורחין והושיבן על פתח פלטין עד שעה שיכנסו והיו רואין כלבים יוצאין ופיהם פטיונים וראשי פטומין וראשי עגלים והתחילו אומרים ומה כלבים אוכלים כל טוב כעודה עצמה מה היא כך האפיקורוסין נמשלו לכלבים שנ' והכלבים עזי נפש והרי הן בשלוה זו ישראל על אחת כמה וכמה that is, the Israelites say: if You (O God!) have provided the peoples of the world with rest (or prosperity) in this world, because they have observed the seven commandments (which were enjoined upon them to keep), how much more will You shower us, upon whom six hundred and thirteen commandments were enjoined, with good things. Therefore we rejoice on account of their prosperity, as it is said: "You gladden my heart," etc. Rabbi Joshua ben Levi said: the matter is like a king who prepared a banquet and led the wandering people inside and seated them at the door of the palace until the time when they were to enter. There they saw dogs coming out, which had in their mouths quails, and heads of fattened cattle, as well as calves' heads, and they began to say: if the dogs eat nothing but good things, what kind of a banquet must it be? Thus the Epicureans are compared to dogs, as it is said (Isa 56:11): "They are shameless dogs that are never satisfied." Behold, these very ones find themselves in this prosperity; how much more, then, must things go well for the Israelites. This very same passage is also found in the Medrasch Tillim, fol. 6. col. 3., though somewhat altered, and there, in place of the words "thus the Epicureans are compared to dogs," the following is read: ואומות העולם נמשלו ככלבים, that is, "and the peoples of the world are compared to dogs." In the same manner, it is found in Schemoth (or Schemas) rabba, fol. 102. col. 4., in the ninth Parascha, that the godless are compared to dogs.

We can see from this, therefore, that the converted Samuel Friedrich Brenz stated the truth when he reports the following in the fourth chapter of his work Der abgestreifte jüdische Schlangenbalg, p. 18 and 19: When a Christian detains a Jew too long, the Jew says, let the Kelef chole be, that is, let the dog be sick; and by this he means that one should not detain the Christian any longer but let him go; for the Jew regards the Christian as nothing other than a dog, and it is very common among them to call Christians Kelobim, that is, dogs. Likewise credible is what the same author reports shortly before this, on that very same p., when he writes: If the Christian stays a little while in the room (of the Jew), the Jew says: Let the Kélef schefen, that is, let the dog sit down. Thus I also have no doubt whatsoever that the converted Dieterich Schwab reported the plain truth in his work Der jüdische Deckmantel, in the first part, in the eighth chapter, p. 69, when he states that the Jews sometimes, upon seeing an old Christian walking by, are accustomed to say: See, what a Tofeler nefela or Kélef he is, that is, what an old scoundrel or dog this one is. He also indicates in the same place that they use these words concerning a wealthy Christian: בְּעוֹנוֹת הָרָבִים Baavônôs horábbim, God have mercy, what an עוֹשֶׁר óscher, that is, what wealth the Kélef or dog has. That the Jews are such villains toward Christians is likewise attested by the converted Ernestus Ferdinand Heß, in the first part of his Judengeissel, in the fourth chapter, when he addresses them in the following manner: If you (Jews) do not wish to call him (the Christian) by his name, you say: the רִשְׁעָה róscho, that is, the godless villain, or the נֶפֶלָה nefelo, that is, the scoundrel, or קֶלֶב kelef, the dog, or רוֹצֵחַ rozéach, that is, the murderer. In sum, you know a hundred different ways to give us Christians shameful names. When things go well for us Christians, you say בְּעוֹנוֹת הָרָבִים baavônôs horábbim, the קֶלֶבִּים Kelôfim have great מַזָּל massal, that is, on account of our sins the dogs have great good fortune.

Thirty-fifth, they call us חֲמוֹרִים Chamórim, that is, asses; and this is found in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 39. col. 1., in the prayer which begins אֲתִי מִלְּבָנוֹן כָּלָה Itti millevanón cálla, where they pray as follows: יִגְמֹל רַק עָמִי חֶסֶד וִיזְכוֹר אֶהְבֵּת נְעוּרַיִם וּמֵהָר לַפְדוּתִי מִבֵּין חֲמוֹרִים מִצָּפָא וּשְׁלוּחֵי אֲמוּנָיִם that is, He (namely God) will show me pure mercy, and will remember the love of youth (that is, the love with which He loved Israel in former times), and will hasten to redeem me from among the asses through wholesome envoys and faithful messengers. That the Christians are meant by this, however, is plainly to be seen from what follows shortly thereafter, where they continue to pray: חוֹרֶקֶת שִׁינִיָּה פְּרִיץ חַיִּית נוֹהֵם וְלָבוּ מִכְבֵּד כָּלָה לַעֲנוּת בְּקוּשִׁי לְשַׁעֲבֵד עוֹזֵרָה כִּכְף וּבַעוּל כְּבֹד אוֹלִי תַחְגוֹר וְתַהִיָּה חַיִּית that is, The ravenous beast gnashes its teeth and growls; its heart (or mind) causes affliction, to torment the bride (that is, the Jewish people) and to hold her in hard servitude. It torments her with cruelty and with a heavy yoke. But shame shall be brought upon it, and it shall be like a vessel that is ruined and destroyed.

Through Periz bachajóth, or the ravenous beast, Christendom is understood, as will be shown and proven in the immediately following Chapter 17. Likewise, in Abarbanel's commentary on Hos 4, fol. 230, col. 4, all peoples are compared to donkeys, and his words read as follows: הנה האומה הנבחרת מפני התורה האלהית אשר תשמור תזכה לחיי העולם הכא ר"ל שלא תמות נשמתם עם גופם כסוס כפרד ושאר האומות הדומות לחמור אבל כל ישראל יש להם חלק לעולם הבא, that is: Behold, the chosen people will, on account of the divine Law which it observes, be worthy of eternal life, that is, their soul will not die with their body, as happens to the horse, the mule, and the remaining animals, as well as to the remaining peoples who are like donkeys; rather, all Israelites will have a share in eternal life. In the same manner, all Nóchrim, that is, foreigners (meaning those who are not Jews), are also called donkeys in the Talmudic tractate Berachóth (or Beróchos), fol. 25, col. 2.

The Jews must know that they are truly ignorant, coarse asses, seeing as they hold so many irrational and foolish doctrines. Their own Talmudic teachers, as learned as they were, already regarded themselves as asses, as may be read in the tractate Schábath, fol. 112. col. 2., where it is written as follows: אמר רבי זירא אמר רבא בר זימנא אם ראשונים בני מלאכים או בני אנשים ואם ראשונים בני אנשים או בני חמורים ולא חמורו של רבי חנינא בן דוסא ושל רבי פנחס בן יאיר אלא כשאר חמורים that is: Rabbi Sira says that Rabba bar Simmuna said: If the people of former times were children of angels, then we are children of men. But if the people of former times were children of men, then we are like asses, not however like the ass of Rabbi Channina ben Dosa or of Rabbi Pinchas ben Jair (both of whom were mentioned above in Chapter 8, p. 421 and 422) but rather like the rest of the common asses. Since the Jews themselves confess that they are asses, it is only right to regard them as such, especially given that they pass judgment on matters of religion in so many ways like dumb asses. Indeed, because the Talmudic teachers already regarded themselves as asses in comparison to those who lived before them, since those earlier figures are said to have been far more intelligent than they were, the Jews of today, who consider themselves still far inferior in understanding to what the Talmudic teachers were, must be utterly dumb asses, as they demonstrate more than sufficiently in spiritual matters.

Thirty-sixth, they call us חזירים Chasirim, that is, swine, and חזירי יערים Chasire jearim, that is, wild swine. The name Chasirim is found in the second part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 56 col. 1, under the title Józer lejóm ríschon schel Pésach, in the prayer that begins: על הרי בטר Al háre béter, in which supplication is made for the extermination of four kinds of animals, namely bears, leopards, lions, and swine; and in the commentary thereon it is written as follows: הם ד' מלכיות דובים זה פרס, נמרים, יון, אריות, בבל, חזירים אדום that is:

These (four kinds of animals) signify the four kingdoms (or monarchies). The bears signify Persia, the leopards Greece, the lions Babylon, but the swine Edom, that is, the Roman Empire, or the Christians. In the great Jalkut Rubéni, p. 10 col. 2, in the Parashah Bereschith, the following is also read: נקרא לבוש אדם וז"ש כי ישראל נקרא אדם על שנפשו ירדה לו מאדם העליון אבל לעכ"ם שבה נפשם מרוח הטומאה נקרא חזיר ואם כן גוף של עכ"ם הוא גוף ונפש של חזיר that is: The body is called the garment of man, and this is what is meant when it is said that an Israelite is called a man, because his soul has descended to him from the supreme Man; but the soul of the idolaters, which derives from the unclean spirit, is called a swine. If this is so, then the body of an idolater is the body and soul of a swine. In this same way Christendom is also called a swine, as will be demonstrated in the next following Chapter 17.

Regarding the name Chasire jearim, that is, wild boar, it appears in the large Tephilla fol. 42, col. 4, under the title Sulâth leschabbâth lifné Schevuóth, in the prayer that begins באזנינו שמענו Elohim beosnénu Schamánu, with these words: גאלתנו בחזק יד מנחש וצרים מארי ודוב ונמר שאר צורירים דכאזני עתה רגלי חזירי יערים כמעט נטיו רגלינו ושופכו אשורים. הלא אתה אלהים זנחתנו לשכחה. יותר מאלף שנים וכו' that is: Thou hast delivered us by a strong hand from the serpent and the enemies, from the lion, the bear, and the leopard, as well as from the remaining enemies. Now the feet of the wild boar (that is, of the Christians) trample us. Our feet waver nearly, and our steps slip away. Hast Thou, O God, not cast us off, to forget us, so that we have now been in sorrow and sighing for more than a thousand years, etc.

Thirty-seventh: they call us שקצים Schekazim (or Schekózim), that is, abominations or monsters; a single one, however, they call שקץ Schékez, that is, an abomination before which one ought to feel revulsion. I have heard this from them very often and have rebuked them for it; indeed, I myself have been called Schékez by some who did not know me. In particular, however, they call Christian children Schekazim or Schekózim, that is, abominations or monsters; hence it is written in the old Nizzachon, p. 148, as follows: כשטובלים השקצים (שלהם), that is: when they (meaning the Christians) baptize their Schekazim, that is, their monsters (namely their children) in the impure water, they say: In Nomine Patris, Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, Amen, that is, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, Amen. We see from this, therefore, that Samuel Friedrich Brenz in the fourth chapter of his work Der abgestreifte Jüdische Schlangenbalg, p. 18, and Dieterich Schwab in his Jüdischer Deckmantel, in the first part, in the eighth chapter, p. 66, report the truth: the former notes that the Jews call a Christian boy שקץ Schékez, and a girl שקצה Shikza (which I myself have heard them say as Schikzel); and the latter indicates that they call Christian children Mamserim, that is, whorish children, or Schekózim, that is, monsters. Likewise, a Jew recently told me how a maidservant of a Christian had thrown a stone at him, and he did not hesitate to call her Schikza. Beyond this, the aforementioned Dieterich Schwab also writes in the passage cited that they customarily call a manservant or boy who is a Christian and who serves them on their Sabbath Schabbas Schékez, and a maidservant Schabbas Schikza, that is, a Sabbath monster.

From this we see once again how maliciously and deceitfully Rabbi Salman Zevi, in his Jewish serpent's skin, in the fourth chapter, number 7, claims that only a boy who runs about in the streets and refuses to learn anything, and thus also a Jewish boy, is called by that name, and that Christians, especially in this day and age, are not Schekózim. But if only children who refuse to learn are supposed to be called by that name, why then are young children who are being baptized, and who are not yet capable of learning or running about in the streets, called Schekózim in the cited passage of the old Nizzáchon? Indeed, why do they call grown Christians, who no longer attend schools and otherwise attend to their callings, by that name as well? The true reason, however, why they call us by this name is that they regard us as godless, impure, idolatrous, and wicked people, toward whom, as well as toward whose works, they are supposed to feel revulsion and abhorrence. But since they teach, albeit erroneously, that we are the children of Esau and are called Edomites by them, as has been shown above in this chapter, they act in this matter in direct contradiction to the Law of Moses, for it is written in Deut 23:7: "You shall not regard the Edomite as an abomination, for he is your brother." We, however, have far more reason to regard the Jews collectively as an abomination and to feel revulsion toward them, since they are such godless people, as has been described in the preceding chapters. Beyond this, it stands in their Talmud, in the tractate Pesachim, fol. 49, col. 2, concerning the Idiots, that is, Jews who have studied nothing: שקץ רמש ותועב ונשותיהן שרץ ועל בנותיהן הוא: אומר ארור שוכב עם כל בהמה: that is, they are a Schékez, that is, an abomination, and their wives are vermin; and of their daughters it is also said (Deut 27:21): "Cursed be he who lies with any beast." But the majority of Jews are Idiots and have not studied, and so they are also, for the most part, to be regarded as abominations for this reason.

Thirty-eighth, they sometimes refer to us in their books with the word אחרים acherim, that is, "others," and this occurs when they are reluctant to make explicit mention of Christians. An example of this is found in a small book printed in Amsterdam in the year 439 according to the Jewish reckoning, that is, in the year 1679 according to our reckoning, which is called Sepher

Minhágim, according to which, fol. 10. col. 1., the moon is addressed as follows at each new moon: ברוך יוצריך ברוך עוסייך ברוך קוניך ברוך בוראיך כשם שאני מרקד : 'blessed be He who formed you, blessed be He who made you, blessed be He who possesses you, blessed be He who created you. Just as I leap toward you and cannot reach you, so when acherím, that is, others, leap toward me, they shall not be able to reach me. ע"כ." In this same matter, the word acherím is also found in the Amsterdam Talmud in Maffébeth Sophérím fol. 14. col. 2., at the beginning of the twentieth chapter; but in many prayer books, the phrase כל אייבי col ojeβái, that is, "all my enemies," stands in its place, by which Christians are meant, since they regard them as their enemies, as has been demonstrated above in Chapter 15. And in the Talmudic tractate Sanhédrin, fol. 52. col. 2., the following is taught concerning the words of Lev 20:10, "A man (or: one) who commits adultery with another man's wife, who commits adultery with his neighbor's wife, shall surely be put to death": תנו רבנן איש : פרט לקטן : אשר ינאף את אשת איש פרט לאשת קטן אשת רעהו פרט לאשת אחרים : that is, "Our rabbis teach: (by the word) 'a man,' the minor is excluded; (and by the words) 'who commits adultery with another man's wife,' the wife of a minor is excluded; (by the words) 'with his neighbor's wife,' the wife of the acherím, that is, of the others, is excluded." Who, however, is to be understood by acherím or "the others" is indicated by Rabbi Solomon Jarchi in his commentary thereon, when he explains it by the word Gojim, that is, Gentiles or Christians; and the aforementioned Talmudic words convey the meaning that a Jew who lies with a Christian woman is not guilty of a capital offense and that this is not to be regarded as adultery, since Christians have no marriage, as is taught in Rabbi Solomon's commentary and in the Tosephoth thereon, a matter which has already been treated above on p. 432.

In addition to the above, they also commonly call a Christian קֶזֶן צוֹרֵר יְהוּדִים Haman Zörer Jebüdim, that is, Haman the enemy of the Jews, as I myself have heard from them. Therefore the converted Dieterich Schwab writes in his Jüdischer Deckmantel, in the 8th chapter of the first part, p. 67, as follows: They also call a Christian, when they know that he is not well-disposed toward them, or is their enemy, רֹשֶׁע rösche, that is, a villain (or godless person), and curse him with these words: א פְּגִיֶּרָה pegira, that is, a pestilence, would be quite יָפֶה jöfa, that is, fitting or beautiful upon him; they also call him Haman, meaning thereby that the Christian ought to be hanged like Haman. Samuel Friedrich Brenz likewise points out the following on this matter in his Jüdischer abgestreifter Schlangenbalg, in the third chapter, p. 12: If the magistrate does not accept the gift (which is offered to him) from the Jew, the Jew says, may חֲלוֹי הַנֶּפֶל Chóli hannöfel, that is, the severe (or falling) sickness, strike you down; or he wishes upon him that he be הרוג bōrug, that is, murdered; or he also says, רשע צורר יהודים Rösche Zörer Jebūdīm, that is, a godless oppressor of the Jews, and wishes that he should be hanged like Haman (of which one may read in Esth 7), and the Jews make very frequent use of this word, calling Christians Haman.

These words of Samuel Friedrich Brentzen, insofar as they concern the name Haman, are confirmed in the book Emek hammélech, fol. 36. col. 1, in the 62nd chapter, under the title Schāar ōlam battōhu, where, under the name of the chief devil Sammaël (which is also applied to Christendom, as will be seen in the immediately following 17th chapter), all Christians are called Haman, and the words there read as follows: יוסף עולה קנאה לנפא על משיח בן יוסף הוא יוסף בעצמו כמו איש צמח שמו הוא דוד בעצמו ויעורר קנאת יי 'צבאות בלבו על איש צר ואויב המן הרע הזה הוא סמאל הרשע נחש ברים עם נוקבא בישא דילה חיויא חותא החופף ומכסה 'בערלתם על ברית קדש בכם ושפחה פי תירוש גבירתה תסת עבד פי ימלה וזה סוד זכור יי יוסף that is: The name יוסף Joseph amounts (in numerical value) to קנאה Kinah (which means zeal, namely 156), so as to point thereby to the Messiah the son of Joseph, who is Joseph himself, just as the man who is called Zemach (that is, Branch), of whom mention is made in Zech 6:12, is David himself. He will arouse in his heart the zeal of the LORD of Hosts against the adversarial and hostile man, the evil Haman, who is the godless Sammaël, the crooked serpent, and against his evil wife, the godless Lilith (or Lilis), who conceal and cover the holy covenant with their foreskin, according to the mystery of the words of Prov 30:23: "And a maidservant, when she becomes heir to her mistress" (as also the words of v. 22): "A servant, when he becomes king." And this is the mystery of that which is written in Ps 137:7: "LORD, remember against the children of Edom the day of Jerusalem, those who said: Lay it bare, lay it bare (namely the city of Jerusalem) to its very foundation." The meaning of these words consists in this: that the Messiah the son of Joseph, who is to be the first Messiah, will, out of a divine zeal against the Edomites, that is, the Christians, who have done them every manner of harm and have persecuted them like Haman, wage a mighty war, concerning which war a more detailed account is to be found in the 14th chapter of the second part.

In particular, the high Christian potentates, such as emperors and kings, are reviled and despised by the malicious Jews, and are called by them:

First, מים זדונים Májim Sedónim, that is, "proud waters," as is found in the Selichôth (or Selichos) printed at Prague, fol. 11, col. 2, in the prayer which begins Jisraël ammechá techinna órechim, under the title Le jóm schéni, where they pray as follows: חסדך יקדמנו אלהי עליונים ותחתונים טרם ישטפנו המים הזדונים, that is:

"Let Thy mercy, O Thou God of those above and those below, come before us, before the proud waters overwhelm us." These words are expounded in the commentary thereon as follows: קדם ישטפנו מלכי האומות דמשילו לגלי ימא ההולכים בודון ובכעס, that is: "Before the kings of the nations overwhelm us, who are compared to the waves of the sea, going about in pride and anger." And this accords with what is written in Bammidbar rabba, fol. 173, col. 2, in the second Parascha, concerning the words of Song 8:7, "Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods overflow it," where one reads: 'אין מים רבים אלא עכ"ם שנ' that is: "The many waters signify nothing other than the idolaters, as it is said (Isa 17:12): 'Woe to the multitude of many peoples!' ע"כ. (And the words:) 'neither can the floods overflow it' signify their kings and princes."

Second, they are called מלכי עולה Málke ávla, that is, kings of perversity (or unrighteousness), and this appears in the aforementioned Selichôth, fol. 56. col. 2., in a prayer that begins אַיך אַל לַצַּחַת Ech úchal lavó adécha, where the words read as follows: איך טורפה מלכות עט דל עולם סגולה וארכה מלוכה למלכי עולה והמה יושבים לבטח וגילה ואני בתוך הגולה וגו' איך מחצני אלהי ומכאובי לא חבש ומעיל תפארתִי לבגיי אדום הולבש והמה נופת אוכלים וחלב ודבש ואני בעשב כעשב איבש That is: How has the royal government been torn away from the realm of the people of the inheritance, and the rule of the kings of perversity endures so long, and they dwell in security and in joy; but I am in the midst of the exilio, or misery; ע"כ. How has my God wounded me, and not bound up my pain: the children of Edom (that is, the Christians) are clothed with the mantle of my glory (that is, they hold the dominion which the Israelites possessed and which rightfully belonged to them). They eat honeycomb, milk, and honey, but I wither like grass.

In the booklet Othiôth (or Otios) Rabbi Akkiva, at fol. 9, column. 2. 3., the high rulers of Christendom are compared to wild beasts, and the following is written there: העולם הזה נמשל כלילה ומלכי אומות העולם משולים כחיות שהם רומשים ביער בתוך הלילה. וכיון שעלה עמוד השחר חוזרים כשם שכל החיות חוזרות ליערם ולמקומם כך כל מלכי הארץ וחזוני תבל כיון שבא עליהם ע"הב ומלכות משיח חוזרים ליערם ולמקומם: ויורידן מגדולתם ושבים אל עפרם ואינן באין לעולם הבא: שנ' והיה ה' למלך על כל הארץ: that is, This world is compared to the night, but the kings of the nations of the world are like wild beasts, which roam about in the forest in the middle of the night; but as soon as the dawn breaks, they go back again, just as all wild beasts return to their forest and to their place. So it is with all the kings of the earth and the princes of the world: when the world to come and the kingdom of the Messiah comes upon them, they go back into their forest and into their place, and lose their glory, and are turned to dust again; nor do they enter into eternal life, as it is said (Zech 14:9): And the Lord shall be King over all the earth.

In the book Zerôr hammôr, at fol. 125, col. 2, in the Parascha Pinchas, Christian kings are called goats, and there, concerning the word "he-goat" which is mentioned in Num 29:16, 19, 22, 25, &c., it is written that these same goats signify the kingdoms (or monarchies), and the following passage continues: וכן רמז חזיר לעשו מלך אדום שהוא איש שער ושעירים ירקדו שם והם עתידים : that is, thus the goat also carries a meaning referring to Esau, the Edomite (that is, Christian) king, who is an Isch saïr, that is, a devil-man (just as in Isa 13:21 the word Seïrim means devils, where it is said:) "And the devils shall leap (or spring, as it is rendered in the Judeo-German Hebrew translation) there." These same (kings), however, will in the future be rooted out from the world, because they derive from the power of the ancient serpent, of which (Gen 3:14) it is written: "Upon thy belly shalt thou go." The Emperor Constantine the Great is called, in the book Májene jeschúa, fol. 73, col. 4, in the eleventh Májan, in the fifth Tamar, רשע raschú or roscho, that is, a godless man; in the same manner the Emperor Henry the Third is also named in the old Nizzáchon, p. 41. In the Prague Machsor, however, in the first part, fol. 132, col. 1, in the prayer which begins: וגו' Elle eskerá, venáfshi &c., a certain Roman emperor is called בליעל עובד אלילים Beliáal óved Elilím, that is, an idolatrous scoundrel, and in col. 2 he is called בליעל Beliáal, that is, a scoundrel, three more times.

Since high potentates are mentioned here, we also want to take the occasion to examine what is supposed to be the reason that the Jews currently have no government and are subject to Christians and other peoples. On this matter it is written in the book Avodáth (or Avódas) bakkódesch, in the Third Part, which is called Chélek battachlith (or battáchlis), cap. 1. fol. 57. col. 3., on the words of Prov 30:21-23: "For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear: a servant when he reigneth, and a fool when he is filled with meat; a hateful woman when she is married, and a handmaid that is heir to her mistress"; thus written: ורמז על כח האומות הידוע כי בזמן שישראל עושין רצון אביהם שבשמים הם המלכים בארץ והכח ההוא לפניהם כעבד ואז כל האומות נכנעים אליהם כי כן היתה הכוונה בבריאה וזהו הם מלכים למעלה ולמטה וכשאין עושין רצון אביהם הנה הם נופלים ומשתעבדים לפני הכח ההוא והאומות הבאות מכחו שולטות בהם ונוטל חוסן השיפע הראוי לבא אליהם הרי הוא מלך והוא הנבל כי ישבע לחם והוא ותתן הידועה שמשעבדת הדרג' ראוי לכא אליהם הרי הוא מלך והוא הנבל כי ישבע לחם והוא ותתן הידועה שחיתה שפחה ועתה היא השפחה שיורשת גברתה. That is: hereby is indicated the well-known power of the nations (namely the spirits ruling over them, of which more will be treated in detail below in the 18th chapter of this first part): for when the Israelites do the will of their Father in heaven, they are the kings upon the earth, and that same power (of the nations) is before them like a servant; at that time all peoples are likewise subjected to them, inasmuch as this was the purpose of creation (that all peoples were to be subordinate to the Israelites), and they rule above (over the spirits) and below (over all men). But when they do not do the will of their Father, then they fall and are subjected to that same power, and those peoples who derive from that power rule over them, and that power takes away the influence which ought rightly to have come upon them: and behold, that same power rules and is the fool when it is filled with bread; its well-known wife, however, who was hated, is married, and she is the handmaid who becomes heir to her mistress. (Namely, this fool is to be understood as the chief devil Sammael, who in the book Emek hammelech fol. 130 col. 2, in the 11th chapter, under the title Scháar réscha disêr anpin, is called כסיל Kešîl, that is, a fool.)

In the book Maarébeth ba'elabúth, however, at fol. 134 on the second side, the subject treated is the impurity which the chief devil Sammaël is said to have caused to fall upon Eve when he is supposed to have lain with her, and after which the following is read: והזהמא ההיא יעלו האומות לגדולה כי השרים הממונים עליהם מתפרנסים ממנה : ובהיות מעלה לאומות מצד הזהמא אז יהודים ישראל משועבדים (That is: from that same impurity the nations rise to glory, for the princes who are set over them are nourished by it. Now when the nations are exalted by reason of the impurity, then the Israelites are humbled on account of their transgressions and their impurity, and are driven together with their mother out of their fatherland into the power of the nations.)

To conclude this chapter, we will now also consider how those who have left the Jewish religion and adopted the Christian faith are called by the Jews in particular. It is to be known that they call such persons, in the first place, משומדים Meschummadim (or Meschummódim), that is, "the destroyed," and a single individual משומד Meschúmmad, that is, "a destroyed one." An account of the origin of this word has been given above on pages 134 and 537, at the beginning of the twelfth chapter. In the book Bëer haggôla, fol. 44 col. 2, the following is written on this subject: המשומד הוא שעזב את אלהיו ועובד אלהי נכר ולשון משומד הוא בא על מי שהיה תחלה עובד הש"י ואחר כך נשתמד וזה לשון משומד שהיה : מתחלה בנוי ואחר כך נשתמד לעבודת אלילים : that is, a Meschúmmad is one who forsakes his God and serves a foreign god, and the name Meschúmmad is given to one who initially served the blessed God but afterward fell away; and thus the word Meschúmmad signifies one who was initially built up (in the Jewish religion) but afterward fell away (or was destroyed or ruined). Rabbi Elias, however, teaches in his Tischbi, fol. 92 col. 1, under the root word Schamád, that the word Meschúmmad derives from Schemád, that is, from persecution, and expresses himself on this matter as follows: הלשון נגזר מן להשמיד להרוג: ולאבד: וזמה אנחנו קורין ליהודי הממיר דתו משומד לפי שמהם המומרים התחילו בשעת השמד וקראו להן משומדים רוצה לומר בשעת השמד ואף עתה שהם ממירים הדת ברצונם that is: this word is derived from (what is written in Esth 7:4) lebaschmid, that is, to destroy; leharóg, to kill; and uleabbéd, and to bring to ruin. Therefore we call a Jew who changes his faith a Meschúmmad (that is, a destroyed one, from the preceding word baschmid, which means to destroy), because properly speaking the apostates began during the time of the Schemád, that is, persecution (or destruction). They (the apostates) were called Meschummadim (or Meschummódim), which means as much as: they changed (their religion) during the time of the Schemád or persecution (by which it is indicated that they came to be called Meschummadim from Schemád, that is, from persecution or destruction). Now, even when they change their religion voluntarily, this name remains with them. These are the words of Rabbi Elias. In the little book called Sepher amaná, however, which was written by a converted Jew, the matter is explained differently and better, when in the ninth chapter, p. 115, the following is written: הרי דבר זה מונע וגורם שאין היהודים מאמינים במשיח הנשלח לפי שהיהודים קוראים לאותו איש או אשה המאמינים במשיח ומקבלין עליהם בריתו ותורתו משומד או משומדת כלומר אין לאותו איש חלק בעולם הבא that is: behold, this hinders and causes it that the Jews do not believe in the sent Messiah, because the Jews call that man, or that woman, who believes in the Messiah and accepts his covenant and his law, (the man) a Meschúmmad, and (the woman) a Meschummédeth (or Meschummédes), as if they wished to say that such a person has no share in eternal life, and his soul has no atonement in all eternity, etc.

That converted Jews are called Meschummadim is confirmed in the old Nizzáchon, p. 4, on the words of Gen 1:1, "In the beginning God (Elohim) created," where the following is read: אם יאמרו המשומדים ר"ל היהודים הנטבלים: למה כתוב אלהים לשון רבים היה לו לכתוב אלוה לשון יחיד 'אלא וודאי שנים הם אב ובן וגו' that is: When the Meschummadim, that is, the baptized Jews, ask why Elohim is written, which is the pluralis numeri, or plural number, whereas Eloah ought to have been written, which is the singularis numerus, or singular number, the answer is that there are certainly two: the Father and the Son, etc. The name Meschúmmad is also found in Rabbi Lipmann's Sépher Nizzáchon, no. 346, p. 191, where he writes of a convert as follows: בתוך כך בא עלינו האפיקורוס פסח: המשומד הנקרא פיטר הדרש עלינו שקרים: ולא שת אל לבו שאחריתו עדי אובד that is: In the meantime there came against us the limping Epicurean, the Meschúmmad named Peter, and brought forth lies against us; but he did not take it to heart that his end would lead to ruin, that is, that he would go to hell and be damned.

Likewise, in Abarbanel's commentary on Isa, fol. 54, col. 1, and in his book Maschmía jeschúa, fol. 18, col. 4, as well as in the little book Schevet Jebúda, fol. 45, col. 1, and fol. 77, col. 1, a convert is called a Meschúmmad. Rabbi Saadias, however, teaches in his Sépher haëmunóth vehadeóth (or haëmúnos vehadéos), fol. 29, col. 2, that even a person who in a single commandment consistently and deliberately disagrees with others is to be called a Meschúmmad, when he states: הממר הוא מי ששם לעצמו חוק לחלוק על מצוה אחת תמיד וקדמתניו קוראים אותו משומד (that is: A rebellious person is one who has made it his practice, or his rule, to be continually at odds with a single commandment; but our elders call such a person a Meschúmmad). The word Meschúmmad therefore signifies not only one who has entirely abandoned the Jewish religion and adopted another, but also one who is still a Jew yet acts contrary to the Jewish faith in one or more respects, as will be seen in what immediately follows.

Second, they call such persons מומרים Mumárim, that is, "Changed Ones," who have changed in their religion and faith and have fallen away from the faith; a single individual, however, is called מומר Múmar, that is, "a Changed One." For this reason, the converted Samuel Friedrich Brenz is called a Múmar more than a hundred times by the wicked scoundrel Rabbi Salman Zevi in his Jewish Theriac. This word, however, signifies in the Jewish books not only one who has entirely abandoned the Jewish faith and adopted another, but also one who is still a Jew yet acts contrary to the Jewish law in certain matters. Hence it is written in the Talmudic tractate Horajóth (or Horajos), fol. 11, col. 1, as follows: איזהו מומר אכל נבילות וטרפות שקצים ורמשים ושטה יין נסך. רבי יהודה אומר: 'אף לובש כלאים וגו' (that is: Who is a Mumar? One who has eaten of animals that died on their own, and of torn animals, of abominations, and of creeping things, and has drunk libation wine, or pagan wine. Rabbi Jehuda says that one who puts on a garment of linen and wool is also a Múmar.) Likewise, in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 26, col. 2, in the Tosephóth, a Meschúmmad is described in such a manner that it is evident from this that both words carry the same meaning. Concerning the word Múmar, however, more may be read in the Talmudic tractate Chóllin, fol. 4, col. 2, and fol. 5, col. 1.

Third, they are called מלשינים Malschinim, that is, slanderers, and the Jews have a special prayer called ברכת המינים Bircháth (or Birchas) hamminim, that is, the prayer against the heretics, which is directed against apostate Jews as well as all Christians, and which begins as follows: ולמלשינים אל תהי תקוה וכל המינים that is, And the Malschinim, that is, slanderers, shall have no hope (of salvation), and all Minim, that is, heretics (in place of which some copies have זדים Sédim, that is, the arrogant) must perish in an instant, etc. In the old prayer books, however, the word Meschummadim is read in place of Malschinim, as will be reported in greater detail below in the second chapter of the second part; and the converts are called Malschinim, that is, slanderers, for this reason: that they are generally accustomed to revealing the secrets and wicked deeds of the Jews.

As for the names Minim, that is, heretics, Copherim, that is, deniers, and Epicurúsím, that is, Epicureans, mention of which was made in the preceding section, these are applied to all Christians, whether they were born and raised in the Christian religion or converted to it. Converts are also otherwise called Móferim, that is, traitors, though a single individual is called Mófer. But let this suffice on this subject.

Chapter XVII.

In which it is shown how the Jews are accustomed to designating the whole of Christendom.

Just as the Jews give Christians various names, as was indicated in the preceding chapter, so too is Christendom called by them in various ways, and they name it: first, מלכות רומי Malchûth (or Málchus) Rómi, that is, the Roman Empire, or simply רומי Romi, that is, Rome. The name Malchûth Rómi is found in Rabbi David Kimchi's commentary on the words of Joel 3:19, Egypt shall be desolate, and Edom a desolate wilderness, with these words: זכר מצרים ואדום מצרים בעבור הישמעאלים ואדום בעבור מלכות רומי ואלה שתי האומות הנה הגבורת זה ימים רבים ותהייה עד עת הגאולה היא חיותא רביעאה כמראות דניאל וזכר מצרים בעבור ישמעאלים כי אשת ישמעאל היתה מצרית שני ותקה לו אמו אשה מארץ מצרים וכן אמנו הגר המצרית לפיכך יחס האומה הזאת למצרים. וזכר אדום בעבור מלכות רומי וגו' ואמר זה בעבור כי מלכות רומי רובם אדומים ואף על פי שנתערבו בהם עמים רבים כמו שנתערבו (that is, he, the prophet) makes mention of Egypt and Edom; and he mentions Egypt on account of the Ishmaelites (that is, the Turks), and Edom on account of the Roman Empire: and behold, the two peoples (namely the Christians and the Turks) have now held the upper hand for a long time, and will retain it until the time of redemption. They are also the fourth beast in the vision of Daniel (of which mention is made in Dan 7:7). He mentions Egypt on account of the Ishmaelites, for Ishmael's wife was of Egyptian origin, as is said in Gen 21:21: "And his mother took him a wife out of the land of Egypt." Likewise, his mother Hagar was from Egypt (as may be read in Gen 16:3); for this reason he attributed this people to the land of Egypt. He also makes mention of Edom on account of the Roman Empire, etc., and says this because the majority of the Roman Empire are Edomites, even though many peoples have been mingled among them, just as many have also been mingled into the Ishmaelite Empire, yet they are nonetheless called by that name according to the greater part. These are the words of Rabbi David Kimchi. We thus see here clearly that the Roman Empire is called Edom. Since Edom signifies all of Christendom, as is to be found in what immediately follows, it necessarily follows that by the Roman Empire all of Christendom is to be understood: as indeed all Christians are called Romans by the Jews, as was indicated in the preceding Chapter 16, at pages 632 and 633, under the second name they give to Christians.

Since it was mentioned shortly before that the city of Rome is called Romi by the Jews in the Hebrew language, I must here provide some account of this and other names given to it in the Jewish books. The name רומי Romi, for which רומא Roma is also found, is read in many places, as is clearly to be seen from what follows. As to why Rome was so named, it is written in the cited passage from Schir haschirim rábba fol. 254. col. 2. in the Commentario Mattenáth (or Máttenas) Kebúnna as follows: היו קורין אותן שני צריפין חמי בבלון : על שם שלום שלהם קיים על די בלילת מי that is, Those two huts were called Róma Babylon Rom (from רום Rum, which signifies a height, and בלל Balal, that is, to mix), because their Rum or height was made lasting (or durable) through belilath (or belilas) Mophrat, that is, through the mixing of the waters of the Euphrates with other water, and did not again, as before, collapse into a heap; of which mixing more will follow.

Furthermore, it is also called בצרה Bozra, which was the name of the capital city in the land of Edom, as can be seen in Isa 34:6 and in Aben Ezra's commentary thereon, and in Amos 1:12, as well as in Rabbi David Kimchi's commentary on Isa 63:1. That it is called by this name, however, is to be seen in Abarbanel's commentary on Isaiah, fol. 90, col. 3, on the words of cap. 63:1, "Who is this that comes from Edom, with sprinkled (or moistened) garments from Bozra?", where he writes on this passage as follows: בעבור שייעד הנביא הגאולה העתידה כמו שזכר נא להודיע שקודם זה כולו שזכר יהיה חרבן אדום כנוצר והוא כמו שזכרתי למעלה מלכות הנצרים בעלי דת ישו ועל זה נשא הנביא משלו כאלו ראה גבור חיל בא מאדום ושאל הנביא מי הוא זה ואיזה הוא הבא מאדום חמוץ בגדים כלומר שנגדין אדומים : that is, "Since the prophet has promised the future redemption, as has been stated, he now comes to make known that before all of this of which he has spoken, the desolation of Edom must necessarily precede it, that is, as I have reported above, the kingdom of the Christians, who are devoted to the religion of Jesus. For this reason the prophet begins his discourse as though he had seen a valiant hero coming from Edom, and asks: who is this that comes from Edom, sprinkled upon his garments? that is, whose garments are red with the blood of the many slain who were killed in Bozra, that is, in Rome, the capital city of the Edomite kingdom." The same author also writes in his aforementioned commentary on Isaiah, fol. 53, col. 1, on cap. 34:6: בצרה היא הכרך הגדול שברומי : that is, "Bozra is the great city of Rome, or the great city which is in the Roman Empire, for Romi sometimes signifies the Roman Empire." And in his commentary on Jeremiah he teaches at fol. 147, col. 3, on the words of cap. 49:13, "Bozra shall become a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse," in the following manner: בצרה הנזכרת כאן היא רומה. כמו שתרגם יונתן כי בארץ אדום. לא היתה עיר שנקרא בצרה אלא במואב כמו שנוכר למעלה ועל קריות. ועל בצרה על כל

ערי ארץ מואב אבל בארץ אדום לא היתה בצרה אלא רומי שנקראת כן בדברי ישעיה בפרשת that is, : קרבו גוים לשמוע ומדברי ירמיהו כאן וזה להיותה עיר בצורה ומזולת בשמים וגו' (The city) Bozra of which mention is made here is Rome, as Jonathan has interpreted it in his Chaldean translation, for in the land of Edom there was no city called Bozra, but rather in the land of Moab, as the prophet (Jeremiah) said above (in cap. 48:24): Kerioth, Bozra, and over all the cities of the land of Moab. But in the land of Edom there was no Bozra except Rome, which is called by this name in the words of Isaiah, in the Parashah "Come near, ye nations, to hear" (that is, Isa 34:1, 6) and here in the words of Jeremiah in this manner, and indeed for the reason that it is a בצורה עיר Ir bezúra, that is, a fortified city, and rules over the nations. Precisely the same is also to be found in his book Maschmia jeschúa, fol. 17, col. 4, and fol. 32, col. 4, and fol. 59, col. 1.

However, Rabbi David Kimchi does not agree with Abarbanel, who teaches that there was no city in Edom called Bozra; for in Pocokii Notis miscellaneis, at page 335, one reads that in the handwritten copy of Rabbi David Kimchi's commentary on Isa 36:1, the following is written: בצרה היתה עיר גדולה לאדום that is, Bozra was a great city in Edom; therefore he (namely the prophet) called Rome by the name Bozra. Likewise, at page 327 in the aforementioned Notis, one can see that in the said handwritten commentary of Kimchi on Isa 34:1, the following is read: פרשה זו עתידה היא על חרבן רומי ואחר כן זכר תשועת ישראל עד ויהי בארבע עשרה שנה וקרא אותה בצרה כמו שהיתה בצרה that is, this Parashah will yet come to pass in the future (or be fulfilled), and it treats of the destruction of the city of Rome. After this, he (namely the prophet) makes mention of the redemption of Israel up to (the words of chap. 36:1) "And it came to pass in the fourteenth year." He called that city (Rome) Bozra, just as Bozra was a great city in the land of Edom. Moreover, the Roman Empire consists for the most part of Edomites, who have adopted the religion of the Nazarene (that is, of Christ).

Furthermore, it is called כרך גדול שברומי Kerách gadól scheberómi, that is, the great city which is in the Roman Empire, as can be seen in Abarbanel's commentary on Isa 63:6, fol. 90, col. 4, where he writes as follows: רבי ישמעאל אומר שלוש מלחמות של מהומה עתידין בני ישמעאל לעשות באחרית הימים שנ' כי מפני חרבות נדדו אחת בשדה שנ' מפני חרב נטושה ואחת בים שנ' ומפני קשת דרוכה ואחת בברך that is, Rabbi Ishmael says: the children of Ishmael will wage three tumultuous wars in the last days, as it is said (Isa 21:15): For they flee from the sword. The first will be on land, as it is said (ibid.): Before the drawn sword.

The sword. The second will be on the sea, as is also said there: "Before the drawn bow." The third, however, will be in Kerách gadól scheberómi, that is, in the great city which is in the Roman Empire, as is likewise said there: "And before the heavy war"; and from there (namely from Rome) the Messiah, the Son of David, will come forth. She is also called by this name in the Talmudic tractate Pesachim, fol. 118, col. 2. And in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 76, col. 2, in the Parashah Bo el Paróh, one reads: רבי אבא בר כהנא אומר חשך ואפלה שמשו במצרים אבל תהו ובהו לא שמשו בעולם הזה : that is, Rabbi Abba bar Cábana says: Darkness and gloom served in Egypt, but waste and desolation have not served in this world; yet they will serve in Kerách gadól scheberómi, that is, in the great city which is in the Roman Empire, as is said (Isa 34:11): "For He will stretch over it the line of waste and the plumb line of desolation." So too it stands in Abarbanel's book Maschmia jescháa, fol. 17, col. 3, where something is said concerning the great bloodshed that will occur at the time of the Messiah, and it continues: הכר שזה לא בלבד יהיה במקום המלחמה אבל גם : that is, (the prophet) also declares that this will be not only in the place of war, but also in Bozra, which is the great city of the Roman Empire. In the aforementioned Abarbanel's commentary on the prophet Ezekiel, fol. 202, col. 1, she is also called הגדול שבאדום שער, that is, Mount Seir is the great city in Edom which is called Rome. In Echa rábba she is furthermore called, at fol. 303, col. 4, כרך גדול של צור, Kerách gadól schel zor, that is, the great city Zor.

Furthermore, it is called כרכא רבא דעשו Kerákka rábba de-Esau, that is, the great city of Esau; for this reason Rabbi Solomon Jarchi interprets the words of Obad 1:21, "the mountain of Esau," by means of כרכא רבא דעשו Kerákka rábba de-Esau, that is, the great city of Esau, as it indeed stands in Jonathan's Chaldean translation and is repeated in Rabbi David Kimchi's commentary.

It is also called מצריאל Mágdiel, which word is read in Gen 36:43, where it is written: "The chief Magdiel, the chief Iram," concerning which Rabbi Solomon Jarchi reports in his commentary: זה רומי, that is, this is Rome. Rabbi Moses bar Nachman likewise agrees with this in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, where at fol. 32, col. 1, at the end of the Parashah Vajischlach, he expresses himself as follows: מגדאל ורומי שנ 'אלוף מגדאל אלוף עירם, that is, Magdiel is Rome, as it is said: "The chief Magdiel, the chief Iram." Rabbi Bechai likewise teaches this in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 46, col. 2, in the aforementioned Parashah, on the cited words: כאן הוליד, that is, he (namely Moses) has here made mention of the tenth chief, the chief Magdiel, which bears a signification pointing to Rome. And at col. 1 of the same place he writes: מגדיאל זה רומי, that is, Magdiel is Rome. The same is also to be read in Abarbanel's commentary on Isa 35, fol. 54, col. 2.

Beyond the above, she is also called עירם Iram, which name, as has already been indicated, appears in Gen 36:43; and it is taught concerning this in the Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer, in the 38th chapter, that after Jacob and Esau had come to an agreement with one another regarding the inheritance, Esau had departed, and it follows thereupon: ובשכר שפינה את כל כליו בשביל יעקב אחיו נתן that is, And because he (namely Esau) emptied out all his vessels on account of Jacob, He (God) gave him a hundred provinces, as it is said: The prince Magdiel, the prince Iram, that is, Rome.

Furthermore, it is also called הר עשו Har Esau, that is, the Mountain of Esau, or הר שעיר Seir, that is, the Mountain of Seir. Concerning the name Har Esau, one reads in the last verse of the prophet Obadiah: "And saviors shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mountain of Esau" (Obad 1:21); and the Chaldean interpreter Jonathan understands by the Mountain of Esau כרכא דעשו Kerakka de-Esau, that is, the city of Esau; just as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi also explains it in his commentary thereon as כרכא רבא דעשו Kerakka rabba de-Esau, that is, the great city of Esau, by which the city of Rome is understood, as has been indicated shortly before. So too in Abarbanel's commentary on Isa 35, fol. 53, col. 4, one reads: הר עשו הוא רומי, that is, the Mountain of Esau signifies Rome. As for the name Har Seir, the aforementioned Abarbanel writes about it in his commentary on Ezek 35, fol. 202, col. 1, as follows: כבר תרגם יונתן שהר שעיר רומי, that is, Jonathan has already rendered it in his Chaldean translation that Har Seir, that is, the Mountain of Seir, is the great city in Edom which is called Rome. This is also to be found in his book Maschmia jeschua, fol. 43, col. 4, in precisely the same words, except that in place of רומי Romi, Rome, one reads there רומי הרשעה Romi barescha'a, that is, godless Rome. And in his commentary on Obadiah, fol. 256, col. 4, he teaches the following: יונתן תרגם כל הר שעיר הכתוב בנבואות כרכא רבא דעשו והוא האמת בלי ספק שהיא רומי שרתי המדינות אשר היא ביד בני בני אדום היוצאים מהר שעיר, that is, Jonathan has everywhere rendered the words "Mountain of Seir," wherever they stand written in the prophecies, by the words "the great city of Esau," and it is without doubt true that this is Rome, the princess of the provinces, which is in the power of the children of Edom (that is, of the Christians), who are descended from the seed of Esau.

Furthermore, it is also called Nineveh, and it stands in the little book called Sepher Serubábel that Serubábel spoke thus: וַתִּשְׁאַנִּי רוּחַ בֵּין הַשָּׁמַיִם וּבֵין הָאָרֶץ : וַתְּבִיאֵנִי בְּנִינָה עִיר הַדָּמִים וְגו': נֶאֱשָׂא לְאִישׁ מִה שֵׁם הַמָּקוֹם הַזֶּה וַיֹּאמֶר אֵלַי זֹאת הִיא רוֹמָא רַבְתָּא : that is, "And a wind carried me away between heaven and earth, and brought me to Nineveh, the city of blood, etc. And I asked the man (namely the angel Metátron, who spoke with me) what this place was called; and he said to me: this is great Rome." In what follows thereafter, one reads further thus: הַכְּרֵךְ הַזֶּה הוּא נִינְוָה עִיר הַדָּמִים וְהִיא רוֹמָה רַבְתָּא : that is, "This city is Nineveh, the city of blood, and it is great Rome."

Finally, it is also called הרשעה רומי Romi bareschda, that is, godless Rome, or רומי חייבת Romi chajéveth, that is, wicked Rome. The name Romi bareschda is found in the book Pesikta rabbetha (or rabbesa) fol. 63. col. 1., where, concerning the words of Isa 61:10: שׁוֹשׁ אֶשְׂשׂוּ Sus asís, that is, "I will rejoicing rejoice," that is, "I will greatly rejoice," the following is written: שׁוֹשׁ בְּיָמֹת הַמָּשִׁיחַ אֶשְׂשׂוּ : בְּמַפְלֵתָהּ שֶׁל רוֹמֵי הָרָשָׁעָה, that is, (the word) Sus (means, I will rejoice) in the days of the Messiah, (but the word asís means) I will rejoice over the fall of Romi bareschda, that is, of godless Rome. And in the book Cad bakkemách, concerning the words of Isa 33:23, "Your ropes have become slack," the following is read: זֶה נֶאֱמָר עַל רוֹמֵי הָרָשָׁעָה, that is, "This is said of godless Rome." It is likewise called by this name in the book Májene jeschúa fol. 52. col. 3., in the ninth Máján, in the second Támár, and in the Prague Machsor, in the first part fol. 34. col. 2., in the commentary; but in the book Emek hammelech it is called fol. 49. col. 4. three times, and fol. 40. col. 1. four times גַּפ־יָם הַרְשָׁעָה, "godless Gapim," and the word גַּפ־יָם Gapim signifies, through the transposition of letters according to the alphabet Athbasch already mentioned several times, as much as רומי Romi, that is, Rome. As for the name Rómi chajéveth, it appears in the Talmudic tractate Avóda sára, fol. 2. col. 2., where, concerning the words of Dan 7:23, "It shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces," the following is stated: אָמַר רַבִּי יוֹחָנָן ז"ל : רוֹמֵי הַיָּבֵת שְׁטַבְרָהּ יֵצֵא בְּכָל הָעוֹלָם, that is, "This is wicked Rome, whose fame goes throughout the whole world." And Rabbi Salomon Jarchi writes in his commentary on this passage: רומי חייבת רומי הרשעה תרגומו של רשעה חייבת, that is, Romi chajéveth means godless Rome, for in the Chaldean language chajéveth means godless. In the book Maschmia jeschúa, at fol. 82. col. 4., the words of the Chaldean translation of Ps 108:11 are cited, where Rome is called in Chaldean כְּרַכָּא דֶּר־רֹמִי Kerákka de-Rómi raschia, that is, "the godless city of Rome"; however, in the great Basel Bible, the word תְּקִיפָה takkifa, that is, "mighty," has been substituted for רַשְׁעָה raschia, that is, "godless," out of fear of the Christians.

Since mention is made here of the city of Rome, I must also indicate what the Jews teach concerning its origin, and the following is found on this subject in the Talmudic Tractate Sanhedrin fol. 21. col. 2.: א"ר יצחק בשעה שנשא שלמה : את בת פרעה ירד גבריאל ונעץ קנה בים והעלה שירטון ועליו נבנה כרך גדול שברומי that is, Rabbi Isaac said: at that same time in which Solomon had married Pharaoh's daughter, the angel Gabriel came down and drove a reed or cane into the sea, which caused silt to rise up (and so much earth to emerge from the water that a land was formed from it), upon which the great city of Rome was built. This is also to be found in the Talmudic Tractate Schábbath fol. 56. col. 2., where, however, the word Rome is omitted. On this subject, something nearly identical is also written in Schir haschirim rabba fol. 254. col. 2., and the words read as follows: א"ר לוי יום שנתחתן שלמה לבת פרעה נכה ירד מיכאל השר הגדול מן השמים ונעץ קנה גדול בים ועלה לחלוחית מיכן ומיכן ועשו אותו כחורש והוא היה מקומה של רומי. יום שהעמיד ירבעם בן נבט ב' 'עגלי זהב נבנו ב' 'צריפין ברומי והיו בניין להו ואינון נפלין בניין להו ונפלין. הוה תמן גבר סב ושמה אבא קולון אמר לון אי לית אתון מטיין מייא מנהר פרת וגבלין בהדי טינא ובניין להון לית אינון קיימין אמרו ליה מואן עביד כן אמר לון אנא עבד גרמיה שפאי דחמר הוה עליל לקריתא ונפק לקריתא עלל למדינה ונפק למדינה עד זמן דאתא לתמן כיון דמטא לתמן אזל ואמטי מייא מן פרת וגבלין בטינה ובנון יתהון וקמן מן ההיא ענתה הוון אמרין כל מדינה דלית אבא קולון לא תתקרי מדינה והוון קריין ליה רומי that is, Rabbi Levi said: on that same day on which Solomon had taken the daughter of Pharaoh Necho as his wife, Michael, the great Prince, came down from heaven and drove a great reed into the sea, and a moisture (or a moist clay) rose up on all sides along it, so that it became like a forest; and that place was the site of Rome (where this city was subsequently built). On that same day on which Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, erected the two golden calves (mentioned in 1 Kgs 12:28-29), two huts were built in Rome (that is, in that place where the city of Rome was afterwards built), which, however, soon fell down again; and when they were built up again, they collapsed once more in a heap. Now there was an old man there by the name of Abba Kolon, who said to them: if you do not bring water here from the river Euphrates and mix it with this clay, and build them up in such a manner, they will not stand. Then they said to him: who will do this (and bring us water from that river)? He replied: I will do it. He went off accordingly and disguised himself as a wine merchant, and traveled from one city to another and from one region to another, until he arrived there (at the river Euphrates); there he took water from the Euphrates and brought it to them, and they mixed it with the clay and built those huts up again, and they stood firm. From that time on, people were accustomed to say: any land in which Abba Kolon is not present shall not be called a land; and they called that place רומי בבילון Roma Babylon. It is likewise read in the Jerusalem Talmud, in the Tractate Avoda sara, in the first chapter, that on that same day on which Jeroboam erected the two calves, Romulus and Remus came and built two huts in Rome. And in the Midrash Tillim it is written on this subject at fol. 11. col. 1. concerning Ps 10 as follows: חמוס ורומלוס מתה אמם : הזאבה גדמנה והניקתם ועמדו ובנו שני צריפין גדולים ברומי of Remus and Romulus had died, a she-wolf came to them and suckled them, and they set out (after they had grown up) and built two great huts in Rome. In the aforementioned Talmudic Tractate Schabbath, however, only one hut is mentioned at fol. 56. col. 2. We see, therefore, from the foregoing that the sin which Solomon committed by taking a heathen wife, as well as the idolatry instituted by Jeroboam, are supposed, according to Jewish teaching, to have been the cause of Rome being built. We must, however, return again to the names of Christendom.

Second, Christendom is called מלכות רביעית Malchuth reviiith (or Malchus reviiis), that is, the fourth kingdom; hence in the book Nezach Jisraël, fol. 59. col. 2., in the 52nd chapter, one reads as follows: הרי ראה דניאל מלכות בבל של : זהב מלכות מדי כסף מלכות יון נחושת וראה מלכות רביעית פרזלא that is: Behold, Daniel saw the Babylonian kingdom of gold, the Median kingdom of silver, the Greek kingdom of bronze, but the Malchúth revíith, or fourth kingdom, he saw as iron. And so it is likewise called in the same place at fol. 26. col. 1., at the beginning of the sixteenth chapter. And in the 25th chapter, fol. 38. col. 3., it is stated: מלכות רביעית היא מלכות אדום, that is: The fourth kingdom is the Edomite kingdom. On this matter one may also consult Bechai's commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 46. col. 2., in the Parascha Vajischlach, and in the book Nes Mizva, which is printed at the back of the book Or chádasc, fol. 56. column. 2.; and this is found frequently in the Jalkut Schimóni on the five books of Moses, fol. 144. lumna 4. and fol. 145. column 1. numero 536.

Therefore, their present-day exilium or misery is also called גלות רביעית Galúth revíith (or Gólus revíis), that is, the fourth misery (or the fourth captivity), as can be seen in the small Jalkut Rubéni, where under numero 87, under the title Málach, the following is written from the book Pelia: המלחמה בגלות רביעית עם : סמאל היא עשו ותהיה המלחמה קשה ועזה כענין תמחה את זכר עמלק, that is: The war in the Galúth revíith, that is, in the fourth misery, will be waged against Sammaël, that is, against Esau (meaning Christendom), and it will be severe and mighty, since it is commanded (Deut 25:19): You shall blot out the memory of Amalek. And more can be found in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 44, col. 1, in the Parascha Vajischlach, as well as in Rabbi Menáchem of Rekanat's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 137, col. 3, in the Parascha Schemini.

For this reason, Christendom is also called מלכות גלות רביעית Malchúth galúth revíith (or Málchus gólus revíis), that is, the kingdom of the fourth misery, as can be read in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol.

132, col. 2, in the aforementioned Parascha Schemini, where the words concerning the categories of animals mentioned in Lev 11:4-7 read as follows: דרשו רז"ל את הגמל זו מלכות בבל ות' את השפן זו יון ות' את הארנבת זו מדי ות' זאת החזיר that is: Our rabbis, of blessed memory, have interpreted it thus: the camel signifies the Babylonian kingdom, etc.; the rock badger, the Greek, etc.; and the hare, the Median, etc.; but the pig signifies the kingdom of the Galúth revíth, that is, of the fourth misery.

Third, it is called מלכות כותים Malchúth Cutbíim (or Málchus Cúsbim), that is, the Kingdom of the Cutheans, because they also call all Christians Cutbeans, as was demonstrated in the preceding Chapter 16, p. 63, under the third name they give us. This is found in Benjamin Musaphja's Lexicon, which is called Musaph Aruch, under the word קסלו פנוס Kessilophanos, which means a large lantern, with these words: שלחה מלכות כותיים אצל רבותינו שגרו לנו קסלופנוס אחד אמרו כמה נרות כמה פנסין יש מאירין למלכות רומי שאין מבקשין אלא שמאיר להם פנים בתורה that is: The Cuthean Kingdom once sent word to our Rabbis: send us a large lantern (that is, a learned man who might give light in the Law); whereupon they said, how many lights and how many torches give light to the Roman Kingdom; since they desire only one who might enlighten them in the Law, send them Rabbi Meir. The very same is also to be found in Medrasch Kobleth, Fol. 313. col. 2., though with some variation. And in Schir haschirim rabba, at fol. 260. col. 1., on the words of Song 2:11, "The winter is past," it is written thus: אמר רבי עזריה כי הנה הסתו עבר זו מלכות כותיים that is: Rabbi Asarja has said, the words "for behold, the winter is past" signify the Kingdom of the Cutheans, which with its lies leads the world astray and causes it to err. And shortly thereafter it continues on the words of v. 12, "The time of pruning (namely of the vines) has come": זמנא של ישראל להגאל הגיע זמנא של ערלה להזמר הגיע זמנא של מלכות that is: The time for Israel to be redeemed has drawn near; the time for the foreskin to be cut off has come; the time for the Kingdom of the Cutheans to come to an end has drawn near, ע"כ.

Fourth, it is called מלכות עשו Malchuth (oder Malchus) Esav, that is, the kingdom of Esau, or the Esauite kingdom, or simply עשו Esav, that is, Esau, or הרשע Esav harascha (oder baroscho), that is, the godless Esau. The name Malchuth Esav appears in the book Majene jeschua fol. 72. col. 2., where Abarbanel writes that Mattathias freed the Jews from the yoke of Antiochus, and what follows thereafter reads: ובימים אחרים נשבר מלכותם לא כה ולא במלחמה של אומות אחרות רק מהם אשר קנאו אריסטובלוס והורקנוס על המלוכה זה לזה ובא הרשע that is, But some time thereafter their kingdom (namely that of the Jews) was broken: not by force, nor by the war of another people; but by themselves, because Aristobulus and Hyrcanus had striven against one another over the kingdom; and the despised one, the Malchuth Esav, that is, the kingdom of Esau, had risen up in its place, as (Obad 1:2, concerning Edom) it is said: You are greatly despised; for the Romans took the kingdom from the Greeks. In Rabbi Bahya's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 46. col. 2. in the Parashah Vayishlach, on the words of Prov 20:21, "An inheritance gained hastily at the beginning will not be blessed in the end," it is written thus: זו מלכות עשו שקדמה בבילה קדם מלכות ישראל ואחריתה לא תבורך that is, This is the Malchuth Esav, or the kingdom of Esau, which came swiftly before the Israelite kingdom; but its end will not be blessed. And in the Midrash Tillim on Ps 121, fol. 53. col. 1. one reads: משישישענו ממלכות עשו שוב אין אנו יורדין עוד לשעבוד מלכות that is, When He (namely God) will redeem us from the Malchuth Esav, that is, the kingdom of Esau, we will fall into the servitude of no kingdom anymore.

The name Esau is found in the Midrash Megilla, fol. 341, col. 3, with these words: אמרה כנסת ישראל לפני הקב"ה רב"שע ראית שעשו בא ועתיד להחרב את בית המקדש ומגלה את ישראל מארצם וגוי that is: the Israelite congregation has said before the holy blessed God, "O Lord of the world! You have seen that Esau will come and destroy the Temple and lead the Israelites from their land into captivity," ע"כ. And in the book Sera Abraham it is written, fol. 24, col. 2, g.: זהב וכסף ונחשת ד. ו. קא על שלשה מלכויות ונחך קא על עשו שהוא מלך רביעיה that is: the gold, silver, and bronze (mentioned in Dan 2:32) signify three kingdoms, but the iron (mentioned in v. 33) signifies Esau, who is the fourth kingdom. Likewise, in the book Toledoth Yitzhak, fol. 36, col. 1, one reads: עשו הוא האויב הגדול התמידי לכל ישראל עד המשיח that is: Esau is the great, perpetual enemy of all Israelites until the Messiah. Similarly, in the book Kad ha-Kemach, fol. 22, col. 3, it is written concerning the Angel of Death, the chief devil Samael: הוא סמא הסינבי המזל והרס והחורב והמלחמות והמכות והפצעים והמריבות והפרוד והכלל נפש לגלגל מארים וכבר נתנו זל בחלקו מן האומות עשו כי הוא חורש וחורב המלחמות ובחלקו עוד השדים הנקראים מזיקים בלשון חכמים ושעירים בלשון תורה כי כן יקרא הוא ואומתו שער that is: he is the cause of the stars of desolation and of bloodshed, of the sword, of wars, of blows, of wounds, of quarrels, and of division; indeed, he is wholly and entirely the soul of the sphere or orb of Mars. Our sages of blessed memory have also already assigned to him, from among the nations, Esau as his portion, since the latter inherits the sword and wars. Likewise belonging to his portion are the devils, who in the language of our sages are called Mafsikim, that is, injurers, but in the language of the Law are called Seirim; for thus he and his people (namely, Christendom) are called שער Seir, that is, a devil (or goat). This same thing is also to be found in Rabbi Moses bar

Nachman's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 91, col. 3, in the Parascha Achare moth.

The name עשו הרשע Esav harascha, that is, the godless Esau, appears in Medrasch Tillim, fol. 10. col. 1., where, concerning the words of Ps 9:6, "You destroy the wicked," it is written thus: עשו הרשע. שנאמר וקראו להם גבול רשעה, that is, this signifies Esav harascha, that is, the godless Esau, as it is said (Mal 1:4): "They shall be called the borders of wickedness." And at fol. 53. col. 1., concerning Ps 120, the following is read: וכי יש אדם שונא שלום עשו שונא שלום וכן הוא אומר ונתתי שלום בארץ אימתי יהיה כן השבתי חיה רעה מן הארץ ואין חיה שלום וכן הוא אומר רעה, אלא חזיר שנ' יכרסמנה חזיר מעיר זה עשו הרשע hates peace: Esau hates peace. Thus He says (namely God, Lev 26:6) also: "I will give peace in the land." When will this come to pass? (When that which immediately follows shall be fulfilled:)" "I will remove the evil beast from your land." The evil beast, however, signifies nothing other than the swine, as it is said (Ps 80:14): "The wild boar has rooted it up" (namely the vine). This is the godless Esau. In the Medrasch Ruth, at fol. 278. col. 1., concerning the words of Prov 21:8, "The way of man is wholly perverse and strange," it is likewise written: זה, עשו הרשע שהוא מתהפך ובה על ישראל בגזירות (of persecution). Thus also the Roman Empire is called Esav harascha, that is, the godless Esau, in Medrasch Tillim, fol. 11. col. 1., concerning Ps 10. Beyond this, Rabbi Mosche de Mircado writes in his commentary on the Psalms, concerning the words of Ps 10:2, "In pride the wicked persecutes the poor," as follows: ובגאווה ובזו יתדוף הרשע את העני והוא ישראל ועשו הרשע וגו' that is, in arrogance and contempt the wicked persecutes the poor, and by "the poor" Israel is to be understood, and by "the wicked" the godless Esau. And concerning the following third verse he expresses himself thus: וגזול ונחל ישראל שהוא עשו הרשע הזכור ברכ וישבח ויהלל אשר נאץ ה' כי כל תועבות ה' הוא עושה ומודה ומברך לאלהיו וזה נאץ ה' לשנא עבודתם that is, the miser who robs Israel, and who is the aforementioned godless Esau, blesses, praises, and extols that which the Lord despises; for he does everything that the Lord abhors, and confesses, praises, and blesses his God; and this the Lord rejects, and He hates their worship.

Because Christendom is called the kingdom of Esau, or Esau, or the godless Esau, they also call their present exilium or misery גלות Galúth (or Gólus) Efau, that is, the Esavian misery, as can be seen in the small Jalkut Rubéni, numero 11, under the title Gebinnom, where the words read as follows: אבינו ע"ה חזה צופה כל העתיד לבא חזא בני יעקב חוטאים וירשו גיהנם וכשראה יצחק ישראל בגלות עשו שמה: that is, our father Isaac, upon whom be peace, foresaw everything that was to come to pass in the future, and saw that the children of Jacob would sin and inherit hell. But when Isaac saw the Israelites in the Galuth Efa, or Esavian misery, he rejoiced and said: the misery atones for sin, עֲרָ. The like can also be found in the aforementioned Jalkut, num. 7, under the title Olam ve'olam habbá.

Since the Jewish misery is mentioned here, I must also indicate what causes they assign for writing about it, and several of these are found. In the Jalkut chadash it stands at fol. 84. col. 2. numero 16. that the Jews had to come into misery under the descendants of Esau because Jacob said to Esau (as can be seen in Gen 22:4), "Your servant Jacob"; and the following is written there concerning this: כְּשֶׁאָמַר יַעֲקֹב לַעֲשׂו עַבְדְּךָ יַעֲקֹב אָמַר הַקִּבִּי לֹא דִיּוֹן שְׁעִשִּׂית עִצְמוֹן קֹדֶשׁ חוֹל אֵלָּא אֲנִי אָמַרְתִּי וְרַב יַעֲבֹד צִעִיר אַתָּה אֹמֵר עַבְדְּךָ יַעֲקֹב חַיִּיךָ כְּדִבְרִיךָ יִהְיֶה הוּא יִמְשֹׁל בְּךָ בַּעַד זֶה וְאַתָּה תִּמְשֹׁל בּוֹ לְעוֹלָם הַבָּא that is, when Jacob had said to Esau, "Your servant Jacob," the holy and blessed God spoke (to him): Is it not enough for you that you, who are holy, have made yourself unholy? I have said, "The greater shall serve the lesser" (as can be read in Gen 25:23), and you say (to Esau), "Your servant Jacob." I swear by your life that it shall go according to your words: he will rule over you in this world, but you will have dominion over him in the world to come.

In the following numero 19. another cause is indicated, namely that Jacob dealt deceitfully with Esau, and the words read as follows: כָּמָה יֵשׁ לוֹ לְאָדָם לַיִלֶךְ בְּדֶרֶךְ יִשְׂרָאֵל שֶׁהָרִי יַעֲקֹב עָ"י שֶׁנִּטַּל הַבְּכוֹרָה מֵעֲשׂו בְּרֵמָאוֹת לִכְךָ לֹא נִתֵּן רִשׁוֹת לְשׁוֹם אֹמֵה לְהַשְׁתַּעֲבֹד בּוֹרְעוֹ כִּי אִם זֶרְעוֹ שֶׁל עֲשׂו to walk the right path (that is, to act uprightly), for behold, because Jacob took the right of the firstborn from Esau through deceit, no nation was given the power to bring his (namely Jacob's) descendants into servitude, except the seed (or the descendants) of Esau.

In the aforementioned Jalkut chadash, fol. 47, col. 3, numero 19, under the title Galuth, the same is attributed to the selling of Joseph into Egypt, and there one reads as follows: בַּחֲתָא מִכְרֹזָת זִקוּף שֶׁהָיָה י"ב שָׁנִים בְּבֵית הָאֲסוּרִים וּמִנְעוֹ: that is: on account of the sin of the selling of Joseph, who was twelve years in prison, whereby a hundred blessings were withheld from him daily, the punishment has come upon the twelve tribes, that they are in the Edomite misery. But at fol. 49, col. 4, numero 60, under the last-mentioned title, the cause thereof is attributed to the tears shed by Esau, and the following is read there: הַגְלוֹת וְכָל הַצָּרוֹת הֵם: that is: the exile, or misery, and all the plagues, derive from the tears of Esau.

Finally, in the same place, fol. 50. col. 3. 4. numero 79., the following reason is given: because the Jews did not observe the sabbatical years nor the jubilee years. And there the following is written: ישראל גלו לבין האומות בעון שלא שמרו שמיטות ויובלות כי מי שאינו משמר שמיטות ויובלות סופו למכור את-כל אשר לו וכן ישראל 'על ידי שלא שמרו נמכרו לגוים ותו 'אמר לו הקב"ה (למשה) (בעונותיהם אני מוכר ביתי שנ ואיש כי ימכור בית מושב ה"ז ביתו של הקב"ה שהקב"ה אומר וכי תשיג יד גר ותושב זה נבוכד נאצר ותושב זו מלכות מדי ונמכר לגר ותושב זה יון או לעקר וגו' זו מלכות אדום וכל וזה בשביל שחללו את השביעית לכן אמר הקב"ה למשה רצונך שלא יגלו הזהירם על השמיטות ויובלות: that is, the Israelites fell into misery among the nations on account of the sin of not having observed the sabbatical and jubilee years; for whoever does not observe the sabbatical and jubilee years must in the end sell everything he has. Thus the Israelites likewise, because they did not observe them, were sold among the heathens, etc. The holy and blessed God said to him (namely to Moses): on account of their sins I am selling my house, as it is said (Lev 25:29): "When a man sells a dwelling house" - this is the house of the holy and blessed God, for God says (v. 47 of the said 25th chapter): "If the hand of a stranger has obtained something" (or acquired something), this signifies Nebuchadnezzar; "or of a sojourner," this signifies the Median kingdom; "and he is sold to the stranger or sojourner," this signifies the Greek kingdom; "or to a native" (or a son of the land), this signifies the Edomite kingdom; and all of this came to pass because they profaned the sabbatical years. Therefore God said to Moses: if you wish that they not go into misery, warn them to observe the sabbatical and jubilee years.

The reason why the Jews have been in misery for so long is addressed in the aforementioned Jalkut chadasch, fol. 49. col. 4 num. 62., under the title Galuth mentioned above, where the following may be read: הק"ב לא גר על ישראל גלות, that is: The holy and blessed God had appointed only one day of exilium, or misery, over Israel; but the reason they remain in it longer is that they do not repent before God. In Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 64, col. 1, in the Parascha Schemoth, it is reported that the Jews' wicked and slanderous tongues are the cause of their not being redeemed, and the words there read as follows: נודע לי דבר שהייתי תמה עליו מפני מה ישראל בגלות יותר משאר אומות, that is: The matter is known to me, over which I have marveled: why the Israelites are in exilium, or misery, more than other peoples. Slander and the evil tongue are among them, and they are not worthy of redemption.

To return to the subject of the kingdom of Esau, it is written in the Sohar, Sulzbach printing, in the 340th col., in the Parascha Toledoth, concerning why Esau rules in the world, and the words there read as follows: הווא יקרא דאוקיר: that is, the honor which he showed his father extended for him all these times that he rules in the world. And there one also reads: רבי ייסא פתח ואמר בן יכבד אב ועבד אדוניו בן דא עשו דלא הוה: ברנש בעלמא דיוקר ליה לאבוי כמה דאוקיר עשו לאבוי וההוא יקרו דאוקיר ליה אשליט ליה בהאי עלמא: that is, Rabbi Jessa began and said (from Mal 1:6): A son shall honor his father, and a servant his master. This son is Esau, for there was no man in the world who honored his father as Esau honored his father. That same honor, moreover, which he showed him, caused him to rule in the world. We must now, however, consider further how the Jews name Christendom.

Fifth, they call it מלכות אדום Malchúth (or Málchus) Edom, that is, the Kingdom of Edom, or the Edomite Kingdom, or ממשלת אדום Memschéleth Edom, that is, the Edomite Dominion; or also simply and plainly אדום Edom. The name Malchúth Edom appears in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 47, col. 5, in the Parashah Vayishlach, with these words: מלכות אדום כמו שעלו שלא כמנהג העולם הוא אדום לאלופים ומאלופים למלכים וממלכים חזרו לאחר לאלופים וחזרו כמבראשונה לאיש רגלי כן תהיה מפלתם כאוכרו ביטם אורידך מאותה מעלה וזה נחמה גדולה לישראל שנראה שאף על פי שהמלכות הרשעה עומדת במעלות עד לשמים אנו מובטחים שיפלו ולא יוכלו קום וירדו דאזשים כמאמרם ז"ל אל תיקרי ראמים אלא רמיים: that is, just as the Malchúth Edom, or Edomite Kingdom, rose contrary to the custom of the world, and from Esau, who is called Edom, there came princes, and from the princes came kings, but the kings thereafter reverted again to princes, and as they were from the beginning, became foot-soldiers again, so shall their fall also be, as it is said (Obad 1:4): Yet I will cast you down from there, from that same height. And this is a great comfort to the Israelites, that we see, although the godless kingdom stands on steps reaching up to heaven, we are nonetheless assured that they (namely the Christians) will fall and will not rise again: There shall the ראמים Reemim, that is, the unicorns, fall (as is to be read in Isa 34:7), as our sages, of blessed memory, have said: read not ראמים Reemim, that is, unicorns, but רומיים Romijim, that is, Romans. These words aim, however, at the complete destruction of Christendom, concerning which a more detailed account is to be found in the 14th chapter of the second part. In the book Schalschéleth hakkabbála, it is reported at fol. 89, col. 2, that the Emperor Justinian had all the laws and statutes which the previous emperors had decreed compiled together, whereupon follows: ונקראים היום בכל מלכות אדום חקות אימפריאל: that is, and these are called to this day throughout the entire Malchúth Edom, or Edomite Kingdom, Leges Imperiales, that is, the laws of the empire. In the book Emek hammelech, it is also written at fol. 20, col. 4, in the 32nd chapter, under the title Scháar olám hattóhu, concerning the words of Prov 30:19, The way of an eagle in the sky, as follows: 'הוא מלכות תקפ' שמלכותו עולה עד לשמים פטא"מ יאף טב"ג כדאמרינן במסכת סנהדרין בא הנשר וכו' 'ואומר שכלכותו עולה עד לשמים פטא"מ יאף טב"ג כדאמרינן במסכת סנהדרין בא הנשר וכו' 'ואומר: that is, this signifies the Malchuth Edom, that is, the Edomite Kingdom (for תקפ Takpi yields, by means of the Athbasch alphabet, as much as אדום Edom), whose kingdom rises up to heaven, and whose emblem is the eagle (for the two words פטאם"יאף טב"ג Pasamig tabag signify, by means of the said Athbasch, וחתמתו נשר vachathimathó Néscher, that is, and its emblem is the eagle), as we say in the (Talmudic) tractate Sanbédrin: the eagle has come, etc. So also says (God in the prophet Obad 1:4): Though he soars aloft like an eagle, I will yet cast him down from there.

Aben Ezra states in his commentary on Gen 27:40 the reason for this name, writing as follows: היו אנשים מתי מספר שהאמינו באיש ששמוהו אלוה כאשר האמינה רומי בימי קוסטנטיין שחדש כל דתו ושם על דגלו צורת האיש ההוא ולא היו בעולם שישמרו התורה החדשה חוץ מאדומים מעטים על כן נקראה רומי מלכות אדום: that is, there were few people who believed in that man who was regarded as a god (that is, Jesus). But when Rome, in the time of Constantine (who renewed, that is, introduced and set in motion the entire religion, and placed the image of that man, that is, of Christ, upon his banners), had come to believe this (and adopted the Christian religion), there had been no one in the world who had kept the new law (of the Gospel) except a few Edomites; therefore Rome (that is, the Roman Empire) is called Malchúth Edom, that is, the Edomite Kingdom. In this way the Roman Empire, and under that name all of Christendom, is called by the same designation in many other places as well, as can be seen in the book Toledóth Jizchak fol. 3. col. 2. in the Parashah Bereschith, and in Rabbi Menáchem of Recanati's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 182. col. 3. in the Parashah Chykkáth, as also in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the said Five Books of Moses, fol. 4. col. 3. in the Parashah Bereschith, and fol. 135. col. 2. in the Parashah Tasríá, and fol. 147. col. 2. in the Parashah Emór, as likewise in the Jalkut chádascch fol. 84. col. 1. numero 11. under the title Jacob.

The name Memschéleth Edom, that is, the Edomite Dominion, is read in Vajíkra rábba, fol. 146. on the second side, in the 13th Parashah, in the commentary Mattenóth Kebúnna, with these words: ראה ממשלת אדום יתירה יותר, משלשתן, that is, he (namely the prophet Daniel) saw the Memschéleth Edom, that is, the Edomite Dominion, as greater than the three remaining kingdoms.

Concerning the name Edom, it stands in the old Nizzachon p. 170, where mention is made of the Christians, written thus: לא נקראו יעקב ולא מבני בניו: that is, they are not called Jacob, nor are they of his children's children, for they are the children of Esau and are called Edom. And in Abarbanel's commentary on Obadiab it may be read at fol. 255. col. 1 that all Christians are called Edom, as was indicated in the preceding chapter 16, p. 642. Likewise, under the fifth name they give to Christians, it was reported in detail from p. 635 to p. 645 that they call us all children of Edom.

In the Sépher Juchafin, at fol. 160. col. 2, mention is made of the sages who were among the Jews, and it stands there: ואחר כן היו בספרד חכמים גדולים חס בארץ that is, after this there were great sages in Spain, as well as in France and Germany, and in the lands of Edom and Ishmael (that is, of Christendom and the Turks). In the book Maschmía jeschúa, Abarbanel writes at fol. 58. col. 4 as follows: ורומי וארצות הנוצרים נקראים עתה אדום that is, Rome and the lands of the Christians are now called Edom. And at fol. 59. col. 1, the same author further remarks on the words of Isa 34:1-2, "Come near, ye nations, etc.": אין ספק אצלי שלא נביא כי אם על האומה הנקראת היום אדום that is, there is no doubt in my mind that he prophesied this of none other than the people which is called Edom in our day, and which signifies the Christians in their entirety; and of them it was said in v. 5: "For my sword is drunk in heaven; behold, it shall come down upon Edom." In the German-Hebrew booklet Masseóth Binjamin, it is likewise read at fol. 45. col. 1 that Rome is the greatest and highest place of all Edom. So too does Rabbi David Kimchi note in his commentary on Joel 3:19: אדום היא מלכות רומי that is, Edom is the Roman Empire. Thus the Roman Empire is also called Edom in many other places, as may be seen in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 36. col. 2 in the Parashah Toledóth; and in Bereschíth rábba fol. 15. col. 2 in the 16th Parashah; and fol. 40. col. 4 and fol. 41. col. 1 in the 43rd Parashah; and fol. 59. col. 1 in the 65th Parashah; and in Schemóth rábba fol. 124. col. 3 in the 35th Parashah; as well as in Vajikra rábba fol. 146. col. 3. 4 in the 13th Parashah; and in the purely Hebrew booklet Masseóth Binjamin, fol. 1. col. 2 and fol. 9. col. 1.

Since the Jews, as mentioned, call Christendom the kingdom of Edom, or simply Edom, they likewise call their present exilium, or misery, or their captivity, גלות אדום Galúth (or Gólus) Edom, as can be seen in the book Zerór hammór fol. 18. col. 3. in the Parashah Lech lechá, where the words read as follows: שלשה מתנות טובות נתן הק"ב לישראל וכולם לא נתנם להם אלא על ידי יסורין תורה וארץ ישראל ועולם הבא ולכן שתק אברהם וקיבל הבשורה וחזר להזכיר כל ארבע גליות ברמז ויהי השמש באה וגלות בבל כרכתיב אוי לנו כי פנה היום ועלטה היה בגלות מדי that is: The holy and blessed God gave the Israelites three good gifts, but He gave them to them through no other means than chastisements; (and those three gifts are:) the Law, the Land of Israel, and the life to come. For this reason Abraham kept silent and accepted the good tidings (which are mentioned in Gen 15:14), and made mention once more, in an allusive manner, of the four exilia or captivities. (And the words in the following v. 17 are:) "Now when the sun had gone down" is to be understood of the Babylonian captivity, as it is written (Jer 6:4): Woe unto us, for the day has declined. (The words) "And it had grown dark" signify the Median captivity. (The words) "Behold, there was a smoking furnace" signify the Greek captivity. (The words) "And a flaming torch" point to Galúth Edom, that is, the Edomite captivity. Something similar is also to be read at fol. 37. col. 3. in the Parashah Vajéze in the aforementioned book Zerór hammôr. And in Abarbanel's commentary on Obadiah, it is taught at fol. 256. col. 1.: כל ישראל: הם היום בידי הישמעאלים והנוצרים לגלות רומי ואדום יחשבו that is: All Israelites who are today under the power of the Turks and the Christians are counted as belonging to the Roman and Edomite captivity. Likewise, in his commentary on Isaiah at fol. 38. col. 1., on Isa 21:11, the following is stated: הנה הנבואה הזאת: אפשר לפרשה כפי דרך חז"ל על זה הגלות שאנחנו בו שהוא גלות אדום וקראו דומה לפי אפשר לפרשה כפי דרך חז"ל על זה הגלות שאנחנו בו דוממים ושותקים כי לא נדע מתי קץ הפלאות that is: Behold, this prophecy can be interpreted, in the manner of our sages of blessed memory, as referring to this captivity in which we find ourselves, which is Galúth Edom, that is, the Edomite captivity. (The prophet) called it Duma (which means silence) because we are silent within it, for we do not know when the end of the wonders will come.

Sixth, they call Christendom אדמון Admon, that is, the Red One, and indeed for the reason that Esau, from whom the Christians are supposed to descend, was called Admóni, that is, the Red One, as has been indicated above on p. 649. That it is called thus can be seen in the prayer which stands in the Machsor under the title Músaph lejóm rischon schel rosch haschána and begins אשא דעי Essa dei bezédek, wherein the Jews call upon God that He would therefore בצדק Essa dei bezédek, wherein the Jews call upon God that He would therefore לרוע אדמון leroaë Admon, that is, break the Red One; and in the Prague Machsor, in the first part, fol. 46. col. 2., in the Commentario, the word Admon is explained by עשו שנקרא אדמוני, that is, Esau, who is called Admóni, that is, the Red One: by Esau, however, Christendom is understood, as has been indicated above on p. 739 and 740.

Seventh, it is called מלכות אדום ועמלק Malchúth (or Malchus) Edom ve-Amalek, that is, the Kingdom of Edom and Amalek, or the Edomite and Amalekite Kingdom, or also simply עמלק Amalek alone. The name Malchúth Edom ve-Amalek is found in the Sépfer baëmunóth (baëmunós) of Rabbi Schem Tof, fol. 78. col. 2., in the fifth chapter of the seventh Scháar, where he writes as follows: הנה יונדב בן רכב כשראה חורבן המקדש והגלות וממשלת המלכויות ושעתיד לבא ולקום עמלק, מלכות אדום ועמלק צווה את בניו: כי לא ישוב רק באהלים דורת עראי that is: Behold, when Jonadab, the son of Rechab (who is mentioned in Jer 35:6-7) had foreseen the destruction of the Temple, and the captivity, and the dominion of the kingdoms (or monarchies), as well as that the Malchuth Edom ve-Amalek, that is, the Edomite and Amalekite Kingdom, would arise, he commanded his sons that they should dwell only in tents, as a transient place of abode.

That it is also called Amalek alone is clearly evident from the fact that those things which, according to Jewish teaching, are to befall Christendom, are likewise written concerning Amalek. As an example: in the following second part, in the 14th chapter, the great war is described which the Jews believe they will wage against Christendom at the coming of their Messiah, in which all Christians are to be killed by them, so that not a single one will remain. In the book Zerór hammór, however, at fol. 120, col. 2-3, in the Parashah Chykkáth, it is to be read that in that time the final war is to be waged against Amalek and Edom, and there, on the words of Num 21:14, "Therefore it will be said in the Book of the Wars of the Lord against Vaheb in Suphah," the following is written: על דרך הרמז נראה שייעד בכאן הגאולה העתידה ועל כן אמר על כן יאמר לזמן העתיד בספר מלחמות ה' מהו מלחמות ה' היא מלחמת עמלק שכתב בו מלחמה בעמלק ושם כתיב כתוב זאת זכרון בספר והמלחמה אחרת היא המלחמה העתידה כדכתיב ויצא ה' ונלחם בגוים ההם כיום הלחמו ביום קרב עם עמלק ולהורות על המלחמה העתידה אמר בכאן את והב בסופה כי והב הוא אדום דכתיב בידי הלטמי נא מן האדום וכתוב לעלוקה שתי בנות הב הב כי כך דרכם לשאול מישראל מסים וארנוניות ולעולם הם שואלים הב הב וג' וזהו אב והב בסופה ח' בספר המלחמות כתובה המלחמה מעתידה להיות באחרית הימים וזהו בסופה וגו' ולכן אמר השם אף על פי שעכשיו איני לוחם עמהם אני נזכר ממה שעשו לכם ובסוף אפרע מהם מן הנחל ואשפך דמם כאומרו ונהפכו נחליה לזפת ועפרה לגפרית וכתוב ואשד הנחלים גבול אדום וגו' וזהו ואשד הנחלים אשר נטה לשבת ער ונשען לגבול מואב כי לפי שאדום ומואב היו אתם וקרוכים לישראל הם ראויים יותר לעונש... לכן מפרש ערבי גמטרא יחד דכתיב אדום ומואב משלוה ידם וזהו והשען לגבול מואב כי לעולם סמך אדום עם מואב וכן תמצא בדברי ירמיה כשנתבא על אדום אמר שמועה שמעתי מאת ה' שמי פירענותו אצל מואב. That is: Interpreted in an allegorical (or indicative) manner, it appears that Scripture has here promised the future redemption, and therefore it says: "Therefore it will be said," in the future tense, "in the Book of the Wars of the Lord." What are the Wars of the Lord? It is the war against him of whom it is written (Exod 17:16): "A war against Amalek." And it is likewise written there (further, v. 14): "Write this as a memorial in a book." The other war, however, is the future war, as it is written (Zech 14:3): "But the Lord will go forth and fight against those nations, just as He was accustomed to fight, in the day of battle against Amalek." Now, to indicate the future war, Scripture says here: "Against Vaheb in Suphah." For Vaheb carries a meaning pointing to Esau, who is called Edom, of whom it is written (Gen 25:30): "Let me taste of the red." And it is likewise written (Prov 30:15): "The leech has two daughters, (who say) haf," that is, "give." For such is their custom, to demand tribute (or taxation) and toll from the Israelites, and they are forever demanding, saying "give," etc. And this is what is signified by the words "Vaheb in Suphah" (for Vaheb means "and he gave," and Suphah means "the end"), since in the Book of the Wars the war which is to be waged in the future in the last days, that is, in the Soph or end, is described, etc. Therefore God said: even though I do not now fight against them, I

nonetheless remember what they (the Amalekites and Esavites) have done to you (the Jews), and I will in the end take vengeance upon all of them and pour out their blood like water, as it is said (Isa 34:9): "For their streams (namely those of the city of Bozrah, as is evident from v. 6, by which the Jews understand the city of Rome, as has been reported above on pages 731 and 732) will be turned into pitch, and their dust into sulfur." And it is likewise written there (v. 6): "And there will be a great slaughter in the land of Edom," etc. And this is what is meant by the passage cited above (Num 21:15, where it is written): "And at the outpouring of the streams, which bends toward the dwelling of Ar and leans upon the border of Moab," by which is signified, since Edom and Moab were brothers and kinsmen of Israel, that they are all the more deserving of punishment. Therefore they are mentioned together in the words of the prophets, as it is written (Isa 11:14): "Upon Edom and Moab they will lay their hands." And this is what is signified by the words "and leans upon the border of Moab," for Edom is always placed alongside Moab. Thus you will also find in the words of Jeremiah, when he prophesied against Edom (in chapter 49, verse 14), that he said: "I have heard a report from the Lord," and he placed its punishment alongside Moab. This report, however, is the war of Amalek and the war of Edom, of which it is written here in the Book of the Wars of the Lord.

Further, in the aforementioned book Zerór hammór fol. 125. col. 2. 3., in the Parascha Vajqr Bálack, the following is read concerning the aforementioned war: לפי שעמלק היה ראש צרים ונלחם בישראל בצאתם ממצרים ועתיד ללחום באחרית : הימים אמר וירא את עמלק וישא משלו ויאמר ראשית גוים עמלק אבל אחריתו עדי אובד ר"ל אחריתו יגיע עד אותו זמן שיבא מלך המשיח ויתקיים מה שכתוב האויב תמו חרבות לנצח לאותו נצח שכתוב על ידי הנביאים וערים נתשת זהו והאבד שריד מעיר אבל זכרם המה זהו מה שכתב כאן ואחריתו עדי אובד בענין שיאבד זכרם וסוף שמעם מאיש ועד אשה מעולל ועד יונק : That is: Because Amalek was the chief enemy and waged war against Israel when they went out of Egypt, and will wage war (against them) in the last days, therefore (the Scripture, Num 24:20) says: And when he (namely Balaam) saw the Amalekites, he took up his parable and said: Amalek is the first among the nations, but his end is destruction; that is, his descendants will reach unto that time in which the King Messiah will come, and then shall be fulfilled what is written (Ps 9:7): The desolations of the enemy have come to an end forever, which is to be understood of that eternity which is described by the prophets. You have overthrown the cities; this is (that which is said in Num 24:19): And what remains of the cities, he shall destroy. (Further follows Ps 9:7:) Their memory has perished with them; this points to that which is written (in the aforementioned place, Num 24:20): But his end is destruction, in that their memory shall vanish, and their renown shall come to an end from the man to the woman, and from the older children to the nursing infants, so that everything shall be rooted out and exterminated. We see, therefore, from the above words of the book Zerór hammór, that the war which is to be waged in the last times against Christendom by the supposed Messiah is precisely the same war that is waged against Amalek and Edom, from which it may reasonably be concluded that by Amalek, Christendom is to be understood.

Concerning this war and such vengeance against the Christians, which is supposed to take place in the last times, it is also written in the aforementioned book Zerór hammór, fol. 158. col. 2. in the Parascha Haasinu as follows: ועל גלות זה של אדום אמר אשא אל שמים ידי לעשות נקמה באדום וכתיב כי יד על כס יה ואז אשיב נקם לצרי מראש פרעות אויב הוא עמלק שנאמר בו ראשית גוים עמלק והוא נקרא אויב That is: Concerning this Edomite captivity he said: I lift my hands up toward Heaven (that is, I swear) that I will execute vengeance upon Edom, as it is written (Exod 17:16): Since the hand is upon the throne of the LORD: then will I repay my enemies with vengeance: from the head shall the enemy, namely Amalek, be avenged, of whom it is said (Num 24:20): Amalek is the first among the nations; and he is called the enemy of God, as I have already explained. Then (it will be said, from Deut 32:43): Rejoice, ye nations, with His people. Thus far extends the Edomite captivity, and the redemption of Israel begins. Here we see that the vengeance which is to come upon Edom, that is, Christendom, is to be executed upon Amalek. It is likewise stated that Amalek is the enemy of God; but above, in Chapter 15, at p. 604, it was demonstrated that the Jews regard the Christians as the enemies of God.

Concerning the aforementioned war, the following is also read in the great Jalkut Rubeni fol. 49. col. 4. in the Parasha Toledoth (or Toledos): המלחמה בגלות רביעית תהיה עם סמאל הוא עשו ותהיה מלחמה קשה ועזה כענין המחה את זכר עמלק כי במדה שאדם מודד מודדין לו הוא לא רחם עליהם בעלותם ממצרים על כן לא ירחמוהו מן השמים : that is, The war of the fourth captivity will be waged against Sammaël, who is Esau, and it will be a severe and mighty war; according to the content of that which is written (Deut 25:19): You shall blot out the memory of the Amalekites; for with the same measure with which a man measures, it shall be measured back to him. He (Amalek) did not show mercy to them (namely, the Israelites) when they came out of Egypt (as is to be read in Exod 17:8 etc. and Deut 25:17 etc.), therefore no mercy shall be shown to him from Heaven either. Rabbi Bechai also teaches concerning this in his commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 85. col. 3. in the Parasha Beschallach, as follows: אין לך אומה בעולם שלא יהיה להם חלק הכרת עם שאר האומות והיו שרידים הנשארים הוא שכתוב ולא היה שריד לבית עשו באור הכתוב כי משאר האומות יהיו שרידים ופליטים שישארו להם לעבוד את ה' ואין בו מזרעו של עשו אך ימחו מן העולם שכתוב כי מזה אמהה את זכר עמלק ואז יהיה השם והכסא על השלימות : that is, There is no nation in the world that will not have a share in the holy and blessed God; but Amalek and Esau will have no share with the other nations that shall remain, and no remembrance shall be made of them; and this is what is written (Obad 1:18): And there shall be no survivor of the house of Esau. The meaning of these words of Scripture consists in this: that from the other nations there shall remain survivors to serve God, but from the seed of Esau none shall be among them; rather, they shall be exterminated from the world, according to the content of that which is written (Exod 17:14): For I will blot out the memory of Amalek. All of this clearly indicates that in the final war which will be waged against Esau, that is, against Christendom, the memory of Amalek is to be blotted out and Amalek is to be eradicated through the complete extermination of the Christians; from which it necessarily follows that Christendom is to be understood by Amalek: concerning which something is also to be found in Rabbi Mosche bar Nachman's commentary on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 51. col. 3. in the Parasha Beschallach.

Furthermore, Christendom is called by the Jews עדינה Adina, that is, the Voluptuous One, as can be seen below in this chapter at the twenty-fourth name they give it; in the Prague Machzor, however, in the second part, fol. 11. col. 1., the words שכה עם עדינה, that is, "Cause the Adina to be forgotten," are explained in the Commentary as follows: שכה שם עמלק מן העולם והוא נקרא עדינה: על שם שמעדים מן ממון ישראל, that is, "Cause the name of Amalek to be forgotten from the world; and he is called Adina because he takes pleasure in the wealth of the Israelites." Likewise, the chief devil Sammael, who, as is shown in chapter 18 of this first part, is supposed to rule over Christendom, is called not only שר עשו Sar Esau, that is, the Prince of Esau, and שר אדום Sar Edom, that is, the Prince of Edom, as well as שרו של רומי Saro schel Romi, that is, the Prince of Rome, or the Prince of the Roman Empire, but also שר עמלק Sar Amalek, that is, the Prince of Amalek, as is shown in the aforementioned chapter 18 of this first part. Beyond this, in the book Leforjeh fol. 52. col. 4., חית קנה Chajath kane, that is, the beast in the reed or marsh (by which Christendom is understood, as can be seen below at the twenty-eighth name in this chapter) is also called Amalek, and the words there read as follows: הנה איתא בזכר' צל שעתיד הקב"ה לקבל תשובתן של כל האומות חוץ מעמלק שלא יקבל דכתיב גער חית קנה, that is, "Behold, it stands in the words of our Rabbis, of blessed memory, that the Holy and Blessed God will accept the repentance of all peoples, with the exception of Amalek, whose repentance He will not accept, as it is said (Ps 68:31): Schille chajath kane, that is, the beast in the reed." By all of this it is made plainly clear that Christendom is also called Amalek. It has likewise been demonstrated at length in the preceding sixteenth chapter, p.

655. etc., at the seventh name they give to Christians, that we are called Amalekites or children of Amalek. I have set this forth somewhat extensively for the reason that it is of use, and highly necessary to know, in the second chapter of the second part, in which it is shown how the Jews curse us at their Purim or Shrovetide festival, as well as in the fourteenth chapter of the said second part, which deals with their acts of murder.

Eighth, they call Christendom מלכות אדומים ארורים Malchúth (or Malchus) Edomíjim arúrím, that is, the kingdom of the accursed Edomites; and this is found in the first part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 48, col. 2, under the title Schacharith (or Schácháris) schel rosch haschána jom schéni, in a prayer which begins: יעשה כמעשיך וגו' אשר מ' Ascher mí jaase kemaasécha &c., where the words read as follows: הראהו ארבע מלכיות כבירים שמושלים בזמנם ויאבדו לדור דורים עגלה: משולשת זו מלכות אדומים ארורים אשר היא כעגלה דשה ובחזירי יערים: ועז משולשת אלו יונים שנמשלו לצפירים ואיל משולש א מלכות מדי ופרס חברים: ותור אלו בני ישמעאל שנמשלו לשורים וגזול אלו ישראל שנמשלו ליונים ותורים שנאמר יונתי בחגוי הסלע וגו' That is: He (namely God) showed him (Abraham, as is to be read in Gen 15:9) the four mighty kingdoms (or monarchies) which ruled in their times and were to perish from generation to generation. The three-year-old cow (or the three-year-old calf) signifies the kingdom of the accursed Edomites, which is like a threshing cow (or a threshing calf) and is like wild swine. And the three-year-old goat signifies the Greeks, who are compared to he-goats. And the three-year-old ram signifies the Median and Persian kingdoms together. And the ox (here the word Tor is incorrectly understood, as can be seen in the commentary on it, because in the Chaldean language Tor means an ox, whereas here it means a turtledove) signifies the Ishmaelites (that is, the Turks), who are compared to oxen. But the young dove signifies the Israelites, who are compared to doves and turtledoves, as is said (Song 2:14): My dove, who dwellest in the clefts of the rock. However, in the Hebrew Machsor printed here in Frankfurt in the year 450 according to the Jewish calendar, that is, in the year 1690 according to our reckoning, there stands at fol. 38, col. 2: מלכות סדומים ארורים Malchúth (or Malchus) Sedómim arúrím, that is, the kingdom of the accursed Sodomites; and the word "Edomites" has been craftily altered to "Sodomites" for the purpose of making it less easily noticed that Christendom is meant thereby. This is clearly evident from the Machsor printed here in Frankfurt in the year 446 according to the Jewish calendar, that is, in the year of Christ 1686, in which the German translation stands alongside the Hebrew, at fol. 68, col. 1-2, where in the Hebrew text Malchúth Sedómim arúrím, that is, the kingdom of the accursed Sodomites, is likewise read; but in the German translation the meaning is explained, and there it is written: דא היא מלכות רומי הרשעה שדומה: הגוי כחזיר that is, the calf is the kingdom of the Edomíjim, or Edomites, which is like a swine from the forest, that is, like a wild swine. Christendom, however, is called by the Jews a swine, or also a wild swine, as can be seen below in this chapter at the twenty-ninth name they give to it. In the Machsor printed in folio at Wilmersdorf, however, the second part, fol. 97, col. 2, has in place of the aforementioned words Malchúth Edomijm arúrim the text מלכות אבירים Málchuth abbirim, that is, the kingdom of the mighty; and this alteration was made out of fear of the Christians.

Ninth, they call it מלכות שעיר Malchúth (or Málchus) Seir, that is, the Kingdom of Seir, or sometimes simply שעיר Seir. The reason for this is that the land in which Esau dwelt was called Seir, as can be seen in Gen 32:3; and for this reason they also call Christendom Seir, because Christians are supposed to be descended from Esau and are called the children or lineages of Seir, as was indicated in the preceding Chapter 16, under the sixth name they give us, at p. 654. The name Malchúth Seir, that is, the Kingdom of Seir, is found in Rabbi Solomon Jarchi's commentary on Isa 21:12, on the words "One calls to me out of Seir," where he writes: אמר הקדש ברוך הוא אלי קורא הנביא או המלאך that is, The holy, blessed GOD has said: the Prophet, or the Angel, calls to me on account of the yoke of Malchuth Seir, that is, of the Kingdom of Seir. The name Seir, however, is found in the Prague Machsor, in the second part, fol. 16, col. 1, under the title Józer lepharaschâth (or lepháraschas) Sechór, in the prayer which begins: אלהים אל דמי לך וגו' Elohim al dómi lach, in which they call upon GOD to visit Amalek, that is, Christendom, with all manner of plagues, to utterly exterminate it, and to cast it into hell; and it continues further: וידע כל פועל כי לא שכחת ויבין כל יציר כי שמם שכחת ושעיר that is, So that all the work (of Your hands) may know that You have not forgotten (what the Edomites have done to us in evil); and that all creation may understand that You have caused their name to be forgotten, and that You have punished Seir together with its princes, chastised Amalek and its commanders, and contended with them through judgment. This is also found in the Selichoth Slichoth (or Selichos) under the title לשבעה עשר בתמוז Leschiva eser betammus, fol. 90, col. 1 in the Prague edition, and fol. 103, col. 2 in the Frankfurt edition, at the beginning of which they pray thus: שעה נאמר אשר נמסר ביד בבל וגם שעיר Behold the bound one, who has been delivered into the power of Babel and Seir. And in the German translation printed at Amsterdam in the year 438, that is, by our reckoning in the year 1678, the name Seir is explained as Esau, the King of Seir. Likewise, in the Polish Siddurim, fol. 71, col. 2, under the title Meoráth leschabbáth schenia, in a prayer which begins שנותנה פנה בדילוח Schenothéna fifu bedálluch, this name Seir is found in such a sense, and is explained in the commentary by אומה הרשעה úmmah hareshcháa, that is, the godless people, by which the Christians are meant. Likewise it is expounded in the first part of the Prague Machsor, fol. 36, col. 1, under the title Musaph schel rosch haschana jom rischon, in a prayer which begins אֵשָׁא דְּעִי בְּצִדֵּק Essa dei bezedek, through מַלְכוּת אֶדוֹם Malchuth Edom, that is, the Edomite Kingdom, in the commentary. For this reason their present captivity is also called גְּלוּת שְׂעִיר Galúth (or Golus) Seir, that is, the Captivity of Seir, as can be seen in the book Cad hakkemach, fol. 19, col. 4, where, concerning the words of Isa 21:12, "One calls to me out of Seir," it is written thus: אוֹמֵר הַנְּבִיא אֵלֵי קוֹרָא יִשְׂרָאֵל מִדּוּחָקוֹ שֶׁל: שְׂעִיר מִגְּלוּת שְׂעִיר שְׂדוּמָה לַלַּיְלָה לְלִילָה אֹתִי שׁוֹמֵר מִה מִלִּילָה מֵה אֹמֵר הַנְּבִיא אֵלֵי קוֹרָא יִשְׂרָאֵל מִדּוּחָקוֹ שֶׁל: that is, The Prophet says: Israel calls to me on account of its distress in Seir, out of the Galúth Seir, that is, out of the Captivity of Seir, which is like the night; and they ask me, Watchman, what of the night? What will come at the end of the night, at the end of the Edomite captivity?

Tenth, they call it הַר שְׂעִיר Har Seir, that is, the mountain Seir, as can be seen in Abarbanel's book Maschmia jeshua fol. 44. col. 4., where he writes as follows: אַחֲרֵי שֶׁנִּבָּא כָּל זֶה עַל יִשְׂרָאֵל נִבָּא מִיַּד הַר שְׂעִיר הִיא הַחִיָּה הָרְבִיעִית: that is, After he (the prophet Ezekiel) had prophesied all of this (which stands in his 34th chapter) concerning the Israelites, he immediately prophesied (in his 35th chapter) against Har Seir, that is, the mountain Seir, which is the fourth beast that led us into captivity, in whose captivity we also remain to this very day; for this reason he has set the fall of Seir (that is, of Christendom) as the condition for the redemption of Israel.

Eleventh, they call it מַלְכוּת הָרֶשֶׁעָ Malchuth (or Málchus) bareschaa, that is, the godless kingdom, or מַלְכוּת מֶרְשָׁעָ Malchúth marscháach, or מַלְכוּת חַיִּיבָת Málchuth chajéfeth, which also means the godless kingdom; or likewise מַלְכוּת הָרֶשָׁעִים Malchuth bareschaim, that is, the kingdom of the godless. The name Malchuth bareschaa is found in Rabbi Mosche de Mircado's commentary on the Psalms, fol. 19, col. 4, on the words of Ps 10:8, "He sits and lurks in the courtyards; he secretly murders the innocent, etc.," and he writes there as follows: כִּמוֹ הָרוּצָה הָרוּצָה לְהַסְתִּיר מַעֲשָׂיו וְהוּא נִטְמָן וְחֹרֵג פְּתָאוֹם וַיִּכְסֶה עֹנְוֹ בַּמִּסְתָּרִים: כֵּן מַלְכוּת הָרֶשָׁעִים מְבַקְשִׁים עֲלֵיהָ בְּשִׁבִּיל אֲמוּנָתָהּ דָּתָהּ לְהַרְגָּהּ אֶת יִשְׂרָאֵל לְקַחַת מִמּוֹנָהּ כִּי שֶׁמֶץ הָרֶשָׁעִים מְבַקְשִׁים עֲלֵיהָ לְהַסְתִּיר מִהֶעָם: שֶׁלֹּא יֵאמְרוּ שֶׁהֵרְגוּם בְּלִי אִשָּׁם: that is, just as a murderer who wishes to keep his deeds hidden conceals himself, strikes swiftly, and covers his sin in secret places; so too do those who are in the Malchúth bareschaa, that is, the godless kingdom, seek false accusations on account of the faith of their religion in order to kill the Israelites and seize their property, so that they may keep this hidden from the people, and that the people may not say that they put them to death without guilt. And in Abárbanel's book Májene jeschúa, fol. 42, columnâ 4, in the eighth Májan, in the fifth Támar, the significance of the ten horns is treated, of which mention is made in Dan 7:20, 24, and it is written there: כבר אמרו ח"ל עשרה קרנים עשרה מלכים יקומן מן ארעא כלס ביוצאי ירכו של עשו הכתוב מדבר משתכל הוית בקרניא ואלו קרן אחרי זעירא זו מלכות הרשעה וכל זה מידה בה שהם ממלכותם ר"ל מהקיסרים שמשלו בה that is, our sages, of blessed memory, have already said that the ten horns signify ten kings who shall rise up from the earth, and all of them were to come from the loins of Esau. The Scripture states (v. 8 in the last-cited chapter): "I observed the horns, and behold, another small horn"; this signifies the Malchúth barescháa, that is, the godless kingdom. All of this teaches that they were of the kings of Rome, that is, the emperors who ruled therein. It is likewise identified in fol. 76, col. 2, in the aforementioned book Májene jeschúa, in the eighth Májan, in the eleventh Támar, and in the book Mátteh Abaron, fol. 52, col. 2. In the book Máor hakkáton, fol. 1, col. 4, one also reads: תהום זו מלכות הרשעה שאין לה חקר כההום that is, the abyss (or the deep, of which mention is made in Gen 1:2) signifies the godless kingdom, because, just like an abyss, it cannot be fathomed.

The Jews, however, have learned to give mocking names to Christendom from their Talmud, in which the Roman Empire, by which they also understand all of Christendom, is called thus, as can be read in the tract Berachóth (or Beróchos) fol. 61, col. 2, where the words read as follows: פעם אחת גזרה מלכות הרשעה שלא יעסקו ישראל בתורה בא פפוס בן יהודה ומצאו רבי עקיבא שהיה מקהיל קהילות ברבים ועוסק בתורה א"ל עקיבא אי אתה מתירא מפני מלכות הרשעה וגו' that is: the Malchúth barefcháa, or godless kingdom, had once issued a decree that the Israelites should not study the Law; then Papus ben Jehúda came and found Rabbi Akiva holding public assemblies and studying the Law, and said to him: Akiva, do you not fear the Malchúth barefcháa, that is, the godless kingdom? And in the tractate Schabbath (or Schábbas) it stands at fol. 15, col. 1: ק"פ שנה עד שלא חרב הבית פשטה מלכות הרשעה על ישראל that is: one hundred and eighty years before the Temple was destroyed, the Malchúth barefcháa, or godless kingdom, spread itself against Israel, that is, as Rabbi Solomon Jarchi explains it in his commentary, it began to subjugate the Israelites. But so that one may know what kingdom is to be understood by the godless kingdom, the aforementioned Rabbi Solomon writes in his cited commentary on this passage: מלכות הרשעה רומי that is, the godless kingdom signifies Rome, or the Roman Empire. All of this is also to be found in the tractate Avóda sára fol. 8, col. 2, both in the text and in the commentary. This name is likewise found at fol. 9, col. 1 of the said tractate Avóda sára, and in the tractate Pesachim fol. 118, col. 2, and in the book Nézach Jifraél fol. 31, col. 1-2, in the 21st chapter, and in Pesikta rábbetha (or rábbesa) fol. 28, col. 2, as well as in the Jalkut Schimóni on the Five Books of Moses fol. 2, col. 4. And in the Talmudic tractate Gittín it stands at fol. 57, col. 2 as follows: הידים ידי עשו זו מלכות הרשעה

that is: (the words of Gen 27:22) "But the hands are the hands of Esau" signify the Malchúth barefcháa, that is, the godless kingdom, which has destroyed our house and burned our Temple and led us out of our land into captivity.

The name Malchús rarschaáas appears in the Ben book, fol. 20, col. 1, under the title Semiróth lemozée schabbath, in a prayer that begins שטפוני אפוי מים Afai májim fchetafúni, with these words: רבו לי ימי לוחצי ביד מלכות הרשעה מאן עז מנות קצי והפדות לא נודעת, that is: The days of my oppressors endure long under the power of the Malchúth rarschaáas, that is, the wicked or wickedly acting kingdom, so that I can no longer count (or calculate) my end (meaning the end of my misery), and the redemption is unknown as to when it shall come to pass.

As for the name Malchús chajéves, it is found in the book Cadbakkémach, fol. 7, col. 2, where the words read as follows: אין אדם יודע מה בלבו בלבו של חבירו ומלכות בית דוד מתי תקום ומלכות חייבת מתי תפול, that is: A man does not know what his companion has in his heart, nor when the kingdom of the house of David will arise, nor when the Malchus chajéves, that is, the wicked kingdom, will fall.

As for the name Malchús barescháim, it is found in Rabbi Bechai's commentary on the five books of Moses, fol. 76, col. 1, in the Parascha Bo el Pároh, where he writes as follows: כל מכות שהביא הק"ה על המצרים במצרים עתיד הוא להביאם על אדום שנאמר כאשר שמע למצרים יחילו כשמע צר. כל המקרא חסר במלכות הרשעים הכתוב מדבר, that is: The Holy and Blessed God will bring upon Edom (that is, Christendom) all the plagues that He brought upon the Egyptians in Egypt, as it is said (Isa 23:5): They will be dismayed at the tidings of Tyre, just as at the tidings of Egypt. Wherever צר Zor appears defectively in Scripture (and not צור Zor with the Vau Chojem), there Scripture speaks of the Malchus barescháim, that is, the kingdom of the wicked.

Twelfthly, it is called Malchúth (or Málchus) Esau barescháa, that is, the godless kingdom of Esau, or the godless Esauite kingdom, as can be read in Rabbi Mosche de Mircado's commentary on Ps 10:1, where he writes: כל המזמור מתאר ישראל בשם עני ומלכות עשו הרשעה לשם רשע, that is, the entire Psalm describes the Israelites by the name of the wretched, and the Malchus Esau barescháa, that is, the godless Esauite kingdom, by the name of the godless one.

Thirteenthly, they call it: Malchúth (or Málchus) Edom barescháa, that is, the godless Edomite kingdom, or Malchúth Edom hachajéveh, which has the same meaning, or also Edom barescháa, that is, godless Edom. The name Malchúth Edom barescháa is found in the book Cad hakkémach, fol. 62, col. 1, where it is written as follows: בעגאולה העתידה ישמחו השמים ותגל הארץ כי תאבד מלכות אדום הרשעה ותחזור הממשלה והמלכות לישראל, that is, at the coming redemption, heaven and earth will rejoice, because the Malchúth Edom barescháa, that is, the godless Edomite kingdom, will perish, and dominion and rule will return to Israel. And at col. 2 of the same work, it continues further: "כבר התנבא דוד על הגלות הזה והושאמר לולי שהיה לנו וגומר ואמר זה על מלכות אדום הרשעה והזכירה בלשון אדם על שם שהם עובדים אדם, וכן מה שאמר ישעיה חזלו לכם מן האדם ורמז לאמונת אדום already prophesied concerning this captivity, when he says (Ps 124:1): "If the Lord had not been on our side," etc., and he said this concerning the Malchúth Edom barescháa, that is, the godless Edomite kingdom, and made mention of it by the name "man," because they (namely the Christians) serve a man (that is, Christ). Likewise, what Isaiah says (Isa 2:22), "Cease therefore from man," carries a meaning directed at the Edomite (that is, Christian) faith. There is also found in Abarbanel's commentary on v. 3 of the second chapter of the prophet Nahum, fol. 269, col. 1, the following: הנה בארו מן גבורה מאדם דגלה אנשי חיל מתולעים שנאמר כאן על מלכות אדום הרשעה, that is, behold, they (namely our sages) have explained the words "the shields of his mighty men are red, the valiant men are clad in scarlet," that this is said here of the Malchúth Edom barescháa, that is, the godless Edomite kingdom. In this same manner it is also called in the book Pesikta rábbetha (or rábbesa), fol. 58, col. 2, and in Rabbi Nachman's disputation which he held with Brother Paul, p. 56, and in the book Emek hámmélech, fol. 145, col. 2, in the 37th chapter, under the title Scháar réscha disér ánpin; as also in the book Zerór hammór, fol. 160, col. 1, in the Parashah Haasinu.

The name Malchúth Edom bachajéveth, or Málchus Edom bachajéfes, is found in the commentary of Rabbi Menachem of Rekanat on the Five Books of Moses, fol. 137, col. 4, in the Parascha Schemini, where it is written as follows: פה חזיר זה בשעה שהוא רובץ הוא פושט טלפיו כלומר שהוא טהור כך מלכות אדום החייבת בימה גזולה וחומסת ומראה כאלו מצעת בימה that is: just as the pig, when it lies down, stretches out its hooves as if to say that it is clean (because it has cloven hooves), so the Malchúth Edom bachajéveth, that is, the godless Edomite kingdom, robs and plunders, and presents itself as though it were erecting a pulpit, that is, as though it were altogether pious.

Regarding the name Edom harescháa: it appears in Schemóth (or Schemós) rábba, in the 35th Parascha, where, concerning the words of Exod 25:3, "This is the offering which you shall take from them: gold, silver, and bronze," the following is written: וזה זו בבל שנאמר הוא צלמא רישיה דהב טב: וכסף זו מדי שנאמר חדוהי ודרעוהי די כסף: נחשת זו יון שנאמר מעוהי וירכתה די נחש: אבל ברזל אינו כתיב that is: The gold signifies Babylon (or the Babylonian Empire), for it is said in Dan 2:32, "The head of that image was of fine gold." The silver signifies Media, for it is said there, "His breast and arms were of silver." The bronze signifies Greece, for it is said there, "His belly and thighs were of bronze." Of iron, however, nothing is written here, neither in connection with the Temple nor with the Tabernacle. Why? Because Edom barescháa, that is, the wicked Edom, which destroyed our Temple, is compared to it, ער. Likewise, in the book Pesikta rábbetha fol. 63. col. 2., the following is read: שבעה לבושים שלבש הקדוש that is: Seven garments has the holy, blessed God put on, from the time when the world was created until He shall take vengeance upon Edom barescháa, that is, the wicked Edom. The same is also to be found in the preceding fol. 58. col. 2. of the last-mentioned book, and in the book Maschmia jescháa fol. 60. col. 1.
